Negro citizens of France feel that travelers from overseas who fail to realize the absolute equality of the races here and the total absence of a color line should be made to understand these things before leaving home in order not to violate French susceptibilities in this direction. Such knowledge, they assert, can be imparted only by direct action by the American government.

A certain amount of satisfaction probably will be granted to the negro deputies in this matter by Premier Poincare, I am told. Two measures are said to be under consideration. One of them is the closing, for a short time, of a famous restaurant that declined to serve negro patrons in conformity with objections raised by white patrons. The other is the dispatch of a harmless note to Washington, explaining the point of view of the French negroes and asking what can be done to make American tourists in France more regardful of their feelings.

Birmingham recently held an interesting meeting of representative white and colored citizens, with J. M. Broady, D.D., presiding. The Birmingham situation was discussed very frankly, and definite steps taken to improve the relation between the races. Dr. Broady is very much encouraged over the outlook as a result of this conference.

DISCUSSION HELPS

One of our exchanges relates "in order to please U. S. tourists (in Paris) some proprietors of cafés and night restaurants in the Latin Quarter and Montmartre decided to ignore the national motto, Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité, and bar Negroes from entering their establishments."

This in Paris—historically famed for many things it were well not to mention here. And we have an idea that Paris will remain immune to American colorphobia raised to the nth power by propagandists from the southern section of the states. For since this exhibition of southern American effrontery in a land that knows no color line, discussion of Negro rights has been precipitated in the form of a question as to whether a café proprietor has the right to eject black Frenchmen. That is the question to be discussed by the French Chamber of Deputies. To discuss the question will bring out into the light other attempts to curb the rights of black Frenchmen and will at the same time bring a restatement of those rights in more pronounced and unequivocal terms. When Frenchmen in the Chamber hit Southern American prejudice, they will hit it hard because Negro Frenchmen are members of the Chamber and will be in position thus to defend themselves. The discussion will help tremendously.

A condition obtains in our own country which also is causing much discussion. This discussion will open up anew for consideration the facts of the Negro's civic status in this country where the law of the Nation makes him a citizen endowed with full fledged citizenship rights while the laws and wilful practices of a small southern section shut him out from these rights and keep heaping upon him burdens too grevious to be borne. In the homely but philosophical language of a noted Southern Evangelist—"The hit dog will yelp." In the South the Negro has been hit and told to keep quiet about it. Seeing that he must be pelted and remain quiet under the bruising as long as he abides here, he has wisely decided that he will pull out to other quarters where the habit of mind of those among whom he lives and labors [illegible] set to be always crushing the bones of the unoffending and faithful. If the Negro's going will occasion discussion as to the real facts in his condition it will be well worth while. If enough Negroes will leave the land of their persecution and proscription to start such a wave of discussion and righteous indignation as followed the publication of Uncle Tom's Cabin, it will be the most beneficial single event that has happened in Negro life since emancipation.

Another emancipation is necessary—one that is real; one not thwarted by subterfuges and counterbalanced by force and fraud. In order to do it ,discussion must be had. The South must be told." If they have misunderstood they must now be made to know. Hitherto they have declined discussion of their treatment of the Negro, only dismissing it as their sectional right with impunity. But discussion is brewing and discussion there must be. The Negro's tale must be told and it must be heard. "The way of truth is like a great road. It is not difficult to know it. The evil is only that men will not see it." Therefore let the flood-tide of discussion sweep in on the condition of the Negro in the South and even a discerning child can see that the spirit of human brotherhood does not inspire the treatment received by the Negro in the Southern States. On with the discussion—in France, in America, but particularly in America.

To throttle and prevent discussion of the Negro's woebegone condition in the South has been one of the chief stocks in trade hereabouts. This has been one of the fundamental moving motives to keep the Negro out of the legislative halls of the states and the nation. If he were there he would discuss his condition and would back up his discussion with remedial legislation. He would be able by the marshalling of fact and the summoning of logic to his aid to dissipate the fallacious fulminations of his enemies. He would have opportunity to force his cause into the arena of public opinion. Under the present regime of taxation and legislation without representation he has few advocates at court and can, with difficutly, get his cause aired before a nonpartisan public. And so the South is committed to the artful [illegible] keeping the Negro out of every position of vantage where he can speak with authority to plead his own cause. But discussion must be had some day. It is impossible forever to keep ten or more millions of men and women made in the image of God from discussion of their injustices with the very folk who inflict the wrongs. Discussion helps, therefore let there be discussion.

PRINCES TO FIGHT CASE IN COURTS

Paris, France, Aug. 11.—France's decision to make tourists conform to the French laws which do not permit color line restrictions in restaurants, cabarets and other public places is soon to have a test case. Two Dahomey princes, graduates of Sorbonne university, one a lawyer and the other a physician, recently were thrown out of a Montmartre night palace.

They have engaged a noted criminal lawyer and Deputy Moro Giaferi to fight their case. They are demanding either a heavy judgment against the cabaret owner, or, better still, that his license be revoked. They are legitimate sons of the exking of Dahomey and have been accepted by French society. Therefore, when last Saturday night they entered a popular Montmartre cafe frequented chiefly by Americans they protested vigorously when the manager refused to serve them, declaring "we do not want N—— around the place."

Thrown Out

With the help of waiters and, according to the French press, also of Americans, the two princes were deposited none too gently on the sidewalk. They reported to the police and went to see the Negro deputy, M. Daigne, who is reported to have received written assurance from the Poincare government that it does not intend to go back on its word and will insist on the fullest protection for Colored citizens in the Montmartre district and everywhere else where the French flag flies.

It is generally considered here that the color line movement is ill advised as well as untimely. Paris today is enjoying the patronage of a record number of American tourists of the season and if such troubles are repeated in the Montmartre district some Americans will either withdraw their patronage or possibly mix into the conflict to a greater extent which at any moment may become dangerous.

French Press Loyal

There certainly is little hope of reconciling some of the American visitors to the sight of seeing persons of color, even though they are of "native royal blood," dancing with white girls and inviting American women to jazz or tango with them as is customary in French dance halls. On the other hand the French press is using the "color line" incident to bolster up national feeling, the Petit Bleu urging the police to withdraw the licenses of all establishments not conforming to the government's edict.

The law permits restaurant proprietors to refuse to serve any client without giving a reason, but the Montmartre and other cabarets are classed as "tolerated establishments," and unless a clash can be averted Montmartre may lose some of its most luxurious attractions.

The Liberte is insistent that visitors must respect French traditions, saying: "Here's an opportunity to apply the government's decree. Montmartre is still in France, although this season one is sometimes tempted to doubt it."

The police say that the expulsion of Americans indulging in such incidents is within the power of the minister of the interior under a law providing for the expulsion of any foreigner disturbing the peace of the community. The minister of the interior, on the simple report from the surete general, is given autocratic authority over the victims, who are not even permitted to appeal against a decision.

English Hear of French Huge Black Army; Get Excited

LONDON, England, June 15.—London is much worked up over the appearance of a story printed in Lord Ridden's newspaper, NEWS of the WORLD, to the effect that France is training one million black soldiers in the French colonies in Africa. The London press very generally assume that this huge army can be regarded a menace to the British Empire. Nothing has come out of Paris to confirm the NEWS of the WORLD'S report.

French Negroes Unite in Fight On U. S. Tourists

Colonials Will Invoke Law to Protect Them From American Bias.

PARIS, Aug. 30.—French Negroes are banding themselves together to show the American tourists "their place."

Negroes from the French colonies who have come to Paris and other parts of France in large numbers since the war are determined to combat the tactics of the Americans, who refuse to frequent cafes and restaurants accepting Negro patronage.

The self-appointed head of the group is Prince George Tovalou, a prominent physician, a hero of the World War and the son of the former King of Dahomey. Prince George has appealed not only to members of his own race but also to Frenchmen to stop the outrages of the American visitors.

"If the whites in the United States see fit to organize a Ku Klux Klan to intimidate the Negroes, I don't see why we shouldn't have a similar organization to protect our rights.

"I am what they call the King Kleagle and if any of my folks want to join my organization they will be most welcome.

"But we do not intend to apply tar and feathers to Americans who insult us in this free country. We plan to apply the law. For that reason, I have already caused trouble for two cafes frequented by boisterous Americans and intend to cause trouble for others who refuse to serve me just because the tourists object.

"Many of my friends have already signified their intention of joining the Klan."

It will be recalled that Prince George has already caused two cafes, which cater to Americans, to be closed by the police because they refused to serve him.

COLOR LINE RAISES FURORE IN FRANCE; AMERICANS PANNED

Police Close Places Where Negroes Were Ejected on Complaint of the Tourists.

By HUGH O'CONNOR
Staff Correspondent of The World

PARIS, Aug. 28.—The French are so astounded by their discovery of anti-Negro prejudice among Americans that they are still spluttering. To them it is inconceivable—fantastic!—that a man whose skin happens to be white should object to the company of another because his skin happens to be black.

When French newspapers told how Americans at a Montmartre night resort rose immediately at their tables and shouted angrily for the manager to "throw out" two Negroes who had taken places, the French public was bewildered at first. It seemed matter for an alienist. Then they were furious when it was explained what it meant.

There seems to be very little acquaintance with the history of the Negro prejudice in America and practically no understanding of it here except among the French Negroes themselves. They say now: "If black men were good enough to fight alongside white men, they are good enough to sit alongside them."

French Negroes Now Aroused.

The French Negroes are now so aroused that the semi-official Temps even avoids the word "color" when it speaks gravely of "the absurdity of the American prejudice against epidermic pigmentation."

By way of spreading reasonableness upon the troubled occasion the Temps continues: "Americans are not thinkers or refined intellectuals, but generally they show some respect for cerebral accomplishment. It may be of interest to them to learn that a small book fell out of the pocket of one of the Negroes as he was being ejected. It was a book of philosophic thoughts and the name of the author on the fly leaf was the name of the ejected black man—Prince Kojo Tovalou Houenou of Dahomey, member of the French bar. Here are some of the thoughts:

"Men are gods who must be made reasonable; for society requires them to reduce their divine portentions in order to put their feet on the ground." * * * "Real greatness is revealed in small occasions; whereas great occasions sometimes serve to ornament small men."

"Further, he says, not having abdicated my soul in coming to Europe, I have understood that civilization is an immense buffoonery wallowing to its ends through mud and blood, as in 1914."

Then the Temps inquires: "How many of the champagne filled Americans who objected to this black man could understand the ideas of the pigmented Pascal with whom they were refusing to associate?"

The question remains unanswered. So does the alternative, which the Temps didn't propose—"If they could not understand him, then why did he insist upon associating?" This would be particularly apropos because the black Prince Kajo and his brother Marc seem to have gone about with a racial chip on their shoulders. They were previously put out of "The Jockey," a small cafe on the Boulevard Montparnasse, run by Americans for Americans.

Both "The Jockey" and the Montmartre place, "El Garon," have been closed by the police, although it is provided in French law that the proprietor of any drinking establishment may refuse to serve any client without explanation. The French police simply made use of their corresponding right to withdraw the night license of any drinking establishment without explanation.

Protests "Far West Habits.'

This official action is largely due to the efforts of Gratien Candace, the black representative of Guadeloupe in the Chamber of Deputies. In a published article he "invokes the refined taste of the French population which is the product of long centuries of civilization," against the introduction of Far West habits in France."

"Their jazz and shimmy dances are bad enough, but let us be preserved from their prejudices," he says. "If they wish us to respect their dry law in America they must respect our Negroes in France."

One newspaper published a vituperative article under the heading, "Montmartre is not an American Colony." Another counsels having placards printed in English with a translation of the official warning of the Quai d'Orsay to foreigners—discrimination against Negroes will not be tolerated under pain of penalties." Let the Americans be expelled!

COMMEND FRANCE FOR STAND ON RACE PREJUDICE

St. Louis Clarion

8-17-23

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth avenue, New York City, today cabled the French Minister of Foreign Affairs commending the French Government's stand against Negro baiting by American tourists in France.

Chicago Tribune

The cablegram reads as follows:

St. Louis Mo

"French Minister of Foreign Affairs, Paris.

"National Association for Advancement of Colored People with membership of one hundred thousand endorses your stand against American color prejudice.

(Signed) "James Weldon Johnson, Secretary."

This cablegram follows a warning issued by the French Foreign Office to American tourists, that Negroes would have to be treated with respect in France. According to a correspondent of the New York Times, the following incident occasioned the French Government action, which is accompanied by extensive and indignant editorial comment in the French press.

Surgeon Is Ejected

"A French surgeon who is a Negro occupied one of the seats in the big tourits' automobile as it startetd on the trip to the region of Rheims. Practically all the other twenty occupants were from the United States.

"They objected to the presence of the Negro among them, but nevertheless the car got under way. A few miles out of Paris the Americans renewed their protests, which led to a heated argument, in which the Americans said they wouldn't ride with a "nigger" and the Negro replied:

"I fought four and a half years, during most of which you Americans were not fighting. It seems to me I have as much right as you to go to see the battle fields."

"The end of it was that the Americans threw the Negro out of the car and left him by the roadside. The result was a protest to the Foreign Office.

Deputies Candace and Bousse, both Negroes, have served notice on Premier Poincare that they will interpellate the Government on this issue when parliament reopens."

9-28-23

In spite of rumors from Germany relative to the "Black Horror" on the Rhine, the Chicago Tribune, in its foreign correspondence, admits that the French black troops from Senegal are giving the Germans no cause for complaint. St. Louis, Mo.

The Tribune story comes from Coblenz and is as follows:

Coblenz, Sept. 2 (Special Correspondence.)—The "black horror" of the Rhine is a lot different from what many Americans have ben led to believe.

The French sent Sengalese and Moroccans, as well as white troops, into the Coblenz District, when the Amarcos left for home in January, and the German police don't know of a single serious case of an attack on women by Senegalese or Moroccan troops in that time.

The Senegalese, but particularly the Moroccans, undoubtedly have annoyed women in the streets and public roads occasionally, and in the whole Rhineland there possibly have been some attacks on women, but in this important district there have been no serious attacks.

On the other hand, one can see lower class German girls walking into the country with Senegalese soldiers almost any afternoon. Many lower class German girls openly admire and flirt with the black soldiers.

South Africa of Tomorrow

THE South African Native Affairs Department has issued an account of the progress of the native community of South Africa during the three years since the war. Mr. Barrett, until recently the Secretary of the Native Department, says that the spread of education and the stirring events of the Great War have had an unprecedented influence on native thought, and have led to a growth of "race consciousness" which will no longer accept present conditions without critical examination. An article in the Manchester Guardian of June 23, in discussing the report says: The Nation 9-12-23

We are reminded that nearly all the veteran champions of native causes have passed away: the two Schreiners, Louis Botha, Maurice Evans, and the two Moffats. The older native chiefs, too, have gone, and the guidance of purely native thought is falling increasingly into the hands of young and ardent educated natives. The native demand for the franchise is still unsatisfied; in Cape Colony alone does the native possess the vote—a heritage of direct British government. Instead of the franchise, General Smuts has given an advisory board of four experts on native policy, but no native has been appointed to this body, and it is already clear that this advisory board in no way meets the demand of a native franchise. The color bar is thus rigidly maintained in the legislative sphere.

The Land and the Native

The 1913 Land Act, by which General Botha laid the foundations of his ambitious scheme for dividing the 300 million acres of South African land between the races—260 million acres for the occupancy of 1,000,000 whites and 40 million acres for 4,500,000 natives—is slowly pursuing its disentangling process, although legal decisions have limited its operations in Cape Colony, and is thus facilitating native purchases of land, whilst by the same process in the Orange Free State disabilities against purchase of land by natives have received confirmation. The most interesting feature is that the native is apparently less attracted than the white man to individual tenure. The following are the statistics of purchase since 1913:

Farms purchased tribally	55
" " individually	24

All land tribally purchased must be registered in the name of the Native Commissioner in trust for the tribe; those purchased communally must be governed by articles of association defining the rights of each shareholder; those purchased by individuals are entirely a matter between buyer and seller. The Natal Native Trust is one of the most interesting and successful experiments in African land holding. The trust covers 42 native areas in Natal, comprising 2,192,568 acres and occupied by nearly 300,000 natives. The natives are encouraged to keep clean and healthy herds, lay down plantations, and undertake irrigation works. The trust has 60 officials, who advise and help the natives in their task of dipping 500,000 cattle a week and of keeping in motion some 22 miles of irrigation works.

Taxation and Education

One of the chief complaints of the natives in South Africa is that they are not only taxed without being given a voice in the spending of the money, but taxed far beyond any benefits received. This report shows that for the three years subsequent to the war the direct taxation borne by the four and a half millions of natives of the Union was £2,468,000, or an average of £823,000 per annum. To this must be added Pass Law fees of £325,000, making a total direct taxation of £1,150,000 per annum. To this direct burden must be added the indirect taxation, which, like the indirect benefits received, is only a speculative figure, the two probably canceling each other in operation. What are the direct benefits? The Native Affairs Department, now manned by a staff of 582 persons, cost before the war £287,550; but today it costs £500,000. The total expenditure on education averages on the three years £202,000. Thus the native receives in direct benefits value to the amount of £722,000, as compared with a direct tax burden of £1,150,000—and no voice in the spending thereof!

The Nation 9-12-23,

The educational facilities provided for the natives vary considerably in the four provinces of South Africa, as may be seen from the following schedule:

	Native population	Expenditure
Cape Colony	1,500,000	£170,000
Transvaal	1,220,000	56,759
Natal	1,000,000	32,502
Orange Free State	350,000	5,273

The report on education is disappointing in that it chronicles so little beyond stating what is so obvious—namely, that education is everywhere crippled through lack of financial aid. The South African native college is progressing but slowly, the twenty students with which it was inaugurated have only increased to sixty—sixty from a population, including the protectorates, of nearly seven million!

The total number of natives employed under the oversight of the Native Affairs Department in the last year under review was 278,435.

We thus obtain a picture of 4,500,000 people with a "racial consciousness" which demands an abolition of the color bar to civic and industrial advancement. This mass of humanity is smarting today under a growing sense of wrong: denied the franchise, denied any voice in spending the heavy toll taker from their wages, denied the right to purchase back from whites the land which once they owned, denied by organized white labor the freedom which those very labor unions loudly declare to be the right of every man (other than colored).

Better Manners Needed.

There is no excuse for these Americans who have been behaving toward colored citizens of France in the approved spirit of the lynching "bee." It was not one incident alone but several incidents of an outrageous character that called forth the well-deserved warning now issued to ill mannerly American tourists by the French Foreign Office. If that office finds it necessary to deport any American tourist for insulting a French colored citizen in France, and especially for insulting a colored officer who fought for his country, its action will nowhere find stronger indorsement than here in the United States.

FOR SEES END OF WHITE MAN'S RULE

Captain Salisbury, Back From East, Says "Days of White Man's Rule Are Numbered.

New York, June 20—"The white man's days in the East are numbered; fifty years will see Sumatra, India and the Philippines all under native rule," is the prediction made by Captain Edward A. Salisbury, who arrived yesterday aboard the 'Conte Rosso,' completing a tour of the world made in the interest of the Southwestern Museum of California. "The one topic of conversation among white colonists in the East whether they be Dutch, English, French or German," he said, "is how long can it last?"

Captain Salisbury's addition to the long list of white explorers, travelers and observers who have brought this same message back to America, gives added significance to the general feeling the world over that white rule is about nearing its end, on account of the high reputation which Captain Salisbury bears as a close and truthful observer of world events and movements.

Under pressure of the colored members of the Chamber of Deputies, Poincare agreed to request the American Government, through the Ambassador at Washington, to endeavor to explain to Americans touring France that France's Negro citizens enjoy the same privileges as whites in every respect and will be protected by the law against discrimination.

The Government intends to to issue an official statement to the French people and to visiting foreigners on the subject, particularly with a view to preventing unpleasant incidents.

A cafe proprietor who recently forced the depa ture of a Negro customer at the request of Americans, will be punished by the police closing his establishment for eight days.

(Crusader Service)

Paris, July 17.—White Americans must check the "color line" at the three-mile limit.

American capitalists and pettybourgeoisie, touring France, have caused a furore in Paris—where the color line does not exist—because they resent the presence of French colonial Negroes as guests and customers in cafes, restaurants, hotels, trains and sight-seeing busses.

So indignant are the colored resi the boorish Anglo-Saxons that Depudents of Paris over this attitude of ty Diagne, representing Senegal, the home of Battling Siki, the fistic conqueror of "the best blood of Europe," has protested to Premier Poincare asking the Government to take some action to show the impudent Americans "their place."

Deputy Diagne, in a letter to Poincare refers specifically to the row caused by the boorish Americans when they found that several Senegalese had booked passage on the same sight-seeing bus which was to convey their little tin-god majesties to the battlefields.

"Too many Americans," stated the Deputy, "are running loose in our boulevards trying to enforce their savage customs on the French gentlemen of color.

A significant reaction to the activities of white Americans in spreading their vicious propaganda against Negroes and attempting to institute the "color line" in Paris as they have instituted it in Cuba and one or two South American countries, occurred the other evening at a concert where there was present a large number of black and white Americans.

At the conclusion of the concert, the white Americans burst forth into the "Star Spangled Banner," while the colored Americans stood by in sullen silence. Noting this, one of the leaders of the white Americans hollered out to the colored "citizens" of the United States to join in "in your national anthem." He waved his hands, conductor-fashion, and his companions held their voices to give the colored brethren a chance to lead off with the anthem. There was a brief conference among the colored Americans, quickly followed by their bursting forth into sonorous, rich-throated song.

But they sang not the "Star Spangled Banner," but the "Marsellaise," the French national song, and in a large measure the international song of all oppressed peoples. And the French orchestra which had ignored the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner," quickly whipped out their instruments and accompanied the dark Americans, while the Parisian crowd which had been speeding towards the exits to escape the infliction of the American anthem, stopped in their paces to join the colored men in their rendition of the "Marseillaise," and thunderously cheered them at its conclusion, several members feting them later at one of the leading cafes in Paris.

Negro Barred; Cafe Disciplined. When Prince Hajo Tavalou Houenou, nephew of the African King of Dohomey, appeared at an all-night cabaret in Paris with a negro friend both were thrown out by the management when other patrons objected to their presence. The prince made a strong complaint through diplomatic channels and the police department revoked the license of the cabaret. Similar incidents have occurred at other Paris cafes, protests against the negroes coming mainly from Americans — especially South Americans.

FRANCE ACTS AGAIN AGAINST COLOR LINE

The Guardian

POINCARE TELLS BLACK DEPUTY HE WILL FOLLOW MATTER CLOSELY—TOOK AWAY NIGHT LICENSE OF ONE ESTABLISHMENT.

PARIS, Aug. 18, 1923—A new warning to foreigners who actively draw the color-line in France is found in the published response of Premier Poincaire to Deputy Georges Barthelemy, who announced last week his intention to interpellate the Government at the opening of Parliament on recent incidents between French blacks and foreign whites.

The Premier states that he has ordered the Minister of the Interior to take such action as may be necessary to prevent repetition of such incidents It is believed here that the Government might go as far as expulsion in flagrant cases. The letter says, in part:

"A severe penalty already has been put upon the Mortmarte establishment where the last incident occurred. Its night license has been withdrawn.

"I will continue to follow the problem closely, leaving to the Minister of the Interior, under whose control lies the policing of foreigners and the surveillance of public establishments the duty of seeing that French laws assuring equality to all are strictly observed, and that all infractions of these laws be punished."

It is accepted that the Premier hopes his letter may serve the double purpose of a warning against further color incidents—which, unpunished, cannot help hurting France's prestige among her almost exclusively black colonials—and soothing the feelings of the indignant Deputy. While it is felt that France must defend the dignity of her colonies, there is no question that M. Poincaire does not wish to offend American feeling, and would like to keep the question from coming to debate in the Chamber of Deputies.

GOOD NAME OF AMEI

(New York World)

The American issue in Paris is ing acute. To settle it to the s tion of some of the tourists we abroad, the French government may have to issue a summary decree requiring the laws, principles and customs of the French people to be radically changed where people of darker skins are concerned.

A few days ago it was a case of some American visitors protesting vigorously against a party of young French African officers occupying seats in a public bus in Paris. The minister of foreign affairs promptly published a warning that in law and practice France permitted no such bar to be raised against Negroes as the Americans had assumed the right to order raised. Now, perhaps by way of rebuke to the minister, a party of Americans in a Montmartre night club are said to have caused the forcible ejection of two F Africans, nephews of a former king of Dahomey, one of them a practicing barrister in the French courts, in vindication of the dignity of the white race. The proprietor of the place and his assistant are to be taken into court.

The French are slow in acquiring foreign ideas. But at the present rate they much soon be forced to admit how far we have outstripped them in our regard for equal rights and strive to conform to our ideals. Either that or Americans abroad must learn as a matter of self-respect and naitonal pride to observe the decencies of conduct expected to Frenchmen at home.

French Gov't Backs Up Gen. Mangin Idea

Recent Action on Tourist Problem and Film Production Show Trend to Use 60,000,000 Natives.

PARIS, Sept. 6—The development and utilization of the 60,000,000 Negroes in its colonies is France's logical means of self-preservation, according to Gen. Mangin, in a recent speech at Strasbourg following a review of colored troops in Alsace.

"France is not a nation of 39,000,000," Gen. Mangin said, "she is a power of 100,000,000. It is unfortunate that the Senegalese are no longer on the Rhine, and it is probable that the violent campaign in the Germanic press and the insidious campaign in the press of certain other countries is guided by the fear of seeing our colonial empire becoming a part of the homeland, thus augmenting the power and expansion of France in the world.

Million for War

"If before the war my viewpoint had been accepted, France would have had 1,000,000, instead of 180,000blacks fighting on the western front, and the war would have been won more quickly and under circumstances."

Pittsburgh, Pa.

The French Government in a recent series of articles has championed its colored citizens. It issued an official communique warning foreigner not to resent the presence of Negroes in restaurants and dance halls with-drawing the license of a Montmarie establishment for ejecting colored citizens and prohibiting the film "The Birth of a Nation" because it was offensive to the colored people. This indicates that the Poincare government has eppoused Gen. Mangin's ideas for strenghtening France through the absorption and employ of natives from the colonies.

Three Paths for France

The Mangin school lays down there alternatives for France with its falling birth rate to survive against the increasing population of Germany.

An appliance with Germany with its 70,000,000 people. M. Caillaux, former premier is an exile from Paris and was branded a traitor for preaching this.

An alliance with England with 45,000,000people. But the new English policy of supporting the present weak Germany against the strong France, thus maintaining the balance of power and breaking up the entente, drives home the realization that any cooperation with Albion will always be to the sole advantage of Great Britain.

Increase France's population to 100,000,000 through development of colonies, thus tripling its man power and its potential soldiery.

Chance of Fourth

A fourth course may be created, if the proposed French cooperation with Spain in Morocco is adopted which would give France stronger prestige in northern Africa through Spain's weight with the Sultan of Morocco, besides giving the Paris government a strong counterbalance in the Mediterranean against Great Britain and Italy.

The league of nation's rules for a mandate prohibits the mandatory power from using natives of mandate territories as soldiers, except for the protection of their homes, but this does not apply to pre-war colonies.

No Colour Question in London Courts.

A juryman who attempted to raise a racial colour question was severely snubbed, and rightly so, at the London Sessions on Wednesday. The case was one in which a non-European was the prosecutor and the defendant a woman. The jury were some time in considering the verdict, whereupon Sir Robert Wallace, the chairman, inquired as to whether they would like to ask him any questions, as he could see no difficulty over the case. The foreman only got as far as, "Can a question of colour, my lord," when Sir Robert interrupting, and thumping his desk hard, said, "no, not at all. It is scandalous that such a point should be raised in a British court of justice. If there is anybody on the jury raising such a question let him at once leave the court." The juryman who had raised the question was ordered to leave the jury box, and another juror was sworn in.

Race Problem — 1923.
Europe.

The White Man's Burden

SOME of the most troublesome controversies in the history of the British Empire have centered in the relation of the white settlers to the indigenous colored races of Africa. Scarcely less vexatious is the question of the civil rights to be allowed to the Indian subjects of the Crown. When these two problems present themselves simultaneously in the same area, there results a complication of exceptional difficulty. This is what is happening in the Crown colony and protectorate formerly known as British East Africa and now called Kenya. This is a tropical district of 245,060 square miles, with Abyssinia on the north and the Tanganyika mandate area on the south. It has a population of 2,630,000, of which only 9,650 are white Europeans and 36,000 are Asiatics, mostly Indians.

The occasion of the triangular duel being fought in Kenya between Europeans, Indians, and Africans is the demand of the Indians for equality with the Europeans as regards the franchise, conditions of land tenure, and restrictions on immigration and residence. They back their claims by appealing to a resolution of the last Imperial Conference in favor of removing the disabilities of British Indians in various parts of the empire. Their demand was recently expressed in a resolution of the Indian Council of State, on the motion of Mr. Srinavasa Sastri, the representative of India at the Washington Conference. Principle apart, it is urged on their behalf that Indians colonized the East African littoral before the whites, that the establishment of a British protectorate was due to the influence of Indian traders with Arab rulers and native chiefs, and that they perform a useful service by acting as intermediaries between the Europeans and the Africans.

The European settlers are almost unanimous not only in opposing these claims but in demanding the exclusion of Indian immigrants altogether. They declare that those who come to Kenya are of a most undesirable type, hindering rather than assisting the development of the country. On the ground that Indian labor lowers the standard of living, the few European wage-earners of the colony are as hostile to the Indians as are their employers. Certain pledges made by Lord Milner in 1920 are quoted by the whites in defense of their position.

Meanwhile, what of the original inhabitants? The history of African exploitation forbids one to attach much value to the professed solicitude of the Europeans for the welfare of the native population as the main ground of their objection to the Indian. What the natives themselves think of the matter is in dispute; many of them are said to regard with disfavor any suggestion that these outsiders should be admitted to a civil status higher than their own. There can be little love lost between these blacks and either Indians or Europeans.

The final authority in the matter lies with the Colonial Office in London. The decision will be a critical one. The question has aroused acute feeling in India, where the disabilities of Indians in Africa are resented as an intolerable indignity, so much so that their continuance will certainly stimulate revolutionary agitation. On the other hand, the handful of Europeans in Kenya affirm their determination to drive the Indians out anyhow—if necessary, by making Kenya a territory over which the Union Jack will no longer fly.

POINCARE TO STAND BY COLORED FRENCH

Says Proprietors of Restaurants Must be Punished for Refusing Them Sevrice

PARIS, Aug. 19.—Premier Poincare has wirtten a letter to George Barthelmy, member of the Chamber of Deputies who has notified the premier of his intention to interpellate the government on the recent incidents that have arisen over foreigners objecting to the presence of colored Frenchmen in places of amusement and restaurants.

The premier says his attention has been called to several such incidents recently and points to the official warning issued to foreigners informing them that they are the guests of France and that as such they should respect her customs and laws.

The premier adds that he has asked the minister of the interior to take measures to prevent a recurrence of such incidents and to decide what punishment can be inflicted upon proprietors of establishments which do not welcome colored people on equality with whites.

The American film "The Birth of a Natior" was to have been produced here today, but the police prohibited it.

Paris Wakes Up To Find Negro Social Problem

After Protesting American Conduct, Citizens Ask Special Police.

IS AFRICAN INVASION

New Styles Demand Thinness —Fasting and Dancing Are Crazes as Result.

From The World's Bureau
Special Cable to The World

PARIS, Dec. 29.—Although the French rose in indignation against American tourists last season for protesting against the presence of Negroes in public pleasure establishments in Paris, Parisians themselves are now protesting against it and discovering there is a color problem in France.

The City Council of Paris has been disturbed by it ever since an Algerian recently ran amuck on the boulevards with a long knife and killed two women who happened to be passing.

Organization of special police to supervise and discipline the Algerian, Moroccan and Tunisian population of Paris is about to be proposed by City Councillor Godin. He points out France is being invaded without restriction by North African immigrants and that there are already several hundred thousand installed in the working class districts.

His special police force would be chosen for its courage and ability to speak the Arab and Kabyle languages. Its sole duty would be to deal with the color problem.

Getting Thin in Paris.

Fashion is imposing fresh tortures on Parisian women anxious to keep their beauty and slenderness of form. No sooner had they added the cocktail habit to that of drinking tea and eating pastries in the afternoon than they were called upon to abandon them and resign themselves to an austere life from which all gourmandizing is banished.

The Parisienne of to-day must have a slender figure; otherwise she is considered out of date. So they are all following treatment invented by a new school of medical practitioners which consists mostly of fasting. Instead of nibbling pate de foie gras and ices, French women fight unwelcome fat by living mostly on vichy and dry biscuits.

The author of the recent book on "The Martyrdom of a Fat Man," little thought how many martyrs of the fair sex would soon be revealed among those fleeing from dreaded portliness. One well known actress has lost twenty pounds of superfluous weight and is recovering her health and youth at the same time. Socially she is going without food five days a week, at the beginning of each course of treatment.

Now fasting has become a craze socially and dancing is more popular than ever. War on fat as the enemy of youth is not, however, confined to women. Financiers, statesmen and business men flock to medical specialists who teach them how to grow thin by fasting. The ballrooms of Paris are filled every night by white haired men with figures that dashing young cavalry officers might envy.

"Mismarriage" Bureau.

Throughout France marriage bureaus flourish and the results are regarded as fairly satisfactory except in the industrial city of Firminy. Steel is made there and coal mines are nearby and there is something in the air which seems to breed resentment. In Firminy there are said to be more unsatisfactory marriages than anywhere else in France, and it is in Firminy, therefore, that a mismarriage bureau has just been invented.

It began with the following announcement which appeared in the local newspapers and on posters throughout the district:

"All victims of ill assorted marriages in the City of Firminy and vicinity are urgently requested to be present at a meeting which will take place this Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the market square to appoint a committee and organize an appropriate banquet."

Couples poured into the square on the Sunday named, two days before Christmas, and a permanent organization was soon named with instructions to arrange for a banquet. It is expected the couples will reassert their conviviality on that occasion and temporarily be relieved of the thought that they are mismated.

essayed to show in a Paris theater his prejudice-exciting picture, "Birth of A Nation." Immediately this American clergyman was informed by French authorities that the "Birth of A Nation" could not be presented in a Paris theater until and unless it expunged from its riotous acts all scenes containing burlesques of Negroes.

Thus it was left for Mr. Dixon into whose mind the true conception of democracy had never previously entered, to learn from a stern foreign teacher, the modern meaning of that carelessly handled word democracy; and to learn moreover that even though they be on other shores and under other skies, God maintains outposts of justice and fair play that are to be reckoned with by those who are blind to human rights as they undertake to spread their senseless propaganda throughout all quarters of the globe. America talks about prejudice; France acts against it,

WE TALK: FRANCE ACTS

In America there is abundance of promiscuous meaningless talk about race prejudice and the undesirableness of it as it affects the white and black races of the country, making for social restlessness, and savage treatment of the subordinate race by the dominant race in some sections but very little is being done in a positive way to checkmate such prejudice even as it manifests itself in those public institutions that are supposed to be maintained for the general good irrespective of race.

But quite the contrary is true among Frenchmen. France is not given to much hypocritical talk, but she acts; acts promptly and without equivocation. Herein this sincere plucky European Republic can teach us some things. France does not foster or tolerate institutions and practices that play up and perpetuate the pompous pride of one race at the expense of another and of the general wellbeing of the nation. She puts the ban on whatever burlesques or handicaps any race group comprised within the nation's total population.

More than once has her vigilance been exercised and her courage been displayed on behalf of her Negro citizens. Just the other day, the Reverend Thomas Dixon an American minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ

OUR FRIEND GREAT BRITAIN.

Six short weeks ago Negro papers carried a news item to the effect that a British crime expert had denounced the Klan. Some of the smaller papers, like a starving tigress, seized this news and made much of it. There were big, screaming headlines across the front of papers and editorials innumerable. Several of the editors were quick to say that England had proved herself a friend and that England, because she tolerated no Klan, was on record against all forms of intimidation and outlawry.

Of course in making such statements they were within their rights. The crime expert was within his rights in making any statement he chose, but we doubt if he was within the bounds of propriety.

We are oftimes deceived. This denunciation is by no means indicative of the entire British view of things affecting the darker races. A glance at Britain's history will reveal startling disclosures. England is the most cruel and oppressive of all taskmakers, all rulers. Her history is the bloodiest and most cruel of them all. She has ever caused, by her unscrupulous methods, a dangerous and boiling hatred within her dominions. She knows no god save Might. Armed to the teeth, known far and wide as the mistress of the sea, she stands ready to enforce her exhorbitant demands however great the cost in human life.

In British West India, whence hailed our friend Garvey, she refuses representation to all the natives. They have little or no voice in their government. France, however, follows a directly opposite policy in French West India.

England does not bring down our censure because of the West India rule alone. She has other sins, less known perhaps, but as cruel as any other. In East Africa, immediately south of Abyssinia, lies Kenya, a British Crown Colony, where live about three million Africans and about ten thousand Britons. The British rule there, according to a Spanish paper, is cruel and oppressive beyond imagination. So widespread is the cruelty that even a London paper, the Nation and Atheneaum is moved to say:

"Africans who . . . occupied African land in desirable situations were removed and relegated to less fertile reserves. . . . When the Africans refused to come and work for very low wages for the settlers (British) the government yielded to the settlers' repeated demands and administrative pressure was applied in various ways to induce them to supply cheap labor. . ."

This is a mild sample of the slavery as carried on by America in earlier days. In this case the British want to pay the natives, but the pay offered is so far below a living wage that the natives refused to work. When they refused, the government forced them to work by increasing their taxes when they were idle, and by curtailing their food supply as near as possible.

These "settlers" as the Britons call themselves, asked the government for rules governing election which would make it impossible for the natives to have a majority in either legislature or council. When the Indians (there are 25,000 of them in Kenya) found that responsible government was being instituted in Kenya, they sought offices on equality with the whites.

They were promptly told that Kenya was a "white man's country," and the officials in charge were immediately instructed that the immigration of Indians must cease, that they were to be segregated and that no land in certain sections was to be sold to any black or brown man.

Such is the record of our friend Great Britain. Her ambition today is greater than ever before. The world has not forgotten her rule in Ireland; the world has not forgotten her rule in Africa. But England goes right on as if unmindful of the opinion of the world. Her faith is in the sword, the cannon, the airplane and the ship. She knows no God save these.

At the same time members of parliament were discussing their inability to understand America's method of dealing punishment to Negroes before they could be carried into court for trial, orders were being issued for horrible and stiff methods in Ireland. Ireland, thank heaven, is free, but that gives English crime experts no right to cast their sympathy for our welfare in America while, at the same time, they raise no voice against the cruelties practiced under their own nose, by their own brothers.

If these "experts" have tears to shed, let them shed them on their own shoulders, not ours. If their hearts are breaking because of outlawry in America, a denunciation of American evils is not likely to cure or heal them. Let them turn to Africa whose blood they have spilled. Let them practice the golden rule; let them get the beam out of their own eye; let them denounce the rule in Kenya and correct it, and then turn to our shores and their denunciations will be more resultful.

Paris Restaurants Now Draw Color Line To Please Americans; Negro Deputy Protests

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, July 1.—During the tourist season the best customers of the cafés and night restaurants of the boulevards, the Latin Quarter and Mont Martre are Americans.

Now in France there is no color line. Generally speaking, white, black, brown and yellow get the same treatment, or, anyhow, are entitled to it. As the number of tourists from America has grown since the war, the frequency of their complaints against association with negroes in theatres, cafés and other public resorts has led some proprietors of those places to allow the charm of the dollar to affect their observance of the national motto: "Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité."

Since the matter was brought into the public prints by the forcible ejection of "Battling" Siki from the New York Bar here some weeks ago there has been a good deal of discussion of the subject, and now a debate in Parliament is promised on the question whether a café director has the right to please his easy-spending American clients to the extent of putting on the pavement respectable black Frenchmen.

Gratien Candace, Deputy for Guadeloupe, tells in L'Homme Libre today something of his intentions in that direction. Candace is a negro. After remarking how important it is to France that her colonies love her and saying that their love is based on French justice, he says:

"Recently I have received a very large number of complaints which seem to indicate that French justice is becoming tempered. The other day a negro who fought bravely for France during the war was thrown out of a dancing place at Havre because this establishment was frequented by white Americans. I have called on the Minister of the Interior for an investigation.

"Several days before this incident a black man, who is a well known doctor, and who fought during the war, went into a café in the Boulevard Montparnasse, which is frequented by Americans, and service was refused him. The proprietor told him that out of respect for his American clients he did not allow any black men in his place. The police had to inform the proprietor that on French soil blacks and whites were equal under French law, and the doctor got his drink.

"Americans will never succeed in installing in France some of their customs which accord neither with the historic traditions, generosity of heart or noble conceptions of liberty and justice of our country.

"We wish to maintain intact the bonds of solidarity which unite the children of Continental and Colonial France, even if the dollar is greater than the

Paris May Close Cafe Which Bars Negroes To Please Americans

Paris, France—The clash between French and American attitudes toward Negroes has reached such a crisis here that the police threaten to close a cabaret where the proprietor refused recently to serve Negroes. The place is frequented by many white Americans.

The Negroes came in with some whites, including the composer, Darius Milhaud. One colored visitor was a Prince of Dahomey, but he could not be served.

Deputy Gratien Candace violently attacks Frenchmen for refusing to serve Negroes because of fear they will lose their American clientele.

"France has her own physignomy, which must not be disfigured," he warns. "Whites, yellows or blacks who possess the splendid title of French citizen are bound by the same ideal and justice and fraternity proclaimed by the Nation which made the greatest revolution in the world for the liberation of humanity."

Paris Gives a Politeness Tip to U. S.

Paris, France, July 6.—An incident in which four American tourists refused to make an excursion through Paris because the vehicle contained 12 black soldiers was taken up in a two column leading article in the Petit Bleu. The newspaper demands that tourist agencies insist that their patrons respect the customs of the country in which they are vacationing.

"These Americans behaved as vulgar persons," says the Petit Bleu. "Their ridiculous aversion for men of color contains no excuse. They are not at home but in our country, which is an entirely different affair. The protest of these individuals, devoted to white integralism, merited a severe lesson, and it is to be regretted one was not given which would make them see all colors. It is unfortunate that it was not made apparent that a Frenchman, whatever his color, is worth at least any foreign tourist."

RACE FEELING IN FRANCE.

In your remarks on "American Race Prejudice in France" you state: "It has also been said that in the French West Indies, notably in Martinique, where the proportion of black people is unusually high, the attitude of the whites has resembled that of our own Southerners toward the American negroes." This was never the case, for the legion, the customs, the laws relating to slavery, and, indeed, the very language of the French people, have always served to mollify their attitude as compared with that of the English-speaking peoples toward subject races. Further, the French West Indies have not been afflicted with the consequences of civil war and political and economic maladjustments, which have developed an "American race prejudice" truly peculiar to this country and entirely out of place elsewhere. The relations between whites and others in the French West Indies are far more cordial even than in the British West Indies. * * *

SPANISH ARMY LOSES ONE THOUSAND MEN IN FIERCE BATTLE WITH AFRICAN WARRIORS HWO RALLY ONCE MORE TO ABDUL KRIM, THE MOOR

(Crusader News Service.)

Madrid, June 14.—The Moors have done it again. Spain has suffered another severe military reversal in Morocco. The Riffian leader, Abdul Krim, who inflicted such a crushing defeat on the Spanish arms over a year ago, and who was paid an enormous ransom for the large number of Spanish prisoners captured by his forces has once more assumed the offensive. The tribesmen have flocked to his standard in enormous number, and the Riffian leader, who graduated from one of Europe's leading military academies, has proclaimed a Jehad or Holy War against the Spaniards.

To avert a threatened danger to their lines of communication between Tetuan and Sheshuan the Spaniards had dispatched a company site force including three squadrons of fighting air planes, which, however were mostly used for bombing unfortified villages, to break and disperse the rebel concentration. A Spanish force of 10 000 men encountered the Moroccan patriots strongly entrenched. The Spaniards bombed the patriot force, and after a searching fire from their guns, launched three infantry attacks, all of which were beaten off with heavy losses. The patriot force magnificently stood its ground during this baptism of fire. After the third Spanish attack had failed, the Moors launched a counter attack with such deadly effect that the Spanish forces sought safety in flight. A cavalry charge was then launched by the Moors and ruthless destruction overtook many of the fleeing Dons and their valorous British, French and American (white) allies who are serving the Spanish tyrants in the Spanish Foreign Legion.

The Spanish Foreign Legion was almost totally destroyed. Many of its members, as will be remembered were recruited last summer in the United States and the British Isles. They now sleep on African soil and hear the Moor's conquering tread above them.

The Foreign Legion and some native troops were placed in the van of the attacking Spanish Army. The Dons stayed behind "in support." When the fun was over and the flight begun, the Dons led the van of the fleeing army.

This latest reverse has produced a painful effect in Madrid and serves to strengthen the hands of the Spanish Communists who are demanding complete withdrawal of Spanish forces from African soil. In these circles, it is now satirically suggested that perhaps the Spanish capitalists will emulate the example of the Italians after the latter were whipped by the Abyssinians at the battle of Adowa.

MERICAN RA... REJUDICE IN FR...

The reported action of some Paris restaurants in closing their doors to negroes contrasts with the treatment which the French accorded American colored troops in France during the war. The Ninety-second Division, for example, which was composed of negroes, won many warm friends among the French people of the towns and villages where they were billeted. The same is true of the colored regiments brigaded with the French. This was not only because these soldiers were Americans, but because the French have never drawn the color line, as have Americans and English. Although they have not gone as far as the Spanish and Portuguese colonizers of Latin America, who for generations intermarried with races of all shades, they have always been tolerant and even cordial toward people with colored strains in their blood. As a rule, colored persons of good education have been freely welcomed socially and in every other way in France. The only possible exception has been in the case of those of the Senegalese troops who were recruited from backward and barbaric regions and who offered little appeal to French sympathies. It has also been said that in the French West Indies, notably in Martinique, where the proportion of negroes is unusually high, the attitude of the whites has resembled that of our own Southerners toward the American negroes.

America's race prejudices should not be exported. If the French, on their own account, wish to bar negroes from their restaurants, the matter is one which concerns only themselves and the colored races. When, however, they bar them in order to curry favor with Americans, it takes on another aspect. It is difficult to believe that there are enough negroes who visit or would like to visit the French restaurants patronized by Americans to give offense to any but the small handful of intolerants. Most peoples like to carry their prejudices about with them. But when they attempt to force them upon another nation, it is a signal that intolerance is going beyond bounds.

The French have a version of the adage which reads, "When in Paris do as the Parisians." Americans, for the most part, endeavor rather to do as they think the Parisians do. They are usually eager to cast aside the restraints of their American upbringing, substituting therefor an American-made conception of Paris as a city of unlimited personal freedom. The least that can be asked of Americans who visit French restaurants is that they put up with the eccentricities of French customs, even to the extent of tolerating the presence of foreigners of all colors. Could they but for a moment see themselves in French eyes they would realize that many of their actions appear to the French not only as eccentricities, but as exhibitions of downright social barbarism. A little more respect for Parisian prejudices as well as for Parisian tolerances would be in order.

BROWN STOCKINGS LATEST PARIS FASHION

Paris, France, Aug 10.—(By the Associated Negro Press.)—The bare, white legs of the fashionable Paris women are about to give way to "Nigger Brown" stockings. The fad started at Deauville during the recent season at the famed resort and has now reached and captured Paris. It is said that the adoption of brown stockings has been order by fashion's devotees as a rebuke to the Americans who have been over zealous in their efforts to establish a "color line" here in Paris.

RACE PREJUDICE IN FRENCH CONGO.

Paris, Nov. 20.—(U. S.)—Rene Moran, a native of Cayenne in the Kongo, has just returned from a series of lectures in which he will plead for better fellowship between blacks and whites that Charm prestige in Africa may not vanish. Moran last year attracted attention by winning the Goncourt prize with his novel "Batoula," wherein he describes with remarkable precision the native traditions and habits.

Assigned by the colonial ministry to study conditions in the Congo he now complains that the government's white employes, as a result of contact with their British and American colleagues, are begging to treat, even educated Negroes as inferiors, restaurants refusing to serve them at the same tables with whites, and railways not allowing them to enter carriages until all white Frenchmen are seated comfortably.—The New York Herald.

Black or White France?

A Pressing Present-Day Problem.

The President of the French Republic occupies a position in the constitution of France to which we have never had an exact analogy, though it was a little like that of our King's two hundred years ago.

In his recent book "The Genesis of the War," Mr. Asquith has described how he was present at a meeting of the French Cabinet and how he found that the procedure was very much the same as our own. The important difference is, of course, that the President of the Republic presides at all meetings of Ministers. Probably the King would be doing so now if it were not that the first two of his ancestors bearing his name were not able to understand English.

Anyhow, it is a rare thing for a President of the French Republic to make a speech other than of a purely ceremonial kind. M. Millerand broke this normal rule in his references to the population problem, and they were clearly made under a high sense of responsibility.

Policy, said President Millerand—in the matter of the birth-rate presses on those who govern France with an almost tragic character of gravity and urgency. Cries of alarm have been uttered. They have been heard and good citizens have begun an active campaign which is not without having already produced results. There are encouragements of the most varied kind for large families. There have been many doles given by banks for the purpose. There is a campaign against infant mortality. These are some of the means which have occurred to us, and nothing ought to be neglected. They will, however, all be of no effect if our moral habits are not themselves made anew. . .

To have children and to make men; the question of the birth-rate; the question of education; they follow and are all locked up with each other. This very interesting pronouncement is to be taken side by side with the recent statement of M. Poincaré that the French people number 100,000,000

The people of France, of course, bounded by the Channel, the Atlantic, the Pyrenees, the Mediterranean, and now most of the Rhine, do nothing of the sort. M. Poincaré was thinking of the black people of Africa who have been commanded and exploited by Gen. Mangin, and who are at hand to supplement the white citizens of France, depleted as they have been by the cruel losses of the war and by a falling birth-rate.

It has just been pointed out that in the "C" Mandates, under which France administers the ex-German colonies conquered by her in Africa, a phrase occurs which enables her to recruit black troops for service outside the colonies themselves—a provision not contained in the mandates of the same kind allotted to this country, nor, it is to be supposed, desired by the Government here.

President Millerand's speech seems to me to show by implication a certain feeling of doubt as to the wisdom of standing by and training negroes for purposes of defence in Europe. If such a thing happens it will entail the presence in France of large quantities of black troops, since, clearly, soldiers must be inured to the climatic and geographical conditions under which they might be called upon to fight.

If that is so, there will be at once a colour problem in France, and we shall all be asking ourselves: "What is the French for Ku Klux Klan?"—By "G.," in the London "Evening Standard."

France Lowers Bars On Movie to Boost Klan

Paris, France, Nov. 16.—French authorities, after protracted negotiations, have given permission for the motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," to be shown again in Paris. D. W. Griffith's masterpiece will therefore resume its run in the French capital without any cuts being made, despite protests by influential Senegal deputies who first raised objections against the film.

When the run ends in Paris the film will be shown in all parts of the country.

NEGRO TROOPS IN GERMANY

East Northfield Pastor Tells of Encounter with Sentry in Bingen.

To the Editor of The Union.

Sir: In connection with the further occupation of Germany by the French, and the statements reported to have been made by M. Clemenceau that there are no black soldiers in the Rhine country, the following account of a recent experience there may be of interest and value:

Some months ago I arrived, rather late at night, at Bingen-on-the-Rhine, and started along the main street, walking on the sidewalk, to the Hotel Distel, not far away. The street was brilliantly lighted. About 40 yards from the railway station is a large building evidently now used as barracks for French soldiers. A number of black soldiers were standing in the courtyard and gateway. At a little sentry box by the gate was a Negro soldier, a very black one, on guard. As I was about to pass he suddenly presented his bayonet point to my stomach. I did not hear him say anything. I stepped into the street, and as I walked by he struck at me viciously with a sweeping blow of his arm, touching me only slightly, as I was almost out of his reach. A German, to whom I afterward spoke, was walking a short distance ahead of me, and had gone out into the street on passing the sentry, evidently knowing that civilians must walk in the roadway when passing the sentry, although the walkway was abundantly wide enough.

On my mentioning at the hotel my experience with this Negro soldier, the only comment was, "Yes, they are very insolent." I was informed that there are 3000 to 4000 of these black soldiers in and around Bingen. I saw others in Mayence and elsewhere as I passed through on the train, and saw some each time that I traveled through this region.

I am a minister—retired—of the Presbyterian Church, whose Scotch ancestors came to America some 200 years ago. The above statement I have sworn to and had certified in our United States consulate in Venice, Italy.

This experience leads to some serious reflections, for if a person of my age, and well dressed and with some degree of dignity, receives such treatment, what is likely to be the conduct of these exponents of French civilization toward poorly dressed men and women, working people, and especially toward young women and girls?

And it leaves the conviction that the French officers desire this sort of conduct, otherwise they would not allow it. If the soldiers were ordered to be courteous and decent in their conduct with civilians they would not dare act as they do now. I am told by Americans who have spent some time in the occupied regions that it is quite the custom of the French soldiers to compel German civilians to walk in the street when meeting or passing these French occupants of the country. It compels the thought that it may be the deliberate purpose of the French occupation to harass and insult the German people—as if to provoke an uprising and revolt of the Germans which would give excuse for occupation of more German territory and destruction of property and lives.

I find that Senator Hitchcock stated this same view in his address in the Senate on Nov. 27 last, in which he says of this conduct:

"It is not limited to the abuse of women and girls in Germany. It is done for the purpose of arousing Germany to resent it . . . evidently for the purpose of provoking and exasperating the Germans to resistance in order that France may have an excuse to enter with military force and possess herself of German territory.

There should be a universal effort, by public opinion if nothing more, to compel the French to at least adopt a degree of civilized conduct as correct and proper, as is maintained by the British and American occupying troops.

BLACK TROOPS OUT OF RUHR

200 Were There 48 Hours in Shifting of Army Divisions.

Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DUESSELDORF, Feb. 25.—The French today gave an official explanation of how the assertion that there were colored troops in the Ruhr came to be repeated on Friday by a British news agency on German authority.

During the middle of last week one of the divisions employed here was replaced by another in which was a regiment of French colonial infantry. All these colonials were white men except 200 from Martinique who had been drafted in.

When the information that these 200 blacks were in the district reached General Degoutte he immediately telephoned Paris and arranged for their withdrawal. They were in the district only forty-eight hours.

With the exception of a few Malays employed in motor transport into the district, there are no colored troops either in the Ruhr or in the Düsseldorf area, and though the French consider the allegations and prejudice against their African troops completely unjustified, they intend to continue to avoid their use.

POET M'KAY FINDS SOVIET RUSSIA FRIENDLY TO HIM

Chicago Defender

Chicago, Ill.

New York, Feb. 16.—In a special cable dispatch to the New York Herald Saturday attention is called to the sensation that Claude McKay, the famous poet, is making in Russia. He is at present at Moscow as a delegate to the third internationale, representing the American Workers party, affiliated with the Communists. McKay is staying on in the soviet land to study conditions in order to write a book for the benefit of our people on the Russian revolution. 2-17-23

All the Russian newspapers give the poet much publicity and the Pravda, Moscow's leading publication, recently published two of his poems, one of them being a poem McKay read before a senatorial committee which investigated the Chicago riots four years ago. Although not a native American, having been born in Jamaica, British West Indies, McKay is a citizen of this country.

In Russia he is probably contrasting his treatment to that accorded him in this country when last year the police broke up a dance at Bryant hall because a lieutenant saw McKay dancing with a white woman.

French Say Colonials Have Not Been Sent to Germany.

(By the Associated Press.)

DUESSELDORF, Feb. 24.—Reports from German sources that black troops of the Seventh Colonial Regiment had been sent recently to Kupferdreh, Velbert and Woerden are officially denied by the French. It was alleged that these soldiers were being quartered in private dewlling and that colonial patrols had appeared on streets in those towns.

Steps to forestall sabotage by railway workers have been taken by the occupying forces, who assert that striking employes have been instructed by the Germans to hinder the French and Belgians by cuttinng o the gas, water and electric services.

With Ruhr customs houses in possession of the allies, the occupation authorities are finding new difficulties in the Rhineland. The postal, telegraph and telephone workers at Mayence are on strike and there is no communication into or out of the city.

"Horror on Rhine," Mostly German Propaganda Says Longuet, French Socialist, in Address

HARLEM N Y HOME NEWS

The story of the so-called 'horror on the Rhine' is largely a matter of German propaganda, which, taking advantage of the race prejudice known to exist in this country against the Negro, has been widely circulated with the hope that it would cause a movement to force France to remove the army of occupation," said Jean Longuet, grandson of Karl Marx and member of the French Chamber of Deputies, in a recent address before a large meeting of the Friends of Negro Freedom at Douglass Hall, 142d St. and Lenox Ave.

"Furthermore, it has been a mistake on the part of the inspirers," said Longuet, "for it has resulted in the removal of some of the Black Senegalese troops who were well liked and looked upon as big, good-natured children, and the substitution for them of white Moroccan troops, who are causing a good deal of mischief and bringing out many protests."

Prominent French Socialist

Longuet, who has served several terms as a Socialist member of the Chamber of Deputies and is a well-known figure in the French and international Socialist movements, is making a tour of America under the auspices of the American Socialist party. It was thought that in view of the French occupation of the Ruhr, it would be a good thing for those interested in the question of these black troops to get some reliable information on the subject. The Messenger, a Negro magazine; the Friends of Negro Freedom, the Socialist party of the 21st A. D., and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People arranged the meeting. Chandler Owen, one of the editors of The Messenger, acted as chairman.

"I would like to bring out," said Longuet, "that the French Socialist protest against these troops is not so much against black troops as a protest against an occupation by any troops, whatever may be their color. I would have you understand that the organization that was the forerunner of my party, the Workingman's International, organized in London in 1861 by Karl Marx, has been from its very beginning the champion of the causes of all oppressed peoples."

Aided U. S. During Civil War

"It was the Workingman's International, during the great Civil War in this country, that prevented the aristocracy of England and the newly risen factory owning class from bringing about England's recognition of the Confederacy, as desired by that so-called democrat, Gladstone. It was the workers, the labor unions and the radical societies of the great weaving districts of England who agitated for the support of Abraham Lincoln and the abolitionists in spite of the fact that they knew that such action would bring starvation upon them.

"In my country, whatever be our faults or even our vices, we do not know what race prejudice is. The French Chamber has Negro deputies from Martinique, Senegal, Madagascar, Guadaloupe and other colonies. Negroes in our colonies have had the vote since the revolution of 1848. There has never been an attempt to deprive them of their vote, legally or illegally.

"But we do protest this occupation. We protest not because some of the occupying troops are black, but because, just as the German occupation and annexation of Alsace-Lorraine was a direct cause of the World War, so will this occupation be a cause for future wars. We consider that the Alsace-Lorraine incident is no excuse or reason for the Rhine incident, and that the policy of 'revanche' is a mischievous factor in international dealings."

Crosswaithe Makes Address

Frank Crosswaithe, who was the Socialist and Farmer-Labor candidate for Assembly in the 21st A. D., also made an address. "You may remember," said Crosswaithe, "that while some numbers of the members of our were fighting in France to make world safe for democracy, a Negro ed Will Turner, down in Georgia, ened to get into a dispute with a ite man that ended in a fist fight. at night some 100 per cent Amerins called on Turner, bound him, aked his body in oil, touched a match him and strung him on a tree.

"Turner's wife, who was within one month of becoming a mother, was standing nearby, and in her grief dared to say that she would see that something be done about such a thing. Astounded at such heresy, our fellow-countrymen turned on her, bound her, soaked her in oil, set a match to her and strung her up beside her husband.

"The point I want to make," said Crosswaithe, "is that questions like democracy and the Negro problem are part of a bigger problem. When our fathers and grandfathers were private property there was no such thing as the lynching of Negroes, and it is this question of a more equitable distribution of wealth that is at the bottom of all the big problems of today."

Jacob Panken, Socialist Supreme Court justice; Walter White, field worker for the National Association, and George Goebel, Socialist candidate for Governor in the State of New Jersey, also made short addresses.

An interesting musical program was provided in vocal solos by Frances Bendelari, May Allison and Paul Robeson.

Several Cane Cutters Killed—Governor Sends Soldiers to the Scene.

Atlanta, Ga.

Fort de France, Martinique, Feb. 11.—(Crusader Service.)—Striking sugar cane cutters were in conflict with gendarmes near Bassignac yesterday. The police precipitated a short but fierce struggle by opening fire on a meeting of the strikers where the question of wages was discussed. Several of the strikers were wounded and others killed. The governor has sent reinforcements of soldiers and marines to help the local authorities break the strike against the sugar magnates.

FRENCH USE COLONIALS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 23.—More French colonial troops have entered the Ruhr, according to a statement put out Friday afternoon by the German Embassy. 2-24-23

"Colored troops of the Seventh French Colonial Regiment, the statement said, "have entered Verden, Velbert and Kupferdreh and have there been billeted in private homes."

Two Frenchmen on the Negro Troops

During the last month two distinguished Frenchmen have been in America. One is Georges Clemenceau, former Premier of France during the World War; the other, Jean Longuet, leader of the French Socialists and grandson of Karl Marx, the father of scientific Socialism. Both of them have constantly been confronted with questions concerning black troops in France—specifically the French African troops alleged to be on the Rhine. Speaking in Boston, Clemenceau was asked to answer Senator Hitchcock's question about black troops. The "Tiger" said "bon" and waded in:

"In the first place, there are no black troops of occupation in the area of occupation of the enemy. In the second place, I have seen black American troops at the front, and they stood the fire with bravery, too.

"Of course, this has nothing to do with the question of whether we are militarists or not. It is an attempt of German propaganda to oppose France and America, and obscure what is really the great question.

"The Germans and all of our foes had been killing enough of our white men, and 100,000 black men fell gallantly fighting on 'the frontiers of liberty' as ex-President Wilson called them. We are not going to deny them a place in history.

"Now, those black soldiers are always more or less occupying towns in France and always get along perfectly with the white French people. Even, I should say, their discipline is stricter than any white troops.

"So—and I have seen papers of German propaganda which I suppose inspired Mr. Hitchcock's sayings, and I can plainly say they are so many lies.

"The day before I left Paris, I heard that these stories would be employed to prove we were a militaristic people. So I asked the official people to give me plain information.

"The answer was that there had been only one established case of a Senegalese having mistreated a German woman. He was cashiered, and sentenced by a military tribunal."

The reason black troops were sent into the occupation zone at first, Clemenceau said, was to provide a few months of home leave for the white troops, "that had stood the fire for years, until America could come, and were rather exhausted."

"We couldn't foresee," he said, "that it would be more objectionable to the Germans than to the French, in whose towns they had been garrisoned. When we learned that it was, they were withdrawn.

"The German objection was more of a surprise because they employed black troops, and if they did not bring them to the front it was because no means of bringing them could be found. They did find means to invade Belgian Congo with blacks."

Pretty good for the old "Tiger." Hear also what is said by Jean Longuet:

What about the occupation of the left bank of the Rhine? I must tell our American friends that because we have no color prejudice in France the question of the Negro troops does not much appeal to us. Meanwhile it is true, as Mr. Clemenceau has said, that the black Senegalese are no more in the Rhineland provinces.

May I add, what I have already said at Carnegie Hall, that the Rhinelanders object much more to the Moroccans, who, after all, are not black but sunburned white men, because they are usually brutes, while the Senegalese are great children with no cruel instincts?

For me it is not a question of the color of the foreign troops who occupy Germany. Of course the German propagandists have believed it was clever to appeal to the feelings of the American people. But I think it is beside the question. What we as Socialists object to is to any foreign occupation and to all the humiliation it involves.

What is especially interesting about these comments is the general attitude of the French mind toward the Negro. Clemenceau is unquestionably one of the greatest imperialists of the world. Longuet is one of the leading internationalists, with views just about the opposite of Clemenceau on world economics and world politics. On one thing, however, they agree. Clemenceau says: "I favor having troops on the Rhine, and the question of their color does not enter into the consideration." Longuet says: "I do not favor having Negro troops on the Rhine, but not because they are Negroes. I do not favor having any troops there."

Another point on which Clemenceau and Longuet agree, is that the Negro troops are the most orderly, best disciplined, least objectionable ones that have been stationed on the Rhine. Again, both of them see through the thin veneer of American race prejudice. They realize that it is German propaganda calculated to appeal to American race prejudice.

We should like to expose these infantile American arguments even more ruthlessly than our French guests can do with propriety. First, all the Allies used Negro troops during the world war—England, France, Italy, and even the United States. The American white gentlemen found it very desirable to have Negro troops be shot in their place. They even concocted the marvellous discovery that 75% of all Negroes drafted were physically fit, while only 58% of the white men were physically fit. This, of course, was a lie on its face, inasmuch as every person outside of the insane asylum knows that people in ignorance, abject poverty, with poor housing, inadequate clothing, improper food, like the Negroes, could not be more physically fit than the white people. It is a matter of statistical record too, that all over the United States, the average death rate of the Negro is just about twice as high as that of the whites. Americans have the dual mind—the Dr. Jekyl-Mr. Hyde mentality. The Negro is tubercular, syphilitic, physically inferior for purposes of degrading him; but physically fit and physically superior when it comes to sending him to the front to save white men's hides. It's such convenient reasoning, "doncha know?"

We do not favor having any troops on the Rhine—white or black. We regard it unnecessary, uncalled for. Yet we haven't an iota of sympathy for the plea about "Black Troops." We submit that it is much more humane to police the Rhine with Negro troops, than to kill the Germans with Negro troops. England, France, Italy and the United States used Negro troops to kill the Germans. Why in thunder then are they raising such a smoke because Negro troops are being used to police the territory where they formerly shot down soldiers and occupants of the territory upon the orders of white Americans and other alleged superior whites!

Nevertheless, the French need those Negro troops about as much as they need anything else in the world just now. They will need them more in the future. They are a military and economic asset—greater than any probable asset which America may furnish the French. And the French are sufficiently intelligent a people, both to know their best interests and to choose them.

German Brides at Screven

FIRST VIEWS OF LIFE IN GERMAN-AMERICAN HOMES

Busy Learning New Customs

BY D. G. BICKERS.

Fort Screven, Ga., March 3.—They haven't yet seen much of America, the eight German brides of American soldiers who form a unique little group of the new life of old Fort Screven, on Tybee island.

They were in America before they knew it—for it was daytime when they arrived and Tybee light was not even visible at a distance, on account of the fog of the morning of February 7. But they must have thought that there were plenty of people and that there was much noise when they slowly progressed on the St. Mihiel up the Savannah river through such a welcome as probably staggered them to consistently harmonize with the relations between their "Faderland" and this America a few short years ago.

They saw the river and the harbor of Savannah. They saw something of the historic oldest city of Georgia; they caught many gleams and glimpses of the new country—as in a dream flitting by as they awoke from a long seasick trance across the ocean.

Draw Contrasts.

But when they settled down in the near-home life of the fort they began to really see the new land and to draw contrasts and shape comparisons—always with their own country. The palmettos on the island standing like copy sentinels along the streets and appearing suddenly in clumps around every bit of upflung eminence of sand dune or terrace surprised them.

Said one in fairly good English, "Where are the black cannibals, those shiny-skinned, dark ones with shields and spears and rings in their ears and sticks through their nostrils—always I have seen palmettoes with those black natives dancing or leaping about them; and there are no such natives by these palmettoes at the island of Tybee around Fort Screven."

It is explained that she had seen only pictures of palmettoes and that those pictures were from the colonial possessions of old German possessions in the tropics—and the pictures always carried the figures of the bellicose natives.

Some of the little German brides, wives of officers, have already allowed their domesticity and energy and industry to transform in less than three weeks the cottages at the fort into cosy and comfortable homes—and in one or another of these homes, furnished with new furniture and already adorned by touches of deliciously original art, these eight brides gather and chat and comment on the new country and its querrities and its differences from the old country.

Newspapers Surprise.

One declares that the newspapers of this country are the inexplicable surprise of the new world. She has learned English—this most expressive little woman from Coblenz—and she finds the time every day to improve her use of the language by religiously digging through the papers—the first page coming first and making the most surprising impression.

"I cannot understand why you do not in your nawspapers leave out most of the stories which you seem to emphasize most prominently in headlines and length of handling. Tragedies, murders, the troubles people get into, domestic tangles and marriage separations, divorces and accidents and misery and suffering and killings and—" she went on with the enumeration.

"In my old land the papers do not print the unpleasant things, the gruesome things, the ghastly and ghostly and the mysterious things; they find enough good things, pleasant things, helpful, cheerful things to crowd out so much blood and clouds and weepings. For why is American newspapers that way?"

Nor could the newspaper men say why—because she is not yet acquainted with the strange mind of the millins of readers of American newspapers which print what people will pay for to read.

Several of them admitted that the first days at Screven were tearful days, days of sighing and strange fears and other ailments than nostalgia. They were troubled by cockroaches—their tidy German homes had none of such horrid things; they were frightened by the mice and by an occasional enormous rat—for they had not become accustomed to them in the old land; they were puzzled by the shrubbery woods growing on the land and in the sand everywhere.

Make "Love Nests."

But they soon became busy making nests for their husbands—for these brides having proved their devotion to their doughboy husbands by marrying them and coming over with them have found a continuation of content in home making.

And wherever they touch there is the evidence of the homemaker. They are economical and good traders—good savers, and careful spenders.

The appalling surprise over which she has not yet recovered was told by a third little woman—barely more than a girl—who declared that "where there's a will there's a way," to save in spite of the monumentally tremendously enormous price of things on this side.

Where a kitchen utensil in Germany had cost less than 25 cents; it costs in the Savannah five and ten cent store more than a dollar; a piece of furniture costs here—and the prices are low as in other cities—eighteen dollars, she could have bought in Coblenz for a dollar and a half.

"It is a changing of all the arithmetic they have learned in the school," she said. She sighed but presently her face lighted, and she said—"But we will have a home, we will be happy, and we will save some money; yes, we will really save quite a lot of money."

Europe

On Judicial Circuit in Southern Nigeria.

The African World - 2-3-23

By W. H. STOKER [Late Judge of the Supreme Court of Southern Nigeria.]

(Specially written for the "African World.")

It is popularly supposed that in the tropical Colonies His Majesty's judges have a very soft and easy time, and that their office is almost a sinecure. As a matter of fact the work of a judge before the public eye forms but a small proportion of his duties. These comprise the constant and watchful supervision of all the Minor Courts in the Province of his division, to say nothing of other correspondence, unaided by a private secretary; the consideration of the evidence and the writing of judgments in a perplexing array of civil cases mostly concerning the native ownership of land, in which may be included swamps of no value except that apparent to and declared by the litigants. It is, however, not of these matters that this article treats, but of some of the other incidents in the life of a judge of the Supreme Court in Nigeria. When coming on transfer in 1907 from the West Indies to Southern Nigeria (as it was then) I first went to Gibraltar, previously the seat of Government of the old Protectorate of Southern Nigeria, but then the headquarters of the large Eastern Province of the amalgamated Colony and Protectorate of Southern Nigeria, which embraced also Lagos and its hinterland Protectorate. The Government station of Calabar, on high ground and overlooking the Cross river, and also the native towns of Duke town and Creek town, had the appearance of a well kept park, dotted by Government buildings, Messes and bungalows, and the Hospital for Europeans. It was kept so clear of bush and long grass that one scarcely ever saw a mosquito, and its social life was very pleasant. There was an excellent Club, and also quite good and picturesque golf links. These attractions were added to by the presence of a battalion of the Southern Nigeria regiment, then under the command of Major Trenchard, now Air Marshal Sir Hugh Trenchard, who found time in the strenuous pursuit of his duties to take a keen personal interest in an excellently run officers' canteen and soda water factory, as well as in the sports and social amenities of the place. In those days no wonder that the judge in judicial charge of the Province had small inducements to travel and hold Circuit Courts in the interior and away from his regular mail facilities, especially with a standing and ever growing list of civil causes awaiting trial at Calabar, and with the power of transferring both criminal and civil interior cases for trial to head quarters. Still it was good to bring the atmosphere of the Divisional Court to the doors of the interior natives, who looked upon the Judge of the Province, or Chief Justice, as they called him, as a kind of Juju High Priest, and travelling too was interesting and often proved a welcome change when once started.

My first journey was up to Arochuku where I held Assizes covering that and some neighbouring districts. The trip was taken by steam launch up the Cross River to Itu where the evening and night were spent at a commodious and comfortable Rest House. This was, and of course still is, an important centre and junction, and other travelling officers were generally to be found there en route for their various destinations. From there I proceeded the following morning by a steel flat bottomed motor boat, on a several hours fascinating motor journey, full of scenic beauty and teeming with views of vegetable and animal life, to Esu Itu, the landing place for Arochuku, and thence by road, or rather a path, to the Government station, a few miles away from the landing place, approached by a gradual ascent. The Government station could scarcely be called a town, it was really a site chosen for its erection in a convenient centre of the district, and on fairly high ground. The view and outlook could scarcely be described as picturesque, it being very open and bare country, and there was a somewhat gloomy and forbidding view, especially in the tornado season, as this was, which somehow brought an instinctive feeling of awe without grandeur, associated and perhaps caused by the knowledge that what was called the Arochuku district had before the Aro expedition contained one of the most famous Jujus in Southern Nigeria, known as the Long Juju. The destruction of this by the British Government was one of the results of the Aro expedition. The Long Juju was a crafty institution of the Aros, run by their priests and resorted to for superstitious purposes by natives generally coming long distances. It was not many of them that returned to their homes, yet for some reason or other it continued to attract them, some no doubt being sent or brought there. Most of them emerged from it as slaves, and were sold as such by the Aros, who were great slave traders and raiders, and of a mental calibre much superior to the indigenous natives. Their policy was to divest the aboriginal native of his land and finally of his person. Their slave raiding operations extended right up to the neighbourhood of the Upper Niger, and their slave markets from far north of Arochuku down to the lower Niger delta to Opobo, where the victims, as domestic slaves, swelled the houses of the big Opobo chiefs.

The criminal cases tried by me at Arochuku were mostly murder, slave dealing, and what were called ordeal witch craft and Juju cases, really charges of conducting or taking part in trials by ordeal, resulting generally in the death of the victim. The ordeal mostly in vogue in that part of the country was the essere bean ordeal. The victim was compelled to chew this bean and then allowed to run away from the place of ordeal. If he afterwards vomited up enough of it he recovered, but generally he was not able to do so, and therefore had been rightly accused of witchcraft. The previous history in the majority of cases was that sickness, death, low birth rate, and other misfortunes having occurred in a town or village, the services of a professional witch doctor were invoked or retained, and he arrived in the town or village fantastically dressed. A meeting of the whole town was then held and he proceeded to discover the "witches" (male or female) amongst them, generally persons already suspected or even selected. The persons, or alleged "witches" thus "discovered" had to eat the essere bean. In the cases tried by me they were all males. The witch doctor of course received a good fee for his services. These ordeals were often a very successful and effective way of getting rid of objectionable or unpopular citizens, or of those who had incurred the enmity of the Chiefs or Heads of the town or village, and had failed to substantially conciliate them. Generally speaking, most of the criminal cases for trial reflected the slave dealing and superstitious atmosphere of the place, and most of the civil cases were law suits about land between crafty Aros and aboriginal natives, who were trying to keep their own. But I am getting down to the end of the allotted space, and must reserve further matters of possible interest for a future article at some time or other.

FRENCH BLACK TROOPS

Chicago Defender

THERE IS A SCHOOL of Americans who believe they have quite enough to attend to at home without meddling with the affairs of other countries across the waters. And there is another class of Americans—fortunately not in the majority—who devote much of their time and energy to setting the foreigner's house in order—unsolicited—while neglecting to sweep out the accumulation of filth and dirt in their own domicile. This latter class is now much concerned over the French and German squabble, and although Germany but yesterday was supposed to be our enemy and France our ally, their sympathy and influence are offered Germany, while France is held up as a cutthroat, a despot, a Shylock demanding her pound of flesh.

Chicago Sat.

AND OH what a choice subject to harp on is "French black troops on the Rhine!" How humiliating it must be to be watched by black troops when there are so many other shades available, even though they may not be as efficient. Germany, knowing America's weakness along the color line, plays the game for all she is worth and is endeavoring to get this country to protest against the utilization of Colored troops by France to protect her interests in Germany, when behind it all is the fact that Germany objects to having any foreign troops patrol her territory, whether they be as white as the driven snow or as black as the shades of hades.

CLEMENCEAU did not fail to let the people of this country know that France was not disposed to draw the color line in or out of the army and could not be influenced by prejudiced America. This, direct from Essen, Germany, is significant: "Worried over the dissatisfaction which has broken out among some white troops, as manifested by several mutinous incidents, France is beginning to replace her white forces with more trustworthy black troops."

WITH ALL DUE RESPECT to our white soldiers, it can truthfully be said our black soldiers are the last word in loyalty, and this applies to the black soldier in whatever country he is found. Germany is playing the baby act. What right has the vanquished to dictate to the conqueror? Is Germany making reparations for the untold damage she did to France? If, as some American newspapers would have us believe, the people in the towns where the troops are stationed "are in a fever of indignation over the humiliation of having black troops over them," they might just as well calm themselves and cool off, for France is determined, and France is right, to protect her interest in any way she sees fit. Long ago she realized she would get little support from her allies when the day of reckoning came, but she counted on this country's support as this country counted on her support in critical days now long gone by. But in speaking of America, France can but regretfully say: "You too, Brutus?"

NEGROES REFUSE TO WORK IN RUHR

H. V. Dougherty Gives Up Hope of Helping France to Mine Coal

T C TRIBUNE
MARCH 13, 1923

AGREED TO GET 3,000 MEN

But Canvas of Fields Reveals That Less Than 100 Would Go Abroad.

(By the Associated Press.)

Harry V. Dougherty, member of a detective agency which specializes in furnishing labor to industrial concerns, has given up his hope of helping France exploit the coal mines of the Ruhr through the medium of American Negroes.

He announced, upon his arrival on the Majestic yesterday, that he would transport from 2,500 to 5,000 Negro miners to the Ruhr. To-day he said he had dropped the plan because he had learned since his arrival that instead of thousands of Negroes eager for the jobs, he couldn't find 100 who were willing to accept them.

Tried to Use Arabs.

Mr. Dougherty said his plan for transporting a miners' expeditionary force had been born Jan. 16, when, on a voyage from Algiers to Marseilles, he met Louis Janeau, a French labor commissioner, who is what is termed in this country a "padrone."

"Janeau was conveying about 700 woe-begone Arabs from Algiers to the Ruhr coal fields," Mr. Dougherty said. "He told me that these Arabs were no good as mine workers, that they could not stand the gaff, and usually, after three hours' work, were all in. He said that this was his second trip, and that the previous bunch had lasted only a few days. I told Janeau that I had experience in supplying large bodies of men for industrial organizations. Janeau became interested at once, and proposed that I see what I could do, telling me he could use all the men I obtained up to 3,000. He said he would take care of all matters affecting compensation and transportation, and would also see that any international complications that might arise would be handled from Paris through the French Foreign Office.

Promised a Big Profit.

"He assured me that there would be a net profit to me of half a dollar a day for each man provided, and with that financial incentive in view, I immediately cabled from Marseilles, asking my brother George to get busy rounding up the Negroes. I also advised him that all matters affecting the international phase would be handled from Paris, and that he could proceed on the assumption that everything was settled.

"Then I sailed for New York, only to learn when I reached here that a thorough combing of the various mine districts did not net 100 men willing to go to the Ruhr. Of corse that ended the whole matter, at least for the present."

(Preston News Service).

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 13 — Harry V. Dougherty, said to be a detective and labor agent, while in France a few weeks ago conceived an idea of increasing his bank roll by supplying American Negro laborers to the French as miners in the Ruhr district on which he would make a net profit of 50 cents a day on each laborer he furnished. He is said to have telegraphed his brother George to round up three to five thousand Negroes from the West Virginia and Pennsylvania coal regions for transportation to France.

Secretary Hughes authorized a statement last Friday night that he never had heard of a plan to transport American Negroes to Europe to work in the coal mines in the Ruhr. It was stated that no such proposition, or any of similar nature, had been discussed with Mr. Hughes by Ambassador Jusserand or anyone else.

At the French Embassy, it was declared that nothing was known of the Dougherty plan to send miners to the Ruhr. A statement was authorized that any announcement [illegible] that the proposal had been laid before Secretary Hughes by the French Ambassador was pure fabrication.

The Latest Horror on the Rhine

Two photographs have been circulated by a local picture agency entitled "Black Troops in the Ruhr!" and declaring that "this photograph is ample proof that the French military forces are using black troops in their occupation." The scenes show large groups of poilus in uniform, mostly white men, but with an occasional black man among them.

The place is stated to be Werden. The number of the regiment is not given, though obviously easy to obtain. But the facts are probably as suggested by the French Consul General here: The 7th Colonial Regiment contains fifteen or twenty West Indian natives who are French citizens. It was sent to Dortmund about three weeks ago. When General Degoutte found that it was a mixed regiment he immediately replaced it with an all-white regiment because of German agitation in the past.

The French have officially stated that there are no colored troops in the Ruhr. The pictures in question comport with the theory that these are the occasional West Indians of the 7th Colonial Regiment. At any rate, in view of the bland misrepresentation with which German propaganda has familiarized us, we shall accept this hypothesis until further proof arrives. And we shall refuse to shudder at the thought of fifteen or twenty black Frenchmen treading German soil, no matter how greatly Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard is horrified by the picture.

FRANCE GETS SERVANTS.

Four Hundred Negro Girls Reach Paris From the Antilles.

New York Times

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, March 17.—France's servant problem has reached such a crisis that one of the philanthropic societies has imported 400 negro girls from Martinique and Guadeloupe to work in French households. The dusky-skinned colonials, wearing red bandanas around their heads and enveloped in bright calico mother hubbards, landed at St. Nazaire this morning, and were taken directly to the home of the society, whence they will be distributed throughout France.

In view of the servant shortage the society is able to make its own terms with employers. The first and principal of these is to safeguard the girls' morals.

France's servant problem simply is another aftermath of the war, which took women out into the world. A great part of prewar "bonnes" now are employed in stores and offices, preferring the comparative dignity and freedom these positions to the financial advantages of domestic service.

Negro Troops Will Be, Withdrawn from Ruhr

Pittsburg American

(By The Associated Negro Press)

PARIS, France, Mar. 16.—Not on account of their color or race, but simply to rob Germans of an insidious weapon of defense, the Negro troops now stationed in the Ruhr district of occupation will be withdrawn by the government. This fact was disclosed last Thursday by Premier Poincaire in a reply to Deputy Gratien Candace from Guadulupe, who had filed a protest against the withdrawal of the troops from the occupied German territory. This would seem to close agreeable what otherwise might have concluded into a very unpleasant episode of the present tense situation on this question.

Negro Deputy Protests Black Troops' Recall

By Universal Service.

PARIS, March 7.

THE Negro Deputy Candace has made a protest to Premier Poincare at the recall of 200 West Indians from the Ruhr.

He demands a reply whether the order was the result of the "campaign of calumny by Germany against the blacks," and asserts that inasmuch as the French army is one-third colored no distinction should be made for service on the Rhine.

Algerians, Moroccans and Other Dark Complexed Men to Fill Up Great French Army of 600,000

By PAUL DAVIS
Wonder City News Service

PARIS, March 10.—It was learned here that France is calculating on an army of over 600,000 men, of which 425,000 will be white men. The plan with desirable feasibility was presented to Parliament. Nearly 150,000 will be Algerians, Moroccans and of African birth, according to reports. The troops will be held as heavy reserves to protect the nation from invasion.

It is said that the colored troops will be stationed outside of France in the occupied territory along the Rhine; 400,000 white troops will be reserved for special services inside of France; 30 divisions include the white troops. It is anticipated that this military move is made as a defense against Germany if necessary.

FRENCH EMBASSY DENIES NEGRO STC

No Contract to Send 5,000 to Ruhr. Officials Declare.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—Statements of Harry V. Dougherty, New York detective, that 5,000 Negro miners from West Virginia are to be sent to the Ruhr Valley by the French to dig coal in the places of striking Germans were denied emphatically to-day by the French Embassy here.

Statements of Dougherty that the project had been placed before Secretary of State Hughes by French Ambassador Jusserand and had received the former's approval, also were denied by both the State Department and the embassy. Both declared they had never heard of the plan before and did not know Dougherty.

Harry V. Dougherty of Dougherty's Detective Agency and Mercantile Police, who returned from Europe yesterday on the Majestic, said that reports that he had undertaken to send 5,000 American Negro laborers to the Ruhr coal mines were "exaggerated."

"A French labor commissionaire, who is no more a Government official than I am in the United States, but merely the director of a French labor agency, asked me if I could furnish 2,500 American Negro miners for regions in which the Germans refused to work because of the French occupation. I told him I could and we made an agreement."

Mr. Dougherty intimated that since his arrival yesterday, however, he had received an intimation "from Washington" that his consignment of Negro laborers would have difficulty in getting passports. Under the circumstances Mr. Dougherty said he rather thought his contract with the French commissionaire would go by default.

Europe.

DRAWING THE COLOR LINE

THE NEGRO WORLD has sometimes been accused of fanning racial animosities, of widening the breach between the two races which on this continent have been thrown together by fate. The Negro World, it need hardly be repeated, never entered upon such a task. But if it is meant to be charged that we inveigh unremittingly against the pernicious hatreds and prejudices to which the Negro is heir; that we condemn, for the vicious propaganda it is, talk of the ultimate amalgamation of the races; that we try to make the Negro realize he must be sufficient unto himself—then we plead guilty.

We shall always, regardless of criticism, bare issues affecting race as they arise, however unpleasant the operation may appear to the hypocrite. The ways of the sycophant and the wheedler are distasteful to us. Some narrow-minded employer in some city or town or village may "fire" his Negro help because he wears in his buttonhole the Negro tricolor—the Red, Black and Green. Some obscure political job may pass by some equally obscure would-be Negro leader. But these terrible things must be if the Negro's lot is to be reclaimed. We prefer always to take the larger view, to scan the horizon of the world, rather than circumscribe our outlook with a city's or even a nation's limits.

Today white citizens of this glorious republic are clowning in Paris in a most inglorious manner. Some citizens of Georgia, or of New York, are dictating to France a social system. It irks them that Negro citizens of France are free to enter public places at their will, and so they are attempting to institute the "color line" in Paris, as they have in Cuba and one or two South American countries. So tense has the situation become that the French Foreign Office has just issued a communiqué to American tourists through the press, saying: "Guests of France must respect her customs and not object to the presence of colored persons from the French colonies in public places. In the event of renewal of certain incidents, penalties will be exacted." It is understood that the penalties may take the form of revoking of passports of the offenders. In other words, white Americans who, as guests of France, insult her sons will be led on board ship and sent sailing back to the Statue of Liberty. "The Paris police," a recent dispatch says, "have closed the Montmartre dance hall, whence Prince George Tovalou, son of the former colored King of Dahomey, was ejected on complaints of Americans."

M. Daigne, Negro Deputy of France, commenting on the recent incidents, said: "Americans must learn they cannot impose their barbarous customs here. If they don't like our ways, they can stay at home. Too many Americans are running loose on our boulevards trying to enforce their savage customs on French gentlemen of color." And so the Negro citizen of France receives protection from the country for which he toils, for which he fights. Here in America the Negro toils as hard, fights as bravely, but white Americans are free to "impose their barbarous customs" on Negro gentlemen of color.

But, we venture to think, the "customs" of white Americans would undergo a serious change if Negro gentlemen of color in France, Negro gentlemen of color in America, Negro gentlemen of color in the British dominions, Negro gentlemen of color in Africa, could speak with one voice—their own. These "barbarous customs," we have no doubt, would disappear, and white Americans would become civilized in their treatment of Negroes as they are in the case of Japanese. There is only one "best way" of doing anything. To secure full manhood rights at all times, everywhere, Negroes must join hands across the seas. In other words, Africa must awake and appreciate her own strength as fully as it is appreciated by the Frenchmen.

BRITISH HELP NEEDED

"All Roads Lead to the Ruhr, Germany's Failure to Pay Reparations Has Tied Up the World," Owsley Quotes French Aide.

BY ALVIN OWSLEY.

(National Commander of the American Legion.)

(This is the second of a series of articles on "The Truth About the Ruhr" by Commander Owsley.)

Complaints have been heard about the hardships and indignities to which the German populace of the Ruhr has been compelled to submit under the drastic French military regimen. Last spring I heard shuddering tales of French brutality. And the story of the black troops—the "horror on the Rhine"—which has persisted ever since the Armistice, was revived. I was glad to learn what truth there was to these charges.

After entering the Ruhr one begins wondering where is the French army, where the soldiers are.

I soon found myself asking this question. The members of my party also were struck by the absence of great numbers of troops. We had expected to find them with fixed bayonets on all sides, in every street, on every road, everywhere, overrunning the country, driving about a herded civil population. But evidences of a rigid military occupation are lacking.

The French army is there, all right, 50,000 strong, mostly infantry, but comprising all branches. It has made its presence felt on occasions when necessary to show that the Ruhr invasion was a serious matter and that the invaders meant business.

Hard to Find Soldiers.

But as quickly as possible it effaced itself. Today soldiers hardly are to be seen. Outside the number of men necessary for guard and fatigue duty one has to look far to find them.

For the most part the French army in the Ruhr is a body of fresh, gay youths, well-trained, good-size, of fine physique, straight, upstanding, alert and soldierly. Their discipline is to be admired. They are boys of the upper French classes, evidently sons and grandsons of French soldiers. Just lads, we should call them, corresponding to that wonderful body of American youths who upheld American honor so valiantly and carried the Star-Spangled Banner to a glorious victory in 1918.

Yet with all their youth and gaiety which responds so eagerly to the lure of adventure, with the natural impetuosity that might be expected from mere boys, they possess a certain reserve that at once creates a respect which largely is responsible for whatever measure of success the French occupation of the territory so far may have attained. France is placing her fortune in their hands, standing before the world on the record already made and yet to be made by these youths.

Are There Black Troops?

And as for black troops. Let me state before going and further that to my definite knowledge and understanding of the conditions existing in the Ruhr it is absolutely false to claim black troops are part of the French and Belgian armies of occupation.

In justice not only to the French, but to the truth itself, this threadbare accusation should be nailed at once. It is a falsehood that has gone on long enough. It is so old in its falsity that it now becomes an insult to the intelligence of any man or woman to whom it is related. It is my honest belief and conviction that there are no black or African troops in the occupied area.

There are several thousand Algerian troops there. But that is quite another thing. I have studied these Algerian fellows with unusual interest.

To begin with they are not negroes. It is true they are usually darker of complexion than the average blonde German type. But their skin is no more swarthy than that of other peoples living under the tropical sun. They are of Arabic origin. They belong to the Moslem faith. Their religion keeps them separated from all other cults and creeds. Their introduction into the Ruhr makes it a place where religion, discipline, courage and patriotism all are being put to the severest test. And, so far, it does not seem to have failed.

To any claim that these Algerians are "foreign soldiers who yield constantly to vicious temptations," I wish to state that my study of these troops leads me to discredit any atrocious stories that may have been circulated about them.

I found them good soldiers, well disciplined, kind, unassuming, as far from being a wild kind of men who make assaults on women and children as gentlemen of any of the so-called oldest civilizations. Thus far they have proved wonderful men, splendid soldiers and courageous defenders of the tri-color of France. My hat is off to them.

Contrary to my expectations of finding a frightened population terrorized by French soldiery ready with guns and bayonets, I found myself in a territory whose people seemed to be going about their business and recreational pleasures as happily as people anywhere.

I well recall my first night in Dusseldorf. Gen. Degoutte had honored me and my legion party with a dinner. Returning to my hotel afterward I encountered large numbers of people issuing from one of the public places. I inquired who they were and where they were going, incidentally looking carefully to see if they were being driven through the streets by French guns.

FRENCH COLONIALS

France's population persists in declining. More fecund Germany increases. A twice invaded and much disturbed France feels acutely the need of a large standing army. Yet to withdraw more of her male citizens from civil occupation to military service represents economic risk.

Sept. 1923

Deputy Fabry would meet the requirements by increasing the number of colonial troops. Of these, France has already in service 188,963 Algerians, Moroccans, Senegalese and the like, a few of them yellow but mostly of the Negroid races. Fabry, by enlistment, conscription and intensive training would bring this force up to a potential strength of 850,000 men, 400,000 of whom would be fully trained.

Such a militarization of the French Negroid subject would give France a tremendous war machine. Also, it would assure the next war in which France engaged of a brutalization unapproached even by the Germans. In the last conflict, the French colonials were kept fairly well in hand, but they did butcher most of the wounded they encountered and they did manifest an unpleasant insistence upon mutilating both the dead and the living. Their presence in the Army of Occupation has been bitterly protested by the Germans, from whom protest received little consideration because of the memory of their own atrocites in Belgium. . . . A great war won by France thru the agency of such an army as Fabry proposes might easily fill the world with concern, even making France the most apprehensive of those concerned. A million of Africans made expert in the white man's methods of conquest, hardened to the white man's capacity for war endurance and rid by their own triumph of their conception of the white man's innate superiority, might make a good section of this world a dangerous place for the white man to live in.

From the Worchester, Mass., Telegram.

NO COLOR LINE IN FRANCE

The French, like the Italians and Spaniards, are relatively free from race prejudice. Unlike the Americans and the English, they do not object to social contact with the dark-skinned peoples. It is said that negroes of education and achievement have never been made to feel a social inferiority in Paris, where Alexander Dumas, for example, was highly honored in spite of the negro blood in his veins.

But there is believed to be political policy of vital importance behind the warning of the French Foreign Office that the color line must not be drawn against French citizens of negro blood by foreign sojourners, among whom Americans have been the most conspicuous in this connection. Under present conditions, with no assurance of aid from either America or the British empire in case France is attacked by Germany a third time, the French regard it as highly important to cultivate the good will of their dark-skinned colonials.

In the French army of 660,000 men there are now 188,963 Africans and it was recently urged in the Chamber of Deputies that more should be trained for military service. The population of the French overseas possessions, in Africa and Indo-China, was estimated at 60,000,000, from which, it was argued, 850,000 soldiers could be drawn of whom 400,000 could be fully trained to take the field.

It was estimated that Africa and Indo-China could easily provide more than six-tenths of the armed forces that might be needed by France. Without assurance of powerful allies the French are thinking of depending on their dark colonials when called upon to make a stand against invasion by the hereditatry enemy across the Rhine. Hence the warning of the Foreign Office against drawing the color line in Paris—a seeming "gesture" to please North Africans, Senegalese and their other dark colonials.

HEAD OF RUSSIAN ARMIES ANSWERS QUESTIONS PUT UP TO HIM BY McKAY

First Time In Modern History That Head of a Powerful Nation Has Shown Such Real Interest in Negro

RAPS U. S. LABOR ARISTOCRATS

(Cruasder Service)

MOSCOW, Oct. 5.—For the first time in the history of modern times, one of the heads of a powerful nation has exhibited enough real interest in the future of the Negro workers as to answer directly and unequivocally a letter put to him by one of the representatives of these workers as to his attitude towards the Negro peoples of the world.

Leon Trotzky, brilliant commander of the mighty Red Army of Soviet Russia, is the man who has thrown all traditions aside and in a letter addressed to Claude McKay, the Negro poet and special representative in Europe of The Crusader Service, given direct answer to the question propounded by McKay to the Fourth World Congress of the Communist International, as to "What practical steps are to be taken to prevent France from employing colored troops on the European Continent?"

The Soviet Chief in reply, writes McWay as follows:

"The colored workers themselves must offer resistance against being so employed. Their eyes must be opened, so that they realize that when they help French imperialism to subjugate Europe, they are helping to subjugate themselves, in that they are supporting the domination of French capital in the African and other colonies.

White Workers Must Stand by Negro

"The working class of Europe, and particularly of France and Germany must realize that their own most vital interests are involved in theis work of enlightening the colored race. The day of general resolutions on the right of self-determination of the colonial peoples, on the equality of all human beings regardless of color is over. The time has come for direct and practical action. Every ten Negroes who gather round the flag of revolution, and unite to form a group for practical work among the Negroes, are worth a hundred times more than dozens of those resolutions establishing principles, which are so generously passed by the Second International. A Communist Party confining itself to mere platonic resolutions in this matter, without exerting its utmost energies towards winning the largest possible number of enlightened Negroes for its ideas, within the shortest possible time, would not be worthy of the name of Communist Party.

Fate of Europe Rests with Africa

"There is no doubt whatever, that the use of colored troops for imperialist war, and at the present time for the occupation of Germany territory, is a well thought out and carefully executed attempt of European capital, especially of French and English capital, to raise armed forces outside of Europe, so that capitalism may have mobilized, armed and disciplined African or Asiatic troops at its disposal, against the revolutionary masses of Europe. In this way the question of the use of colonial reserves for imperialist armies is closely related to the question of European revolution, that is to the fate of the European working class.

Interest of All Workers Indentical

"There is no doubt whatever that the unemployment of the economically and culturally backward colonial masses for the world conflicts of imperialism, and still more in the class conflicts of Europe, is an exceedingly risky experiment, from the standpoint of the bourgeoisie itself. The Negroes, and indeed the natives of all the colonies, retain their conservatism and mental rigidity only in so far as they continue to live under their accustomed economic conditions. But when the hand of capital, or the hand of militarism, tears them from their customary environment, and forces them to stake their lives for the sake of new and complicated questions and conflicts (conflicts between the bourgeoisie of different nations, conflicts between the classes of one and the same nation), then their spiritual conservatism gives way abruptly, and revolutionary ideas find rapid access to their consciousness.

"Therefore it is of the utmost importance today, immediately, to have a number of enlightened, young self-sacrificing Negroes, however small their number, filled with enthusiasm for the raising of the material and moral level of the great mass of Negroes, and at the same time mentally capable of grasping the indentity of interests and destiny of the Negro masses, with those of the masses of the whole world, and in the first place with the destiny of the European working class.

"The education of black propagandists is an exceedingly urgent and important revolutionary task at the present juncture.

Raps Labor Aristocrats of U. S.

"In North America, the matter is further complicated by the abominable obtuseness and caste resumption of the privileged upper strata of the working class itself, who refuse to recognize their fellow-workers and fighting comrades in the Negroes. Gompers' policy is founded on the exploitation of such espicable prejudices, and is at the present time the most effective guarantee for the successful subjugation of the white and colored workers alike. The fight against this policy must be taken up from different sides, and conducted on various lines. One of the most important branches of this conflict consists in enlightening the proletarian consciousness by awakening the feeling of human dignity, and of revolutionary protest, among the black slaves of American capital. As stated above this work can only be carried out by self-sacrificing and politically educated Negroes.

"What forms of organization are most suitable for the movement among the American Negroes, it is difficult for me to say, as I am insufficiently informed regarding the concrete conditions and possibilities. But the forms of organization will be found, as soon as there is sufficient will to action.

"With Communist greetings,

In this letter to Claude McKay, the Soviet Chief refrains from touching overmuch on the attitude of the Third International and of the Communists all over the world towards the questions of a free Africa, a universally liberated race, and economic and complete equality of workers of all shades and colors for the sufficient reason, it is supposed, that these questions have been fully and most satisfactorily treated in the various papers of the Fourth Congress and in the Theses of the Third International.

Paris Women Will Wear "Nigger Brown" Stockings To Rebuke The Americans

Associated Negro Press

PARIS, France, Aug. 3.—The bare white legs of the fashionable Paris women are about to give way to "Nigger Brown" stockings. The fad started at Deauville during the recent season at the famed resort and has now reached and captured Paris. It is said that the adoption of brown stockings has been ordered by Fashion's devotees as a rebuke to the Americans who have been over zealous in their efforts to establish a "color line" here in Paris.

COMMEND FRANCE FOR STAND ON RACE PREJUDICE

French Surgeon Attacked by Yankee Tourists

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth Ave., New York City, today cabled the French Minister of Foreign Affairs commending the French Government's stand against Negro baiting by American tourists in France.

The cablegram read as follows:

"French Minister of Foreign Affairs, Paris.

"National Association for Advancement of Colored People with membership of one hundred thousand endorses your stand against American color prejudice.

(Signed) "James Weldon Johnson, Secretary."

This cablegram follows a warning issued by the French Foreign Office to American tourists, that Negroes would have to be treated with respect in France. According to a correspondent of the New York Times, the following incident occasioned the French Government action, which is accompanied by extensive and indignant editorial comment in the French press:

Surgeon Is Ejected

"A French surgeon who is a Negro occupied one of the seats in the big tourists' automobile as it started on the trip to the region of Rheims. Practically all the other twenty occupants were from the United States.

"They objected to the presence of the Negro among them, but nevertheless the car got under way. A few miles out of Paris the Americans renewed their protests, which led to a heated argument, in which the Americans said they wouldn't ride with a 'nigger,' and the Negro replied:

"I fought four and a half years, during most of which you Americans were not fighting. It seems to me I have as much right as you to go to see the battle fields.'

"The end of it was that the Americans threw the Negro out of the car and left him by the roadside. The result was a protest to the Foreign Office.

Deputies Candace and Bousse, both Negroes, have served notice on Premier Poincare that they will interpellate the Government on this issue when parliament reopens."

American Color Prejudice As Exhibited in France

The N. Y. Age

The Age is in receipt of several communications from Archibald Johnson, an American colored man, who has been living in England for a number of years and who is a barrister practicing law before the British Courts. Mr. Johnson has been spending some time in Switzerland, and writes illuminatingly of conditions in Europe as relate to the outcroppings of American prejudice as has been referred to frequently in recent news dispatches. 4-22-23

Writing from the Hotel Terminus, Zweisimmen, Canton Berne, Switzerland, Mr. Johnson comments as follows:

"I send you a clipping from La Suisse, a newspaper of Geneva, in which the editor quotes the Foreign Minister in Paris as warning tourists, that is, Americans, that they are too exorbitant in their demands in asking that colored men and women be excluded from public places to suit their prejudices. I warn colored ladies and gentlemen, traveling in Europe, not to be influenced by such attempts against them for it is not the purpose or intention of the French nation to permit such dastardly attempts out of race prejudice.

"A free translation of the note published by the Minister for Foreign Affairs would read thus: 'Some tourists (i. e., Americans) forgetting that they are our guests and that by that fact they are held to respect our usages and our laws, have at times by many attempts shown violent dislike to sit beside, in public places, men of color, natives from French Colonies. They have gone so far as to demand their expulsion in insulting terms. If like incidents are renewed, there will be serious retaliation.' The article is headed, 'Some Tourists Are Too Impulsive.'

"Some underbred, half-educated Americans come over here and attempt to run amuck among colored ladies of any country of the world. This eminent French statesman, in issuing and publishing his note, administers a well-earned snub to such people. The sight of a colored face in a hotel dining room is the same as a red rag to a bull. Personally, I have been attacked, often, by them. I have had to complain to police and city officials several times and have had these hoodlums, who seem to think they are still in Texas, put in their right places.

"The Paris papers, a few months ago, gave an account of two colored men entering a café and a Los Angeles man and his wife coming out in company with an Englishman, and these two attacked the colored men and tried to prevent them going into the café. The colored men defended themselves with knuckle-dusters, disfiguring both whites badly. The police took the four men to Bureau of Police, but immediately discharged the colored men.

"When will Americans learn to behave themselves over here in presence of well-dressed, well-behaved colored men? Three months ago, before I left Montreaux, I was jeered on the street by Americans as I was walking with my English wife. Even now, up here at this summer resort, twenty thousand feet up in the mountains, Yankee Negro haters are here, sneering, smiling and annoying every one with a drop of African blood.

"The London Daily Mail gives additional cases of insult and opprobrium by your nasal-twanging Yankees, spreading thmselves over Europe and insulting any and every dark man and woman they meet, no matter where they hail from. It is time this low game of theirs was stopped. All Europe is ringing with their impertinence and ill-bred feeling. Why do they do it? They want Europe and the whole world to believe that they are a very superior people, which you and I know is a sham and a lie.

"No more ridiculous and shallow, groundless assumption has ever been palmed off on the world than this Yankee prejudice against color. Come down to hard facts: If there was any deep, native, ineradicable antipathy in the minds of white people against colored people, would we find white babies feeding at the breast of colored women? Would we find colored barbers smearing their hands over the mouths of white men? Would we find colored waiters handling his food? lifting his roll with his fingers? No, it is all sheer bluff, make-believe to influence mankind and make more and higher prestige for your dollar-mad American.

"Let yourd readers know that these low-class Americans are over-reaching themselves and calling down the disgust of the great, cultured and impartial French nation on their heads. All Europe is amused and disgusted at this silly attempt at posing as a superior, esthetic and select people. You and I, Mr. Editor, know full well that this prejudice too often hides its head after the sun goes down and nobody is looking on. Every young colored man in America, especially if he be a mulatto and a student, has had experience enough to be sure there is nothing solid or definite about this so-called colorphobia. When a student in Lewiston, Maine, and Andover, Mass., I had many white girl friends. If this color prejudice is so nauseous and galling to the esthetic white brother, whence the ever-increasing horde of mulattos in every southern city?

"And another thing—in most cases, when a white woman comes to Paris or London and gets out of money, the first person she is apt to apply to for help is some gentlemanly colored man. I have been here since 1880 and have befriended dozens. In time of distress or hardship the white race can dispense with their 'color' feeling.

"France is representing all Europe in this matter. Let these wild Americans sit up and take notice what further things France has to say to them. I make no excuse or apology for showing up this matter, for if any man of our race has suffered severely from this color hate, I am that man.

"When I was preparing for the University at Phillips (now Andover) Academy, I went in for prize speaking. I was awarded two prizes in succession (R. T. Greener took one when there), and because of that the copper-head element got a horse syringe and played and squirted it on my back in the dining room. Again, when I entered Boston University, the students kept me out of the Literary and Debating Society because Lawyer Archibald Grimke had married a lady from that college. I thought this was all over when I got to Oxford University, but no, a Yankee Negro-hater from Harvard, named Sam Brearly from the West, came up to me and said, 'Say, do you know you have come to the wrong place? If you will leave here and go up to Edinburgh it won't cost you anything.' I treated him with the contempt he deserved, but as long as that man remained in Oxford he was plotting against me."

CLAIMS NO NEGRO TROOPS IN ARMY NOW IN THE RUHR

It is my honest belief and conviction that there are no black or African troops in the occupied area.

There are several thousand Algerian troops there. But that is quite another thing. I have studied these Algerian fellows with unusual interest.

To begin with they are not Negroes. It is true they are usually darker of complexion than the average blonde German type. But their skin is no more swarthy than that of other peoples living under the tropical sun. They are of Arabic origin. They belong to the Moslem faith. Their religion keeps them separated from all other cults and creeds. Their introduction into the Ruhr makes it a place where religion, discipline, courage and patriotism all are being put to the severest test. And, so far, it does not seem to have failed.

To any claim that these Algerians are "foreign soldiers who yield constantly to vicious temptations," I wish to state that my study of these troops leads me to discredit any atrocious stories that may have been circulated about them.

I found them good soldiers, well disciplined, kind, unassuming, as far from being the kind of men who make assaults on women and children as gentlemen of any of the so-called oldest civilization. Thus far they have proved wonderful men, splendid soldiers and courageous defenders of the tri-color of France. My hat is off to them!

Contrary to my expectations of finding a frightened population terrorized by French soldiery ready with guns and bayonets, I found myself in a territory whose people seemed to be going about their business and recreational pleasures as happily as people anywhere.

COLOR LINE IN FRANCE PUT UP TO U. S. EMBASSY

THREE BLACK DEPUTIES PROTEST TO PRES. POINCARE—NEWSPAPER ASKS U. S. EMBASSY IF IT WILL ASK AMERICANS TO RESPECT EQUAL RIGHTS FOR COLORED FRENCH CAFE PROPRIETOR EJECTED 2 COLORED AND IS BEING SUED FRENCH POLICE MAY CLOSE UP PLACES WHICH DRAW LINE.

Boston, Mass.

Refusal of American tourists to extend the hand of fellowship to French Negroes reached diplomatic channels today. Though the controversy did not proceed far in that direction it reached the front pages of Parisian newspapers and has become the chief topic of conversation in the American colony. 5-11-23

A representative of the Echo de Paris asked the American embassy whether it was planned to issue a statement to Americans in France that under the French law Negroes are entitled to full and equal rights with other citizens. The embassy has taken no action.

Proceedings were begun against the proprietor of an all-night dancing establishment in the Mont Martre in which African Negroes were ejected allegedly at the request of American patrons who objected to their presence.

The entire situation was brought to a head by the protests to Premier Poincare by three Negroes, members of the Chamber of Deputies that citizens of their color are being discriminated against for the purpose of pleasing American tourists.

Proprietors of pleasure resorts are facing a difficult situation.

Police threaten to close all establishments that discriminate against Negroes and those that admit them to full privileges face the loss of rich American trade.

Moro-Giaferri, attorney for the "Blue Beard" Landru, is representing Prince Georges and Prince Marc Tavalon, the Negroes ejected from a Mont Martre dance hall in their efforts to recover damage. Both are Sorbonne graduates.

Georges is a lawyer and Tavalon a physician.

France Threatens to Oust Any Who Try to Draw Color Line or Discriminate

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The French government has openly and emphatically denounced the American practice of discrimination against colored people in France, and has issued a drastic warning to American tourists that the republic will not tolerate any such action, and, furthermore, American and other tourists in France who publicly voice their objections to finding colored persons in restaurants, theatres and dance halls must keep quiet henceforth or they will be put out. This, in short, is the meaning of an official communique issued tonight by the French foreign office following numerous incidents in which visitors have tried to draw the color lines.

Negro deputies recently protested to Premier Poincare and called for reproval by the government of any interference with the liberty of France's Negro citizens.

A number of incidents have contributed to this in the last few weeks. A few days ago in Maxim's a French deputy was addressed contemptuously as "nigger." Then came the protest and the decision to issue the warning. Without naming any nationality, the French authorities let it be known that any alien who tries to draw the color line in Paris will at once be invited to leave France.

French Negroes were feeling good until about 40,000 Americans descended on Paris. It is said much of the disturbance is caused by American Negroes who remained in France after the war or have been imported since as jazz artists.

SERVE RIGHT

We have watched with a ... interest the attitude of the French Government with reference to the conduct of certain American Tourists who would mistreat the Colored Frenchmen as they do the Colored Americans on this side of the pond.

These Americans, who thus carry their prejudices into foreign lands, are doubtless of the 100 per cent stripe who seem to think that the earth and the habitants thereof belong exclusively to themselves. They, no doubt, are ranking members of the mob society of Americans, whose ranks are made up of 500,000 murderers, that race prejudice in the form of the law, allows them to go Scott free.

But we are proud of the fact that the French Government has the courage to call them down, and rebuke them for their foolish, non-sensical, inconsistent, unreasonable conduct toward the Colored Frenchmen.

Color-prejudice is costing State and Nation in this Country millions upon millions of dollars, to say nothing about the many inconveniences and ill feeling that follow in the wake. Therefore, we can't but conclude that the French Government serves them right by rebuking those who break their law and customs.

One of the leading French newspapers speaking on the subject had this to say:

St. Louis Mo.

"We have nothing to do with the attitude which prevails in America among her citizens. That is not our business. But this is France and with us the color line is totally unknown. Our forefathers did not write the declaration des droits de l'homme for us to forget its letter and its spirit.

Besides our lack of all discrimination against Negroes is not inspired alone by this doctrine. We are sincere about it. Blacks with whom we are in contact come from the French colonies. Whatever their status as citizens, they are our compatriots and we treat them as such. How could it be otherwise when so many of them fought by our sides to save France?

That a small number of our American visitors who forget that the French republic makes no differentiation among the inhabitants of its immense empire, whatever their race or the color of their skin, will, we hope, regard our black citizens as good as the rest of us. And we expect our visitors to obey our rule, which proceeds not from law, but from our character and customs, by virtue of which all Frenchmen form one grand family from which none of them are disinherited."

We are deeply interested in the above statement, because it affects the darker races of the world. And too, we believe the French people mean just what they say and are willing to back it up without fear or favor.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—A cabaret manager, who at the instance of American customers some weeks ago ejected from a Montmartre night establishment Prince Kogo Toubalou Houenow Kuenum because he is a negro, was sentenced today by the Eleventh Chamber Correctional Tribunal to fifteen days in prison and 200 francs fine. The prison sentence was suspended. The Senegalese Prince received one franc damages.

The cabaret manager declared that theAfrican Prinnce was ejected because of his color, and that the ejection was not forceful. Appearing for the manager was a policeman and a young woman dancer, Mlle. Gaudut, who at the time was an employe in the establishment and at present is dancing in another cabaret under the same management. She testified to witnessing the entire proceedings, and said the objection was not because his face was black but because his clothes were not. She also said, as did the gendarme, that the Prince was not struck.

Other similar witnesses were produced, but the Americans who caused the row were conspicuous by absence.

CLAIMS SEGREGATION IS ONLY SOLUTION

The Constitution Norfolk, Va.

Williamstown, Mass., August 21.—The segregation of races in the disputed areas of Europe, of the Greeks and Turks in the Balkans and of negroes in the United States offers the only practical solution of the problem of unassimilable races, declared Professor W. M. McDougall, of Harvard, in a discussion of "race as a factor in politics," at the Institute of Politics, today.

Professor McDougall said:

"I cannot help but think that the only solution of the negro problem here in America is the segregation of negroes in some portion of the country where they will live their life without endangering either their own culture or the culture of the United States."

Atlanta Ga.

Russia is coming back, said Baron Sergius A. Korff, former deputy governor general of Finland, in an address at the Institute of Politics today.

"The evolution," he said, "comes against the plans and program of the government; it comes over their heads. Life has proved stronger than their theories.

"The greatest fact that I could point out is the death of communism. The bolshevik government honestly tried to establish a system of communism and failed and the private property idea came back. Trade began to come back and it was the trade that broke the dam and destroyed the idea of communism in the end."

He said that in many cases the breakdown of institutions was so thorough that reconstruction would take many years. The bolshevik government, he added, needed cash even more than recognition of their government.

Proving Mencken's Charges

Norfolk Journal & Guide

In a recent copyrighted article in the Baltimore Evening Sun, Mr. Henry L. Mencken, journalist and writer of national note, and Southerner by birth and tradition, describes political and social conditions in the South in the following severe language: 8-4-23

"There is first, the South of the old gentry: urbane, educated, civilized, tolerant. There is, second, the South of the former poor white trash: uncouth, ignorant, barbarous, bullying. It is this second South that has been on top since Reconstruction days, and out of its ascendancy has flowed nine-tenths of the difficulties, political and social, that have beset the Southern people. It has steadily brought down Southern politics to the level of spoils and demagoguery; it has made a pathetic buffoonery of Southern education; it has fostered and inflamed race prejudice; it has corrupted and degraded Southern journalism; it has reduced Southern Christianity to a burlesque and an obscenity. This is the South of the Ku-Klux Klan, of the Billy Sunday revival, of complete aesthetic and ideational sterility, of burnings and lynchings, of Blease and Vardaman, of prohibition and Jew-baiting, of anti-Darwinism and free silver. This is the South, alas! that Northerners usually think of when they think of the South at all."

Norfolk, Va.

Many conservative people and numerous Southern newspapers have united in the opinion that Mr. Mencken's arraignment of Dixie was somewhat strained, but despite such an opinion on the part of those who would not desire to see further injury done this section by even an exposure of conditions that are all too true, occasionally a witness arises to confirm every charge made by the frank Mr. Mencken, as in the case of the editor of the Wilmington (N. C.) News, whose violent outburst of just the characteristics enumerated by Mr. Mencken appears in an article on the front page of this issue of the JOURNAL AND GUIDE, relating an exchange of thought between the Wilmington editor and Mayor Curley, of Boston, Mass., in connection with the action of the Boston mayor in naming a young colored man this year to read the Declaration of Independence on the occasion of the celebration of Independence Day in that city.

If any proof was needed to strengthen or give credence to the arraignment of Mr. Mencken, it is found in the line of thought expressed by the Wilmington editor.

Frenchmen As Colonizers Intermarry With All Nations and Make Them Real Frenchmen

FRANCE GREAT COLONIZER

French have mighty colored empire.
No color line in Colonies.
Education spreading—intermarriage common.
is in Africa.
Second largest French port

Chicago, Feb. 6—France has a mighty colored empire and has succeeded where England has failed writes William Nash from abroad.

Intermarriage Common

Frenchmen draw no color line. They intermarry freely with Negroes and Arabs, so that a mulatto race has grown up in many French colonies. Lack of prejudice in this line enables them to understand native desires and aspirations as conquerors can never do.

In Martinique, Guadeloupe, Reunion and a few other possessions Negroes enjoy the same rights as French white settlers, being in fact French citizens in every sense of the word. Elsewhere, as, for instance, in West Africa, natives have a special status which leaves them as much as possible under the authority of local chiefs, with the right to appeal to French courts. Local government remains largely in native hands. Intermigration goes on freely between colonies. There are no such artificial barriers between Algeria and Indo-China, for instance, as those which forbid the entry of British Hindu subjects into the equally British colonies of South Africa and Canada.

In the second line of colonization—namely, the uplifting of backward races—France has made great progress. North Africa seems to be returning to its ancient prosperity. Both Algeria and Tunis export wheat to Europe. Education is spreading rapidly. Hospitals have multiplied. Order is enforced with rigorous hand. European officials show themselves wisely tolerant of local manners and customs. Courts, schools, and churches on the Gallic model are introduced everywhere, but care is taken to leave in existence indigenous institutions of a similar type.

Not So Strong For Cleanliness

Anglo-Saxons pride themselves on their ability to cultivate the material prosperity of their colonies. British commentators boast of the fact that the fellaheen of Egypt have never been so prosperous as under British rule.

Although by no means negligent in the pursuit of this aim, it is possible to argue that France falls behind Great Britain in the achievement thereof. Latin peoples are a bit indifferent to efficiency and the French are Latin in blood. They have no horror of dirt. They regard hygiene and sanitation strictly as utilitarian sciences and in no sense as tasks imposed on mankind from heaven. Consequently native villages in some of their colonies make a disagreeable impression.

Algiers Is Second Port

Nevertheless, much has been done for the development of some regions. Algiers, for instance, has been transformed into the second largest port of France. Commerce in North Africa has increased in value from an insignificant sum in 1881 to a total of 7,000,000,000 Francs in 1920. An excellent system of railway lines has been laid down in Tunis, Algiers and Indo-China. Automobile roads have been constructed throughout Morocco, Dakar, in West Africa, has been made an important port of call for ships on their way from Europe to South America. Rice culture in Indo-China has been developed to such an extent that quantities of rice can be exported as food to China and Japan.

Sarraut Has Broad Plan

A comprehensive plan for the exploitation of the whole colonial empire has been worked out by Albert Sarraut, minister of colonies and submitted to parliament for approval. It includes railway projects, port works, irrigation canals, sanitary appliances and schemes for hospitals, lighthouses and schools. Money to carry out its provisions will be raised partly by the colonies themselves, it is hoped. Tunis, Morocco, and Madagascar should be able to float foreign loans independent of the mother country, say governme employees in Paris.

POINCARE ON BLACK TROOPS

The question of black troops in Germany, for obvious reasons, is continually being brought up. Recently the London "Graphic," an illustrated newspaper, published a number of photographs purporting to show that black French troops are still being used in the Ruhr. The French General Staff issued a categorical answer in which it denied that their had been any black troops in the Ruhr. The statement declared that the General Staff had been careful to avoid even the appearance of any reason for the campaigns of false news which the Germans and their friends never ceased carrying on against the French, and for that reason the Staff withdrew from Werden a relief division in which there were two hundred Martinique soldiers even though those soldiers were French citizens and voters. The Statement added that the West Indian islands of Martinique and Guadalupe have two senators and four deputies in the French Parliament and that the colonization of these islands by France began in 1625, nearly three hundred years ago.

When M. Candace, the colored member of the French Parliament from Guadalupe, saw this statement issued by the General Staff he at once served notice that he intended questioning Prime Minister Poincare on this discrimination against his constituents. In particular, he purposed to ask if the withdrawal of those who were serving like other French citizens in the division of the Ruhr army is "one of the consequences of the abominable campaign carried on by Germany against our colored troops."

Prime Minister Poinacre did not wait for M. Candace to interrogate him upon the floor, but at once issued the following answer:

New York Age 4/14/23

"France does not distinguish between the races living under her flag. In many of her old possessions she has even given to the native inhabitants all the perogatives of French nationality. This is notably the case in the Antilles and I do not need to say to you that, in the eyes of the Government and the republic, there are not two categories or classes of citizens.

"If the Government has chosen not to use black troops for the occupation of the Ruhr, it is certainly not that it has ceased reprobating the abominable calumnies but because it thought it wiser not to furnish, for the time being, any pretext for a propaganda which it will continue combating wherever it shows itself but which unhappily has penetrated even among peoples that are our friends."

M. Poincare's statement shows that not all the pressure brought upon France can make her adopt the sort of race prejudice practiced by the United States and England.

This whole question of black troops in Germany is an abominable and absurd piece of propaganda. Let us face the question squarely. Suppose there are black troops of the French army in Germany. What of it? If Germany had had the chance she would have used black troops, or green troops, or blue troops, or any other sort of troops, in France. On the other hand, so far as France and England, and the United States, too, are concerned, they did not hesitate to use black troops to help win the war; and if black troops were good enough to be hurled against German bayonets and German poison gas and German liquid fire to save France and England and the United States, they certainly ought to be good enough to patrol German towns now that the danger is past.

Detective Abandons Plan to Furnish Labor for Mines

(By the Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, March 8.—Harry V. Dougherty, member of a detective agency which specializes in furnishing labor to industrial concerns has given up his hope of helping France exploit the coal mines of the Ruhr through the medium of American negroes.

Dougherty announced upon his arrival on the steamship Majestic yesterday that he would transport from 2,500 to 5,000 negro miners to the Ruhr. Today he said he had dropped the plan because he had learned since his arrival that instead of thousands of negroes eager for the jobs he could not find 100 who were willing to accept them.

INTERNATIONAL STRIKE-BREAKERS.

We assume that the United States Government will not even consider allowing the Harry V. Dougherty Detective Agency to export Negro or any other kind of strike-breakers to the Ruhr. The project is disgraceful.

To take several hundred Negro miners into the Ruhr under contract labor with the French Government is not merely to invite violence but to insist upon it. Only a detective agency would be mad enough to suppose that you can import alien strike-breakers into a hungry and desperate district, densely settled with men who don't wear kid gloves, and expect to get away with it.

We find it hard to believe that the French Government has made any such contract with the Dougherty Detective Agency. But whether it has or not, our Government need not hesitate to prevent its being carried out. These miners are American citizens. They are not for sale. And the American people cannot afford to accept the odium of such a performance.

Mr. Hughes, who has not intervened to make peace in Europe, will certainly not permit American citizens to be used to increase its hatreds.

"Petit Bleu" Demands White American Barbarians Respect Customs of France—Tells Them They Are Not in the U. S. A.

(Crusader Service.)

Paris, July 15.—An incident in which four white American tourists refused to make a char-a-banc excursion through Paris because the vehicle contained twelve Negro soldiers is taken up this morning in a two-column leading article in the "Petit Bleu." The French newspaper demands that tourist agencies insist that their patrons respect the customs of the country in which they are vacationing and tells the American barbarians that France is not the United States where human beings are jim-crowed, insulted and degraded because of their color.

"These Americans behaved as vulgar persons," says the Petit Bleu. Their rediculous aversion for men of color contains no excuse. They are not at home, but in our country, which is an entirely different affair. The protest of these individuals, devoted to white integralism, merited a severe lesson, and it is to be regretted one was not given which which would make them see all colors. It is unfortunate that it was not made apparent that a Frenchman, whatever his color, is worth at least any foregin tourist."

American visitors to Paris have been for a long time carrying on a campaign of slander and villification against the Negro; and tried to have people of color barred from many Paris restaurants, theatres and other public places. Failing in this, they have opened up "American" cafes from which Negroes are baared. It was in one of these "American" cafes that "Battling" Siki knocked half a dozen Americans stiff for refusing to serve himself and a white woman guest.

Paris, France, July 3.—Gratiet Candace, a negro deputy from Guadeloupe, published a violent attack to-day on the manners of American tourists in France. Negroes find themselves virtually barred from Montmartre, the famous cabaret district of Paris, on account of the attitude of certain travelers from the United States.

"Numerous complaints about the treatment accorded to negroes have been reaching us recently," said Candace. "At Havre a colored gentleman who did his duty bravely during the war was brutally expelled from a dance hall because his presence there was distasteful to American clients.

Refused Admittance to Cafe.

"In Paris a colored French citizen with a university degree was refused admittance to the Montparnasse cafe on the same grounds and was obliged to summon the police to teach the proprietor an elementary lesson in French law, under which there are no distinctions of race or color for men, women or children on French soil.

"Americans are free to institute and follow what manners they please at home, but certain habits which do not conform to our ideas of liberty and justice they must not try to introduce into France. In 1918-19 we witnessed the assassination of French negro poilus by American soldiers at St. Nazaire, Nice and other cities. The foreigners were punished.

"To-day we do not want to accept the lure of the almighty dollar over the splendid moral patrimony of France. White, yellow or black, all men who enjoy the proud distinction of being French citizens must live here together peacefully in liberty, equality and fraternity."

Another Attack Upon Tourists.

Another attack, similar to that of Candace, was published last week in the Echo de Paris in reference to a party of American tourists who refused to ride in the same sight-seeing autobus with a group of Senegalese chiefs.

Frenchmen draw absolutely no color line and seem incapable of understanding why Americans should do so.

FRANCE TO GET NO MINERS HERE

Dougherty Finds He Cannot Deliver Negroes.

NOW ADMITS HIS MISTAKE

State Department Is One of the Obstacles to Ruhr Plan.

No 5,000 negro miners—nor any other number—from the bituminous mines in the South and Middle West will be shipped to dig coal in the Ruhr Valley to replace German miners who are on strike against the French occupation. The Dougherty Detective Agency has found it impossible to find even 200 negro miners willing to make the trip.

That is what Harry V. Dougherty told a SUN reporter to-day when asked about the statement he made on his arrival from Europe yesterday that he had a contract to supply the French Government with mine labor.

"The real is off," said Mr. Dougherty, "not because of the fear of international complications, but solely because the men cannot be obtained."

The Dougherty organization would gladly have engineered the shipment, for there was money in it, he said. He was to get fifty cents a day for every negro sent from this country to work in the German mines now occupied by the French.

The cost of transportation would have been paid and the negroes would have been housed at the expense of the French Government and given wages of 100 francs a day, Mr. Dougherty said.

Announcement a Mistake.

There was a misunderstanding or Mr Dougherty would not have made the announcement he did last night, he said. He had just arrived on the Majestic and had not yet seen his brother, George whom he had cabled to get the men. He was mortified to learn to-day that George Dougherty had had no success with the scouts he sent to West Virginia and Illinois to round up the miners.

Mr. Dougherty explained that it was on his way back from Algiers on a French ship that the proposition of sending American miners to the Ruhr first entered his head. On the ship were 700 Arabs who were being brought over to work in the German mines. Mr. Dougherty talked with the contractor, Louis Jeneau, who complained that the Arabs whom he was transporting to France were half-starved.

He gladly accepted Mr. Dougherty's offer to ship over as many husky American negroes as could be found. In accordance with the agreement 500 were to be shipped from here on the Orbito on March 14.

Plan Called Impossible.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.
The Sun Bureau,
Washington, D. C., March 8.

There are many reasons why the reported plan of the French to send negro miners from the United States to the Ruhr district is impossible, it was said to-day by Government officials, labor officials and non-union mine leaders.

From the Government standpoint the plan is not practical because the Government does not desire this country to become involved in foreign complications which might result from the sending of American miners to the Ruhr. In fact it was declared to-day the Government would immediately discourage such a plan if it knew of it officially.

Ellis Searles, editor of the United Mine Workers Journal, said to-day his organization would not consider such a plan if it were broached.

Non-union coal operators pointed out that they could not afford to lose non-union workers by sending them to Europe, even if the ultimate return of the men was assured.

There are approximately 45,000 negro mine workers in the United States, more than half of whom are non-union workers. For the most part they are in Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia and the southern part of Ohio.

Europe.

AMERICAN RACE PREJUDICE IN FRANCE.

The reported action of some Paris restaurants in closing their doors to negroes contrasts with the treatment which the French accorded American colored troops in France during the war. The Ninety-second Division, for example, which was composed of negroes, won many warm friends among the French people of the towns and villages where they were billeted. The same is true of the colored regiments brigaded with the French. This was not only because these soldiers were Americans, but because the French have never drawn the color line, as have Americans and English. Although they have not gone as far as the Spanish and Portuguese colonizers of Latin America, who for generations intermarried with races of all shades, they have always been tolerant and even cordial toward people with colored strains in their blood. As a rule, colored persons of good education have been freely welcomed socially and in every other way in France. The only possible exception has been in the case of those of the Senegalese troops who were recruited from backward and barbaric regions and who offered little appeal to French sympathies. It has also been said that in the French West Indies, notably in Martinique, where the proportion of negroes is unusually high, the attitude of the whites has resembled that of our own Southerners toward the American negroes.

America's race prejudices should not be exported. If the French, on their own account, wish to bar negroes from their restaurants, the matter is one which concerns only themselves and the colored races. When, however, they bar them in order to curry favor with Americans, it takes on another aspect. It is difficult to believe that there are enough negroes who visit or would like to visit the French restaurants patronized by Americans to give offense to any but the small handful of intolerants. Most peoples like to carry their prejudices about with them. But when they attempt to force them upon another nation, it is a signal that intolerance is going beyond bounds.

The French have a version of the adage which reads, "When in Paris do as the Parisians." Americans, for the most part, endeavor rather to do as they think the Parisians do. They are usually eager to cast aside the restraints of their American upbringing, substituting therefor an American-made conception of Paris as a city of unlimited personal freedom. The least that can be asked of Americans who visit French restaurants is that they put up with the eccentricities of French customs, even to the extent of tolerating the presence of foreigners of all colors. Could they but for a moment see themselves in French eyes they would realize that many of their actions appear to the French not only as eccentricities, but as exhibitions of downright social barbarism. A little more respect for Parisian prejudices as well as for Parisian tolerances would be in order.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—[Tribune Radio.]—Rene Renault, proprietor of El Garron, a night dancing resort in Montmartre, was today given a fifteen days' suspended sentence in prison for ejecting two Negroes from his place last August on the complaint of several American tourists.

El Garron dispensed with its Negro jazz band early this summer because of Americans who objected, and then early one morning in August when two Negroes entered the crowded resort, ordered champagne, picked up a couple of girls and began dancing, there was a general protest.

Police Join Fray.

M. Renault gave a signal and a flying wedge of waiters rushed the Negroes from the place. Outside the police grabbed and arrested the Negroes, thinking they had been fighting or had refused to pay their bills. There was great surprise when the blacks gave their names as Prince Kajo Tovalou and his brother, Marc, well known in Paris society and mixed up in politics.

Black deputies representing France's Negro colonies interfered, appealing to Premier Poincare, who issued a communique demanding that "foreigners," meaning Americans, treat all French citizens with equal respect.

Has Own Political Pull.

El Garron's night license was revoked temporarily, but since has been restored, since M. Renault also possesses a political pull through having it on certain leaders who frequent the place with beautiful girls not their wives.

AN ART COMMITTEE ANSWERED.

Four Americans about to board a sight-seeing bus in Paris objected to the presence within the car of some cadets from the Freujus Military School, which France maintains for officer-aspirants from colonial Africa. The Americans demanded expulsion of the cadets, were repulsed and declined to take seats within the car.

Some members of the Chamber of Deputies, hearing of the incident, lodged a protest with the Foreign Office. The Minister of Foreign Affairs replied publicly as follows:

> Foreign guests, forgetting they are our guests and bound to respect our customs and laws, recently on several occasions have forcibly manifested their aversion to seeing colored men born in French colonies sit by their side in public places. They have even gone to the length of demanding their expulsion in insulting terms. If such incidents are repeated, punishment will be exacted.

A great many Americans, and not necessarily those contemplating a visit to France, might study to advantage this note. Gen. Hines of the Veterans' Bureau, referring the Tuskegee incident to any in Washington who may remove him from the responsibility of installing a personnel in the new hospital there, might take heart by reading it.

Recently a young Negro woman who had won a scholarship at an art school at Fontainebleau was denied the rights her design had merited. A New York committee with some knowledge of French customs and laws yet feared that sending her as an American delegate to France might in some way give offense. It will find an answer to its fears in the note of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs.

COLOR LINE REBUKED BY PARIS NEWSPAPER

"Petit Bleu" Demands White Americans Respect Customs of France.

Paris, July 1.—An incident in which four white American tourists refused to make a char-a-banc excursion through Paris because the vehicle contained twelve Negro soldiers is taken up this morning in a two-column leading article in the "Petit Bleu." The French newspaper demands that tourist agencies insist that their patrons respect the customs of the country in which they are vacationing and tells the Americans that France is not the United States where human beings are jim-crowed, insulted and degraded because of their color.

"These Americans behave as vulgar persons," says the Petit Bleu. Their ridiculous aversion for men of color contains no excuse. They are not at home but in our country, which is an entirely different affair. The protest of these individuals, devoted to white integralism, merited a severe lesson, and it is to be regreeted one was not given which would make them see all colors. It is unfortunate that it was not made apparent that a Frenchman, whatever his color, is worth at least any foreign tourist."

American visitors to Paris have been for a long time carrying on a campaign of slander and villification against the Negro, and have tried to have people of color barred from many Paris restaurants, theatres and other public places. Failing in this, they have opened up "American" cafes from which Negroes are barred.

The International Community Welfare League from its American Headquarters, 221 Lissner Building, Los Angeles, Calif., has issued the following bulletin to its membership, generally, throughout the United States. 2-1-23

In accordance with our announced policy of opening opportunities in Mexico to the American Negro, the League has just received from its Mexico City representative a request for ten (10) good Negro farmers and their families who are experienced in the growing of sugar cane. The government of the state of Morelos, which State is immediately South of the city of Mexico, through Senor Ingeniero Armendo Fernandez, State Engineer, at Cuernavaca, Mexico, makes the following proposition to any ten (10) American Negro farmers who are members of the International Community Welfare League or whom the League may recommend.

"The government will furnish each of these farmers from 25 to 50 acres of good land together with all the water required to irrigate it; government tractors and government drivers will be furnished at a nominal cost; a fine government school is near the land; the government will furnish agricultural supervision and protection; the government will loan $125.00 per acre for each acre planted.

Colonization Scheme Cited as Reason for Protest on Mexico's Part

2-17-23

By GEORGE SELDEN.

Mexico City, Mex., Feb. 16.—Official reports from the office of General Calles, secretary of the interior, are to the effect that people of our Race will hereafter be prohibited from entering Mexico.

Word has been sent to all officials of immigration informing them of the decision of the Mexican government, and asking their co-operation in the attempt to halt the migration of our people to this country.

Answer Colony Scheme.

This action is being taken as the Mexican government's answer to reports that it is backing a colonization scheme.

According to information from authoritative sources many families nad contemplated moving from the southern states into Mexico. In one instance a colony of 20 families departed after a permit had been received from the Mexican government. These people made up a party consisting of slightly more than a hundred, chartered a train and took with them farming tools, live stock and household belongings.

The expenses of the trip are to be paid for pro rata by the emigrants. The movement was sponsored by a community welfare league with headquarters in Los Angeles, Cal.

J. B. Key, an official of the league, and resident of Okmulgee, Okla., recently conferred with President Obregon of Mexico regarding the immigration movement. According to Key, settlement rights were obtained to 150,000 acres of land in the state of Sonora, 110,000 acres in San Luis Potosi, and 200,000 acres on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

Land Grant Void.

Later reports indicate that Secretary of the Interior Calles has issued an order cancelling the permit to bring 20 families into the northern part of the country.

According to this authority, only white immigrants are wanted in Mexico in the future. Immigrants from the northern part of the United States and Europe are especially wanted, the Mexican officials say. The government, however, did not look favorably on the southern white man, declaring he descended from the convicts who were exiled by the English government and his reputation for hard work and morality were faulty.

Foreign governments have taken a peculiar attitude to the immigration of our people ever since Marcus Garvey launched his "campaign of hate" coupled with his "back to Africa" movement. The propaganda spread by Garvey, some declare, has done untold injury to the cause of many legitimate settlement projects originated in the United States and having foreign fields for their destination.

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 5.—General Calles, Secretary of the Interior, has issued an order to all officials of immigration prohibiting the entrance of negroes into Mexico.

This may be taken as the Government's answer to reports that it is backing a negrocolonization scheme. It is reported here that adventurers in the United States are fleecing negroes with wild schemes of land grants in all parts of the Mexican Republic. One hacienda had a permit to bring twenty families into the northern part of the republic, but this permit has been withdrawn by order of General Calles.

In the future only white immigrants are wanted in Mexico, as the Government is realizing that a mixture of other bloods will degenerate the race instead of bettering it. Immigrants from the northern part of Europe and from the United States especially are wanted, on account of their reputation for hard work and morality, and the Government will make an effort to attract the same class of immigrants that America received in early days.

MEXICO EXECUTES AMERICAN NEGRO HELD FOR KILLING

Atlanta Constitution

San Diego, Ca., February 7.—Chester Carleton, an American negro, who shot and killed George Monteverde, member of the Mexican police force at Tiajuana, at the border town yesterday afternoon, was hanged in the Tiajuana jail last night, according to reports reaching the international line. Residents of Tiajuana declared that his body would be burned today. It was not known here whether he had a trial. 2-8-23

Carleton, according to witnesses, shot and killed Monteverde and also wounded Torsiro Monteverde, brother of George, and two other men. It was reported that the shooting was due to a dispute over an accident to Carleton's automobile, which he is said to have loaned to George Monteverde last Wednesday.

OIL MAGNATES ARE BEHIND ANTI-NEGRO FEELING IN MEXICO

3/9/23
Pittsburg American
Pittsburg, Pa.

MEXICO CITY, Mexico, March 9.—Alarmed at the headway being made by the colored people of the United States in acquiring vast land holdings in Mexico, and the migration of thousands of colored farmers to the Mexican Republic; the white oil interests thru their press agency, the Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service, is sending out propaganda to the daily papers stating that colored colonists are not wanted in Mexico, and that Pres. Obregon objected to the colored people upon the grounds that they were not good prospective colonists on account of "the ethnic problem."

The opposition of the oil interests is chiefly against permitting the colored people to colonize in the Tampico and San Luis Potosi districts, which are in the heart of the Mexican oil belt.

In spite of the opposition of the oil interests, this movement to open up the fertile valleys of Lower California to the colored people, has the hearty support of not only Pres. Obregon but of the Mexican Government as a whole, the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego and Los Angeles, California, and other influential interests.

In July 1922 Pres. Obregon met a delegation of 22 colored citizens of the United States headed by Atty. Hugh Macbeth of Los Angeles, and Mr. J. B. Key of Okmulgee, Okla., and stated in person to them, "That Mexico has no color line and the Mexican Constitution forbids Race distinction on the ground of race, color, creed or degree of wealth."

At Ensenada, Mexico, the delegation was welcomed by the Mayor who said: "Mexico offers the greatest opportunity and future to any people on the face of the earth. We are inviting the American Negro to come and cast his lot with us, not because we know that he is mistreated, and unjustly dealt with in his own land, but because we believe that in the development of commerce, agriculture, and trade in our own country, he will be fair enough to take some and leave some and not try to take all as some Americans have done in the past."

Entertains Delegation in Capital

Pres. Obregon received the colored delegation cordially at the "Mexican White House" and promised his support and that of the Government to any legitimate colonization movement that would bring a desirable element of American Negroes into Mexico.

THE NATURAL RESOURCES of Mexico are marvelously abundant, able to support six times the present population, numbering about 16,000,000. Mexico is encouraging immigration of all races. She needs increased population. As might be expected, we find a certain type of American statesmen who pretend to discern a great future danger for the American commonwealth in a Mexico grown strong in numbers and becoming one of the powers of the earth. But the Black man no longer is afraid of bogies. He is doing his own thinking and is willing to lie on the bed he makes for himself.

THE LURE OF MEXICO

Chicago, Ill.

AT PRESENT in various sections of the South many of our people are evidencing a recognition of the fact that Mexico offers a much larger freedom, politically, economically and socially, than they now enjoy. Recently there have sprung up societies whose aims are both to discover and create opportunities in Mexico for members of our group. Many have crossed the border, taking advantage of the gifts of land offered by the Mexican government to all immigrants.

WHEN ONE pauses to reflect on the matter it is astonishing that the Black man of the South, restricted as he is in his natural development by the most oppressive laws and conventions, has not been tempted before now, not only by the abundant natural richness of the south republic, its fair climate, but by the warm, democratic temper of its people. And certainly the gateway into Mexico is much nearer for many of our Southern communities than the Northern cities that have principally been the objectives of the migratory movements up from the South.

Chicago Defender

OF COURSE, for those who would transplant themselves to a foreign land there is the imperative task of acquiring a new language and becoming appreciative of strange customs. But these are easily overcome. Perhaps that which has been most responsible for the hitherto indifferent attitude of our group toward Mexico has been the white press. There has been a constant and well laid system of agitation traceable to large Southern interests, mapped out for certain influential newspapers, to the effect that Mexico is only slightly removed from barbarism, and its existence is only justifiable as a political dependent of the United States.

AGAIN, THE SOUTH cannot do without the Black man; as an industrial factor he is indispensable. Everything is done by those who would be subject to the greatest loss in the event of his leaving to discourage the slightest manifested tendencies thereof. At present it is being circulated in many leading American newspapers that the Mexican government has recently issued orders to all consulates in America not to vise the passports of Colored people proposing to settle in Mexico. When the Mexican consul was consulted on the matter he emphatically denied the existence of any truth whatsoever in the matter. Furthermore, he stated that at present no American citizen, Black or white, is required to procure a passport to enter Mexico.

INFLUENCE OF THE NEGRO RACE IN THE FORMATION OF THE MEXICAN RACE

By LICENTIATE ALFONSO TORO

(Ethnos. Revista mensual para la vulgarizacion de estudios anhtropologicos sobre Mexico.)

Mexico, November, 1920. Marzo 1921, Tomo 1 No. 8-12.

(Translated by A. A. Schomburg, Esq.)

My esteemed friend the learned historian Mr. Louis Gonzalez Obregon called my attention to a number of censu: of the Viceroy of New Spain recently published by the Official Center of American Studies at Sevilla. Until today it was believed that the Negro race has had very little influence in the formation of the Mexican race. Dr. Mora in his important work "Mexico and her Revolutions" says: "The number of Negroes has been one of the elements that has entered to form its actual population (of the republic) has always been very short and today has almost disappeared, for the few that remained along the Pacific and Atlantic coasts are entirely too insignificant to inspire any feeling toward the tranquillity of the Republic not to have anv influence in the luck of its destiny." In like terms are expressed nearly all those who have taken up the Mexican population from Baron de Humboldt to Prince Roland Bonaparte have limited the influence of the Negro race to the coasts of Vera Cruz and Guerrero and to certain regions where sugar cane is cultivated and known as the torrid lands.

Documents from Ancient Archives

When we radically modify such ideas the statisticians come forth like those whom I have mentioned and whose works have been published by Mr. Germain La Torre under the title of Census of the Population of the Viceroy of New Spain during the XVI century in the IV tome of the Colonial American Bibliography. Three are the documents contained under said title. The first is a "Relation of all the Spanish towns of New Spain." The second is a "Memoir of the Spanish towns and populated mines in New Spain" and the last is "Memoir of the Provinces and towns under control."

His Majesty in this New Spain who should not be offended of the Royal Crown without commending itself to any person in the Archbishopric of Mexico." These documents were found in the General Archives of the Indies at Sevilla. With the exception of the second which is subscribed by Mr. Louis Marban the others are not signed. The three documents referred to correspond to the second half of the XVI century without being able to tell with precision the year, except the third which is of February 25, 1560.

The most important of the three for our object is the first noted. From its results are gathered the population of the principal bishoprics of New Spain during the second half of the XVI century was as follows:

Archbishopric of Mexico—Spaniards, 9,495; Negro Slaves, 10,595; Mestizos, 2,000; Mulattoes, 1,050.

Archbishopric of Michoacan—Spaniards, 1,035; Negro Slaves, 1,765; Mestizos, 200; Mulattoes, 200.

Archbishopric of Nueva Galicia—Spaniards, 1,270; Negro Slaves, 2,375; Meztisos, 150; Mulattoes, 150.

Archbishopric of Tiaxcala—Spaniards, 1,531; Negro Slaves, 2,958; Mestizos, 100; Mulattoes, 100.

Archbishopric of Yucatan—Spaniards, 420; Negro Slaves, 265; Mestizos, 10; Mulattoes, 20.

Archbishopric of Oaxaca—Spaniards, 560; Negro Slaves, 481; Mestizos, 50; Mulattoes, 30.

Archbishopric of Chiapas—Spaniards, 400; Negro Slaves, 130.

If to these figures we add 3,000 maroons Spaniards we find them to have had in New Spain, without including Guatemala, Costa Rica and Veragua, where 3,000 more Spaniards radiated a total of 17,711 Spaniards. Against this, the number of Negroes, without taking into account the Maroons, amounts to 18,569, a number larger than the Spaniards.

The wish to save the Indians from slavery was the cause of the introduction of Negro slaves into America. The celebrated Cardinal Cisneros was the first who conceded permission for Negroes to be brought to the West Indies in 1516, and to this license many others followed in rapidly in the Antilles and several places on the continent to the point of inspiring serious concern to the Spanish colonials, and instead of suspending the importation of the human ebony. There was solely disposed, as the chronologist Herrera says, that no one could have Negroes without having the three-quarter parts more of Christian, and these were expected to be well armed. The Negroes at the arrival of the first Viceroy to New Spain were already numerous, not so much because of the many assientos or contracts which various individuals had made with the crown, but by the great contraband that was made by bringing them from Africa or from the islands.

So numerous they were that as is well known during the Viceroy ruling of Mr. Antonio de Mendoza, an uprising which was discovered on September 24, 1537, which gave cause to very bloody repression. The census which we examined explain the reasons and wherefore, without any doubt, of a greater number of Negroes present since a great many perished when the conjuration was discovered. The Spaniards must have seen their plight of losing the dominion in New Spain.

The Viceroy frightened before the danger that the white race was about to run into dictated various proclamations to prevent such occurrence in the future, and he thereby requested his monarch that arms and powder in large quantity should be sent him. A fort be constructed in Tacuba with prohibition to permit more Negroes to be forwarded to New Spain. This happened during 1537, and, if we have passed the middle of the century, the number of Negroes having so largely increased over the Spaniards. We must agree that it reached the point where they painted collections of pictures represented the various types of miscegenation within its ordinary occupations. These types were with a slight variation designated with the names of mestizos, lobos, albinos, sambayas, cambujos, albarazados, barcinos, coyotes, Chamizos, Alli to estan, No-te-entiendo, etc.

From the collection of paintings to which we have referred there exist in Paris, which has been described by Professor Blanchard in the Journal of the Society of Americana and two in the National Museum of Archeology and History of the City of Mexico, which has been explained in the annals of said museum and the Ethnos Review, and it is known that there are several similar pictures in Paris.

If we take into account that the law XXI, title III, book VI of Recopilacion de las Indias prohibited Negroes and mulattoes to live in the cities of the Indians, especially those who were employed in the mining districts and in the sugar cane plantations and as domestics in the cities. It is proper to agree that it was very difficult for them to mix with the Indians than with the white race. It was natural to expect that in the large cities as Mexico, Zacatecas, Guanajuato, Pachuca should be where in their passage, the Negro race did leave a great mark, but any impartial observer can prove the contrary, nevertheless, the persistency of the ethnographic character of the African race is manifested in many of the mestizos of the Gulf and Pacific and in the regions of the torrid lands.

Notwithstanding what we have finished saying, perhaps, if the physical characteristics of the Negro have disappeared in the higher table lands and in that part of Mexico situated outside the Torrid Zone, it is possible that there is conserved a few of the moral characteristics of the Negro among his descendants.

A very careful ethnological study could explain many of the propensities of the Mexican people. The missionaries, and especially Father Mendiotta, paints the Negro as obnoxious hypocrites and always disposed to insurrection, and perhaps from there, from the Negro race, comes the indocility of the Mexican people to hold their govornors and their tendency to revolution.

All these problems are worthy of a careful study. I am not doing anything else but to call them to the attention of the learned whose time are taken up with these things.

Negroes Barred from Mexico

Washington D.C.

It is generally understood that the United States Government will come to terms of amicability with the republic of Mexico early this fall, the administration then planning to put into effect the policies which the United States Government is interested in being developed below the Rio Grande.

Among the developments one of the most significant is to the effect that colored Americans cannot enter Mexico. Colored people from all over the world may enter as may persons of any of the nationalities of Europe. But those who claim American citizenship are barred from leaving America to enter Mexico.

In some cases there are husbands who entered Mexico last spring before the order went into effect, purchased property and established homes. Their wives at present are unable to join them, and if they return to America, they will be unable to get back into Mexico to look after the interests they have developed.

Many families are camped on the banks of the Rio Grande endeavoring to get permission from the Mexican government to enter. The situation has been exposed thoroughly and given due publicity through Dr. Arthur Holliday of Washington who is traveling in interest of the Holliday laboratories.

NegroMigrants toMexico Fail to Take Proper Papers With Them

Topeka Plaindealer

The Department of Interior has not given instructions to its Migration Inspectors an dAgents to restrict the entrance of North American citizens of the Negro race who intend to return to their homes located in Mexico, but rather when they have presented concrete cases of this intention they have been permitted passage to National Territory. There may be cited as examples: Henry Riley, Fred Sayt, Dot Barnei, and J. Douglas and their families.

Topeka, Kansas

Consequently the dispositions issued by the Department of Interior may be interpreted as absolutely not affecting the North American citizens of the Negro race who are in transit through Territory of Mexico or who are returning to their homes; but it is logical to assume that foreigners will be obliged to furnish the requisites specified by the laws, regulations and other dispositions on immigration and to exhibit to the Mexican authorities those documents which prove their statements. In some cases it has happened that the documents of these foreigners, who have intended to enter the country, have not been accepted on account of being incomplete or deficient; and the fault for this is due exclusively to those interested and not to the authorities of Mexico.

With respect to the dispositions issued over the general prohibition of immigration, Mexico, like all the nations of the world, and based upon Article 3 of the Immigration Law, which permits it to prohibit the entrance into the country of individuals who come o it to become charges upon society, gave instructions for the entrance not to be permitted to destitute day-laborers who come o cause disastrous competition with Mexican laborers; and on many occasions, the individuals of the Negro race who have intended to immigrate have been found to be precisely in this situation in a great number of cases, that is to say that they would constitute a real charge upon Mexican society in case their entrance were permitted; therefore the Migration Inspectors have worked with all energy in this matter.

Immigrants, and particularly Negroes, perhaps on account of their limited knowledge concerning the Immigration laws, neglect, in most cases, to exhibit those proofs of citizenship and nationality and the other documents required, for example: that which pertains to the proof of the fact that they are colonists and have concluded contracts over the matter an dover permission for entrering the country; those relative to proof that they actually have previously established their homes in Mexico, and that it is true they are returning to them.

There are cases in which individuals who intend to immigate claim relationship with families residing in the country, a relationship which is not supported by any fact and, therefore, which cannot be taken into consideration for permitting entrance, unless it is arranged upon other grounds.

As is observed, the intention of the Government is not to restrict the immigration of safe and industrious elements and those who are not going to become a charge upon society; but to free itself from the impostiion of undesirable element and those who do not produce the requisites required by our laws.

From the above considerations, it is to be inferred that Mexico rests upon the necessity of applying definite restrictions upon immigration, but it is certain that these are not going o be directed against one particular race or nationality, but that they have been adopted through being absolutely necessary for the protection and conservation of its internal order.

ORDERS REPORT FROM MEXICANS ON COLOR CASE

U. S. State Department Asks Data on William Vann, Who Was Kept Out of Colony

New York, N. Y., Nov. 16.—The United States department of State in response to a recent complaint forwarded by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has ordered a full report to be made concerning alleged discrimination against our Race by the Mexican authorities at Piedras Negras. The following letter has been received by the advancement association from the state department:

Demands Report

"I am in receipt of your letter of Oct. 18, with further reference to the report that the Mexican authorities at Piedras Negras have been instructed to prohibit the entrance into Mexico of American Negroes and in particular reference to the case of William Vann, who asserts that he has been endeavoring, without success, to return to his property in the State of Durango since September 1, 1923.

"In reply, you are informed that the American consul at Piedras Negras has been instructed to submit a full report upon the case of William Vann.

"With regard to the statement that the American consul has failed properly to assist the persons discriminated against, you are informed that, under date of July 5, 1923, the consul reported that he had taken up the matter with the inspector in charge of the Mexican immigration service at Piedras Negras, suggesting that these Negroes of American nationality, who desire to return to their property in Mexico be given visiting cards for that purpose."

Had Large Colony

The complainant, William Vann, asserts in 1909, he carried a colony of 65 families into Mexico and settled them on a grant of 27,114 acres, leased for 99 years. In 1923, when President Wilson ordered all American citizens to return from Mexico, the colonists crossed the border, and are now seeking to return to their homes.

New York, October 19—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People again has received word of anti-Negro discrimination by the Mexican officials at Piedras Negras, just across the border from Eagle Pass, Texas, and has reported the facts to Charles Hughes, U. S. Secretary of State in Washington. The letter to Secretary Hughes is as follows:

"Referring to your letter of September 29, containing a report forwarded by the American Embassy in Mexico City, to the effect that there is no discrimination by the Mexican Government against immigrants of the Negro race: "I beg to advise that additional reports have come to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that the Mexican Government is still preventing the entrance of United States citizens at Piedras Negras and that we are informed discrimination is being practiced against persons of color.

Furthermore, we are informed that the American consul at Eagle Pass, Texas, has failed to properly assist the persons discriminated against.

The complainant is William Vann, who asserts that in 1909 he carried a colony of 65 families into the Republic of Mexico and settled them on a grant of 27,114 acres of land in the State of Durango, Mexico, leased to his company, The Durango Land Company, for 99 years from July 12, 1909. In 1913 the colony left their homes in Mexico and returned to the United States upon the order of the President of the United States that all Americans citizens were to leave Mexico. They listed their property with the American consul at that time.

Mr. Vann asserts that he has been in Eagle Pass, Texas since September 1 of this year and has not been permitted to enter the Republic of Mexico to look after his property.

We have a further letter from Mrs. J. A. Williams of Eagle Pass Texas, asserting that white American citizens are permitted to enter the Republic of Mexico at Piedras Negras but that this privilege is refused to colored citizens of the United States. Mrs. Williams further states: 'Mr. Louis Whitehead has been as far in as 65 miles from the border without a passport or anyone to vouch for him or any questions asked, but he looks like a white man.'

May we have your advice in this matter?"

MEXICAN GOVERNMENT AND NEGRO IMMIGRATION

No Restriction Practiced—All Races and Nationals Subject to Laws

Negro World

The State Department forwards a report from the American embassy at Mexico City with reference to the admission of Negroes to Mexico, stating that difficulty is sometimes occasioned by failure of migrants to equip themselves with the documents required by Mexican law. The report from the embassy is as follows: 10-27-23

"The Department of Interior has not given instructions to its migration inspectors and agents to restrict the entrance of North American citizens of the Negro race who intend to return to their homes located in Mexico, but rather, when they have presented concrete cases of this intention they have been permitted passage to national territory. There may be cited as examples: Henry Riley, Fred Sart, Dot Barnei, and J. Douglas and their families.

"Consequently, the dispositions issued by the Department of Interior ... be interpreted as absolutely not affecting the North American citizens of the Negro race who are in transit through the territory of Mexico or who are returning to their homes, but it is logical to assume that foreigners will be obliged to furnish the requisites specified by the laws, regulations and other dispositions on immigration and to exhibit to the Mexican authorities those documents which prove their statements. In some cases it has happened that the documents of these foreigners, who have intended to enter the country, have not been accepted on account of being incomplete or deficient; and the fault for this is due exclusively to those interested and not to the authorities of Mexico.

"With respect to the disposition issued over the general prohibition of immigration, Mexico, like all the nations of the world, and based upon Article 3 of the Immigration law, which permits it to prohibit the entrance into the country of individuals who come to it to become charges upon society, gave instructions for the entrance not to be permitted to destitute day-laborers who come to cause disastrous competition with Mexican laborers; and on many occasions, the individuals of the Negro race who have intended to immigrate have been found to be precisely in this situation in a great number of cases, that is to say, that they would constitute a real charge upon Mexican society in case their entrance were permitted; therefore the migration inspectors have worked with all energy in this matter.

"Immigrants, and particularly Negroes, perhaps on account of their limited knowledge concerning the immigration laws, neglect, in most cases, to exhibit those proofs of citizenship and nationality and the other documents required, for example: That which pertains to the proof of the fact that they are colonists and have concluded contracts over the matter and over permission for entering the country; those relative to proof that they actually have previously established their homes in Mexico, and that it is true they are returning to them.

"There are cases in which individuals who intend to immigrate claim relationship with families residing in the country, a relationship which is not supported by any fact and, therefore, which cannot be taken into consideration for permitting entrance, unless it is arranged upon other grounds.

"As is observed, the intention of the government is not to restrict the immigration of safe and industrious elements and those who are not going to become a charge upon society; but to free itself from the imposition of undesirable elements and those who do not produce the requisites required by our laws.

"From the above consideration, it is to be inferred that Mexico rests upon the necessity of applying definite restrictions upon immigration, but it is certain that these are not going to be directed against one particular race or nationality, but that they have been adopted through being absolutely necessary for the protection and conservation of its internal order."

Mexican Anti-Racial Ban On At U. S. Border

MEXICAN ANTI-NEGRO PROPAGANDA EXPOSED

Norfolk Journal & Guide

Mexico City, Mexico,—Alarmed at the headway being made by the colored in Mexico, and that President Obrequiring vast land holdings in Mexico. and the migration of thousands of colored farmers to the Mexican Republic; the white oil interests thru their press agency, the Chicago Tribure Foreign News Service, is sending out propaganda to the daily papers stating htat colored colonists are not wanted in Mexico, and that Pres. Ogon objected to the colored people upon the grounds that they were not good prospective colonists on account of "the ethnic problem." 3/17/23

The following propaganda was recently published in leading American dailies. It was sent out by the Chicago Foreign News Service:

Mexico City.—Colored colonists are not wanted in Mexico is the notice which the department of the interior has sent to all customs houses on the border, ordering the strictest vigilance to prevent colored persons from entering Mexico.

Several months ago, President Obregon said that he was no respector of country or race on the puestion of immigration, provided that the people were moral and likely to become good citizens. In the same interview he asserted that colored people were not good prospective colonists on account of the ethnic problem.

Mexico already has the problem of assimilating vast bodies of native Indians, and the president felt that it would not be wise to increase the complexity of the question.

Talks for weeks past of extensive colored immigration to Mexico set the executive wheels in motion to prevent American colored people from turning their faces toward Mexico.

Opposition From American Oil Interests

The opposition of the oil interest is chiefly against permitting the col ored people to colonize in the Tampi co and San Luis Potosi districts which are in the heart of the Mex ican oil belt.

On January 25 a colony of Oklahoma colored people started for San Luis Potosi, in the heart of tropical Mexico. Other colonies have gone to the Santa Clara Valley district on the west coast of Mexico about 200 miles below Los Angeles, Calf. In this district the Lower California & Development Co. of Los Angeles, a Negro Corporation, owns and controls a vast estate of over 5,000 acres of valuable farming, mining and oil lands.

In spite of the opposition of the oil interests, this movement to open up the fertile valleys of Lower California to the colored people, has the hearty support of not only Pres. Obergon but of the Mexican Government as a whole, the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego and Los Angeles, California, and other influential interests.

President Obregon Meets Negro Delegation

In July 1922 Pres. Obregon met a delegation of 22 colored citizens of the United States headed by Atty. Hugh Macbeth of Los Angeles, and Mr. J. B. Key of Okmulgee, Okla., and stated in person to them, "That Mexico has no color line and the Mexican Constitution frobids Race distinction on the ground of race color, creed or degree of wealth."

At Ensenada, Mexico, the delegation was welcomed by the Mayor who said: "Mexico offers the greatest opportunity and future to any people on the face of the earth. We are inviting the American Negro to come and cast his lot with us, not because we know that he is mistreated, and unjustly dealt with in his own land, but because we believe that in the development of commerce, agriculture, and trade in our own country, he will be fair enough to take some and leave some and not try to take all as some Americans have done in the past."

Entertains Delegation In Capital

Pres. Obregon received the colored delegation cordially at the "Mexican White House" and promised his supoprt and that of the Government to any legitimate colonization movement that would bring a desirable element of American Negroes into Mexico. He was especially interested in the colonization plans outlined by the Lower California Land & Development Co. in building up the fertile valleys of the district adjacent to the great Mexican Pacific seaport, Ensenada, 60 miles by auto from San Diego, California.

NEGROES SEEK PROMISED LAND

N.Y.

Residents of Oklahoma Are Being Invited to Take Up Their Homes in Old Mexico—460,000 Acres Available

Negro World. 3/24/23.

OKMULGEE, Okla., March 2.—The Negroes of Oklahoma are being invited to a new "promised" land in old Mexico.

Whether it will be only a will o' the wisp, as many Negro movements have been, or a real exodus remains to be seen.

The movement is sponsored by the International Community Welfare League, with offices in Los Angeles, Mexico City and here. A local man, J. B. Key, a Negro, is president of the league.

The league claims that settlement rights in northern Mexico have been secured, which includes freedom and equality for Negroes, Latin-Americans and Indians.

Already 15 families of Negroes from this state have started for Mexico, the party consisting of tenant farmers and numbering 100 persons.

The local Negroes for many years have eked out only a bare living as tenant farmers, and had very little property. They took with them in their special train farming tools, livestock and household belongings. Their train had both passenger and freight coaches and routed to the southern republic via Laredo, Texas.

Key, the president, recently headed a delegation of United States Negroes which visited Mexico City and conferred with President Obregon. Settlement rights to 150,000 acres of land in the State of Sonora, 110,000 acres in San Luis Potosi, and 200,000 on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec were secured by the League, according to Key.

The Mexican government is wholly in accord with the colonization movement, and will welcome the thousands of Negro "Pilgrims," Key said.

Expenses of the trip to Mexico will be paid pro rata by the emigrants, it was said. Total expenses of the Okmulgee colony were $3,000, it was said.

Colonies of the blacks from other cities throughout the country are expected to "get under way" for the "promised land" in the immediate future, Key said.

NEW COLORED RACE FORMING IN MEXICO

Savannah Journal

WHITE EDUCATOR TALKS ON SUBJECT

4-7-23

New Race Be Composed of English, French and Spanish

San Deigo, Calif., April 4 (Pacific News Bureau).—"Within four or five generations hence an entirely new race will be formed in the Republic of Mexico," stated Dr. Edgar L. Hewitt, recent address before the College Wo famous author-educator-lecturer in a men's Club of San Deigo. "This new race," said Dr. Hewitt, "will have as its basis the North American Indian and will include the amalgamation of the Negro and the Spanish."

According to Dr. Hewitt, "This new race will have black personal characteristics, Indian ideas and a language that is a mixture of English, French and Spanish."

It is no secret that the various colored races who desire to live in America in happiness and without fear of presecution are slowly but surely migrating to the great Mexican Republic where they are welcomed without prejudice.

The American Indian, few in number, but wealthy, objects to the narrow bounds of reservation life and longs for freedom amid the vast expanses of virgin nature such as in only possible in Mexico.

The Hindu, no longer classed as white, the Chinese, the Japanese and other foreign colored peoples are to be barred from owning or leasing land in the United States.

Under the alien land laws in effect in most Pacific states, the Hindu, Chinese, Japanese, African and other aliens not eligible to citizenship in the United States, are not only prohibited from becoming citizens of the United States, but are also prohibited from acquiring control of farming lands either by drect sale, lease or through cropping contracts in the state of California and most states west of the Mississippi.

Assemblywoman Cora M. Woodbridge of Rosseville, California, whose amendment to the alien land law incorporating the above restrictions has been received and prepared by Attorney General U. S. Webb, recently received from Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., whose series of articles in the Hearst newspapers on the anti-Japanese propaganda have attracted considerable attention, the following telegraphic congratulation, "All success to you in your fight today for revsion of the alien land law. It is commendable and wonderful to feel that there are still patriotic citizens to battle for aspirations that will keep our Country white."

White newspapers carried the following article recently:

"The Honduras Government has prohibited the further immigration of colored workmen in the banana plantations, after a protest by labor leaders, it was announced here last week by the Honduran Minister. Consuls abroad have been advised to cease viseing thse passports."

Asked to verify this report the American Consul of Honduras wrote the AFRO-AMERICAN this week as follows: Maryland

The Consulate is unable to learn of any exisiting regulation of the Honduran Government preventing the entry into Honduras of colored laborers.

It may be stated however that all of the large fruit companies operating in Honduras do so under concessions of one form or another and that these concessions almost invariably prohibit the importation of laborers of colored races for work on the plantations. This measure is stated to be economic in its inception rather than racial and may be compared in a way to the immigration laws of the United States as affecting contract labor.

Governor Seeks Aid Of Race In Establishing Mammoth Health Resort

MEXICALI, Baja, Mexico, May 17 (Pacific Coast News Bureau)—Seeking an opportunity to bring about a better understanding between the Mexican people and the colored Americans through the establishment of a lasting memorial to the increasing friendship between the two races, one of the most important meetings that has ever been held between the two races was recently held in the beautiful San Francisco Cafe in Tia Juana, Mexico. Among those present were Lic. J. Inocente Lugo, Governor of Lower California; Louis G. Beltram, Mayor of Ensenada; H. D. Manriguis, Mayor of Tia Juana; W. P. Jorres, Mayor of Mexicali; Jose. J. Montes, Chief of Police of Tia Juana; Robt. P. Fite, of Los Angeles, formerly efficiency expert of the Ford Motor Co., of New York, and Hugh E. MacBeth, General Counsel of the International Community Welfare League of Los Angeles.

To Establish $100,000 Sanitarium

As a result of this conference plans were drawn and definitely concluded to erect a $100,000 health sanitarium at the sulphur springs in the Santa Clara Valley, Lower California. The sanitarium is to be built in units costing $10,000 per unit; the first unit having been subscribed by Mayor Louis G. Beltram, of Ensenada, in behalf of the Mexican residents of the Ensenada district, and who will be asked to purchase "bricks" at 50 cents each as a donation to assist in building this sanitarium which will be shared without discrimination by all citizens of Mexico, regardless of race or color. Other units will be secured by the Mexican citizens at the solicitation of Mayor Beltram, who has been appointed by Gov. Lugo as superintendent of the campaign throughout Lower California.

Under the supervision of Robt. P. Fite, formerly efficiency expert of the Ford Co., of New York, and later general distributor of the Chevrolet throughout Southern California, with a reputation as the only representative that has ever sold $1,000,000 worth of Chevrolets retail in 90 days, the citizens of Southern California and other communities will be asked to subscribe for the remaining units.

An Eleemosynary Institution

Ten acres upon which is located the noted sulphur springs has been donated by the Lower California Mexican Land & Development Co., a Negro syndicate of Los Angeles, and deeded to the Sanitarium Corporation, which is an eleemosynary organization and is composed of colored, white and Mexican personages, philanthropically inclined, who are interested in promoting a better feeling between the three races throughout Mexico where the Negro and other colored races are welcomed without prejudice.

An Ideal Location

The sulphur springs noted by the Mexicans for years for their medicinal qualities lie in the beautiful Santa Clara Valley ,about 40 miles by auto from the thriving Mexican seaport city, Ensenada; and 60 miles from the Southern California city of San Diego. Situated amid the mountains and only a few miles from the sea, the climate is equal to that which has made the state of California famous.

TULSA TOO ROUGH, HE SETS OUT FOR MEXICO

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 3.—Mr. O. N. Gurley, one of the pioneer Negro merchants of Tulsa, Okla., and whose three-story brick building was totaled destroyed in the riot, is in Los Angeles enroute to the new Negro townsite and colonization colony a few miles across the Mexican border from San Diego, Cal.

Immediately following the Tulsa riot Mr. Gurley rebuilt his building and sold it. With a number of other prominent Oklahoma colored business men, he visited the various colonization projects in Mexico, going as far in the interior as Mexico City and San Luis Potosi.

Mr. Gurley favors the Lower California colonization project in preference to those far in the interior of the Republic, as he claims it is possible to live in perfect freedom and security, amid ideal locations for farming, yet within a few hours by automobile from San Diego and Los Angeles, Cal.

MEXICO AND THE NEGRO

MANY people are under the impression that the action on the part of the Mexican government in prohibiting American Negroes in large numbers from entering Mexico is due to prejudice against the race. We are of the opinion, however, that this is not the case. Mexico, in taking the stand which she has taken, is guided by the knowledge that Tio Sam has always cast envious eyes on the rich lands across the Rio Grande, and during the Wilson regime sought frantically for a casus belli with the smaller republic.

Mexico knows that for ways that are dark and tricks that are mean the Anglo-Saxon diplomats are peculiar, and having had rich lands taken away from her under flimsy pretexes she is exceedingly watchful and suspicious of Tio Sam's Negro citizens. Not that the Negroes themselves have any evil designs on the sovereignty of Mexico, but the diplomats, on the other side of the Rio Grande, know that very often citizens of one country are sent into the territory of weaker nations to settle, and are encouraged to disobey the laws and violate the customs of the weaker nation, and when the latter attempts to discipline these offenders the stronger nation steps in under the pretext of protecting her subjects and in many cases occupy the land permanently.

Mexico is taking no chances that these Negroes may be the unconscious tools of the man higher up. So that her action is not due to any prejudice against the race but rather in self protection.

Investigate Exclusion Of Colored Americans

(Lincoln News Service)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23. — The State Department has ordered an immediate investigation of the refusal of the authorities at Piedras Negras, Mexico, to admit colored American citizens. It is intimated here that this refusal might have some effect upon the negotiations in progress for American recognition of Mexico.

UNITED STATES EMBASSY IN MEXICO TAKING UP EXCLUSION OF NEGROES.

Refusal of Mexico to admit American Negroes at Piedras Negras, has resulted in an order to the American Embassy at Mexico City to investigat according to announcement today by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

A letter to the Advancement Association from the United States Department of State says that the Embassy is instructed to take up the matter with the appropriate Mexican authorities in order that the restrictions against Negroes may be removed.

U. S. Charged With Instigating Revolt in Panama Selfishly

Banks Then Stepped In, and by Loans Bound Little Republic to American Imperialistic Policy With Golden Chain—"Pawns" in Great Game Collected Slowly.

The World herewith presents the second of a series of articles from the pen of Georg Brandes, famous Danish literary critic and publicist who, during the World War, was known as the "fiery neutral" of Europe. Born in Copenhagen in 1842, Mr. Brandes has lived in France for several months every year since his graduation from the University of Copenhagen; in Italy, Germany, Poland, Russia, England and the United States. He therefore writes with peculiar authority upon "The World Engulfed in Imperialism."

By GEORG BRANDES
Translated by H. B. Hiller

THE small Republic of Panama, in behalf of the Panama Canal, was separated from Colombia by way of an uprising instigated by the United States. After the declaration of independence, control was gained, as always in such cases, by a loan by banks in the United States. Before the World War 400,000 inhabitants of Panama were under an indebtedness of $5,000, now they face a debt of $7,000,000, and it is contemplated to grant them another loan of $10,000,000.

It begins, as a rule, by the United States taking hold of the customs system of the small republics; from this a military dictatorship develops.

In 1909 the United States organized and financed a revolution in Nicaragua and removed the President. The new President-elect, however, was by no means persona grata to the American capitalist rulership. So, under the pretext that two North American adventurers had been killed in a riot, the Secretary of War sent 2,300 marines in order to enforce the election of a President who was subservient to the interests of the United States. The Congress of Nicaragua refused to recognize this dummy whereupon the Congress was dissolved with the help of brave American jackies and the independence of Nicaragua became a matter of past history.

Debts Are Compared.

Before the United States started its intervention the public debt of Nicaragua was $2,500,000. After the United States had reinstated law and order the country was mortgaged to the North American bankers for $15,000,000 and the customs system, the railroads and the finances of Nicaragua were being administered by the trusted agents of these bankers. Strange to say, these ungrateful inhabitants feel no affection whatsoever for their Northern benefactors.

Roosevelt and Taft inaugurated the imperialistic course of action toward the inhabitants of Central and South America. But it was pious Wilson, the pacifist, the idealist, who put an end to the independence of Hayti and Santo Domingo. Since 1905 North America has controlled the finances of Santo Domingo. In 1916 the Constitution was suspended, and an Admiral of the United States Navy became Military Goveronor with naval officers as officials. The poor Negro Republic of Hayti, too, stands under the protectorate of the United States.

This happened while Wilson was thundering against the imperialism of the German Empire. As everybody knows, it has been pronounced for a long time that the United States is going to withdraw from the islands as soon as the natives have fulfilled certain conditions, i. e., all customs duties are confiscated, a loan of $6,500,000 has been imposed upon Santo Domingo, another of $40,000,000 upon Hayti. The United States, in the country itself, is in possession of ample security for this money.

U. S. Has Collected "Pawns."

In this way the North American bankers with the politicians of the United States as willing helpers have collected pawns in a great part of South America. They use the same means as did the British imperialists of their time in Egypt and the Russian imperialists in Persia: under an imposed military administration they follow up one loan by another until the occupied state becomes perfectly dependent and helpless.

Perhaps you will say: Is there no press in the United States upholding the venerable traditions of liberty from the time of the Revolutionary War, those traditions which the fathers cast into the form of a famous Constitution?

The answer is that, indeed, the press in North America is a power. Before the war the United States had a circulation of 40,000,000 copies of daily papers and weekly and monthly magazines amounted to 200,000,000 besides. But this whole mass, excepting three weeklies, the Nation, the New Republic, the Freeman, which are excellently edited but without political influence, having only between 4,000 and 15,000 subscribers, is owned by capital.

American Journalists Scored.

Upton Sinclair, in "The Brass Check," has violently pounced upon America's journalists.

These journalists themselves are exceptionally nice fellows, as a rule, which, however, does not include newspaper kings, least of all the late Lord Northcliffe. The journalist most of the time remains anonymous. The power standing behind him and using him is responsible. William James, the philosopher, wrote in a letter: "as to our yellow press, each country has its criminals, and with us, the same as in France, following their professional development, they have simply turned to journalism." That is a bitter saying. James evidently wants to convey that ignorance and unscrupulousness have now a vote in literature.

The American journalist is expected by his chief to be efficient in unearthing facts, to have a clear way of expressing himself, the ability to hold the interest by making "a story" out of everything. Of course, the chief does not allow the journalist to mention or praise anybody whom the financiers controlling the paper do not wish mentioned and praised. But the paper is not subsisting on subscription, constituting an infinitesimal sum compared with the expenses, but on advertisements, and if the text is supposed to be sensational and entertaining, it is for the reason that the attention is to be directed to the advertisements where to buy the best razors and the best automobiles.

"The Birth of a Nation" under fire by Negro Alderman who denounces it as part of the Ku Klux Klan

By T. Howard Kelly

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" has created a new sensation.

A few days ago, and eight years after its premier, this fine old film startled blase New York into gasping interest, and the furore it created has not subsided since.

When Griffith announced that he would exhibit his world-famous picture for a revival run at the Selwyn Theatre for an indefinite period, the trouble started.

All the power of the organized negro race was suddenly directed against Mr. Griffith and "The Birth of a Nation." These colored men wanted the official board of censorship, headed by Joseph Levinson, to cut from the picture certain scenes which they considered derogatory to the black man.

The war was on. In defense and in condemnation of his celebrated picture, D. W. Griffith, its producer, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, argued pro and con, one working to preserve its integrity and the other striving to have certain portions destroyed. Out of this welter of hostile criticism the hand of the censor has risen to decide whether the "Birth," as it is called in the Griffith office, shall endure in its present and original form or whether a future generation shall witness a mutilated version of it.

Along the glittering path of a street called Broadway this stupendous spectacle of a vast continent steeped in the shadows of tragic travail is once more sweeping men to their feet with clamorous cheers; the clarion notes of its martial trumpets still sound high and clear—stirring men's souls; from a soft tremulo of love it is again reaching a crescendo of barbaric medley in the crackling cataract of battle, thus bringing tenderness and tumult into human hearts and throats.

The thunderous applause inspired by the revival of this screen masterpiece has already completely drowned the sinister rumbling of protests against "The Birth of a Nation" made by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in an attempt to ban this historical drama. There is much to warm the hearts of movie fans in the way this premier picture has been greeted and acclaimed. The ringing cheers are far more than applause for a remarkably fine film; they are, in fact, a stinging defiance hurled by American movie-goers into the ranks of all those who sought officially, and unofficially, to entirely prohibit the exhibition of this dramatic historical document, or to distort and mangle it by the sharp, ruthless shears of censorship.

But, even though we may be carried along by the tempest of cheering which has welcomed the revival of "The Birth of a Nation," we must not allow the triumphant tumult of the moment to sweep us out of earshot of the protests which for a few weeks seemed likely to achieve the purpose of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People. To do so will be fatal to our best interests in the present and future progress of the films.

The controversy created by Mr. Griffith's plan to revive his pictorial version of "The Clansman," Thomas Dixon's famous novel, is indicative of a situation in the films which reveals the menace of censorship as nothing else has ever done in the records of the motion picture industry. To describe this dangerous situation clearly and concisely, and in order to enlist your support as a movie fan against film censorship, it is best that we go over all the facts in this important case which show the potential evils of censorship.

GRIFFITH'S picture is, as you know, based upon the Civil War and that period of history which followed closely upon the heels of the peace at Appomatox Court House. According to eminent historians, authors, statesmen, soldiers and students of world events, Mr. Griffith has rendered an authentic version of history in his great film drama. Even in its most unessential details the story follows an unflagging line of truth.

Consequently, "The Birth of a Nation" is conceded to be an accurate account of the most uncertain period in the history of the United States of America. As such it must, of necessity, present both sides of a question which has been irrevocably settled—a question which brought to light the good and bad qualities of a conglomerate nation engaged in fratricidal struggle.

We might just as well tamper with, and distort, the text of our authentic, accredited American public school histories as cut out any parts of "The Birth of a Nation," which reflect the historical conditions of the sixties. On the other hand, it would be just as boldly preposterous to deny the privileges of exhibition to this picture as it would be to demand that all American histories be barred from our schools.

And yet, as preposterous and unreasonable as it may seem, there was an urgent, almost an impertinent clamor that the Griffith film be barred from New York theatres; or else censored to satisfy the whims of a partisan element while at the same time defeating the purposes of history! This clamor was carried directly to the Censorship Board of New York State. Now we are coming nearer to the situation which I have described as menacing to the best present and future interests of filmdom.

The censorship board, with full authority to regulate what may be shown and what may not be shown on the silver screen, was approached by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, reinforced by several negro aldermen from New York City districts. The petition of the association and the officials was that the censors get out their scissors and distort history . . . or else prohibit Mr. Griffith from showing the picture.

WHY was this petition made?

I can answer my own question in the words of a Boston antagonist of "The Birth of a Nation," who said:

"This picture is against the negro. It makes him out to be a savage. It will hurt all of his ambitions to progress on a political and social basis with the white man."

Of course this was not the way the petitioners put their plea before the censorship board. They insisted that their present antagonism to the film was primarily founded on the grounds that the Ku Klux Klan figured very strongly in the Griffith spectacle. They contended that inasmuch as the Ku Klux Klan had been denounced as an unlawful, un-American organization which encouraged religious and racial hatred, no picture laud- the situation which arose when this petition was made:

"We were between the devil and the deep blue sea."

In other words, the board was up against pressure from two distinctly antagonistic sources. One of these sources was demanding the censorship, or the barring of a film because some portions of it revealed the negro in a bad light. In other words, it was asking the censors to twist, tear, snap, mangle and distort history for personal and class reasons.

The other source was demanding that history and truth prevail because those two things are vastly bigger and more important to human progress than personal, or class reasons. Now, it is at once obvious to the fair-minded, non-partisan person that the censors had only one duty in the matter after the two sides had both stated their cases.

That duty was to preserve authentic history at any cost. Censors may cut kissing scenes to 10 seconds in one state, and forbid the showing of a mother working on the clothes of an expected baby in Pennsylvania—but God forbid that they should desecrate or profane American history by swipes of their nonsensical clippers.

ing their work should be shown in this country. Also, they casually cited the character of the negro Gus in "The Birth of a Nation" as an example of why the film should be barred. Gus was the renegade colored Union soldier in the picture, who caused a white girl (Mae Marsh) to leap from a precipice to her death when he tried to attack her.

Let me quote one of the members of the censorship board as to

WHY then, should the Board of Censorship have felt that it was between the devil and the deep blue sea? The only reason I can find is that censorship boards all over the country probably feel they must react to whichever pressure is the strongest. If this theory of mine be even near true, then let's thank God again that David Wark Griffith's pressure in behalf of his "Birth of a Nation," was strong enough to gain exhibitional privileges for the film.

In defending "The Birth of a Nation" against the criticisms and allegations of those who sought to have it censored, or barred, Mr. Griffith told Walker F. White and Nathan Skingaon, who represented the colored society, that the Ku Klux Klan in his picture bore no relation to the society of the same name which is now appearing in portions of the United States. The famous director agreed to have announcements made in the theatre to this effect before screening the film.

To anyone acquainted with true history, it is apparent that the Clansmen of Dixon's gripping novel and the Ku Klux Klan of today are not the same. The old regime of the Klan died when the necessity for the southern organization ceased to exist. The Klan of old was the inspirational idea of brave, but defeated, white men, who saw in it the only way to save themselves and their Southland from the dark terror of reconstruction days below the Mason and Dixon line. As soon as their purpose was accomplished, the Fiery Cross turned out . . . the caravans of white-robed figures moved no longer at break-neck pace through the night spaces to bring justice in place of crime.

Whatever the K. K. K. of today is, I do not know. Suffice it for this story that Griffith's Ku Kluxers were of another time and kind.

AND then, Mr. Griffith went on to tell the Board of Censorship a few things about the complaint against the character of Gus, and other negroes who took parts in "The Birth of a Nation."

"When I make a picture showing the negro in a complimentary light, I never hear from you; but, when we make a film in which one of your race, or more, is not praised, then I receive complaints," he said.

I have seen "The Birth of a Nation" about ten different times. One of the most impressive phases of human interest in the great historical drama is, in my humble opinion, the love and respect of that fat old coal-black mammy for her "white chillun"; and, the devotion of those same proud, aristocratic "white chillun" for their big-hearted and big-waisted mammy. Why, that colored woman fought white and black soldiers for her folks! and in everything she did throughout the picture there was evidence of the faithfulness and honesty that pounded in a white heart beneath her black skin.

A society for the advancement of white people might just as properly have demanded censorship of the film because a Union political leader named Stoneman played a part which showed a white man to be both despicable and dishonest. The negro Gus was a renegade in the picture; and he was a drunken, savage brute in history. Most likely he would have been the same character in spite of white, black or green skin.

Well, such a defense of the picture, ably substantiated by Thomas Dixon, Jr., and Judge Laughlin, convinced the censors that there was no reasonable excuse for the use of shears in connection with "The Birth of a Nation." Consequently, a permit was issued.

Doesn't this controversy over "The Birth of a Nation" indicate very clearly and conclusively the sinister menace that exists in political, or any other kind of movie censorship? I am sure that you, as a staunch movie lover, see the censor's position when they were asked by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to bar this great historical picture because negroes feel that it is antagonistic to their race.

MOVIE CENSORS AGAIN ASKED BAN BIRTH OF NATION

Request to Revoke the License of Noted Picture

New York
New York Times
1-26-23

NEW YORK, Dec. 26, 1922.

To the Motion Picture Commission of the State of New York:—

Since the action of your Commission in granting a license to "The Birth of a Nation," facts connected with the Ku Klux Klan have been brought to public notice that have stirred up public sentiment against that organization depicted so graphically in "The Birth of a Nation" that was not brought to your attention when viewing the picture when license was granted August, 1921, or when a hearing was held for a revocation of the permit Dec. 2-4, 1922.

These new facts show that the Ku Klux Klan has been revived in the South and has spread to all sections of the country that it has extended its purpose and desire of "regulating the niggers of the South after the Civil War," as depicted in the "Birth of a Nation," to "regulating" white persons as well, including Jews, Catholics and other groups of citizens who do not measure up to the ideas or requirements of the organization. And this "regulation" is to be done in a high-handed and lawless manner by masked men oath bound to secrecy as to what may be contemplated or done by any body of these masked "regulators."

The designs, purpose and acts of these masked mobs are against the rights and protection of persons and organizations protected by the laws of civilization as represented in the United States of America. Late investigations have brought to light the fact that these masked mobs will not stop at murder in carrying out their plans of "regulating" whites as well as blacks. No one may know what these rascals may be up to or do. No one may know when suspicion, religious or race hatred or other reasons may cause a person to be proscribed and "regulated" by these masked ruffians and outlaws. Unless this new danger is discouraged and put down by the enforcement of our laws no one will feel safe.

There can be little doubt that the exhibition of "The Birth of a Nation" has kept alive the Klan and encourages its extension at the present time. In the interest of public welfare and to sustain law and order in this country we the undersigned request your Commission to hold a hearing at an early date to consider reasons for and against revocation of the license of "The Birth of a Nation," and with this request that the license be revoked. (Signed)

T. DE QUINCY TULLY,
Secretary Law Enforcement Society.

PARIS BARRED FILM UNDER AN OLD DECREE

The New York

Police Action Against Griffith Picture Is Based on Order of the 'Twelfth Messidor.'

PARIS, Aug. 20.—The interdiction of D. W. Griffith's film—announced in THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday—caused great surprise both among the public and in the film world, the police action being treated in many quarters as somewhat arbitrary, because the film had been regularly passed by the censorship and had been showing several days without provoking any incidents whatsoever.

Some amusement has been caused, too, by the fact that the interdiction was based on the "decree of the Consuls of the Twelfth Messidor, year seven of the Republic," and a law dated Aug. 6, 1790, empowering the police Prefect to forbid any show in Paris on his own discretion.

It appears the action must be explained as forming part of the recent campaign to protect colored French citizens from insult and to protect their rights. Parts of the Griffith film deal with the slave question, and it was feared in official quarters that there might be demonstrations here.

One evening paper humorously remarks: "Certainly it is quite right that colored Frenchmen should receive all protection. But French 'palefaces' also have some rights."

PARIS, Aug. 19.—The motion picture "The Birth of a Nation," which has been shown at a boulevard motion picture house for the last few days, has been forbidden by the police, acting on orders received from the Prefecture.

The action was taken because of those scenes in which the Ku Klux Klan comes into conflict with the negroes. They were considered objectionable by the French authorities as likely to result in a demonstration on the part of the audience.

The theatre showing the picture—which already had been shown here during the war—was suddenly ordered to close this afternoon, the public being surprised to find the doors shut.

PARIS, Monday, Aug. 20.—Premier Poincaré personally ordered "The Birth of a Nation" suppressed yesterday after official censors had passed on the film, the Matin reveals this morning. The Premier was actuated by a "desire to avoid race troubles between foreign visitors and French negroes."

PARIS BARS DIXON PLAY "BIRTH OF NATION" PUT OFF STAGE AFTER 2 DAYS—DEPT. OF INTERIOR DECLARED FILM UNFAIR AND PREJUDICIAL FRANCE ACTS TO MAKE HER BLACKS FEEL EQUALS OF ALL OTHERS.

Boston Mass.

Paris, Aug. 19, 1923.—"The Birth of a Nation," which opened for the first time in Paris on Friday night and showed to crowded houses Friday and Saturday, was closed today by the police.

Griffith's film aroused the objections of the French Negroes, who number 60 per cent of the population of the French empire, with representation in the local and central governments. As the foreign affairs ministry explained, this measure, like others taken in the last three months, is meant to give the French Negroes full consciousness that they are equals of their fellow citizens of the white race in the eyes of the French government.

The department of the interior declared the film is unfair and prejudicial to the black race and is likely to create grave discontent among the French Negroes. Premier Poincare personally ordered the film suppressed.

Paris, France, Aug. 25.—Despite the passing by the French censors of "The Birth of a Nation", the first showing of the picture at the Salle Marivaux was stopped on Sunday by the police, under orders from Premier Poincare. The picture was submitted to the censors three times last year, and was finally passed upon two weeks ago, after numerous cuts and changes had been made.

When the picture was at last presented it drew big crowds, but on Sunday the police stopped it, on the ground that it was "disturbing to public morals". H. Fenston, an Englishman, owns the rights to the picture, which has been booked thruout France. He offered, early this week, to make any changes desired by the government, but it is doubtful if the Premier, acting on the strength of a law passed in 1790, will change his attitude.

The Premier is said to have been influenced by the Negro deputies from France's North African possessions, fearing the loss of their votes in the next election.

"Birth of Nation" Is Coming Back To Iris Theater

Houston Post
Houston Chr.

D. W. Griffith's spectacular screen production, "The Birth of a Nation," starring Henry B. Walthall at the head of a stellar cast, will be brought back to the Iris theater by Manager Will Horwitz and presented Tuesday and Wednesday of next week in response to the continued requests from Iris patrons who did not witness this production when it was offered two weeks ago. 9-15-23

"Ever since 'The Birth of a Nation' concluded I have been deluged with requests from my patrons to bring it back so that those who did not see it while it was here can do so, and also some of those who did see want to witness this production again," declared Horwitz Tuesday night.

"The Birth of a Nation" offers a remarkable parallel in motion picture circles. Completed more than eight years ago, when motion pictures were practically in their infancy, today it still retains the immense drawing power and entertainment which featured it from the very start. "The Birth of a Nation" made D. W. Griffith, and it has made a decided impression upon the countless millions who have viewed it during the eight years it has been shown the world over." Horwitz said.

Bars 'Birth of a Nation' in Newark

Newark Star
10-25

William J. Brennan, Director of Public Safety of Newark, yesterday forbade the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Goodwin Theatre there on the ground that the picture, which depicts the activities of the Ku Klux Klan after the Civil War, had caused trouble recently in other cities.

N.Y. CITY TO FIGURE NEW

Refuse to Ban "The Birth" in Washington

Efforts of religious leaders and colored sympathizers to have the police ban the further showing of "The Birth of a Nation" in Washington, D. C., are doomed to fail says Major Sullivan, police chief. The present run of the picture may continue indefinitely for all Major Sullivan cares to lift a finger.

"This picture has been running for seven or eight years, and, while it has been met with opposition at times, it has received generally the endorsement of representative cities," said the Major.

A strong protest was raised early in the week by International Brotherhood for the Uplift of the Negro Race, from its New York headquarters. Following the complaint the Chief sent Inspector Shelby to review the film again and report on the re-actions of the audience. The Inspector reported in the negative, as to any radical re-action, but policemen have been present at each performance.

Houston, Bars Pola Negri

Mayor Permitted Play To Be Shown Over Protest Of Censors. Objections Reminiscent Of Fight Against The "Birth Of A Nation"

By Afro's Screen Editor

Houston Texas, board of Movie Censors barred Pola Negri's film "Bella Donna" there recently, but the mayor of the city permitted it to be shown over their objections.

Colonel Mayfield, editor of Mayfield's weekly, stated that since the hero is colored and the heroine is white, the play should be barred from the South.

The resulting war over the play is reminiscent of the fuss colored people raised over the "Birth of a Nation" sometime ago. This time the objection is from Southern whites. Colonel Mayfield, whose paper is said to be pro-Ku Klux Klan says: coarse, contemptible and insulting. Vulgar, bestial and degrading.

That is the only discription I can give of Pola Negri's dirty play.

The first picture of the Polish vamp in America is an open insult to the nation.

It is a brazen propaganda for social equality. It is a stench in the nostrils of the Southland an affront to the Caucasian race.

Europe's alleged star should b sent back to Poland to twinkle among a people where the white instinct is not pronounced as it is in America, and with her should go the depraved second-hand clothing merchants who foisted the production on the American people.

The picture was barred from Houston by the local censor board and permitted entry, over their protest by the mayor of Houston.

Thank God for the censor board, and-well, you can guess my sentiments for the mayor.

Egyptian The Hero

The story of "Bella Donna"', Pola Negri's dirty play, deals with the mad infatuation of a white woman for a dark-skinned North African, yclept an Egyptian.

Those who saw the play witnessed the horrible and revolting spectacle of a white woman, clinging in the arms of a colored man. The white face of the woman melting into the passionate countenance of the black man, and those Jews made the Egyptian good and black, as if to vent some ancient grudge.

The picture is an insult to all American and a direct thrust at the Southland.

I told you some time ago that the depraved and degraded bunch of Kikes who control the movie industry of this country had deliberately and with malice aforethought planned to break down the moral life of Protestant America with the stubtle and convincing propaganda of the screen. I told you how, inch by inch, they dragged the heroes and heroines of the youth of this land into the utter depths of sin, depravity and human nakedness. I told you of the foul and immoral lessons they daily schooled into the children of this land and I predicted then that the day was coming when they would seek to carry that degradation to further depths by introducing the Negro on the screen to act in conjunction with white people and attempt to foist that on a white Protestant race for whom they seem to have nothing but contempt. I told you it was coming, and here is its approach. Already Negroes are being given roles in screen plays, more and more they are intruding into the plays and the latest step is the love affair of a white woman with a black man.

Ye Gods!

Is it conceivable that such a play could be presented in the Old South?

Worse than that, open insult follows rapidly on the heels of displayed immorality.

This bulletin is flashed on the screen. Read, white sons of the South—read it and reflect. Read it againg and again, and see to what revolting depths the depraved Jews have dragged the moving pictures.

Read And Reflect

"WHITE SKINNED LADIES WILL FLIRT WITH BROWN SKINNED MEN WHEN THEIR HUSBANDS ARE AWAY".—Pola Negri in "Bella Donna."

So help me God, that bulletin was flashed on the screen in the leading theater in the city of Houston. So help me God, that foul and blasphemous lie was sent over America by the depraved and conscienceless Jews of Hollywood.

Where are the thunderbolts of Jove?

Where is the manhood of the Old South?

The South has never been safe from the Negro rape fiend. We have hung them by their necks, we have burned them as the stake, and still no woman is safe beyond the range of her husband's rifle.

Jews Criticised

Conditions have ever been deplorable in the South, watch as we would along this line, and now comes the Jewish propaganda that "White-skinned ladies will flirt with brown-skinned men when their husbands are away."

That brutal lie and that dirty play will lead more Negroes to the funeral pyre than all of the other influences that ever combined to lure the black man to death for ravishing.

That dirty lie will play upon the lips of ten million Negroes now dreaming of social equality; that dirty play will stir up more turmoil and strife than all the influences of rabid Negro papers ever published in the history of America.

At this time when the colored man is chafing under the lash of incendiary writers, goading him to impossible dreams of social equality, Pola Negri's dirty play will lure him to extremes that lead but to the tomb.

Jews Hate K .K. K.

And that is but the beginning of the Jewish assault upon social equality. They hate the Ku Klux Klan; they have no interest in nor love for the Gentile race, and the batteries of their tremendous power are turned to social equality. They think, in their money-crazed lunacy, that they can get away with it. They will send out kindred pictures to Pola Negri's bestial act. They will have white men wildly infatuated with saddle-colored women; they will do anything under God Almighty's sun to degrade the Protestant people.

Pola Negri's play was barred from Houston and Mayor Holcombe overrode his censor board and permitted it to be shown here.

Falls Madly In Love

It is the story of a white woman who falls in love with an Egyptian coon, and is despoiled by him in his tent, and then goes madly in love with him, meets him nightly, and to make the picture more hellish, if that were possible, the white woman is spurned and kicked by the coon, while she swoons pleading at his feet.

Pictures of that kind are going to cause more bloodshed in the South than flowed during the Civil War.

The manhood of the South will not stand for such stuff.

It is a specie of propaganda that must and will be stopped RIGHT NOW.

There is a line beyond which the propaganda of the depraved Kike can never pass, with all of his power and wealth.

Those pictures shall not be shown in the South.—Col. Mayfield in "Colonel Mayfield's Weekly," Houston, Texas, Saturday, April 14, 1923.

KANSAS GOVERNOR ASKED TO BAR "BIRTH OF NATION".

The Richmond Planet

Upon receipt of the news in New York, that protest had been made against a new attempt to show the "Birth of a Nation" film in the State of Kansas, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City, at once telegraphed Governor Jonathan M. Davis, endorsing the protest and urging that he prevent the film from being shown. The N. A. A. C. P. telegram reads as follows:

"The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People with four hundred and forty branches and membership of one hundred thousand white and colored citizens endorses protest against showing in Kansas of film 'Birth of a Nation' by R. G. Leggett, President Kansas Organizations of Motion Picture Theatre Owners. This dangerous film in its deliberate distortion of known historical facts and its glorification of the infamous ku klux klan has caused numerous racial clashes and is largely responsible for present day revival of klan. We urge you continue splendid example of former Governors of Kansas in forbidding exhibition of this film capitalizing and spreading as it does vicious racial prejudices which should have no part in American life."

Paris, Oct. 12, 1923.—The authorities have again forbidden showing of the motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," until all scenes containing Negroes or the Ku Klux Klan have been eliminated. 10-20-23

Such censorship of the picture, which was to have been exhibited today, would make it valueless, say the owners of the film as quoted by the Herald.

Unless the government's decision is reconsidered they intimate that they intend to enter suit against the government for an indemnity of f.2,000,000, inasmuch as they have entered into contracts to the amount of f.3,000,000.

PARIS SUPPRESSES AN AMERICAN FILM

THE PARIS POLICE suppress Griffith's film, "The Birth of a Nation." Why? ask some wondering Americans. Pourquoi? query some indignant French, including the manager of the theater who stands to lose a goodly number of hundred thousand franc notes. The French newspapers can not answer why. It was M. Poincaré, says one facetious journal. A police official explains: "The assassination of Lincoln might put it into some one's head to assassinate the President of the Council." From another source comes the reason that the film was ordered stopt in deference to the colored citizens of the French Republic. There was an "affair" in the Montmartre district in which Americans refused to tolerate the presence of colored Frenchmen in an amusement place. Le Petit Journal (Paris) pursues the story:

"To exact the respect due to black men who were loyal to France and whose war record credits them with innumerable deeds of heroism and devotion, the Government took the proper measures.

"Thereupon, complaints reached the police regarding Griffith's film. One and all, they argued that 'The Birth of a Nation,' both in its spirit and in its action, was an insult to the black race.

"Day before yesterday M. Bouteiller, divisional commissary, was detailed to sit out a public showing at the Marivaux. Yesterday, much to his surprize, the manager of that establishment received orders to withdraw the film.

"Is Griffith's work really an insult to colored Frenchmen?

"'It is out of harmony with French policy in such matters,' say the authorities.

"'It is a historical work, absolutely impartial,' retorts M. Lecocq, manager of the Marivaux Theater, and concessionaire of the film.

"In point of fact, it is a film depicting the War of Secession, which, from 1861 to 1865, ranged the American slaveholders against the Abolitionists—in other words, the South against the North. After the assassination of President Lincoln, the liberated slaves were guilty of certain abuses, asserts Griffith, who acts not only as producer but as historian. These abuses, when set forth on the screen, were what shocked colored people in the audience. Complaints followed, resulting in the suppression of the film."

The trouble, still unsettled, has some further exploitation:

"'We presented the film with only the best intentions,' say the Marivaux people. 'If we had imagined that it could affront the dignity of colored Frenchmen, we should never have accepted it.'

"The money loss inflicted upon the Marivaux by its suppression amounts to about 200,000 francs. As for M. Lecocq, concessionaire for France and the colonies, he paid 550,000 francs for the rights. Like the Marivaux people, he decided to appeal.

"'At any rate, I shall bring suit for damages,' says he. 'As the exploitation of my film was entirely legal, I can not put up with the loss involved in its suppression—a thing it was impossible for me to foresee.'"

L'Oeuvre, another Paris paper, shows that the film went safely through the censor's hands and emerged with only minor modifications. The word "bloodthirsty" was deleted, and also the phrase, "as in the days of the Inquisition," with perhaps a few other quite unimportant changes. The audiences that happened to see the film are enthusiastic. Then the end; whereupon August Nardy, the writer in L'Oeuvre, remarks:

"It amounts to this, then. A film announced two months ago, and a success in America and England for several years, has been abruptly suppresst—for what reason no one quite knows.

"It does not reflect upon the morals of the negroes. It reproduces with complete impartiality the various phases of the War of Secession. Moreover, care was taken to warn the public by announcing that the war broke out in 1860. . . .

"But of what use, meanwhile, is the board of censors that passed 'The Birth of a Nation'?"

"Birth of Nation" Film Again Banned in France

PARIS, Oct. 15.—D. W. Griffith's motion picture, "The Birth of a Nation," has again been banned by the French Ministry of the Interior, despite promises that its showing would be permitted after two months of prohibition, during which the French Government hoped changes would be made which would not arouse the antipathy of French colored citizens.

For several days the agents had been promised that they could present the film here, but in the last minute they were notified that their plans must be cancelled until every reference to Negroes or the Ku Klux Klan has been entirely omitted.

PARIS PLACES BAN ON "BIRTH OF NATION"

Paris, October 12.—The authorities have again forbidden showing of the motion picture "the Birth of a Nation" until all scenes containing negroes or the Ku Klux Kan have been eliminated. Such censorship of the picture which was to have been exhibted today would make it valueless, say the film men, as quoted by The Herald. Unless the government's decision is reconsidered, they intimate that they intend to enter suit against the government for an indemnity of 2,000,000 francs, in as much as they have entered into contracts to the amount of 3,000,000 francs.

Protests Showing Of "Birth of a Nation"

Kansas Daily Endorses N. A. A. C. P.'s Efforts to Keep Film Out of the State.

An editorial published in the Topeka Daily Capital of June 19 1923 endorses a protest by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People against the showing in Kansas of "The Birth of a Nation" film. Commenting upon the Association's telegram to Governor Davis of Kansas, urging him to prevent the film being shown, the Topeka Daily Capital said:

An Encourager of Race Hatred

"Not only state and local, but national action has been taken by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People aganist the new attempt to show a vicious Southern race film, "The Birth of a Nation," in Kansas. In Gov. Capper's and Gov. Allen's terms permission to show this picture in the state was refused. When the Association named heard of the appeal for an exhibition of the film to Gov. Davis it telegraphed the Governor urging that you continue the spllendid example of former Goverenors of Kansas in forbidding exhibition of this film, capitalizing and spreading as it does vicious racial prejudices which should have no part in American life.

"It is difficult to see any purpose to be served by the revived attempt to show this picture. There are no conditions in Kansas warranting it. The picture is biased as to history and sectional in its appeal. It can not claim art as its motive, for propaganda sticks out all over it. Evil can easily come of it in its power of stimulating passion, and this is a sufficieent objection against any picture to which it applies. "The Birth of a Nation" has been kept out of Kansas for reasons as strong today as at any time in the last five years."

The Topeka Daily Capital is published by Senator Arthur Capper, who is a member of the Board of Direectors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

GOVERNOR SEES LITTLE HARM IN VICIOUS MOVIE

"Birth of a Nation," Known as Riot Breeder, Gains Favor With Kansas Executive

Kansas City, Kan., Dec. 14.—A new fight over "The Birth of a Nation" film has broken out in the state of Kansas, with Governor Davis said to be favoring the film and the citizens here fighting to prevent its being shown in the state. During the governorship of Arthur Capper, now U. S. senator and a member of the board of directors of the N. A. A. C. P., showing of the film was forbidden.

On Dec. 3 the national office of the N. A. A. C. P. received the following telegram from Andrew Wilson of the Kansas City branch:

"The censor board has released 'Birth of a Nation.' Governor Davis favors same and told our committee he thought he would sign."

Thereupon the N. A. A. C. P. at once wired Governor Davis as follows:

"The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is informed that Kansas state censor board has released 'Birth of a Nation' film and that you favor such release and are inclined to sign. This organization composed of representative white and Colored citizens wishes to register with you vigorous protest against releasing this film, which has done so much to create discord and bitterness between the races. We respectfully urge that you do all in your power to prevent the showing of this film."

At the same time all Kansas branches of the association are being urged to make it clear to Governor Davis that their votes will show disapproval of his course if he persists in releasing the "Birth of a Nation" film.

In a letter commenting on the report of Governor Davis' contemplated action Senator Capper writes:

"I had seen in the newspapers that the board had approved the picture and I am very sorry that they are inclined to take that view of it, for I feel now, just as I did when I was governor, that this picture ought not to be shown in our state. It seems to me that there is great danger that it might arouse racial animosities."

PICKENS GETS HIS FIRST CHANCE TO GO TO HELL

New York, June 16.—"If you don't believe Shreveport is hell, come down here and see, you nigger defender," is a paragraph of a letter received at the local Urban League office last week, evidently from a butcher, postmarked Shreveport, La., who simply signed "A Knight sheriff and the gang."

The foregoing sounds rather odd, but nevertheless it is true. The letter further stated that the sheriff and chief of police of the city had been expecting some "nigger" there to speak on social equality named "Charley Pickett." "You remember the Mulch case. Well, we whipped him and run him out of town. That is what we were going to do to Pickett. We weren't going to kill or hang him, but start him out of town on the run."

From authoritative sources information was secured to the effect that the "Charley Pickett" that this cracker referred to was none other than Dean William Pickens of the N. A. A. C. P. When our reporter called on Dr. Pickens and explained the situation he said: "A few weeks ago I was asked to come to Shreveport to speak at a convention of the State Medical society. I was busy at the time with N. A. A. C. P. business in St. Louis and could not make the trip. I have spoken there on many occasions, especially before Dr. Booker T. Washington's death, and before I became connected with the National association."

Dr. Pickens' inability to attend the convention probably prevented a bloody riot, as another paragraph of the poorly constructed letter reads as follows: "If that nigger Pickett ever comes here we will make it hot for niggers all over the South, and it will be worse than the Tulsa riot. We do our own business here and don't allow any Northerners to butt in. If you don't believe it let the chief of police know when Pickett is comin."

MERIT ONLY WILL WIN RECOGNITION

Solution Of Race Problems Lies In Economic Advancement, Declares Dr. Woodson.

"The future of the American Negro is not bound up in any political party, but in what the Negro does for himself," declared Dr. Carter G. Woodson of Washington, D. C., author and historian, speaking before a large audience on the subject: "Democracy and the man far down," at St. John's A. M. E. Church on Sunday afternoon last.

Outlining the different forms of government under which different peoples of the world have lived and citing causes which brought in existence these various modes of government, Dr. Woodson, declared that the Negro is not so much concerned as to what form government may take as he is concerned that every element in that government share equally its dispensation.

It is a mistake, he said, to assume that democracy came to America in 1776, as it was not until after the war between the states that democracy was born in this country.

Turning his attention to the accomplishments the race must make for itself Dr. Woodson, stressed the importance of economic efficiency. Intellectual efficiency alone is not enough said the speaker, but economic efficiency, economic co-operation are essentials to be obtained by any people who may hope to build for success.

Declaring his love for the soil of Virginia, his birth place, and his devotion to the United States of America, Dr. Woodson said that he stood ready to defend the nation against any foreign foe. He said that better treatment for the Negro in America would not be obtained by a successful overthrow of this government by any foreign nation, but its assurance lies in the accomplishments of the race itself.

The address was a literary treat in American and Negro History. The speaker urged his hearers to study the history of their race. It is replete with chronicles of brilliant achievements by Negroes of centuries ago, said Dr. Woodson.

Dr. Carter G. Woodson is the editor of the Journal of Negro History and has written several creditable books on the history of the race.

His appearance at St. John's was under the auspices of the Book Lovers Literary Club. Lawyer J. Eugene Diggs the ex-president of the club, in outlining its work paid a splendid tribute to the efforts of Dr. Woodson. The Lawyer said that the whole Negro race is greatly indebted to Dr. Woodson for his scientific achievements in historical research in behalf of the race.

Prof. E. P. Southall presided at the meeting and splendid solos rendered by Miss Blanche Smith and Mrs. Johnsie Churchill added much to the occasion.

NINE SENATORS VOTE RECALL OF U. S. MARINES

Government Defeats Move 43 To 9 To Withdraw Forces From San Domingo and Haiti

FRANCE VOTES NAY

Borah and King Flay Administration for Outrages Upon Natives

Washington, D. C., June 29—Staff Correspondence—Resolutions introduced in the Senate by Senator King (Rep.) of Utah, to secure the withdrawal of the United States marines from Haiti, San Domingo and Nicaragua before December 31, 1922, failed in the Senate Monday by a vote of 43 to 9.

Those who voted for the measure included Senators, Borah, Johnson, King, Ladd, La Follette, Norris, Overman, Walsh, (Mass.), Walsh, (Mont.). Senator France, of Maryland, cast his vote with forty-three Republicans against the measure. Fourty-four Senators mostly Democrats, did not vote.

Subsequent effort of Senator King to cut the $11,000,000 appropriation of the marines to $8,000,000 also failed.

1,300 Marines In Haiti

Senator Poindexter, (Rep.) of Washington, declared that there are nearly 2,100 marines in San Domingo, approximately 1,300 in Haiti and 107 in Nicaragua.

Senator Borah who led the fight for the measure declared the United State invaded Haiti without cause and because they were helpless to resist the invasion of the American marine and the American navy. One of the first things this Government did, he said, was to wipe out that provision in the Haitian constitution that prohibited foreigners to hold land. It is a question of 110,000,000 people with a great army and navy fighting 3,000,000 people without an army and navy.

Americans Own 200,000 Acres

Following our invasion, Senator Borah said, Americans have rushed in and acquired illegally or by force over 200,000 acres of the richest and most fertile soil in the world. He quoted President Harding's pre-election pledge not to use the marines against the little Republics of the western hemisphere, or interfer with their domestic affairs.

Mr. Borah also attacked the administration plan of forcing a $14,000,000 loan on Haiti, reading figures to show that after the loan is discounted, the French debt of six and one-half million dollars is paid, and a debt of some three million dollars or more to the National City bank of New York, Haiti would ... less than $2,000,000 with which to make improvements.

NEGRO RACE RADICAL

By Bishop Robert E. Jones

"The Negro Race is shot through with radicalism," and is being spurred into action; and it is losing faith in Christianity, and losing faith in politics. The solidarity of the races is being talked, but that will not answer. Twelve million rats solidified would be dangerous to any country, to say nothing of 12,000,000 human beings, men and women, filled with hatred. I teach my people to hate nobody.

"The Negro wants the recognition of his place in the brotherhood of man, which is his by divine right. He wants one standard of American citizenship applied alike to all. The Negro approves heartily of the movement for inter-racial co-operation because it recognizes first of all the right of the Negro to state his own case, and a case he has. No programs however benevolent, for the solution of racial difficulties, will stay put unless the Negro has a hand in the making of it. And no Negro can lead our group unless chosen by our group he must have confidence. He must hold his place of leadership by our suffrage."

MARINES' WORK IN HAITI IS PRAISED

Senate Committee Justifies Occupation And Recommends Its Continuance.

Atlanta Georgian 6/27/22

(By International News Service.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26.—American military occupation of Haiti was completely justified in a report submitted to the Senate Monday by a committee which visited the island republic to investigate serious charges brought against the rule of United States Marines.

The report, made by Senator McCormick, Republican, of Illinois, declared American occupation of the island was "absolutely necessary" to uphold the Monroe Doctrine and to prevent military intervention by Germany and France. The committee urged retention of marines in Haiti, but asserted military courts should be abolished.

ENDED ANARCHY.

The landing of marines, the report states, ended chronic anarchy in the republic and brought law and order to the island for the first time in its history. The occupation, it was contended, should be maintained until the natives were capable of self-government. Charges of illegal executions by marines were partially supported, the committee submitting evidence of 10 such cases. The commitee also declared there was evidence of innocent Haitians being slain in marine attacks, but the blame was placed on the nature of the fighting.

Touching on charges of torture and cruelties, said to have been inflicted by marines, the committee exonerated the American force, declaring there was "grave doubt" of their guilt.

MARINES PRAISED.

"To the credit of our country nearly all the marines performed their duties admirably," said the report. "There were, however, some few exceptions where they failed in their duty."

The committee reviewed at length the history of Haiti, disclosing that although it is as large as Cuba, internal conditions were such that its foreign trade was only one-tenth as large as Cuba's. Especial praise was rendered the American force for its work in rebuilding roads, establishing an educational system and promoting foreign commerce for the island industries.

Particular attention was paid to conditions existing prior to American occupation, when, the committee said, the people were burdened with taxes, but offered no educational facilities, no police protection and no sanitary improvements.

"Before American occupation, there had been no popular, representative government in Haiti," the report said. "Public finances were in disarray, public credit was exhausted and public revenues wasted or stolen. Highways and agriculture had given way to the jungles. The people, living in wretched poverty, were illiterate. They were always at the mercy of banditry.

BIG CHANGES.

"Now conditions are changed. With very rare exceptions, the peasant class realizes for the first time they are free from impressment into military service. They are no longer plundered by bandits. They are secure in the possession of their families and homes.

"Testimony shows that the threatened intervention of the German government and the actual landing of French naval forces, all imperiled the Monroe Doctrine and led this government to take the successive steps to establish order in Haiti, institute a government as nearly representative as possible and to assure collaboration between the governments of the United States and Haiti for future maintenance of peace and development of the Haitian people.'

The committee urged consummation of the Haitian loan "without delay" in order to pay off a $14,000,000 French debt and to finish proposed public works.

OUR HAITIAN POLICY

New York Times 6/26/22

In the fact that the Haitian policy of the Harding Administration was defended by a Democratic Senator, Mr. POMERENE, in the debate upon the King amendment there is a significance that will not be lost upon fair-minded men. The King amendment of the Naval Appropriation bill was as follows:

> No part of the said sum shall be used for the purpose of maintaining or employing marines, either officers or enlisted men, in the Republic of Haiti, or the Dominican Republic, or Nicaragua, after Dec. 31, 1922, except in the event of an uprising in either republic menacing the lives of citizens of the United States or the lives of subjects of a foreign Power or Powers friendly to the United States, and then only for the purpose of affording protection to said citizens or subjects.

The effect of this amendment if adopted would have been to terminate the duty of the Marine Corps in the countries named as the year ended. The debate was begun by Mr. BORAH of Idaho, who wanted that very thing to happen. He devoted himself to the Haitian occupation. In his judgment there was no sufficient reason for it. He made this extraordinary statement: "When you examine the rec-"ord of robberies and murders in "great cities, the lynchings and burn-"ings in this country, and compare "them with lawlessness in Haiti, you "will find little excuse for our going "to Haiti." Hardly anything that had been accomplished in Haiti by the military administration under instructions from a Democratic President, and later from a Republican President, had Mr. BORAH'S approval: Changes in the Constitution, pacification, the election of a new President, reorganization of the finances. Over all he found the stigma of illegality, and he discerned in the American policy a design to stay in Haiti and possess it. "I think it most unfortunate," he exclaimed, "that a republic which "had stood for 111 years through all "the vicissitudes which accompanied "its history should be destroyed by "its sister Republic, the great Repub-"lic of the West." American capitalists were appropriating the lands of the Haitians, evicting them in cases from squatter holdings of long duration. He believed, from what he had seen "in print," that 200,000 acres had already been acquired.

Senator POMERENE, who defended the American policy, was a Democratic member of the Senate subcommittee that recently visited Haiti to investigate the military occupation. "It is easier," he said, "to get mis-"information than it is to get infor-"mation about Haiti." As to the cruelties charged against the marines, in a very few instances true, "they "were inconsequential compared with "the cruelties that would have been "perpetrated under the same circum-"stances upon the Haitians by native "Haitians." Senator ODDIE interrupted to say that in the ten years before the American occupation there had been eight Presidents of Haiti, of whom three fled the country, one was blown up in his palace, one was presumably poisoned and two were murdered. Haitian Presidents are supposed to serve for seven years, so that these eight Presidents should have ruled for fifty-six years. "Senators," said Mr. POMERENE, "talk about Constitutional Government in Haiti." The Haitians, he went on, were always having new Constitutions, after elections that were seizures of power by "saviors of the people." Mr. BORAH had been very much worked up about the constitutional rights of the Haitians. Mr. POMERENE said the subcommittee had found a large number of Haitians, "not of the political class," who regarded with dread the withdrawal of the marines. These Haitians were weary of chaos, oppression and massacres. "My belief is," declared Mr. POMERENE, "that if we "get out of Haiti on Jan. 1, 1923, "we shall have to go back." He added:

> It is our duty to stay there long enough to permit the Haitians to organize a government which will be truly representative of the Haitian people.

The Ohio Senator contended that the loan proposed for Haiti was really in its interest—one effect of the loan would be to save the country a considerable sum of money. The occupation, he maintained, had been beneficial; in fact, a boon to the people. Hundreds of miles of good roads had been built where there were only dim trails before. The sanitation work was of the first order. To the peasants and merchants protection in their occupations had been given. There was peace in Haiti. The debt had been scaled down by honest accounting. If more had not been done for the Haitians, it was because the treaty with them was limited to actual necessities. Mr. POMERENE challenged Mr. BORAH to find anything in the policy of the Administration that was "susceptible of the construction which "the Senator has placed upon our "action." What the Senate thought of Mr. BORAH'S moral indignation the vote on the King amendment showed. It was lost, 9 yeas to 43 nays.

A NEW RACE NAME.

The time-honored fad of finding a new name to pin upon the American of African descent still continues with unabated zeal. The latest attempt is reported by the Detroit Independent as follows:

Editor George M. Smith, of the Michigan State News, is arousing considerable interest by championing a new name for the race.

The editor states a proper name for us is "Ethican."

He defines "Ethican" as follows

"Ethican"—An American citizen of the United States, of Ethiopian descent, commonly, though incorrectly called "Negro," being a combination of "Eth," the first syllable in Ethiopia, and "ican," the last syllable in American.

This reminds us of the white novelist, who had one of his characters express her sentiments on racial nomenclature, as follows: "When you like me, call me colored; when you hate me, call me 'nigger'; but for Gawd's sake don't call me Afro-American." The same popular distaste would probably apply to the various terms of "Afrimerican," "Libranian" and this late suggestion, "Ethnican." The present tendency to capitalize "Negro" and treat it as a proper noun, as practiced by such New York papers as the Nation, the Globe, the World and the Illustrated Daily News, has done much to recommend its acceptance as a simple and sufficient racial designation.

The above clipping was taken from the New York Age, issue of June 17th. It has been ours to observe that for a long time there have been those who have tried and are trying to find a new name for the American Negro. We have also observed that there are many of us to whom the word Negro is repulsive. But both are mysteries that we cannot fathom.

The above clipping tells of the efforts of Editor George M. Smith, of the Michigan State News, to have adopted the name "Ethican" for the Negro of America. There have been numerous other efforts to have adopted some name that might eliminate the name Negro, but more frequently have we noticed the efforts of many Negroes to free themselves from the address of the name.

Possibly the latter class is repulsive because of the definition as laid down in Webster's Dictionary which states that a Negro "Is a black man; especially one of a race of black or very dark persons who inhabited the greater part of tropical Africa, and are distinguished by crisp or curly hair, and thick, protruding lips; also any black person of unmixed African blood wherever found."

If this is in their minds, then there are no Negroes in America. But, while generally accepted, Webster may be as wrong as anybody else.

The Negro of America is of mixed blood and minus a great many of the physical characteristics of Webster's definition. Mr. Webster also has listed in his dictionary, or possibly the revisions, the word "nigger," and he defines such a word as Negro. Further, Mr. Webster has listed in his dictionary, or possibly the revisions, the word "Negress," which he defines as a "black woman," all of which, if accepted, might justify anyone in becoming indignant of the name.

But the more intelligent Negroes of American do not accept Webster upon the ground that possibly all of the people here of African descent are of mixed blood and more largely minus the physical characteristics as stated by him. They contend that the Negro of America is that part of the population of this country of African descent, which part has very nearly, and in particular cases wholly, reached the highest point of civilization.

The Negro of America has every reason to be proud of his race, not because of the height to which he has ascended, but because of the depth from whence he came, and he should never wish to lose his racial identity.

The Jew was once a slave and suffered as great persecution as did the Negro. He has climbed and is never offended at being called a Jew. There is no race under the sun that takes offense of the name of its racial identity except the Negro, and may he not do so always.

We, along with others, take offense at the abridged extractions—"nigger" and "Negress." They are obnoxious in that they smack of inferiority, but we take great pride in the word "Negro" and we know no word better suited to designate our racial identity, notwithstanding the fact that its present definition is quite foreign to our present physical, moral and intellectual status.

BLACKS NEED MORAL TRAINING

Federal Judge Says "Little Education" Is Dangerous.

Federal Judge Henry D. Clayton, holding court in Montgomery, Ala., recently sent a negro woman, Bertha McDonald, to jail for three weeks for sending an obscene letter through the mails. The letter was so vile that the Judge refused to hear all of it read.

"This is an example of where a little education is a dangerous thing," Judge Clayton is quoted as saying. "We have been trying to educate the negro, to teach him to read and write; we mean well, but I do not know but what we are proceeding the wrong way. What they need is education in the right ways of living and right morals."

Judge Clayton referred to the New England theory that a Hottentot or a Senegambian can be brought to America and in three hundred years made into a white man in all except color. He expressed the opinion that it cannot be done. "There is as much difference between the negro and the white race as there is between a jackass and a race horse," he declared.

SHALL DEGENERATES DESTROY CIVILIZATION?

White Americans Must Wake Up and Put a Stop to the Mingling of Pure Caucasian Blood With That of Mongrels

The illicit, indiscriminate, and God-cursed association between alleged white men, and mule-nigger wenches in San Antonio, should be stopped—and stopped forever—if the "Cradle of Texas Liberty," has the slightest ambition to remain a White Man's town.

A casual view of the surging masses of alleged humanity, that crowd our side walks, is enough to disgust any decent man or woman, for it is a moving picture of mongrel misfits, advertising to the world, the white man's lechery, and a shame to civilization.

It is not necessary to reiterate the world-known fact, that not an atom of chastity enters the composition of the average African female. If any shallow-brained enthusiast doubts this fact, let him—or her—make an excursion into the home of the negroes, and then reply to the above statement. There you will find them in every shade, from strawberry roan, to jet black—all in one family, for while one drop of African blood makes a negro (or mulato) out of the owner for eternity, the progeny of a mixed race plays idiotic pranks backwards and forwards—but in all the multiduinous transformations, Natures never brings forth a white man, from negro or mulato ancestors.

The man who doubts this, is a driveling fool, a conscious liar, or a mental and moral miscarriage—who seeks to camouflage, and hide his lechery from the eyes of God, and an accusing world.

From the most noted scientific sources of the world, comes the statement that "there is not a pure blooded negro today, in the United States, as a descendent of the ex-slaves." While there still remains a limited per cent of jet-black negroes in America, they all have more or less white blood in their veins, and this fact is proven by finding more or less black-and-tans croping out in families, where both man and woman are as black as the hinges of hell.

Dependable and truth-telling ethnologists, will tell you that there were originally two creations in human form—the white, and the black man. In the beginning, it was easy enough to tell one from another, for there were no mule-niggers, to puzzle the careless, and feeble minded, or to tempt the lechery of mental and moral perverts. Even with the now varying shades, from pure white, to pure black, there is no need for error, for Nature has made detection easy. If in doubt, whether it is a white man, or a mulatto, stand him in the July sun for ten minutes—and then take a close-up position on the lee-side of the subject. If your nose is "hitting regular," you won't have any trouble in solving the problem.

Remembering the fact, that in the beginning, there were two creation—white and black—you will have no trouble in accounting for the different tribes, that now inhabit this globe.

The Jews never recognized the negro as anything but a lower creation—a species of animal—made in human form. No well-informed man denies this, for he who has read the Bible, understood it— and let's it go at that. The Jews called the negro, the "beast," and not a man. They considered him a creature made in human shape, who possessed enough brain to be useful—and anything that is useful to Ikey, he instantly grabs it. He certainly never permitted the negro to ever "come before the altar of the Lord"—for there was a law, that prevented any man "with a flat nose," ever doing so (Levit. 21.18.) In the book of Jonah, we find that the Jews called the negro the "beast," yet ordered him to put on sackcloth, and "repent of the sins in their hands." (Jonah 3.8)

When you place white men upon an isolated Island, and breed them for ages, you will never find anything but white men there. The same is true of the black man. Furthermore, when you place a mulatto race upon an island—or in any country where no more white men come, the entire layout will finally become a "type," resembling each other in no unmistakable degree, just like we find in Japan, China, and many of the Islands of the sea. But there is one thing certain—they never again revert to the Real White Man—and never will.

Now don't get gay and deny this, unless you are prepared to dispute the Bible—and when you do that, our contention ends, for the Bible tells me how to act under such circumstances. (Matt. 7.6) I never argue any question with any man, who does not believe the word of God.

Coming back to our good old town—the "Cradle of Texas Liberty," and what do we find? Read the following local item, from the daily paper, and you will see what ails San Antonio.

"Four persons were taken into custody by San Antonio police, between 10 and 11 o'clock Thursday. Two negresses and two white men, one of which is being held for Federal officers, were among those apprehended. Violation of the City's Vice Ordinances, were charged against the other three."

Are the real white men and white women of this good old town, ever going to wake up, and at least attempt to put a stop to the beastly and un-Godly crimes that are being perpetrated? Worthless cur dogs are roped, and promptly put out of commission, then why not put an eternal stop to these lecherous alleged white men, who are mingling with the dirty black wenches in this White Man's Town, and doing more harm to society, than all the thieves, and robbers, on earth? When you lose your money, you are inconvenienced, but not ruined for life. When you permit Society to become rotten, and the poison is permeating every pore of the body politic, you are ruined beyond repair, and civilization is gone glimmering.

I admit that the good people are striving to chase vice, and immorality from San Antonio, but they are not using the proper force. The illicit mingling of the pure blood of the white man, with that of the mongrel, is a poison, that sooner or later, will destroy White Civilization to a certainty—and you know it—yet we merely toddle along in a desultory manner, temporize with this greatest of all vices, and matters grow worse.

Something must be done, that will strike terror into the hearts of these miserable, lecherous, debauched and damnable two-legged white hounds in human form, who are transforming White America, into a dirty, damnable, mess of miserable misfits—plain mule-niggers—neither Man nor Beast, but only something that can wear pants, and scent the air like a covey of turkey buzzards.

It is not the fault of the brazen wenches—for the crime is on the part of these alleged white he-bawds, who disgrace the pure white mother and father who gave them birth, in order to gratify a lust that would make a trans-Rio Grande jackass, blush with shame.

This town is full of them. They ought to be put out of business—and they are going to be put out of business.

The first move should be the compilation of a full roster of that breed of cattle, put the law to them like a branding iron—give them publicity till it stinks—and watch them reform, or migrate.

San Antonio is a White Man's town—and will continue to be—until we have forgotten those brave and daring patriots, who gave their lives, that Posterity might be WHITE, CLEAN, AND HAPPY.

The White Man's Burden.

In a revolutionary outbreak against constituted authority in the Philippines 50 Moros were killed and many wounded.

This clash comes on the heels of a recent demand by Filipino lawmakers for the recall of Gen. Leonard Wood. Native officials resigned in protest against the administration of Gen. Wood.

Perhaps the real motive behind the action of the Filipino senators was revealed by the words of their leader, Manuel Quezon, president of the Senate, who said there was no intention of casting a personal reflection on the governor-general, but that in view of conditions he didn't believe it humanly possible for Gen. Wood to co-operate with the Filipino members of the government. And then he made this rather significant statement:

"If possible, the president should appoint a Filipino governor-general."

The upper classes of the Filipinos are very intelligent. Many of them have enjoyed and profited by educational advantages. It is but natural that in this select circle there are to be found those who are ambitious. After centuries of existence under the Spanish yoke and a quarter of a century of comparative freedom under an American protectorate, some of the Filipinos who rank high in official life probably look with covetous eyes upon the chair that has been occupied by American appointees of the president of the United States.

Quezon's suggestion of a native governor-general inspires the belief that Gen. Wood stands in the way of Filipino ambition. This belief is strengthened by advices that the governor-general has a strong native following, despite his differences with the president of the Senate.

Several weeks ago we were advised in cables from Manila that the resignations of the legislators had developed into a political partisan embroglio, with the Democrata party supporting Wood and the Collectivista party opposing him.

Aguinaldo, who as a revolutionary leader at one time gave the United States much trouble, says there is no reason for the people to become excited, as the question can be settled without detriment to the rights of either side.

The battle between the savage Moros and the constabulary has nothing to do with the differences between Quezon and Gen. Wood, but it emphasizes the fact that the time is not ripe for the United States to weaken its protectorate over the islands by turning the most important office, that of governor-general, over to a native. If this were done, the probabilities are that there would be a steady drift toward the confusion existing at the time the Spaniards relinquished control. It would be only a matter of time until the United States would again have to send armed forces into the islands to restore order.

Gen. Wood is a strong man. He is a disciplinarian. In addition to innate ability he has had the advantages of military training and long years of experience. For these reasons there is little probability of his recall, despite the demands of Quezon and his political associates.

The United States has dealt fairly with the Filipinos and accomplished great things in the islands. Its work of sanitation alone, almost making impossible repetition of devastating epidemics, stands as a momument to the nation's solicitude for its wards. Occasional complaints from Filipino leaders will not alter this government's determination to fulfill every obligation assumed when the fortunes of war placed upon us what Kipling so aptly termed "the white man's burden." In the years following the Spanish-American War we have learned to appreciate those words of the British poet:

"Take up the white man's burden—
The savage wars of peace:
Fill full the mouth of famine,
And bid the sickness cease.
And when your goal is nearest
(The end for others sought,)
Watch sloth and heathen folly
Bring all your hopes to naught."

Wild, Hair-Raising Story Published in Chicago American Nothing But a Lie, Investigator Finds.

Pittsburgh Courier

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 27.—Following an investigation by Morris Lewis, Regional Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at Chicago of an alleged riot on July 30, at Worth, Ill., when, it was charged, Negroes appeared at a community dance hall and snatched white women from their partners before being driven off by the police, the Associated Press issued a refutation of the story as follows:

"Chicago, August 23 — Morris Lewis, Regional Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, denied today the report made by a Chicago newspaper, July 30, of an alleged raid on a community dance hall in Worth, Illinois.

"The circulated story told how colored workmen had entered the dance hall and snatched white women from their partners and how they were driven off by the police.

"'No such raid occurred,' said Mr. Lewis. 'In the first place, there is no community dance hall in Worth. There are some 75 colored laborers there. The story had its origin in an attempt by several colored laborers to hold up the commissary of the company for which they were working. Four or five men were arrested. That is the whole story.

"'City officials and local newspapers corroborate the findings of my investigation and declare that the majority of the colored laborers in that vicinity have always been orderly.'"

The Mokena News-Bulletin (white) of August 3rd said of the incident:

"The Chicago American came out with a wild hair-raising story stating that the colored men had appeared at a dance and had pulled guns on the white men and took their girls from them. All this was bunk and in fact the whole story has caused a reflection to be cast on the colored people that is harmful.

"Fully 95 per cent if not more of the men are said to be as orderly and law-abiding as any white men and the actions of a few hard-boiled members should not condemn the whole camp. Many of the men have been employed by the construction company for ten and even fifteen years. It is said that there is not any more disorder to be found in this camp than there would be in a camp of white men of this size.

"The people of Worth greatly resent the wild story published in the Chicago paper and wish to have it understood that it would not stand for anything of the nature as described in the Windy City paper.

"The hot air story was the product of a sensational reporter, who had more regard for scandal than for truth."

KELLY MILLER TAKES ISSUE WITH KING

Declares Editorial in Christian Advocate Shameful

KING CHARGES GRAFT

Miller Charges Article Implies that Negro Church only safe under White Leadership

The South Western Christian Advocate, in the issue of October 25, contains a very serious indictment of the integrity of the ecclesiastic autonomy of the Negro race. It quotes from the Young Alenite, an official organ of the African Methodist Episcopal church a most scathing denunciation of graft and corruption, which it is alleged prevails throughout the wide reaches of this great Negro denomination. It is interesting to note that this arraignment appears in an official organ of the church under condemnation which of itself indicates that the evils complained of are in the right way to correction. Evil deeds flee the light as the Devil the break of day. Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. When such a discussion is tolerated, in a church organ, it clearly indicates that the people are ready to rise up and condemn unworthiness, even when entrenched in high places.

Charge Rests on Rumor.

One wonders how it could happen that such flagrant denunciation of a general character could find its way into the public prints. The whole charge as presented in the extracts quoted rests upon rumor and hear say. Colored writers are too prone to be prodigal in praise and abundant in abuse. He makes up for his paucity of logic and analysis by profusion of praise or blame. There is too often wanting the caution of wisdom and the restraint of prudence. There is a wholesale denunciation of the bench of Bishops which puts every member thereof under suspicion of graft and corruption. Not a single scintilla of proof is presented. This is a serious abuse of the freedom of speech. No sanely regulated journal of public opinion would permit such reckless utterance. Righteous journalism requires the publication of definitely ascertained facts regardless of where it leads or whom it hurts. But even here in Advertisement of such facts is required by sound wisdom and seasoned judgment. The true criterion is to be determined by what useful end is to be served, and not by momentary sensationalism. For the life of me I cannot see what racial or public good is accomplished by holding up to public scandal our highest ecclesiastic dignitaries. We do not find this propensity in any other people except our own.

KELLY MILLER'S RETREAT.

Washington, D. C.,
August 17, 1923.

Mr. Dear Mr. Davis:

Your editorial of August 9th seems calculated to prolong indefinitely the controversial issues involved in the all-race conference. If my two letters to you do not clarify the situation in your mind, I fear I would be unable to do so though I should indite a volume. I am chiefly concerned in promoting an all-race conference, not an all-race controversy.

You call upon me to speak out. I will do so definitely, specifically and finally.

1. On August 13th I held a conference with the Race Front Conference in New York city. The outcome was clear and unmistakable so that neither you nor anyone else could have any grounds of misunderstanding. The committee on arrangements for the All-Race Conference, however originated, will function fully and freely without any ulterior coercion or control.

2. I did not call the session of the constituent civil rights organizations, but was invited by the chairman to meet with them, with a view to their indorsement of the All-Race Conference, as already proposed by Atlanta, Ga. The constituent organizations did not include the Garvey movement, for reasons of their own, with which I had nothing to do. I didm however, have a personal conference with Mr. Garvey, and learned that he was not inimical to the movement. The All-Race Conference committee had sent invitation to the U. N. I. A. to participate on precisely the same terms as other national organizations.

3. You call upon me to vouch for the character, reputation and calling of the personnel of the several civil rights organizations which united in backing the All-Race Conference movement. It is not my function or prerogative to give or to take away the reputability of any organization. I am no more responsible for the character, reputation and status of the organization in question than for that of The Atlanta Independent. I am trying to unite existing agencies into one comprehensive program of racial welfare, and therefore must deal with them just as they are, without one plea.

4. You profess to fear the element of graft. If the reputation and competency of the treasurer do not assure you of the honest and efficient management of contributed funds, I will appoint you on the auditing committee to make sure that not one penny is wrongfully applied.

5. The inclusion of a limited number of representative names on the enlarged committee was for the purpose of broadening the basis of the committee beyond the purely local and organizational membership, and to give it a national character, in substantial harmony with your own suggestion. The membership of the committee, at most, will constitute only a small part of the conference.

6. The committee on arrangements does not attempt to determine the deliberations or outcome of the conference. It merely lays out certain inevitable lines of procedure which is the necessary function of any preliminary management. The Race Front Conference will exert no more control over the deliberations than the Odd Fellows or the A. M. E. church. An all-race conference must be for all of the race, and not under the manipulation of any clique or faction, or group of cliques or factions.

I shall proceed to develop the conference as indicated in my several communications to The Independent. The task is arduous and taxing. I do hope that I will not be required to waste any more of my time and strength in bootless and fruitless controversy.

Yours truly,
KELLY MILLER.

Damage to Clergy.

It is particularly unfortunate that the Southwestern Christian advocate would lend its columns to the propagation of such wholesale slander. All scandal is slander until judicially established. The columns of the Advocate are eagerly scanned by a wide circle of white readers who are proned to believe any allegement of imperfection on the part of the Negro in high station. They will not be critical of the truth. The fact that the accusation appeared in so reputable a journal will serve as confirmation as strong as holy writ. The damage done to the reputation of Negro religious dulership in the mind of the white critic is irreparable. There is the undertone of implifications through the editorial treatment on part of the Advocate that the redemption of the Negro church lies in white leadership which is perfect and altogether to be desired. The editor seems to forget that as between the races, it is only a question of relative imperfection. The white clergy has been widely scandalized by reason of conspicuous lapses spread out in the public press. In any closely guarded system, we may rest assured that for every public exposure there are many suppressions which never reach the public eye or ear. I doubt whether there is a journal of either the religious or secular press that would lend itself to like scandalization of any branch of the white church as the Christian Advocate has unwittingly permitted it self to do. Not satisfied with quotation from the Alenite blasting the reputation of the A. M. E. connection, the editor extraneously lugs in a quotation from the Afro-American indicative of the extravagance and inefficiency of the Negro Baptists. The A. M. E. Zion and the C. M. E. churches under Negro self-direction are obliquely referred to. All branches of the Christian estate under Negro control are brought in implied comparison. The editor is unable to conceal a certain sort of veiled satisfaction at the discomforture of independent denomination of Negro churches. The implication is strong that it is not safe to entrust the Negro with rulership too far removed from the oversight of his white lord and master. Of course no such conclusion is reached in open declaration, but the sinister query is the most effective affirmative.

For more than a hundred years organized Negro independent churches life has been existent in the nation. For that period of time Negro ministerial has been put to the test of developing an ecclesiastical technique and organization for insuring christian character and ethical religious experience of members of the race. Can it be that these efforts have proven abortive?" This interrogative indictment, based upon unsupported rumor is a challenge and a defiance to every independent branch of the Negro church. If the independent Negro church has failed who has succeeded? Tell us this.

Independent Churches Strong.

The whole world is asking the question—Is Christianity a failure? Our hearts and our hopes answer in the affirmative, while the head shakes a double response. Success and failure are relative terms. In order to determine the influence and effect of the independent Negro churches for the past sixty years we must compare them with the denomination where the Negro has been overshadowed by white overlordship. In the city of Washington we have a number of churches of various denominational types. No fair observer can say that those under independent control suffer one whit by comparison with their competitors under white supervision. In respect to the character and qualifications of the ministers, the spiritual and moral tone of the membership and the influence upon the social welfare of the community, the superiority of white overseership is not apparent. On the otherhand this type of church control seems to fail utterly in reaching the mass life of the race. The Baptist church outnumbers all the other branches combined. Naturally enough it would show the larger measure of grossness and imperfection which adhers in the great masses which it most effectually reaches.

Race Prejudice Anti-Christ.

By some strange twist of logic and amazing surrender of Godly selfrespect, the tditor suggests that the Negro might give up the attempt at managing his own religious estate in order that there might be no schism in the Church of Christ. He seems to forget that race prejudice is the anti-Christ of the present day. The Negro had as well surrender to the domination of the deveil in order to keep peace, harmony, and unity in the world. In order to be consistent the Advocate would have to advise against Negro banks. insurance companies and order business enterprise, in order that the business world might not be divided along the color line. The A. M. E. church makes no discrimination on account of race. The M. E. Church does. Which of the two then, respects the spirit of the Christ.

The attitude of the editor justifies the exclusion of the Negro from governmental participation because it upsets the equation of political unity and race harmony. This attitude also justifies the basic claim of the Ku Klux Klan which sets forth that the white race and the white race alone is fit and fitted for the rulership of mankind. and that the Negro should not aspire to have any part or parcel in it: I am sure that the Advocate will shrink from the logic of its own suggestion. Nor can I elieve that it calculated the consequencee of giving the wide influence of its circulation to certain internal disgruntle men of the A. M. E. church.

The policy suggested y the Advocate would be suicidal of racial self-espect.

There is but one line of manly procedure. Whenever the prejudices of race restricts the Negro to separate circles, the opportunities of such segregated arenas should be utilized and exploited by Negro physicians for the Tuskegee hospital on the ground that the medical profession should not be divided along the color line.

The race has a right even to make its own mistakes. The only way to learn to swim is to swim.

Impotence may struggle up to power ignorance may put on intelligence. crudeness may acquire culture: corruption may give way to incorruptibility, but the racial soul once hypothecated can never be redeemed.

(Sgd.) KELLY MILLER.

ALL RACE CONFERENCE.

The public is well-informed as to the Independent's viewpoint of the All Race Conference and of the controversy between Prof. Miller, chairman of the Conference, and Editor Davis, as to its merits.

The Independent made specific charges against the movement, when we understood that Mr. Miller's Sanhedrin idea had been taken over by certain allied civic organizations, which were of questionable service to the race, alleging that Mr. Miller's big idea had been captured by the same old gang, in self-defense, which had been exploiting the people for the last twenty-five years, without authority, and had satisfied Mr. Miller by giving him a temporary minor place in his own movement, and that the race could not expect any benefits from these self-appointed and self-constituted leaders. To all of which Prof. Miller took exceptions and started the controversy, which he now seeks to break off abruptly, without satisfying the public as to the authenticity or integrity of the conference he and his assistants are promoting.

Well, if Mr. Miller is willing to leave the public in the dark, under the charges we have brought against the Front Race gang, to hide behind the length of the controversy he himself provoked, we are willing to accept his cowardly retreat as proof conclusive of every charge we have preferred against the men promoting the All Race Conference.

We carry in another column of this issue a letter from Prof. Miller in which he signifies his intention of running away from the fight he voluntarily challenged us to engage in. Brother Miller, in giving notice that he was going to take to his heels, rather than to face the facts, remarked, "Your editorial of August 9th seems calculated to prolong indefinitely the controversial issues involved in the All Race Conference, and I hope that I will not be required to waste any more of my time and strength in bootless and fruitless controversy."

Whether Mr. Miller intends to discuss the matter further or not, we propose to continue to advise the public of the effort of all self-appointed and self-constituted leaders to exploit the people for personal gain. In this communication, we are going to put up to Brother Miller the same questions we put up to him in our editorial of the 9th. He can answer these questions or he can dodge them. The public is the jury and will render the verdict upon the charges we have made. We asked Brother Miller some questions in the editorial in question, and he, in his answer, failed to meet the issue, as he has done in the entire controversy.

In proof that Prof. Miller has at as yet discovered the point at issue or risen to the dignity of helpful argument, we quote from a letter which appears in this issue from the Rev. Dr. M. A. N. Shaw president of the National Equal Rights League and president of the United Front Conference. Dr. Shaw says, "since reading your editorial, I must be frank in saying that I do not consider Dean Miller's reply at all satisfactory; not that he has not said some most excellent things; but his manner of dealing with your editorial, to my mind, as I purpose to show, misses the point by a very long mark."

Dean Miller says that we called upon him to vouch for the character, reputation and calling of the personnel of the several civil rights organizations which united in promoting the All Race Conference movement. "It is not my function or prerogative to give or take away the reputation of any organization. I am no more responsible for the character and reputation and status of the organizations in question than I am for the Atlanta Independent."

Dean Miller gave us the names of the following so-called civic organizations: The National Equal Rights League, Jefenegan's Race Conference, the International Uplift League, the African Blood Brotherhood, the N. A. A. C. P. and the Friends of Freedom, as organizations which met in New York March 23, 1923, to form the United Front Conference, which took over his big idea. We had charged that these men were self-appointed leaders and represented nobody, made up most largely of clerks, idlers, demagogues, politicians and other irresponsibles, all of which Prof. Miller disputed and entered a vigorous defense. We did not ask him anything about the moral character of these persons. But on the other hand, we asked him to give us the following information about these organizations, excepting the N. A. A. C. P. First, will you be good enough to give the public the names of the officers of the five institutions, telling where and when they were elected, giving the membership of each. Second, the location or headquarters of each and the occupation of their presidents and secretaries. Third, if they have any visible means of support, tell the public what they are engaged in and where. The N. A. A. C. P. was excepted.

Now, if this information is inquiring about the moral character of the men composing the other five organizations, we do not understand plain English, and we repeat, for the benefit of Prof. Miller that if these men met him and took over his idea and are now calling on the public for $5,000.00, the people have a perfect right to know who the men are and whether they work or loaf. It is up to Prof. Miller to tell the public who constitute each of these organizations, giving the name of the president and secretary, where they work, a roster of their membership, so the public will know the character of the men and the membership of the organization they claim to represent and know whether they are worthy of their support. And we now add that if we did not ask about the moral character of these men, it was the duty of Prof. Miller to give the public the benefit of their moral worth, as he had the light and the conscience to discover it. Yet he brushes the question away and says the character and reputation of the men is of little concern to him; that it was neither his function nor prerogative to give or take away the reputation of an organization.

We put other questions, as follows, to Brother Miller which he failed and refused to answer:

First, You say you need $5,000 to cover expenses. Have you a budget itemizing the expenses, or are you guessing?

Second, if you have a budget, give the public a statement.

Third, we asked you what would be the result if your seat-selling scheme brought more delegates to the convention than the people sent as their representatives, and what would become of the will of the people.

You answered none of these questions, but seek to brush them all aside by complaining that our editorial was calculated to prolong indefinitely the controversial issues involved. You showed a willingness to promote your conference by selling seats at $5.00 apiece, but you decline to discuss your right to so exploit the people or tell what you are going to do with the $5,000.00 when it is handed over to you, or to tell the public the character and employment of the men whom you are advising them to follow.

These questions are put back to you with all the interest and sincerity of our soul, and it is up to you to answer or admit their correctness by your silence. You will not be able to sell many seats at $5.00 apiece, when the public understands that you are not interested in the character or employment of the men who constitute the United Front Conference. Nothing could be more dictatorial or arbitrary than a set of men to set themselves up as leaders of a self-constituted, hand-picked, self-selected gang and call upon the people to give them $5,000 to be spent for purposes that the chairman and chief promoter of the scheme refuses to explain, when called upon by the public for an explanation.

According to the facts developed so far, the All Race Conference is planned and called at the instance of a United Front Conference, of which Rev. Dr. Shaw of Boston is president, and the United Front Conference is composed of certain organizations mentioned above which called themselves together in New York last year at the instance of Dr. Shaw and not at the instance of Dean Miller, and organized themselves into a United Front Conference. In other words, a close corporation of self-constituted, self-appointed, self-selected organizations, each without a following or a constituency, got together for mutual protection and planned a kind of holdings concern for the purpose of controlling every movement which had for its purpose the exploitation of the public for personal gain.

The questions are up to you to answer; but according to the testimony of Dr. Shaw, president of the United Front Conference and the National Equal Rights League you have not yet, my dear dean, discovered the points at issue or risen to the dignity of helpful and logical controversy.

Race Problem — 1923.
United States.

ST LOUIS MO STAR
JUN 29 1923

THE CHANGE IN THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

For many years The Chicago Tribune has been the most unreasonable paper in all the country in its attitude toward the South, especially so far as every phase of the negro problem has been concerned. Everything the South did or said in that connection was wrong. It had no charity for the South, no sympathy with its hard struggle to be just to both races, in the honest efforts of the stronger race to protect and help the weaker.

But, finally, The Tribune's eyes have been opened through the growing negro colony in Chicago and through the increasing difficulties of the white majority to adjust themselves to the new conditions there. Chicago has become the mecca for negro fugitives from justice from the South, though, of course, many orderly, industrious colored people have gone there. Nevertheless, so fearful has become the problem of handling negro criminals in Chicago that quite recently The Tribune chronicled the transfer of 400 additional policemen to the negro district to clean up vice and to maintain some show of order. And thereby comes the opening of The Tribune's eyes and this virtual confession of its past blindness and bitterness:

If the whites of the South are to live the way they want to live they must disregard the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution. If they did not nullify them they would have an entirely different life, and one they would not tolerate. Federal officials and federal troops made them stand for it during part of reconstruction, and consequences were barely endurable.

It is a momentous question and the North virtually tells the South to proceed in its own way, regardless of the Constitution, to live as it wants to live, although it might not make a great deal of difference to the North if Georgia had a negro Governor and a negro State judiciary and a negro Legislature.

The North does not impose its will upon the South and has not since the passions of Republican radicals wore themselves out in the seventies. The whole attitude of the country confesses that a mistake was made in the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

A mistake was also made in putting a rule of private conduct in the Constitution. Some States which adopted the eighteenth amendment now regret it. They show their change of mood by their votes and by acts of their Legislatures. Under the eighteenth amendment they do not live as they want to live, just as the whites of the Southern States could not live as they want to live under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

The man in the North who wants a glass of beer finds that he is an enemy of the Constitution and an anarchist. The man in the South who does not want a black man to vote, and sees that he does not, is untainted of disrespect for the Constitution, and has no contempt for American law.

Fortunately for the harmony of the whole country, the negro problem is no longer a sectional one—it is a national one. And with this situation comes a greater responsibility and opportunity for the good men of the colored race as well as of the white. There are many negro leaders who are good men, thinking men, and they must recognize the great dangers to their own people in these new artificial congested conditions in great cities. They should think out safe and sane remedies, and show their capacity for leadership by suggestions to and co-operation with thoughtful, sympathetic white leaders, to the end that both races can live together in harmony and mutual helpfulness.

The situation in St. Louis has not yet approximated the desperate one in Chicago. But the heavy movement of negroes here from the South, fifteen hundred or more per month, is leading in that direction, and now is the time for constructive methods of preventing the domination of the St. Louis negro colony by bad men.

Something can be done? What is it? Who will point the way?

OCT 9 - 1923

"NORTHERN TRADITIONS."

What is the "Northern tradition" about the negro race? Saturday the president of Washington and Jefferson College refused to take a negro player off the college team so that it could meet the objections of Washington and Lee University of Virginia and play a football game. He said he was "upholding Northern traditions" when he did that. Washington and Jefferson College is at Washington, Pa., which is not a hundred miles from Johnstown, where not long ago more than a thousand negroes were ordered out of town by the mayor and where on last Friday a committee of residents issued a statement denouncing an effort by negroes to erect a church in a white residential section. A story in the Philadelphia Public Ledger from Johnstown goes on to say:

> Pointing out that the location of the new negro church is far from sections of the city inhabitated largely by negroes, the statement issued today declares that public support would gladly be given to "any negro church that would look after the welfare of negroes at such places as Rosedale, Franklin and Conemaugh, so that such episodes as the killing and wounding of police and detectives might never occur again."
> That the value of real estate will materially decrease if the negro church is established is emphasized in the statement.

Maybe Washington and Jefferson College is upholding Northern traditions, but certainly Johnstown, Pa., is making some new ones. It begins to appear that in a few more years "Northern traditions" as they bear upon the race question will all be new. If the North is so much the friend of the negro, if he is received as a brother, why should the mere building of a negro church in a white residential section cut down the value of the property there? Or do friendship and brotherhood stop where property values begin?

SOUTH IS SOLVING

H. L. Mencken says the Negro question 'far from solved." One regrets he does n state what, in his opinion, constitutes "tl Negro question," and suggest some method of solution.

But the "problem" is being solved; the South is making steady progress—thanks to the aid of intelligent Negro leaders.

One method looking toward solution is the migration that has been in progress the last several years. The restless and dissatisfied Negroes have found a way to actively express their discontent, and that is by migrating to another section. This distributes the "problem" over a larger area of the nation. A man from Brooklyn said yesterday that the North is inwardly crying out against it, and also outwardly to an extent, although the North is ashamed to admit it cannot handle the question after having given so much gratuitous advice as to its handling.

Another method looking toward solution—and the really legitimate one—is education—constructive industrial and basic education. Teach the colored man the essentials in the art of making a livelihood and the fundamentals in academic education that the average man is in need of, and he will make a good, law-abiding citizen. If he wants further education, let him have it; education never hurt any mortal, some prejudiced folks to the contrary. The imparting of truth sets communities and sections free rather than handicaps them.

Some say that all the streets in the Negro district should be paved and the section otherwise improved. This will be done eventually. Whenever it is done, taxes on the houses in which the Negroes live will advance, perhaps double, and high rents will be the logical result. This would present an uncomfortable problem for the Negro now. As cheap labor, the average colored man competes against all comers and holds the field. But cheap labor cannot afford high rents. And the average Negro of today cannot or will not compete as high-priced labor.

However, Negro standards are being improved as time goes by, and this is to the inestimable benefit of all those white families who employ cooks, washerwomen and nurses. Education is responsible for this raising of standards and betterment of service; and it must be said that the Negro churches also are doing much along the line of enlightening the race.

The other day, an ex-slave visited Macon—a colored man of that kindly, respectful manner that characterizes most of the old-time, ante-bellum Negroes. He came on a mission, that of doing something concrete for his people.

Incidentally, this man was at the bedside of that great Georgian, Alexander H. Stephens, when he died. In fact, he was the property of Judge Linton Stephens, brother of the noted Georgian, and the slave was educated by the latter. He had with him letters written to him by Mr. Stephens from Washington. His name is Linton S. Ingraham.

Ingraham is founder, moving spirit and principal of the Sparta Agricultural and Industrial Institute, which is doing a splendid work for the Negro youth of the State. It occupies fifty-three acres of ground, and has two buildings in the school plant proper. The school is now 13 years old and is valued at about $35,000 to $40,000, and is out of debt with the exception of a small mortgage of $1,500.

Ingraham was in Macon to open a campaign by which he hopes to raise from $75,000 to $100,000 as an endowment for his school. The Atlanta Constitution says of his institution:

> There are now 210 pupils in the school. He has more applicants than he can make room for every year and next year he is anticipating 500. He wants to buy, through this endowment, additional farm acreage adjoining his school, where the students can raise more crops, thus making room for more boys and girls. He wants also to erect a new building, a dormitory for boys.
> Ingraham believes that the work he is doing will do more to keep the colored people in the South, by teaching them the way to prosperity, contentment and comfort, than any other one thing. On this basis he is asking for help.
> To help him in his solicitations he has letters of indorsement from many prominent white citizens. To begin with there is his former benefactor, Judge Alexander Stephens. Then Judge Samuel Lumpkin, of Rome, has added his commendation, in writing. Others supporting his institution and his campaign include C. W. Moran, of Sparta, county superintendent of schools; Judge John M. Graham, of Atlanta, and many other prominent Georgians.
> He asks all who feel that they can contribute to make checks payable to C. W. Moran, treasurer, and a member of the board of trustees of the school, at Sparta, Ga.

This is simply one instance in several in which the solution of the so-called Negro problem is going forward. There are, of course, in both races some who pull against any solution, and who do not want a normal rightful situation to exist. That is only to be expected. And these factors are the very ones most in need of right education.

NEGRO BISHOP TO MEMBERS OF RACE

Advises Respect for Law, Home Ownership and Honesty in Industry As Essential

The 45th session of the Central North Carolina Conference of the Zion church is marked by unusual interest. In his episcopal address Bishop L. W. Kyles who presided over this conference declared: "I am not in favor of organic union with any one negro church.

"We are beginning to realize more clearly than ever before that the one permanently abiding institution in our civilization is the church of Jesus Christ, and the one indestructible foundation for the hope of individuals, races and nations, is faith in the ever-abiding principles of the gospel of the Son of God." Further, the bishop said, "I believe that all human problems will eventually be laid at the door of the church to be worked out by the principles of Christianity. Speaking of the negro and his problems, Bishop Kyles said: "I have large faith in the possibilities of my race in this country. We must work out our future in this country. I submit that the growth and development of our group toward its ideal is contingent upon its adherence to Christian principles and its alliance with the Christian forces of the world. The church has marked the path for the race which has led to its present moral growth and material prosperity.

Home-Owning.

"Negroes should own their homes. Home-owning negroes are a community asset anywhere. Property ownership lines up with the best interests of the community and pledges us to the protection of those interests. It is the landless, homeless, restless, roving and irresponsible negro who disgraces and endangers our civilization. Statistics show that no lawless, homeless race can be socialized civilized or Christianized."

Migration.

Referring to the restlessness and migratory movements of the race he said: "I do not think there is any cause for serious fear on this score so far as this movement is to affect adversely either the welfare of the negro, the South or the sections of the country to which they go. But I feel it an encumbent duty as a leader among my people to advise that they exercise wisdom and prudence in the matter of migration. Tidal movements which are the result of enthusiasm not based upon facts discovered after intelligent research have never resulted in any material good to any people.

"But in my opinion this tidal movement can be stopped by better treatment, better opportunities for the education of our children and more favorable conditions under which to rear our families.

"The youth of the church should be cared for. I believe in the union of Sunday school and Christian endeavor departments—a unified program, a department of religious education at Livingstone College and a specialist in the employ of the church school board."

Law Enforcement.

Attention was given to law enforcement and prohibition. He said all laws must be respected and enforced, even those laws which we may judge inimical to us. "No negro church did more to put over the 18th amendment than the A. M. E. Zion church. I call upon my people to co-operate with federal, state and municipal officers in the enforcement of this law.

"The white race has about as much religion in this country as any and they are buying property and building institutions and accumulating wealth, and we must do the same. Christianity as a mode of life produces character, and character produces capital. The negro will not have anything worth while that he does not win for himself. Fords and silk shirts mean nothing for people, white or black, but homes and a bank account give character and standing to a man."

In The Grip of Monotony

(Special to The Baltimore American)

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 24.—Reports from over the country, indicate that the public generally is getting tired of William Pickens and a number of other platformers who are making frantic efforts to escape the oblivion resulting from excess publicity, wearied audiences and readers.

Thoughtful people in various cities where Owens, Pickens, Bagnall and other "New Negroes" have appeared too frequently, are beginning to show a marked disinterestedness in the public expressions and writing of many Negroes roaming the country with no apparent aim except "a large gate" and to sell propaganda having no constructive program behind it.

William Pickens has lately added another weight to his difficult job of keeping in the public eye, by another stroke at Marcus Garvey. He is being roundly criticised for not having common sense enough to know that Negroes can become bored by any man who seeks to keep in the public eye by kicking a fellow man of his race—especially when his kick is administered through the medium of a white publication under the pretense of seeking good for his race. Chandler Owen—Messenger editor—is also receiving a good share of merited criticism for a foolish editorial asserting that the U. N. I. A. should be destroyed as a menace.

Owen, Pickens and Bagnall have made the impression that they are seeking some sort of alliance for selfish purposes only and emphasis is being made upon the conclusion that they are ending their period of usefulness rapidly. The influence of Pickens and Bagnall as representatives of the N. A. A. C. P. has been seriously impaired by their evident co-operation with Chandler Owen who is falling rapidly in public favor because of the reputation he has made as an opportunist without aim, who cannot be depended upon as having a firm conviction on any matter. The public is becoming firmly convinced of the belief that the program of Chandler Owen is being financed by white people, and that the editor messenger has little real interest in his race beyond exploiting it for money reasons.

Would You Like It?—There is no argument about it. We all know that Jesus taught that we are to do unto others as we would like for them to do unto us and everybody knows that this is right. But the practice of it is not so easy. If, for instance, you were an Italian (whether from Italy or Sicily), would you like for people to call you "Dago"? If you were a Jew, would you like for them to call you "Sheeny"? If you were a Mexican, would like you like to be called "Greaser"? If you were a black man would you like to be called "Nigger"? Try to think of yourself in the place of these 'others" and treat them as you would like for them to treat you if you were in their place and they in yours. If you fall short of this, you violate the principles of Christianity.—Baptist Advance.

HENRY FORD, THE PHILANTHROPIST, AND THE NEGRO

Henry Ford is a power in America, and in the industrial world, whatever is said for and against him, he is a benefit to humanity. He is no partisan; he is a humanitarian and a believer in impartial justice for all mankind.

He does not place a man-made creed above principles which are eternal and should be adhered to irrespective of party, race, condition, or color.

He is not too big to overlook the "Race Problem", and not too little to speak the truth and nothing but the truth. When touching the "Race Problem" he said this:

"There is no need of race hatred in America, even if there is a race question. The race that calls itself superior can prove its superiority only by superior ability to help others, and can attain its racial destiny only as helper of others. The Negro is a human being capable of integrity, loyalty, domestic peace and prosperity, and as a human being he is entitled to opportunity to develop and exhibit those qualities and enjoy his natural human rights. Where the Negro has been given an opportunity he has proved a community assetRace correction by education is always the superior way, and not coercion."

According to his practice in his great industrial plant he practices what he preaches, hence his words are like pure milk from the cocoanut, and what he says is not blotted out because of what he really is; and such coming from Mr. Ford is worthy of commendation because he is no man's man and needs not be subject to anybody.

When men of Mr. Ford's standing and power; lawmakers and statesmen; those whose very words are the breath of power throughout our great country, with united effort and public declaration for impartial justice, speak out to the point touching the "Race Problem", times will be better and the "Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man" will no longer be like a "sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal".

NEW ANGLO-SAXON CLUBS DRAW COLOR LINE. IN FEAR OF 'CIVILIZATION'S END'

John Powell, Composer, Champions Movement Declaring Negro Amalgamation Will Destroy White Race and Urges Speedy Action.

NEW YORK CITY WORLD
DECEMBER 2, 1923

NOVEL ORGANIZATION FORMED IN RICHMOND, VA.

Every People That Has Crossed Blood With Blacks Has Decayed, He Says.

John Powell is a well-known pianist and composer. He was born in Richmond, Va., which is still his home and which was the place of organization of the Anglo-Saxon Clubs, Inc. These clubs represent an extremity of opinion regarding the Negro in which The World does not in any way join, and in presenting this exposition of their purpose The World does so entirely as a matter of information to its readers, to most of whom, perhaps, the knowledge of such a project will come as a surprise. The World purposes in later issues to present replies to the argument of Mr. Powell by a representative Negro and by a representative white friend of the race.

By JOHN POWELL

During the last year a movement of momentous historic possibilities has started in Virginia, a movement no less important in its potentialities than that which led to the Declaration of Independence and the founding of the American Republic—for it is equally as important to preserve as to initiate and sometimes it is more difficult.

The stress of the World War, while calling forth fine qualities of unselfishness and heroism, at the same time displayed in a relentless glare certain deficiencies and weaknesses which must give serious pause to all thinking and patriotic Americans.

See Grave Dangers.

The rapid submergence of the original American stock in many parts of the country; the existence in our midst of more or less well organized alien groups; the intensification of racial frictions and animosities; the increase of foreign language and race newspapers, threatening to make of our country—in the words of Roosevelt—"a polyglot boarding house"; the rapid breakdown of the traditional American virtues and principles, both personal and political, must fill all real Americans with grave alarm for our future.

In recognition of these dangers a group of patriotic and broad-minded citizens of Richmond, Va., organized Post No. 1 of the Anglo-Saxon Clubs of America in September, 1922. The movement spread rapidly in Virginia and was taken up with such enthusiasm that posts were organized in twenty-five other localities, including all the foremost educational institutions of the State—the University of Virginia, the University of Richmond, William and Mary, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Hampden-Sidney, Virginia Military Institute, Washington and Lee and Randolph-Macon.

Last month a State convention was held in Richmond, at which a constitution was adopted providing for further expansion throughout the Nation. Widespread interest has shown itself all over the country. Letters of congratulation and requests for charters have come from States in all sections—Massachusetts, Texas, New York, Georgia, New Hampshire, Missouri, New Jersey, California, Oregon, West Virginia, Washington, North Carolina, Minnesota, Maryland.

The choice of the name, "Anglo-Saxon Clubs of America," was made after serious deliberation. The term "Anglo-Saxon" is to be taken in no narrow racial sense, but rather in a cultural sense, and would not imply the seclusion from fellowship of individuals of other than Anglo-Saxon extraction. Ethnologically, the term has no right to existence. In fact, there never was an Anglo-Saxon race. But there is no doubt in the mind of any as to the meaning of the words "Anglo-Saxon Civilization"—the civilization which embodies the ideals of the founders of our country.

The fundamental purpose of the organization is the preservation and maintenance of these ideals in America. This purpose is to be accomplished by facing frankly the dangers which threaten us, by studying the pressing problems of the day, and by seeking solutions in the wise and liberal spirit of the Fathers of our Republic.

Their Three Aims.

In practice this purpose is to be effected in three ways:

First, by the strengthening of Anglo-Saxon instincts, traditions and principles in members of the organization and by influencing in the same direction all other representatives of our original American stock as well as all citizens of other extraction who are capable of reacting to these ideals. If Anglo-Saxons aspire to leadership in America, they must make themselves worthy of leadership, else their predominance will degenerate into oligarchic tyranny.

For the basis of all Anglo-Saxon ideals is the spirit of good sportsmanship and fair play, on which rest all decency in personal relationships, all liberal political progress, even practical religion—good sportsmanship and fair play being merely the Anglo-Saxon expression of the Golden Rule.

The Anglo-Saxon spirit must be strengthened in ourselves by holding in grateful memory the achievements and ideals of our past, by maintaining the sense of historical continuity, by giving the immigrants who are capable of becoming one with us the opportunity of absorbing the spirit as well as the letter of our traditions, by cultivating a pride in the beauty and glory of the English language and insisting on its general use.

Second, by intelligent selection and exclusion of immigrants. For no amount of steadfastness and loyalty to Anglo-Saxon traditions and ideals can preserve our civilization if we allow our people to be swamped in a quagmire of unintelligent and unassimilable immigration. Consequently, the Anglo-Saxon Clubs advocate sensible and scientific limitation of immigration, the conscious selection of beneficial elements and the exclusion of harmful and dangerous population.

Third, by fundamental and final solutions of our racial problems in general, most especially of the Negro problem.

Broad and Generous.

Although taking a strong stand on these questions, the Anglo-Saxon Clubs insist that they be handled in the most liberal and humanitarian spirit. They are definitely and explicitly opposed to all religious hatred and intolerance, as well as to racial prejudice. Their broad and generous attitude has been generally recognized and has called forth expressions of commendation and offers of assistance from individuals of the most divergent racial groups, who see in these activities the best hope of attaining for our country a cohesive and organic national consciousness.

In a letter to the Richmond Times-Dispatch, approving the aims and activities of the clubs, the head of the American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association writes:

"I wish to say through your paper that we are very much in favor of the proposed plan of the Anglo-Saxon Clubs, and will render them every co-operation and assistance possible. Our organization, extending over two-thirds of the United States, is in a position to do a missionary work of great value, and you may assure these gentlemen in particular that we stand ready to aid at any time."

"Similar expressions of commendation have come from Italians, Jews, Germans, Scandinavians and others. This shows that representatives of other groups than the Anglo-Saxon are suffering under our present national incoherence. At no time in the history of our country has there existed a keener or more general desire to attain a national consciousness and a cohesive national organization. The innumerable schemes of Americanization, the stressing of the so-called "100 per cent. Americanism," show the tendency of the day.

"Nor is this tendency merely the result of the wave of patriotism aroused by our participation in the World War. Already, in 1912, Theodore Roosevelt's "New Nationalism" swept over the country, arousing intense enthusiasm in all sections and breaking down the most inveterate party ties.

"A newer and deeper tone is making itself evident in the traditional "scream of the eagle," a tone with less of self-complacency and braggadocio and more of seriousness and humility. This tendency, without exaggeration, can be said to constitute the most important and characteristic sign of the times, giving us a right to hope for a return of the spirit of the early days of the Republic. In those days we were a Nation, although less well organized politically than we are to-day.

Goes Into History.

"When this country was first formed it was composed of thirteen separate and distinct States—not States in the sense in which we use that word to-day, but "sovereign States"—so recognized by England at the close of the Revolutionary War. We do not deny that they were jealous of each other; that there were serious differences in regard to political, economic and industrial matters; that they were brought together with difficulty and kept together with even greater difficulty.

"But these States did consist of a people homogeneous in blood, speaking a common language, with common ideals and traditions of liberty and law. And these ideals caused them to attain to a height of magnanimity that no other race than the Anglo-Saxon has ever achieved.

"They said this: We have fought for our liberty and won. We will use this liberty not merely for ourselves, but dedicate it to the whole world. We will throw open our gates to the oppose and downtrodden of every nation. We invite them to come to us and share with us this great gift which has been vouchsafed to us. And they came, those who were drawn by our ideals, at first slowly and then more rapidly; their first idea being to become one with us, to assimilate our language and our traditions, to share with us our obligations and responsibilities as well as our rights and privileges.

"The very best the outside world had to offer came, people already swayed by ideals similar to our own; sturdy pioneers, industrious, freedom loving, filled with admiration and gratitude for what we had given the world—and them. We had little difficulty in assimilating those men and women. They brought much of value, materially and spiritually. We are grateful for what they brought.

But as time went on people of a different type began to swarm to America. The land of millions began to attract by its wealth rather than by its ideals. They came, not for the ideals and aspirations, but for "the loaves and fishes."

The Two Race Problems.

And we Americans have been largely to blame for this invasion. In our eagerness for growth and expansion, in our insolent haste to amass wealth and to exploit the illimitable resources of our country, we have often sacrificed fundamental racial and spiritual values on the altar of quick results.

Why should we yield to this senseless impatience? We have all the future before us. America and its resources are not going to run away from us. There is plenty of time for their development. It is of more importance to build soundly than to build rapidly. It is suicidal to incorporate into our structure elements unsound and dangerous to our present and destructive to our future.

Far more important than the general question of immigration are the wo outstanding race problems. The ecent decision of the Supreme Court hows that not only are the Pacific Coast States aware of the dangers of he Asiatic problem, but that the Fedral authorities are also alive to the situation, and ready to support all just measures of alleviation.

Not so, however, with the Negro problem. It is a national tragedy that this problem, which should always be considered calmly and without prejudice should have been thrown into the cockpit of party politics. Both great political parties have been responsible for this unfortunate state of affairs. Each has used the Negro question as a political asset. The result of this is that few people in any part of America have been able to view the matter dispassionately, or to go to the root of it.

Even in the South, attention has been so largely centred on the preservation of the white supremacy that the far graver danger of racial amalgamation has been relatively ignored. More than half of the United States, many of them not in the South, have laws against miscegenation. These laws prevent intermarriage of whites and blacks, but they do not prevent intermixture.

Always Absorbed.

The inadequacy of these laws has already manifested itself. Mendel's law of heredity shows that in crossing two varieties the more primitive, the less highly specialized, variety always dominates in the hybrid offspring. This is true not merely physically but mentally and psychologically as well. This is why every race that has crossed blood with the Negro has failed to maintain its civilization and culture. Sixty centuries of history from which we can draw inferences are at our disposal.

The Negro problem is not a new problem. It has occurred and recurred in past times. In no single instance has any race lived in contact with the Negro without eventually absorbing him, and this in spite of social, political, religious and caste barriers. Even massacre has been resorted to—all to no avail.

Also, no race even slightly admixed with Negro blood has failed to decay culturally. In all cases the danger was realized too late to be combatted effectively. In America our hope lies in a timely recognition of the threat.

History, ethnology and biology all bear out the Anglo-Saxon instinctive conviction in favor of racial integrity. In this conviction there lies nothing defamatory, or even derogatory, to the Negro, but merely the recognition that under the laws o heredity he is a predominant strain He is what he is through no virtu or fault of his own.

And, in considering the problem his presence in America entails upo us we must always remember tha he did not come here willingly. H was brought to America by force an violence, under inconceivable hard ships and sufferings. He was forced to undertake the hardest and most disagreeable tasks, which, although necessary to our progress and development, white men were unwilling to undertake. His presence here is the direct result of the white man's impatience to achieve quick material results and his unwillingness to engage in unpleasant menial labor.

His faults and deficiencies were known. The dangers of injecting into a white population a mass of primitive savages were recognized. This is proven by the repeated protests of colonists against the African slave trade. However, the sordid and material advantages of slave labor were sufficiently obvious to overcome all qualms, and slavery became an established institution.

Absolves Negro.

The Negro is innocent of responsibility for the existence of the Negro problem. We cannot be too grateful for his docility and fidelity under slavery, especially during the War of Secession; nor should we ever forget that his brawn and muscle enabled us to accomplish in decades that which otherwise might have taken centuries.

These considerations should compel us in any settlement of the matter to treat him not only with meticulous fairness but also with large generosity. Noblesse oblige would permit no less. And yet it would be no kindness to the Negro to fail to preserve the color line. For in the resulting amalgamation that civilization would be destroyed which is his only guarantee of decent and fair treatment in any part of the world.

The Anglo-Saxon Clubs do not propose any categorical or dogmatic solution of the Negro problem. Their purpose is to arouse, to awaken the mind and conscience of our people; to cause a general realization of the true state of affairs as it exists in the present and the recognition of the unspeakable threat with which the future is pregnant.

The manifest difficulty and, to the minds of many, the apparent impossibility of any ultimate solution of the Negro problem have induced among our people a state of mental and moral inertia which is appalling. There are many who say: "It will not come in my day. Why should I concern myself with such distant possibilities?" I will tell you why we must concern ourselves with this matter.

We of to-day are in a position of peculiar responsibility. What is still possible to us will be impossible to even the next generation. To us is intrusted the most sacred of all cultural heritages. It is not alone ours, deriving from a glorious past; it belongs equally to the present and to the future. We are merely the trustees in whose keeping it has been placed. And the first duty of every one of us is to measure up to his responsibilities under this trust.

It is inconceivable that we should allow to be sullied all that is highest and holiest, for which through countless generations our forefathers have lived, have worked, have prayed, have fought, have bled, have died. We may not, we dare not, prove faithless to our charge.

LYING ABOUT NEGROES

The Christian Recorder, of Philadelphia, the official organ of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, asserts that "newspapers in the South are printing all sorts of falsehoods to try to keep Negroes from moving North. Instead of trying to better conditions there, they are exaggerating bad conditions here. Nearly everything they write is false." This is a very severe charge, and we do not believe it can be sustained.

Christian Recorder

"Instead of trying to better conditions." The churches in the South are trying to better conditions, and the newspapers tell of their work. Many of the Southern newspapers speak out fearlessly against lynchings and other injustices toward the Negro. The newspapers of Nashville and many other Southern cities carry columns of news about colored people, telling of their social and church life, their business and industrial life. Most of what they publish about the Negro is not "all sorts of falsehoods." Our esteemed Methodist editor of Philadelphia has fallen into the bad habit of seeing the bad rather than the good.

But after saying this we must admit that he has much ground for complaint. Some of our Southern papers, be it said to their shame, do publish falsehoods, do misrepresent facts about the Negro, and they do it seemingly to keep "the Negro in his place," to keep him from going North, and to make him as useful as possible as a ducer for the white man. The edi- of the Christian Recorder publishes article that appeared in two leading Southern newspapers purporting to have been written by a Negro in Philadelphia. In this article the hardships of the Negro in the North are described as being bad indeed. The Recorder has made investigation and produces proof to show that the article was not written by a Negro in Philadelphia. We accept the proof as conclusive. 12-20-23

The rank and file of white people in the South will join the editor of the Christian Recorder in his condemnation of such practices "to frighten" the Negro and keep him in the South. Conditions for the Negro in the North are undoubtedly bad enough without publishing such unreasonable things as are contained in the article complained of. It is simply unbelievable that conditions are as bad as they are described. We are heartily ashamed of the fact that in the South conditions are not better than they are for the Negro and have no words with which to express our contempt for men who will publish "falsehoods to scare Negroes." But it is poor policy to publish a falsehood in trying to refute or correct a falsehood.

It is not true of Southern newspapers in what they publish about the Negro that "nearly everything they write is false." There is enough that is false and unjust. This we should fight. And while we are fighting it let us see and commend and encourage that which is good.

Since writing this editorial we have come across an article in another Philadelphia paper, the Presbyterian, an organ of the Northern Presbyterian Church, on "The Race Question." It will be interesting to publish that editor's view along with what we have said:

A colored brother in one of our Presbyteries, speaking in the interest of the work among the colored people, said that the exodus of colored people from the South was due to the lack of the practice of the golden rule among the white people of the South in their dealings with the colored people.

Some white gentleman present who had been born or bred in the South and some who had been born and bred in the North took exception to this colored brother's statement. One of these men said that the boll weevil in the cotton fields had much more to do with the exodus to the North than any social relations or conditions. He further declared that the colored people had nowhere any better friends, who were more interested in their interests for time and eternity than were the Christians and the citizens of orderly life in the South.

Formerly his mule and his cotton were the Negro's chief source of production and income. When the cotton was destroyed by the weevil, the bottom fell out of the South and the Negroes' interest. Thus left alone, under the encouragement of big wages in the North and the persuasion of employment agents, he came to the North. But in the North he learned that, while the wages are high, the cost of living is much higher, and some prophets have predicted that by winter time he will return to his native South, whose climate and customs and practices and people he better understands.

We think there is much truth and wisdom in this view of the case, and we believe the good colored brother and his fellows would do well to avoid the prejudice and injustice which are being bred by this furore over the race question.

The time has come when all Christian people of whatever race should remember that they are brothers in Christ, and, ever cherishing the purpose to maintain the rights of each and all, should seek as they have opportunity to do good to all nen, especially to those who are of the household of faith. Above all should they seek the eternal salvation of men, regardless of the temporary factor of race or color.—Christian Advocate.

INLOOK AND OUTLOOK.

(The Pittsburgh American)

The general forward movement of American Negroes witnesses a struggle between two ideas. The strife is stirring the conscience of some and arousing interest among others. Self-dependence or independence upon others are the two ideas in question. Which is right and which is wrong? This group's praying to the same God for victory and supremacy represent one or the other of these ideas. All other movements and activities of the race in this country can be traced to one or the other.

Those Negroes who are prone to depend upon the progress of other races fight against anybody and everything emphasizing self-dependence. Their idea of racial development waits upon the initiative and creative efforts of the white man. Their plans are hazy. They proceed in a zig-zag course as if life is a drifting tide which will throw the race up somewhere on a shore of permanent prosperity.

Those Negroes who depend upon themselves and think this way should characterize the mind of the entire race, are fighting for the survival of the Negro race through self-help and self-government. Their idea of racial development is founded upon the encouragement of the initiative and creative instincts as essentials to achievement which will ultimately give Negroes consideration as the equals of other races of mankind. Their plans are daring. They shoot straight ahead aiming at a particular goal. They have a passionate belief in the righteousness of their cause; A fight for the mental emancipation of the race as a first step in winning its larger freedom and opportunities.

This struggle between two ideas is going ahead until one or the other of these movements die. Both cannot survive. One must live but the other will surely die. On the result hinges the future of the Negro in America and the world. There are elements of good in each of the two ideas represented by the contending forces. This should and must be preserved. Each could do its work tunhindered and ungrudged by the other if the officials of both so decided. But a different way was chosen when the officials of one movement turned aside from their main work to fight the progress and growth of the other. Then it became a struggle for survival of the two ideas. It is important that the followers of both ideas do some better thinging.

The utter dependence of American Negroes upon the environment created for them by the daring, dazzling, pushing and conquering spirit of the white race must never be disregarded by either of the two contending schools of the race. A nation within a nation can never be in America. This nation is still a democracy in the making and no Negro minority can ever hope to dominate a white majority in this country or that it will share its benefits and opportunities equally with Negroes. These cold facts should be written in the notebook of every Negro in America indulging vain hope of some day enjoying an equal share of the blessings and benefits of American citizenship with its white population.

THE WHITE EXODUS

Few people seem to realize that for fifty years there has been a constant and increasing stream of white folk from the South into the North. Statistics covering the number of these people are not available. Nevertheless the casual observer knows that they are in large and noisy numbers. They always stand up wherever they are, on every occasion, and under every condition, boasting with true Southern gusto "We are from the South." They are as proud of that boast as they could possibly be with the honor of being graduates from one of our great American or foreign universities. They are always propogandists for the prejudices of the South and create frequent scenes by their insistence upon them. The fact is that this Southerner has a neurosis on the Negro and seems to feel a holy call to come North and preach the doctrine of racial caste.

There are two or three interesting features of the white exodus. No great hue and cry has been raised about the white man coming North. If wages were low in the South; if the boll weevil were over-active; if educational facilities were limited; if the Southern white grew tired of the hell he had created; if he felt he had to go to work and wished to escape the disgrace involved in his locality, he had only to get himself together and migrate. The white man can go and come in this country without causing a riot of public opinion. Secondly, in many instances, the white migrant from the South has proved himself a disturbing element, a mischief maker and a rebel against law and order. As a worker in shop and factory, as a clerk, agent, travelling man, and owner of small business enterprises, as a member of the church, student in srhool, participant in civic and social organization no occasion is overlooked, where the Negro is concerned, to demonstrate "how we treat 'em in the South." He dictates the policy of the hotel and restaurant keeper on the Negro. He decides the amusement houses the Negro may not attend. He attempts to run the industrial institutions. He runs the association of real estate dealers, the City Hospital, the churches, the Y. M. C. A.'s and the Chamber of Commerce, always concerned about keeping the Negro in his place. Thirdly, he is the tireless proponent of segregation, racial discrimination and is back of every race riot and lynching. Happily he does not at home or abroad represent the best white people of the South.

BION BUTLER ON RACE QUESTION

Has Lived In North and South and Knows Conditions In Both Sections

SAYS NEGRO WILL GO WHERE HE WANTS TO GO

But Best Place For Him Is In The South; Suppose a Southern City Had Done To The Negro What Johnstown, Pennsylvania, Has Done

BION H. BUTLER.

In July one Sunday evening I drove through Johnstown, Pennsylvania. It so happened that the place is in a county adjoining Clearfield, and Clearfield is the county in which many years of my earlier life were passed. So I have known Johnstown for half a century. There are the famous old mills of the Cambria Iron Company, built by men of great skill and ability. There are the by-product coke-ovens that represent years of scientific experiment and operation. Brainy men are numbered among the people of Johnstown. Excellent people are there. On the hill top above the city is a cemetery in which lie over 3,000 victims of the flood of that Mayday thirty-five years ago when the city was wiped out by one of the most disastrous deluges ever known on this continent.

All these things we looked at and talked about as we drove through Johnstown on that recent Sunday evening, up by Conemaugh, over the hills and out into the country, for Johnstown as an American city of over half a hundred thousand representative people is interesting from many view points. I spoke of Cyrus Elder, of the steel company, Swank, one of the greatest statistical steel men the country ever knew, Tom L. Johnson, who gave Cleveland three cent car fares, John Fulton, the widely known mining engineer, John Rose, who helped Hoke and Cumberland county folks to get the money for their claims for Camp Bragg land, for he was an influential member of Congress from Pennsylvania when the delayed payments were up, of the growth of the mills, of Johnson's rise, and the big town he built at Lorraine, Ohio, and other things concerning Johnstown.

A few days ago in the DuBois Courier, a paper I established 45 years ago in the adjoining county, I read of the ban laid against negroes in Johnstown. In what had been a long time ago my own paper I read this thing, that Johnstown was ordering negroes out of the city, Johnstown, that town of fine old memories, and fine men, and great industries, and progress and prosperity. And I thought to myself, suppose that had been Charlotte, North Carolina, instead of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, ordering away all negroes who had not lived at least seven years in the town, for that is what the Pennsylvania paper that was once my own paper told me Johnstown had been doing, ordering away all the negroes who had not lived in Johnstown seven years. But it does not surprise me, for I know the situation better than the man of the South does. I know it better than the negro who thinks the North is the paradise for colored folks. I know that the North is not the place for the colored man to expect those conditions that he hopes to find in the North, for the North is just as human as the South, and the North has not lived with the negroes as long as the South has, to acquire that friendliness that comes of long years of contact and association.

Race Question An Old One.

The race question is not a new one to me. I have seen it just as emphatic on the Pacific coast where the Chinaman and the Jap and the Indian have fallen under the prejudice of race hatred fully as grievously as the negro has in the East. I have seen in the West more inexcusable manifestation toward the Asiatic than I have ever known in the South toward the African. The American Indian has a pretty raw bit of evidence to offer as his heritage from the white man all over this country. In Turkey and Armenia I encountered the terrible animosities exhibited by the Mongol Turks and Kurds for the Armenians, climaxing in the most dreadful bloodshed and massacre and persecution I have ever been in contact with any where. It is all the same. Race jealousy is immeasurable in its animosity, North, South, East or West, and Johnstown, Pennsylvania, is only conspicuous because the time has arrived when the numbers of the different race types are large enough to bring on clashes.

To me the relations between the white man and the colored man in the South seem singularly cordial. Certain things the white man insists on, and because he is the majority he is granted his demands. But these things curtail the negro's privileges and happiness much less than the treatment the negro gets in the North. If a North Carolina city the size of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, should announce to the negroes within its borders what my old paper in Pennsylvania tells me Johnstown has told the negroes, that those not seven years in the city must move on, all the rest of North Carolina would rise up in defense of the negro. But in Pennsylvania probably the larger part of the people are with the white ultimatum givers of Johnstown. Johnstown does not mean to be as narrow and bigoted and cruel as the paper says. But Johnstown is in the first stages of its first race encounter. Johnstown has a motley population of all manner of origin, including English, Irish, Welsh, German, Italian, Hungarian, Polack, Russian, Syrian, and a dozen different lines of racial cleavage meet there in that city of 60,000 people. Not only is the white man's antagonism to the black man shown, but the antagonism of one nationally against another. All the primary sub-divisions of mankind into race types is there in evidences, but the mixture of the races, the crosses, the compounds, the amalgams, and any other combination that injects fresh differences of blood alignment and nationality. And when the negro from the South comes among that bunch he is met by the most gorgeous mob of jealous inhabitants that civilization has ever gathered to oppose a newcomer.

Theory Versus Practice.

And with it all the negro has no friends. The big industrial concerns that brought negroes from the South to work in the Johnstown shops have no interest in them except as they are on the pay-roll and expected to do so much work each day. When business slacks up and the employe is laid off he is his own unfortunate, and not the company's. He has no white folks that he can go to and unload his griefs and get a basket of things to eat, and some old clothes to help him keep winter away. The North theoretically is wonderfully sympathetic on the negro question. The North wants the negro to vote at long range, and to have much to say in the South, and to be handled according to Northern theory. But as for helping him to get a load of wood if it is cold weather, or getting him out of trouble if he gets in, or doing anything for him that involv any personal effort, and as for toleration that is another story entirely.

I know the North and I know the South and I know the East and the West, and I would infinitely rather be a negro in the South than any where else in the world. And I would rather be a negro in the South than be some of the foreigners I have known in the North. The North weeps over the negro cabins in the South, but we have nothing that was ever so famous for dreadful home conditions as the old "Yellow Row," in Pittsburg, a region that was known from east to west as about the most abominable example of vile housing in the whole United States. We have negro cabins, but the State of North Carolina has no slums. If the negro lives in the cabin he has a real friend in the big house, and I doubt if there is a negro in North Carolina who cannot go to half a dozen white men and ask and be cordially granted a hundred favors that many a negro in Johnstown or any other Northern city would ask in vain.

I am not undertaking to criticize the people of Johnstown. They are the victims of a provision of Nature which has raised up warfare between races and species and types of individuals and stocks throughout all creation. In the South the two chief members of the human family, the white man and the black man have lived together until they have adjusted their relations, and more harmony is in evidence than any other place where I have seen race contacts. In Johnstown this problem is too new to be adjusted. Johnstown folks are excellent folks, but they are faced with something that is new and not understood. They rise up against what seems to threaten disaster, and the do not now how to handle the situation. It is the same way all over the North. Northern folks are just like Southern folks, just the same human attributes, and sentiments and emotions and friendships. But it takes time to build up a friendship with something that is new. We are always suspicious of anything we do not know. And so Johnstown is suspicious of the negro from the start and instead of trying to solve the negro's problem, which is Johnstown's problem, and the State's problem, and the nation's problem, Johnstown takes the short cut in the attempt to dodge the whole affair.

But that can't be done, for Johnstown is paying wages that attract men from any section that is paying lower wages, and the positive law that wages tend to equalize themselves, one section with another, will draw negroes from the South to the North. This thing will continue to go on, and more negroes will go North, and as a result wages in the South will go higher, but in the meantime a diffusion of colored folks will mix the northern population with a still further combination of race medley in the industrial centers and from what I can see the negro problem is becoming more the problem of the North for the future than it is of the South. It is a pity, for if the North could see what the two races are doing in the South, how the one yields to the other, and helps the other and how they get along together, breaking out here and there occasionally but in the great general way working together, the North would be spared a great tribulation that it is destined to face because it will not see these things. It is all right for the negro to go North if he wants to. This is his country far more than it is the country of the Hun, the Slav, and the others who come to America for a brief stay and neither speak the language nor share in its traditions or its strugle.

The negro has a black skin. That is neither my affair nor his, but the affair of the creator. He has in this country the best chance he can have any place. He is an American, and he has undertaken his share in the defense of the flag. His hands have helped to build this nation. He has as much right to go to Johnstown and to live there, or in any other state of the North as any other American has, and instead of being driven out of the town it is the business of Johnstown to see that those disposed to break the law are made amenable to the law. Unfortunately Johnstown cannot see this thing in the right way, and cannot enforce the law if the people saw the right. It is one of the conditions that must work itself out in its own way, and it is evident that the problem involves a lot of trouble for the industrial centers of the North. The negroes could help some by staying away from the crowded centers of the North. The North could help some by more kindly help to the negroes. But as both will do what they like the results will be what they will. I see no way to avoid what is coming. And grave as it is going to be I get a certain satisfaction always in seeing a Pharisee, excellent fellow though he may be in a general way, get what is coming to him from his conceit over his self-righteousness. The negro might be treated somewhat better in the South than he is. The white man might be treated better. We all might treat each other better. But the negro is treated better in the South than in the North now, and he is treated better than he is going to be treated in the North. In attracting many negroes North the North is about to learn an unhappy lesson, and while it is unfortunate no way seems to point the road out of the trouble. And while the North struggles with the problem the South will find greater prosperity for both whites and blacks in higher wages and generally bigger income in the South for all, white and black.

Easley to the Rescue

BY HUBERT C. HERRING

The incident related below is an actual happening. The name of the institution is suppressed at the instance of the author, who writes: "My good friends at the University of ——— are having a very difficult time inducing any men of liberal tendencies to come down into their country."

THE Stars and Stripes still fly over The University.

Thanks to Mr. Easley and his Civic Federation.

The National Student Forum, in its effort to promote friendship and understanding between European and American students, arranged a tour of the colleges by a select group of students. They came to The University. A brilliant young Englishman. A Czech filled with enthusiasm for the student Renaissance movement of his own country. And—tread gently—one of our late enemy, a brilliant lad of twenty-one years from the University of Heidelberg. They came to tell of the spiritual ideals of the youth of Europe. They came as harbingers of a new Europe, in which youth shall come to its own.

Thanks to Mr. Easley, their heresies did not foul the pure air of The University. The redoubtable Easley issued an encyclical. It told the dreadful truth. He waxed eloquent over the youth movement of Europe. He saw them leading in a concerted protest against war. They were, they must be . . . red . . . pacifists . . . socialists . . . anarchists. It was a delightful bit of literature. It fairly oozed with that unflinching, die-if-I-must-but-here-I-stand-so-help-me-God patriotism which has led friend Easley in his brave assault on windmills throughout his naive career. It reached The University. Faculty and students fairly lapped it up. They licked their chops over its fine phrases. They tightened their belts and cleaned their guns.

Enter the villains.

They were summoned into executive session. Faculty and students were represented. The cordial atmosphere of a juicy bit of beefsteak with twenty dogs looking it over.

The Inquisition was on.

They asked questions. "You would recommend that mere freshmen be lectured by Bolsheviks?" No answers were needed. It was not a trial—simply a conviction. It was made perfectly clear that The University would allow no foreigner to come over and tell us native Americans how to run our country. Not by a long shot.

A student approached the leader of the party, one of the officers of the Student Forum. He asked him about religion. It must be regretfully recorded that the answer indicated a shattered faith in Jonah, or something of the sort. This was enough. It was announced that these visitors not only refused to believe in the everlasting curse of war . . . but that they were heretics. The University may have faults . . . but it is firm for the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch . . . and the doctrine of the Trinity.

To aggravate the situation, one of the group remarked that a Negro college in Washington was equal to any white college which they had visited. We believe in keeping the Nigger in his place down our way.

Retribution was swift.

The University newspaper came out with emphatic headlines. "Parlor Bolshevism Fails To Impress Students." Naively it went on to say that "the four men's ideas did not meet with approval here." The four were reported as being "individualists, which is generally regarded here as synonymous with 'parlor Bolsheviks'."

Again they were summoned into solemn conclave.

They were firmly informed that the students were too young . . . that they were not prepared to hear such doctrines . . . and that, furthermore, the students did not wish to hear them.

Perfectly lucid.

The Y.M.C.A. secretary also made it clear that his organization was having difficulty getting on its feet . . . and that if it got the reputation of harboring Bolsheviks . . . it would suffer financially.

The spokesman concluded: "We are not telling you when to go . . . but we must tell you that there is danger that the students might get excited and throw you out." The spokesman for the students frankly answered: "This is a friendship tour. We have no other aim. If you do not wish to meet us on this basis, we gladly leave."

They left. In peace.

The University is at peace. No enemy breaks her tranquillity. She is free to believe in the divine sanction of war . . . and the eternity of confusion . . . and the Trinity . . . and the blood atonement. The president can peacefully continue his educational task of coaxing a few more unwilling dollars from a reluctant legislature.

But—where will the boys and girls get educated?

It whets my curiosity. What kind of two-headed calves are these dreadful students? I hear Antonin Palecek tell of the spiritual urge and intensity of the students of Czecho-Slovakia. Their vision of the new republic's mission. Their enthusiasm in intellectual pursuit. Their glowing idealism. I hear Joachim Friedrich pleading for a new age in which all of the beauty of life shall not be crushed out by the ponderous mechanism of modern industry. I hear him explain his own ambition—politics in his own country. "Each nation, after all, must clean house for itself." I hope it is true . . . that the youth of Europe . . . are looking to the stars.

But the Easley is undoubtedly right. It is dangerous doctrine . . . to talk about new worlds. So is Christianity dangerous. I suppose that is the reason it is not taught . . . very widely.

I am on the train. Four boys sit opposite me. Students from The University. One of them is reading the Outlook. I ask him: "Did you meet those foreign boys last week?"

"Huh, we kicked 'em out!"

"You don't stand for any new-fangled ideas down there, do you?"

"I should say not!"

Conversation lagged.

"Say," says he, "see that Nigger up there in this white coach?"

"Yes?"

"Well, we wouldn't stand for that in our State! Would kick him right out."

I wager that he believes in the inerrancy of the Scriptures . . . and the Ku Klux Klan. . . .

But where can he get an education?

Race Problem—1923

IS THERE A NEGRO PROBLEM?

IF SO, WHAT IS IT?

Star of Zion
Charlotte, N. C.

By Jesse O. Thomas.

The social and economic situations and different experiences in human relationship suggest or create different terms or phraseology. Some of them grow out of scientific analysis; others of them come down to us through age old traditions. If one took the time to scientifical y inquire into the basis or justification of many of our modes of expression with reference to specific situations, we would doubtless discover that many of our over-worked, mouth-filling terms or phraseology would be misnomeous. 2-1-23

Take the expression, "Negro problem;" I am not sure that there is a Negro problem. I am not sure that there is not a Negro problem. I doubt seriously if there is anybody in this country who is able to state with any degree of undisputed authenticity that there is or that there is not a Negro problem. That is to say, there may be somewhere along the lines of our human progress some conditions that are peculiar y racial that are shot through with racial instincts, impulses and idiosyncrasies. This may be true of all racial groups in a corresponding degree. But what America has learned to regard as a "Negro prob'em" has little or no racial significance. The fact that the Negro death rate is almost twice as high as the death rate of white people living in the same communities is referred to as a "Negro problem." The fact that a larger percentage of Negroes are ignorant than is correspondingly true of white people, constitutes another "Negro problem." The lack of paved streets and adequate lights, water supply, sewerage disposal facilities or what not become, again, a "Negro problem." When large numbers of foreigners are brought together in any American community who are without education and unable to speak the English language, they do not produce or create German, Irish, Italian, Polark- French, Jew, Russian, Greek or what not problems. They simply make necessary a problem of Americanization, of education. The conjested and overcrowded housing conditions and other evidences of lack of economic efficiency do not produce race or racial problems, simply problems in economic and social adjustment. And if any gr up, whether in America or elsewhere, becomes so impoverished that charitable aid is necessary because of starvation or hardship or otherwise, they are not racial problems of the group involved. When the American white man is ignorant and economical y unefficient, he does not produce a white race problem, but a prob em in social and economic adjustment. In the city of Atlanta, out of the 14,000 Negro children who are enrolled in our public schools, less than 2,000 of them are on full time schedu e. None of the Negro children are attending high schools provided for by public school funds of the city of Atlanta, as is true in many other cities throughout the south. This is not a "Negro problem;" it is simply a failure in the educational system to provide adequate educational facilities for Negro chi dren, and in the last analysis a problem in education. Negroes live in worse houses, more unsanitary and more hazardous to health and well being than the white people, taking it in mass by and large. But here again, this is not a race problem—a problem in economics. Because of the lack of education, lack of training, the lack of opportunity, the double economic standard together with racial prejudice, the average Negro's earning capacity is very much lower than the average white man's earning capacity. But this is not a "Negro problem." It is a problem of education and training, of elimination of racial prejudice and proscription. The Negro does not vote for the officers who are to make and administer the laws that he is empel ed to obey. But this is not a "Negro problem." It is a problem of enfranchisement or the result of disfranchisement, a matter of denying a group the right guaranteed them by the Constitution.

What I would seriously like to see is the Negro given the same advantages and opportunities, the same opportunity for training and development, a chance to earn and spend his money in a manner that will mean the highest possible development to himself and family, unrestricted, unmolested and undisturbed, and a chance to move about to serve and spend himse f and his energies to the advancement of human progress without interference in so far as he remains in harmony with the law governing other individuals; the same chance for education, the same chance for economic development; the same guarantee for protection of life and limb and then see whether there still remains a problem peculiar to his racial group. In other words, let's take out the educational, economic, social and political prob ems and see if there still remains that which may be called a "Negro problem."

Editorial Excerpts

Savannah Tribune

A PLEA FOR NEGRO GIRLS

"In the matter of the Negro, especially the Negro in the South, have you ever considered what the Negro race accomplished in half a century?

Savannah Tribune

Have you ever considered the handicaps under which the race has labored, lived, survived and progressed?

Have you compared the race with that of the Indian? The Negro race of half a century, the Indian of five hundred centuries? 3/15/23

Have you ever considered the helplessness of the Negro?

Have you considered him a part of the human race as much a part of it as yourself and so entitled to the best he can get out of life as much as you are entitled to it?

Have you ever thought of his courage in trying to improve himself and his race?

Have you ridiculed him and his efforts? Or have you given him a word of encouragement when you could?

Have you thought of him as a fool for having ambitions?

It might be well for everyone to consider all of these things in regard to the Negro. It might make for a better world; it could not make for a worse one. It must be a terrible thing to face the great God, sometime, bearing the crime of wrong against a helpless, inoffensive Negro.

Not long ago there came to this desk a little book written by a Negro, among other things, the writer appealed to white people, especially to white men, for protection for young Negro girls.

It was a tremendous appeal; simply made and quietly—inoffensively. But under the quiet simplicity of it throbbed a gigantic menace, gigantic force.

But did you ever think about the helplessness of Negro girls? There are some very nice Negro girls, virtuous, modest, intelligent, ambitious. Did you ever come in contact with some of these? If not, you should sometime go out to some of the Negro educational institutions of Nashville, and you will be astounded at what you will find.

Among those girls, also, who go out to service, there are some very nice girls; not so well educated as some, still, many of them, most of them, fairly well educated, and well behaved, honest, ambitious and—helpless.

The helplessness of the Negroes is a serious thought. The helplessness of the Negro girls is a gigantic tragedy.

Think about it, sometime; preach about it; appeal to men, also to women for protection for Negro girls. It will be a fine missionary move on your part; a fine thing in the sight of God, when you shall come before him—that day.

How often is a Negro youth killed while trying to protect a Negro girl with whom he is in company? And what else could he do, when danger threatens that girl, but defend her—if there is a spark of manliness in him? Yet he does it, maybe, knowing surely that it may cost him his life. Do you ever think of a young Negro like that as a hero?

Why not every man and woman try to give their protection to those young Negro girls who have no protection? It is a matter so easily accomplished, so necessary, so certain of magnificent results.

Young Negro girls go into the homes of white people to work, and this sometimes proves their everlasting ruin. Some of them are silly, naturally; but some are thoughtful and earnest and ambitious; and all of them are helpless. Why not protect the young girls, all young girls, white, colored—all? It will make for a better world, and be a source of quiet happiness when one shall come to die.

The Negro has struggled along, doing for his own, fighting for his own, working for his own, dying for his own. And his toil, his love, and his ambitions, have not been in vain; the race has progressed splendidly. But there is a point at which his power tops; his affections cannot surmount; his courage cannot bridge; that is the protection of his daughters, his sisters, the girls of his race, his fireside.

Why not preach protection for these. It will be a theme well pleasing to the Maker of men, all men.—Will Aden Dromgrole in the Nashville Banner.

NEGRO SUPERIOR TO WHITE

Says DuDois In "Smart Set."

Negro Star
Wichita, Kansas

(By The Associated Negro Press.)

Negroes are superior to whites, asserts Dr W. E. B. DuBois in an article entitled "The Superior Race" and published in the March number of "The Smart Set" magazine (25 West 45th Street, New York City.) Dr. DuBois is editor of the Crisis and a member of the Board of Directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The article is written in satirical form, as a conversation with an imaginary white friend. 3/16/23

"'Compare humanity at its best or worst with the ideal," says Dr. DuBois "and humanity suffers. But black folk in most attributes of physical beauty, in line and height and curve, have the same forms as whites and differ only in small details of color hair and curve of countenance. Now can there by any question but that as colors bronze, mahogany, coffee and gold are far more lovel.er than pink, gray and marble? Hair is a matter of taste. Some will have it drab and stringy and others in a gray, woven, unmoving mass. Most of us like it somewhere between, in tiny tendrils, smoking curls and sweeping curves. I have loved all these varieties in my day. I prefer the crinky kind, almost wavy, in black, brown and glistening. In faces I hate straight features; needles and razors may be sharp—but beautiful never."

In a raking criticism of the modern factory system and industrialism produced by the white man, Dr DuBois asserts the Negro's sense of beauty has protected him from it:

"Art is not simply works of art; it is the spirit that knows Beauty, that has music in its soul and the color of sunsets in its headkerchiefs; that can dance on a flaming world and make the world dance, too. Such is the soul of the Negro.

"Why, do you know the two finest things in the industry of the West, finer than factory, shop or ship? One is the black laborers' Saturday off. Neither the whip of the driver, nor starvation wage, nor the disgust of the Yankee, nor the call of the cotton crops, has yet convinced the common black variety of plantation laborer that one day in the week is enough for rest and play. He wants two days. And, from California to Texas, from Florida to Trinidad, he takes two days while the planter screams and curses. They have beaten the English slavery, the French and German peasants and the North Italian contadini into twelve-hour, six-day slaves. They crushed the Chinese and Indian coolie into a twenty-four-hour beast of burden; they have even made the American, free, white and twenty-one, believe that daily toil is one of the Ten Commandments. But not the Negro. From Monday to Friday the field hand is a slave; then for forty-eight golden hours he is free, and through these same forty-eight hours he may yet free the dumb, driven cattle of the world.

"Then the second thing, laughter. This race has the greatest of the gifts of God, laughter. It dances and sings; it is humble; it longs to learn; it loves men, it loves women. It is frankly, boldly, deliciously human in an artificial and hypocritical land. If you will hear men laugh, go to Guinea, "Black Bottom," "Niggertown," Harlem. If you want to feel humor too exquisite and subtle for translation, sit invisibly among a gang of Negro workers. The white world has its gibes and cruel caricatures; it has its loud guffaws, but to the black world alone belongs the delicious chuckles."

The present danger to white civilization is its fear of truth, according to Dr. DuBois:

"We have raised Propaganda to capital "P" and elaborated an art, almost a science of how one may make the world believe what is not true, provided the untruth is a widely wished-for thing like the probable extermination of Negroes, the failure of the Chinese Republic, the incapacity of India for self-rule, the failure of Russian Revolution. When in other days the world lied, it was to a world that expected lies and consciously defended them; when the world lies today it is to a world that pretends to be true."

Whereat a white friend, with whom Dr. DuBois purport to be talking, makes the following comment:

"In other words, according to you, white folk are about the meanest and lowest on earth."

And Dr DuBois rejoins:

"They are human, even as you and I."

King Silence Reigns In Dixie--Once Land of Barnyard Gaiety

3-15-23

Atlanta Independent Atlanta Ga.

BY DR. H. R. BUTLER.

Some few years ago I traveled through Georgia and other Southern states, and though underneath the surface there were much sadness, fear, privation and sorrow, yet outwardly, among the colored group of people, there were, never the less, here and there, evidences of happiness and a desire to stick to the farm. This time of the year (the Spring season) the old farms were alive with activities; the hill sides and the valleys would be resounding with the voices of the plowmen with the "Gee," "haw," "back," "get up, sir"; then back in the barn yard, listen to the concert of the fowls; the cackle of the laying hens, the answer of the roosters—then the crow of defiance; the gobble of the turkey, as he struts and drags his wings against the ground; hear the "potrack, potrack" of the guinea-fowls, the lowing of the cows, the squeal of the pigs and the bark of the faithful old dog; the smell of guano and the preparing of the earth and seed all pointed to the activities of Spring and the approaching busy Summer for a half free and half slave people.

This was a picture of just a few years back; a picture of before the late world war. Now, where all that activity, preparation and farm music were going on, SILENCE reigns there alone. The farm cabins are falling down, they have been left vacant by the northward migration, they are deserted; that half satisfied voice of the farmer is silent; there is no barn-yard concert, it is over; the hens don't lay and cackle any more, the turkeys don't gobble any more and the old dog doesn't bark, his forsaken bones are bleaching out yonder on the hill side. There are only here and there a few "gees" and "haws"; little mixing and sowing of seed; it is only now and then one gets a whiff of that good old rich guano; the tenants, renting farmers and even land owners, Arab-like, have stacked their tents and gone. Up yonder at the big house where there was once laughter and the happy voices of the little white children is silence too. They have gone away to school or to the cities in search of education or work other than farming. A sad few are in the schools and colleges while the greater number of them are in large cities in factories, apartment stores, motormen, conductors and policemen; and so, they, too, have left the old farm. And then, there is another pathetic side to this "TRECK" to the North; it is this: up yonder at the big house where the Madame once sat at the piano and played, "My Old Kentucky Home," "Suwanee River," and "Bring Back Ye Days of Old," things are not what they used to be. The piano, too, is silent. The Madame is resting in a little grave in the church yard yonder, and when the morning sun is well up in the sky the trembling form of the old boss comes out of the old home and he looks this way and then that way, and finally his sad dim eyes look in the direction of that little mound in the church yard, and he would be gone to the city too, but he does not want to get too far off from that little mound in the church yard; then he wends his way back into the old home where he finds an old colored servant standing by him until the very last when even children have gone away.

And now grass, weeds and shrubbery are growing where then cotton blossomed and bloomed. One rides or walks miles and passes vacant farm house after vacant farm house and hears only the faint echo of his own voice beating against the distant hills. If one meets a few persons of either group the expressions of their faces tell sad stories. The faces of most of the colored group show fear, anxiety, with a some sort of look as to say, "Who will deliver me from this body of death"? The white group carries almost a similar expression on their faces; is it not pathetic that such a state of affairs should exist among a Christian people and in a Christian land? Yes, but it exists just the same. Among Christian people this feeling of distrust and fear should not be. In the thirteenth chapter of John and the 34th and 35th verses, we read, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall ALL men know that ye are my disciples, IF YE HAVE LOVE TO ONE ANOTHER." Here is the final and last TEST Jesus put right up to his disciples and Peter and Judas failed to qualify; Peter, however, came back, but poor old Judas (and we have many of his type today) went HIS way and never came back. How many Christians of both racial groups today can measure up to Jesus' standard of Christianity—"LOVE YE ONE ANOTHER." Love a Christian because he or she is a Christian—not because she or he is a white or colored Christian. There is nothing to that. The Good Book says further on this point, "He that says he loves God whom he hath not seen, and hateth his brother, whom he hath seen, is a liar and the truth is NOT in HIM." And so here we are standing so-called Christians at the very gates of hell-whited sepulchers.

I was going on to say that if both racial groups had real Christianity down deep in their souls there would be, practically, no vacant farm houses in the country today. The races would be happy and contented, both proceeding along their respective lines doing right and justice to each other. I know there are some good Christian souls among each group laboring and praying for a brighter and better day, but there are so very few as compared to the far reaching need; but let us sing on, and pray on, and toil on, to the end that the barn-yard concerts will soon be heard again, that the big house will take on new life, that good homes will take the place of the old decayed cabins, that once again we will hear the happy voices of the children of both racial groups playing in their respective yards, and that cotton and corn will be growing where now grass and weeds are growing and that this SILENCE will be gone never to return, and in its stead CHRISTIANITY will reign FOREVER and FOREVER.

DR. DuBOIS' TEN MISTAKES

"BACK TO AFRICA," by Dr. W. E. Burghardt Du Bois, the February issue of the Century Magazine, is one of th most brilliant bits of fiction and prose poetry that eve emanated from the facile pen of that gifted writer. Never did h genius as a short-story teller shine more resplendently. Prose and poetry fact and fancy, fiction and history, and imagination and reality were so subtly blended and flowed so easily on the prose cadences of Dr. D Bois' inimitable style that the reader finds it difficult to tell when D Du Bois is envisaging reality and when imagining.

By getting some scraps of information here and there and b bringing his imagination into play, Dr. Du Bois has created an imag nary Marcus Garvey and an imaginary Universal Negro Improvemer Association which is both like and unlike the real person and the re organization. In his essay on Alexander Crumwell, Dr. Du Bois, b his poetic imagination and his magic style, made a real man look lik an imaginary portrait. In his "Back to Africa" he made an imaginar portrait and an imaginary organization look like a real man and a rea organization.

The same poetic description and philosophic musings which char acterized "The Souls of Black Folk" and "Darkwater" may be observe in the article that we are now discussing. In his pen pictures of H Harlem at the beginning and ending of his article; in his philosophi reflections upon the Negro whirlpool and other smaller swirlings affe ing the stream of American life, upon Garvey's movement represent something spiritual, upon the Negro's craving for manhood and in showing that Garvey is a "type of dark man whom the white world making daily—moulding, marring, tossing in the air"—Dr. Du B writes in the vein that gave "Souls of Black Folk" and "Darkwate their deserved fame.

Dr. Du Bois an Impressionist and Not a Realist

And yet the reader somehow feels that with all the poetic descri tions, pensive musings and philosophical reflections there is yet som thing lacking, and that is a gripping hold upon reality. "Back to Africa like "The Souls of Black Folk," represents more the subjective impre sion which the Garvey movement made upon the sensitive mind of D Du Bois than an objective presentation of the movement as really is. Dr. Du Bois is more of an impressionistic rather than realist painter. He gets a general impression and a few general outlines, an then his imagination completes the picture.

In the case of Marcus Garvey and the U. N. I. A., Garvey w thirty-three years old and the U. N. I. A. two and a half years old befo Dr. Du Bois began to consider them seriously. He heard that Jamaican harangued the crowds from a soap box in Harlem, organize thirteen in a small room, started a weekly paper and talked about build ing factories and operating a steamship line, but he paid no attention t what he regarded as a transient ebullition of emotion.

Consequently, when in August, 1920, Garvey three times congeste the streets of Harlem with a parade, packed Madison Square Garden t the very doors and held an international convention for thirty-one day in a Liberty Hall with twice the seating capacity of any Negro churc in the world—filling it in the daytime, overcrowding it at night, an with thousands turned away from the Sunday evening services—th white people began to ask, "What does it all mean?" Quite naturall they would ask Dr. Du Bois, a recognized Negro leader and write about it. He knew very little about it. For three months he wandere in the wilderness, picking up scraps of information from former official and friends of present officials, getting nearly all of his informatio second hand. The result was the sketchy article in the Crisis i January, 1921.

Then Dr. Du Bois began seriously to study Marcus Garvey and the movement he had launched. But the U. N. I. A. was too big and too complex and it had too many ramifications all over the world to be easily focussed. The late Prof. Josiah Royce, Harvard's famous meta-physician, once said that it was very difficult to convince a man or change his views by merely arguing with him, for his point of view and his ideas are the resultant of his character, temperament, education, environment and the experiences that he has passed through. That is quite true.

It is very difficult to understand the psychic reactions of a man and his dominant motifs when you don't meet him or don't begin to study him until he is thirty-three. To really know him you must know his parents, his early teachers and associates and early environment. To really know him you must know him in his boyhood, his youth and early manhood; you must know the men who inspired him, the forces that ashioned and shaped him, the influences that operated upon him and he pleasant or rough experiences, the boosts or hard knocks that colored his ways of thinking. You can't simply see him as a man and then imagine what his previous experiences had been.

So is it with a movement. When Dr. Du Bois first began really to study the U. N. I. A. it was like a mighty river rushing at high speed toward the ocean of destiny, bearing upon its bosom the hopes, strivings and aspirations of a struggling race. He did not know what tributaries fed the stream, what ideas went into the making and what men made their contributions to the movement. Consequently, with only scrap of information at his command, he had to draw considerably upon hi imagination.

Thus Dr. Du Bois intimates that the "Back to Africa" idea was th only dominant idea in the Garvey movement. But the two ideas—the colonization and empire idea—which formed the "Back to Africa" idea were only two of the eight ideas which went into the formation of the Universal Negro Improvement Association. The other six ideas were forming a confraternity of the black people of the world, protesting against caste prejudice and proscription which ignored the worth of a man and looked solely at his color, teaching black men to respect themselves and each other, building factories, launching a steamship line and developing Liberia industrially and commercially.

Dr. Du Bois' Ten Mistakes

Dr. Du Bois' Century Magazine article is so brilliant and perfect a literary creation that we hate to dissect it. It is like analyzing the beauty and fragrance of a rose and telling what chemical elements entered into its composition. But as Dr. Du Bois is writing history, we must consider his article as history and not as a magnificent bit of prose poetry. These ten mistakes are not mistakes of interpretation, but of historical facts.

Mistake No. 1.—Dr. Du Bois, on page 539 of the Century Magazine, says of Garvey: "Beside him were 'potentates'!" Answer: In reality there was only one potentate, Gabriel M. Johnson of Monrovia.

Mistake No. 2. Dr. Du Bois, on page 539, says: "Before him knelt a succession of several colored gentlemen. . . . Among the lucky recipients of titles was the former private secretary of Booker T. Washington." Answer: In reality Dr. Emmet J. Scott was in Washington, D. C., and did not attend the convention.

Mistake No. 3. On page 541 of the Century Magazine Dr. Du Bois says, "Then came the new economic demand for Negro peasant labor on the Panama Canal." Answer: But Colonel Goethals in his book, "How I Built the Panama Canal," states that many West Indians were employed as engineers and mechanics, and many Italians as laborers.

Mistake No. 4. Dr. Du Bois, on page 541 of the Century Magazine, says that "West Indians began to migrate in larger numbers to America during the World War." Answer: In reality West Indians began to migrate to America in 1895, when the Brussels conference barred and boycotted West Indian and imported sugar and when the German beet sugar began to thrive. See article on Brussels in the Encyclopædia Britannica. It would be advisable for the learned scholar to also read Crabbe's "Guide to the British West Indies."

Mistake No. 5. On page 543 of the Century Magazine Dr. Du Bois refers to Marcus Garvey as "This black peasant of Jamaica." Answer: Marcus Garvey never worked as a farmer or agricultural laborer. When he quit school at the age of sixteen he worked four years as a printer, four years as a foreman of printing. Since then he has traveled and studied conditions in Europe and other parts of the world, edited newspapers and formed organizations.

Mistake No. 6. Dr. Du Bois says of the Yarmouth, the first steamship of the Black Star Line, "She made three trips to the West Indies in three years." Answer: In reality she made three trips in nine months.

Mistake No. 7. On page 544 of the Century Magazine Dr. Du Bois says, "Thus the bubble of Garveyism burst." Answer: There are still over 800 well-organized divisions functioning as they did before the delegates went to the League of Nations from the August convention of 1922.

Mistake No. 8. On page 545 of the Century Magazine Dr. Du Bois says, "He did not quite dare call himself King Marcus I, but he sunned himself a while in the address of 'your Majesty.' Answer: If Dr. Du Bois would attend the meetings in Liberty Hall or read The Negro World carefully he would learn that Marcus Garvey's official title is "Your Excellency."

Mistake No. 9. On page 546 of the Century Magazine Dr. Du Bois says of the U. N. I. A., "Its main and moving nucleus has been a knot of black Jamaican peasants resident in America." Answer: If Dr. Du Bois had carefully observed the parades of 1920 he would have seen over a score of bright, resplendent banners with Barbados, Jamaica, Grenada, St. Kitts, Antigua, Cuba, Haiti, Porto Rico, Santo Domingo, Trinidad, Demerara, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Washington, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, etc., emblazoned upon them. These banners indicated that the groups of from ten to one hundred who marched behind them were born in the country, island or State designated on the banners, and that the Universal Negro Improvement Association is recruited, not from the island of Jamaica, but from the black peoples of the world. Two-thirds of the two-score divisions, whose membership runs into the four figures, are located in the United States of America.

Mistake No. 10. Dr. Du Bois, on page 548 of the Century Magazine says: "As compared with the homes, the business, the church, Garvey's basement represents nothing in accomplishment and only waste in attempt."

Answer: On page 543 of the Century Magazine Dr. Du Bois states that the Yarmouth made "three trips to the West Indies"; that "Garvey sent the Kanawa down to do a small carrying trade between the West Indian islands," and that with the Shadyside "he carried excursionists up and down the Hudson during one summer." On page 544 he states that Garvey "has established a number of local grocery stores in Harlem and one or two shops, including a laundry and a printing press." We will state that the printing press includes a Goss supplement press, a steam table, a stereotyping machine, four linotype machines and smaller presses for job printing. Does the learned doctor regard these as accomplishments?

Conclusion

Dr. Du Bois' article is written from the standpoint of a disinterested white man who studied the U. N. I. A. from long range and not from the standpoint of a racial leader who has kept his finger on the pulse-beat of the race that he is supposed to represent. When he characterizes the Black Star Line and the U. N. I. A. "only waste in attempt," it indicates that he did not realize how Negrodom, how the black world was thrilled and electrified when it learned that a Jamaican and a New York organization had got out of the traditional ruts of church, lodge, agitation and small business into big business, trade and commerce, that the Negro's industrial and commercial horizon was about to be enlarged, that new avenues of employment were about to be opened up to black men and black women, and that the Negro was about to leave his circling eddies and enter the stream of world commerce. It was the new spirit—the spirit of initiative and adventure—that Marcus Garvey and the U. N. I. A. represented—the Divine urge of progress—that was Garvey's contribution to the spiritual inheritance of the race.

WILLIAM H. FERRIS.

The August convention of 1920, with delegates from nearly every State in the Union, from Cuba, Haiti, Santo Domingo, Porto Rico, the West Indies, Central America, South America, Liberia, Sierra Leone, the Gold Coast and South Africa, assembled to put over an industrial program as well as to perfect a fraternal organization and voice the black man's grievance at the wrongs and injustices to which he was subjected, was something new in Negro history. The distinguished men of color who attended that convention, either as delegates or visitors, the crowds that congested Madison Square Garden the opening night and Liberty Hall for thirty consecutive nights, and the world publicity that that convention received, and the crowds and publicity given to the conventions of 1921 and 1922, indicates that the world recognized that the black man's soul was awakened and that a new dynamic force and impulse was operating in the black man's mind.

The world somehow recognized that the spirit of progress, of adventure and achievement on a colossal scale was stirring in his mind. Unfortunately some of the representatives of the U. N. I. A. allowed the aspects that the white press emphasized to sidetrack them from the main line that brought the immense hosts together.

A study of the psychology of religion and a comparative study of religion indicates that any religion which grips large masses of mankind gets its power not on account of its error but on account of the truth that it contains, on account of its powerful appeal to what is basic and fundamental in human nature. So it was with the U. N. I. A. It taught the Negro to think in international terms and gave him a vision of world politics and world commerce. It enlarged his mental horizon and the boundaries of his mind. It liberated his imagination and give him new ideas. And this, according to Dr. Coué, is something worth while. It taught the Negro to think and feel that he was a man and could play a man's part in the affairs of men. For this reason it will live on as an uplifting psychic influence.

Five years is a brief moment in the life of an organization or corporation. If Dr. Du Bois knows of any Negro corporation that at any time within the brief space of five years marshaled as many members as the U. N. I. A. has, invested as much money in industrial and commercial enterprises and gave as much employment to men and women of color, we would be grateful for the information.

Driving the Negroes Out.

For four or five years or thereabouts the South has complained of the exodus of negroes. It has experienced a shortage in common labor because of the leaving of negroes for the North. This adds considerably to the cost of living in that part of the country, and if it shall be continued will revolutionalize the industrial and agricultural, and to some extent the domestic life of the people there. The negro gave the South cheap labor and cheap domestic service, two very important items in the economic prosperity of the section. Yet, while the Southerner complains, he acts as though he wished to get rid of the negro. His course is most inconsistent with his complaints.

Without considering at all the criminal, which is the principal, aspect of the disturbance at Rosewood, Florida, the economic aspect is decidedly injurious to the maintenance of economic conditions in the South. The disturbance is, of course, considered here as only one of many such things that tend to the same result. How can the people of that part of the country expect the negro to stay there while they continue to treat him in this manner? The Ku Klux Klan has as one of its purposes the putting of a curb upon the negroes. In such things as these the people of the South foolishly attack all the negroes or at least in each instance they attack many negroes for the misdeed of one. Is it any wonder that the negroes, seeing that all are blamed and many punished for the evil works of a few, wish to leave for places in which the one doing evil is the one punished, and not all his friends and neighbors indiscriminately? Of course, there are many other things in the treatment of the negro in the South that have a tendency to drive him away from that part of the country. But these things, at least, are certain to drive many negroes away.

It would appear the part of wisdom for Southerners to study out and adopt some plan of conciliation, some scheme whereby the negro would be glad to stay in that part of the country which has become virtually his home. It is not necessary to give him social equality or to pamper him. If the ignorant whites of the South can be controlled, the task will be made easier for the better element, for all the latter will have to do then will be to begin an era of justice and fairness to the colored man. It may be urged in extenuation of the Rosewood affair that the blacks aided a criminal. This is not true, for it cannot be true that a whole community of negroes acted in concert in such a matter. But it was easier to attack the community than to ferret out and arrest or kill, if they resisted, the actual criminals. In doing this, the whites gave the negroes ground for believing that there is no justice in the South for the black. No man, whatever his color, will tolerate injustice. He will either fight against it or flee from it. The negroes of the South are not powerful enough to fight injustice there, so they flee from it. The whites can easily, if they will, remove this fundamental cause of their complaints.

Mayor Sims Speaks At Negro Y. M. C. A.

2-26-23

Speaking before the colored branch of the Y. M. C. A. Sunday, Mayor Walter A. Sims pledged his support in an effort to establish an era of good will. He said that the South was the best place for the highest efforts of the colored race, and that such organizations as the Y. M. C. A. presented the best avenue through which to work. Dr. Wilkins, chairman of the membership campaign, told Mayor Sims that he would always find the colored people anxious to co-operate for a biger and better Atlanta.

Race Problem-1923
United States

Only He That Rules Justly Has the Right to Rule

Atlanta Independent 1-4-23

The most intricate question up for settlement between the races and which menaces or gives the white man the most concern, is the one of political domination. Without the remotest possibility of realization, somehow or another, the white man has worked himself into such a frenzy that he lives in frightful dread of Negro dominancy all the time. There should be no question as to who should control in government affairs in America so long as the economic, industrial and intellectual equipment of races is so uneven. The fittest person, or class of persons, should control and direct the affairs of state in the interest of all the people. The man who rules wrong, has no just right to rule, and ought not to be permitted to dominate, it makes no difference what his color is. The right to control is not, nor ought to be, based upon the color of any man's skin, but upon his fitness and ability to direct the affairs of government without fear or favor, in the interests of all the people. The individual who is not large enough to separate his prejudices and personal feelings from his public duties, ought not to be trusted with responsibility of government. Furthermore, the man, be he black or white, president or governor, mayor or councilman, who arrogates to himself privileges and advantages which he denies a less fortunate fellow individual, is not only unfit to be trusted with the affairs of the people, but is dishonest, and ought to be put down. Government was instituted for the benefit and protection of all the people, and not a part of them. And when a government, federal, state or municipal, becomes destructive of these just and beneficial ends, it ought not to exist. This brings us down to Atlanta as a municipality, and the spirit in which her affairs are administered. It is a mistaken idea that this is a white man's government, and the city has the right to clothe white men with economic, industrial and commercial opportunities denied to black men. The equities and opportunities issuing from the government, of right, ought to be honestly and equally distributed among the citizens. And any set of men charged with the responsibility of administration, who will deny one class of citizens their just rights in the interest of a favored class, are not fit to administer the people's affairs.

It is not an uncommon thing to hear some white man say this is a white man's country, or hear some Negro say this is a white man's town, and Negroes have no rights. Now, one is about as guilty of this mischief making speech as the other. In either case the individual is wrong. Atlanta belongs to every citizen, whether he be white or black, who does not violate her law, and contributes in every way possible to upbuild her fortunes. The Negro must not abdicate any right or privilege by conduct or act. He must feel a just pride in every movement looking to the upbuilding of the municipality. He must recognize and appreciate the city's utilities, franchises and privileges as the common property of all the people and not the property of the white man. We must not vote against bonds because we feel that the water mains and street pavements will not reach our settlement. The city government is a pauper and only has a dollar when it takes one out of the citizen's pocket by taxation. Again the city is like the individual; it can not do everything at once. Water mains and pavement can not be run down every street at the same time. The way to show that we are parts and parcels of the municipality is not by boasting or raising the color question by hollering, "Caze we are niggers," every time a thing does not go our way. But the way to do it is to be public spirited, take a helpful hand in everything that looks like the uplift of the community and to stand on our merits as men, forgetting that we are Negroes. It is a mistaken idea that the white man is the city, whether it lurks in the head of the Negro or the white man. And if any white man in authority undertakes to administer the municipality according to this view, he is unfit for the position he dishonors, and ought to be put out. The city is the life, thought, conscience and character of all the people, and as the Negro is part and parcel of the people, and has life, thought, conscience and character, he constitutes a part of the municipality and must be taken into the equation in everything which affects the municipal life. If there is a man in the city council of Atlanta who does not recognize and exercise these wise, just and humane principles of economic, industrial and commercial equality, every citizen with a conscience wants him to resign.

In a short time the citizens of Atlanta will be called upon to authorize by their votes the issuance of $500,000 in bonds to improve the public utilities. This issue will be submitted to the qualified voters, not the white men or the black men, but to every man that is a citizen, and it will be as much the Negro's duty to go to the polls and vote yes, or no, as it will be the white man's. If you are not qualified, get right and act the part of a man. The way to show that Atlanta is not a white man's town is to place curselves in a position to participate in the administration of her affairs. The question of whether we will be a part of the municipality, in fact, is one of personal selection. The individual alone can determine that question himself. It matters not what the white man says, we alone can regulate that fact and fix our places in the community.

Washington Hears Neval H. Thomas in Perry Howard Denunciation—Enthusiastic Audience Hears Race Betrayer Flayed

Washington, D. C.—In his speech before a large audience at the Y. M. C. A. on Sunday afternoon Neval H. Thomas of the Dunbar High School denounced the abandonment of the race by Mr. Perry W. Howard in the nation-wide fight on the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill. It will be remembered that Howard wrote letters to Senator du Pont and other Senators asking that they give no support to the Dyer Bill because the National Associaton for the Advancement of Colored People was leading the fight for it. This furnished a good alibi for the Senate leaders who were luke warm on the bill. This letter was discovered to the astonishment of Mr. Howard as he was posing as a champion for it. His answer in the press and in a speech before the Y. M. C. A. was a series of evasions, mud-slinging, and preposterous claims of growing poorer in racial service. He even went so far as to put blame for writing it upon hs faithful but helpless secretary.

"What will the Senate and even Senator du Pont himself, think of Negro Statesmanship, when a man holding the highest executive appointment the race has received has no higher sense of responsibility to his constituency than to surrender it to the mob," the speaker exclaimed. "I am truly glad that the Senate has on its permanent record the statesmanship of Revels, Bruce, Lynch Roney. Robert Brown Elliot, and the other Negro political leaders of the Reconstruction ,so that it can see that Perry Howard in no way interprets the splendid idealism of the Negro to the white race. Read and re-read the eloquent, learned, and race-loving speech of Robert Brown Elliot in the American Congress on Charles Sumner's last birthday, January 6, 1874, and then compare it with the coarse, grovelling, demagogic rot of Perry Howard. Howard must remember that he holds no private position as he thinks he holds. He is in his high position in recognition of our existence and ballot of this country, hence he should be our ambasasdor to the court of power to tell those who dominate this country what the Negro wants. Instead he has flown in the face (on the sly, however, as he never expected to be found out) of the unanimous wish and aspiration of the race he is supposed to represent."

"My friends," he continued, "don't you think that this discovery will make any change in the spirit and loyalty of Perry Howard. It will simply make him more careful. After this he won't write; he will talk. Can he not see that the race is against him? When he entered this hall the other Sunday to explain himself, there was not a single handclap in the vast audience, and Pickens' reply was frequently interrupted with thunderous applause. Think of his alibi! He says his letter to Senators was a private letter. A private letter written to big public men on a fundamental public issue. That alibi is as stupid as it is dishonest. He says again that his secretary wrote it. How false, yet his faithful, but helpless secretary must not say a word. Let Perry Howard have his fine properties in Chicago, his plantations in Mississippi, his cash and fine position at our expense, but let us keep the faith of the fathers and submerge every selfish consideration in the single thought of service to our noble race."

"Mr. Howard is certainly an enlightened leader," the speaker continued. "He told the Senators not to pass the Anti-Lynching Bill because the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was sponsor for it, and was leading the fight. In other words he said that he wanted his race, and even his own little children exposed to the flames of the savage mob because our great organization was spending its soul and treasure in their defense. Yet this is the great organization which only this week stood before the Supreme Court of the United States in the defense of the outraged victims of personal and judicial lynching in the benighted state of Arkansas. This same learned lawyer, this same devoted lover of his fellow man, the Honorable Moorfield Storey, secured a unanimous decision against residential segregation from this same tribunal four years ago without one cent's expense to the colored people. At this very hour he, as one of the most illustrious of Harvard's great alumni, is leading the fight against President Lowell's Ku Klux policy in that great seat of learning. Yet this is the organization, and this is the mighty man whose efforts to save our country Mr Howard wants the Senate to ignore."

"Even in this southern community we have been able to achieve many notable victories. Our devoted president and our able and vigilant executive secretary recently discovered two cases of peonage right here in the nation's capital and emancipated the victims. Our local branch has stood on the firing line for ten years securing better school facilities for your children, positions in the civil service for successful candidates whom the authorities were trying to keep out, the razing of insulting signs in public places, and dozens of other victories over the southern spirit. It has fought many without success as yet, but we intend to keep in the fight until our city and our country are free from prejudice, and our fellow-countrymen consider that the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments are as sacred as the 18th, and until they know that insistence upon one, and outrage upon another, imperils our entire governmental structure."

It Seems to Me

By Heywood Broun

A. Lawrence Lowell has done much to simplify the education of Heywood Broun 3d. We know now that he isn't going to Harvard. Probably Mr. Lowell feels himself capable of bearing this deprivation quite calmly, but just let him wait. Let him wait thirteen years.

N Y C WORLD

It is a brisk November day and the wind favors the team defending the south goal. Harvard has the ball on Yale's five-yard line, but it is fourth down, with a yard and a half to go. The Crimson players move out of the scrimmage line and huddle together to decide what play they shall employ in the moment of crisis.

"I think we ought to give the ball to Broun," says the captain.

"Broun?" answers the quarterback. "Are you mad?"

"Why mad?" inquires the captain.

"Pull yourself together," cries the quarterback. "Take thought. Take heed. Broun is at Yale."

After the Harvard team has been held for downs we shall make no attempt to seek out Lowell and rub it in. Instead, it is our intention to wait until young Broun makes his seventy-seven yard run, bowling over Crimson tacklers at every stride. Undoubtedly we shall watch this spectacle with mingled pride and pain. Perhaps the pain of it might be quite unendurable if it were not for the fact that we have thought of a device. Whenever the elusive Broun straightarms a Harvard tackler we intend to visualize the face of the unfortunate as that of A. Lawrence Lowell.

It would not be fair for us to leave the impression that H. 3d is already broad and liberal in regard to the race questions which bother Mr. Lowell so mightily. About a year ago he raised an awful ruction when we suddenly announced that we would not be home to dinner. He contended that our departure would leave him all alone. When we pointed out the fallacy of this by mentioning the cook and his nurse, he answered, "Can't I have any white people to eat with?"

And it was only a few weeks later that he informed us that he couldn't play with Margaret any more. We didn't know who Margaret was, and yet the break seemed unfortunate. We asked him why he couldn't play with Margaret any more, and he said, "Because she's a Jew." Naturally that suggested another inquiry. "Because the Jews killed Christ," said H. 3d.

No, at the present moment H. 3d is no more intelligent in his attitude toward race questions than the President of Harvard University, and he will be five on his next birthday.

Of course H. 3d is going to grow out of all that rubbish. He may pick up catchwords from young Ku Kluxers, but after all he is a reasonable human being and we can argue with him and even spank him. In the case of Lowell both remedies seem to be quite impossible, since we see by The World that he makes it a rule never to discuss anything with newspaper persons.

We also see by The World that "Harvard, with the prejudices of a summer hotel; Harvard, with the standards of a country club, is not the Harvard of her greatest sons. It is not the Harvard of Eliot or Emerson or William James"——

Well said, but what we are most conscious of is the fact that it isn't the Harvard of Lewis and Matthews and Gourdin. Matthews was a little before our time, but we had a brother in college who told us the story. Princeton asked if Harvard wouldn't use somebody else at shortstop, as there was a certain feeling among some members of the Tiger nine that they didn't want to play against a Negro. It was a different Harvard in those days, and the word came back that it would have to be Matthews or no ball game. Princeton forgot its prejudices and played. The game was a tight one until Matthews came to bat with the bases full. He knocked a home run.

A room in a dormitory! Why, the man could have had a whole dormitory and the theological school thrown in.

The fact that H. 3d isn't going to play on the Harvard football team after all distresses us a little in one respect. Several years ago we made an agreement with Damon Runyon to sit together at the Harvard-Princeton game of 1936. Runyon's boy is preparing to matriculate at tackle on the Princeton team, and in those days H. 3d was training to be a Harvard halfback. We thought it would be no end of fun to watch the course of the game and to observe that whenever Harvard actually needed five or six yards the play to be called would be Broun straight through Runyon.

To be perfectly straightforward, it is only fair to say that unless H. 3d gets bigger pretty fast he won't even make the Yale eleven. Just now it looks as if he were destined to be nothing more than Phi Beta Kappa or coxswain of the crew.

Our estrangement from Harvard does not depend wholly upon our belief that A. Lawrence Lowell is bigoted. Even if his views were broader we should feel misgivings at sending an impressionable youngster to be educated under a man who uses qualifying words so extravagantly. "I have made long ago, for my own protection, an absolute rule that I would never be interviewed under any circumstances; and equally for my own protection it is necessary to adhere to that rigidly."

That is far from nice. It seems to us that Mr. Lowell means to say "I made" and not "I have made," which implies that he has to keep jacking himself up to the resolution from day to day.

"It is necessary to adhere to that rigidly." "I must decline to see the reporter altogether." "I never have any difficulty with reporters who understand my motives entirely." We think Mr. Lowell is guilty of pointing. Any instructor in English "A" could tell him that the effect would be stronger without "rigidly," "altogether" and "entirely."

The reporter's retort to "I must decline to see the reporter altogether," might well have been, "Yes, and I can't see Mr. Lowell at all."

Even the Simon-pure Freudian can hardly fail to get from Lowell's sentences the impression that here is a man who is not at ease in his mind concerning his position and therefore seeks to strengthen himself with emphatic words. We never knew just what the "A" stood for in A. Lawrence Lowell, but we suppose it must be "Adverbial."

"Well," we foresee a number of correspondents writing, "You're in no position to criticise anybody for using careless English." Quite so, but neither are we the President of Harvard. Gosh! we've got no responsibilities—we weren't even graduated.

The Meddling Spirit in Modern America

"Won't you," asks a reader, 'please give us an article on 'The Three Musketeers—the Ku Klux, Lynching and Prohibition?'"

I'm afraid I can't respond to this request in the manner suggested. The Ku Klux, Lynching and Prohibition stand on at least three different moral planes. The Ku Klux alone, if the assertions of its leaders are contrasted with the conduct of some of its members, is able to ride two or three moral planes at once.

Yet, all three of these phenomena do proceed, even though in different directions, from a common point of origin. If my prohibition friends, for many of whose tenets I have a profound respect, will bear with me I will explain what I mean.

N Y C GLOBE
FEBRUARY 7, 1923

All of us—even the worst of us—have certain moral standards, and believe that this would be a better world if other people would conform to them. The prohibitionists want us not to drink, the lynchers want the Negro to "keep in his place," the Ku Klux wants the world to be run on white, Caucasian, Protestant principles.

The grave question involved is as to the extent to which any of us is justified in interfering with others in order to bring them around to our views. In a democracy I don't see how we can avoid the democratic method, which is the one the prohibitionists have used. Personally, I should have preferred to leave the matter of drinking to local option and to education. I believe that even without a constitutional amendment the social conscience in America would in time have condemned the saloon and discouraged the bestial sort of drinking. The coercion of the unwilling minority in this respect is producing evils which may be worse than a legal liquor traffic.

But the prohibitionists are democratically correct. If the opponents of prohibition choose to break the law instead of changing it they are setting a precedent under which other minorities can break unsatisfactory laws. If prohibition doesn't work well—and it isn't working well at present—the only democratic answer to it is modification through a popular vote. Anything else is anarchy.

Every modern society stands between tyranny—and whether tyranny of a majority or of a minority doesn't much matter—and anarchy. The Ku Klux Klan, even when it puts on its best Sunday-go-to-meeting nightie, stands for tyranny. It is an attempt to interfere, legally if its own avowals are accepted, illegally if the acts of some of its members are considered, with the private lives of other and unwilling people.

Lynching, which is merely the illegal expression of the Ku Klux philosophy, is the meddling spirit carried to the utmost dreadful extreme. It is the point at which we arrive if we are determined, irrespective of means, to reform our neighbors. My impression is that the meddlesome spirit has gone too far in America, and that if it is not checked we shall have conditions and conflicts which are worse than drunkenness, and maybe even worse than private immorality.

When Black Meets White. By John Louis Hill. The Argyle Publishers, Chicago. Chicago Defender

This little volume is another discussion of the eternal race problem. It adds very little to the already well known facts and theories which are familiar to every student of the problem and to almost every school boy and girl of the Race. Its significance, however, lies in the fact that the author, a Southern white man, restates in rather liberal fashion the convictions held by broad-minded, thinking men and women everywhere who are capable of setting aside traditional prejudices and looking facts in the face as they present themselves to people black or white who are anxious to find some common ground of understanding and helpful co-operation. The author follows the precedent set by the more recent writers on this subject of putting the main responsibility on the shoulders of the white man for a peaceful solution of this problem of racial relationship and co-operation. If this book finds a circulation among Southern white readers it ought to do some good, because the author is white and a Southerner. He cannot be accused of lack of knowledge of the Southern experience or viewpoint, because he was born and spent many years in Tennessee, the home state of his family. Space will not permit a discussion here of some of the ideas advanced by the writer. We believe that on the whole the book ought to be helpful because its facts are clearly and apparently sincerely presented by a writer who desires to help the cause of a persecuted people.

United States

DUBOIS ON GARVEY.

In selecting the influential columns of the Century Magazine, Dr. W. E. Burghardt Du Bois entrenched himself behind a literary bulwark, which his adversary could not dangerously assail. In fact, he knew or must have believed that the editors of this publication would not entertain a reply to the damaging criticism of this distinguished black leader from the Island of Jamaica. The Negro World may train its long range guns upon the tormentor of its chieftain, but so far as the clientile of the widely circulated magazine is concerned they will never hear even the echo. 2/17/23

On the other hand, the Hon. Marcus Garvey is more directly interested in his own following and his prospective followers. His journalistic mouthpiece, reaches those, in whom he is most vitally interested and "what he loses at the bung, he will save at the spicket." He is unsparing in his denunciation of the able literary genius, who is using the best efforts of his useful life in attempting to destroy, what he regards as a dangerous menace to his people. He analyzes Garvey and his methods in the following language:

On the other hand, Garvey had no thorough education and a very hazy idea of the technic of civilization. He fell easily into the common error of assuming that because oppression has retarded a group, the mere removal of the injustice will at a bound restore the group to full power. Then, too, he personally had his drawbacks: he was inordinately vain and egotistic, jealous of his power, impatient of details, a poor judge of human nature, and he had the common weakness of untrained devotees that no dependence could be put upon his statements of fact. Not that he was a conscious liar, but dream, fact fancy, wish, were all so blurred in his thinking that neither he himself nor his hearers could clearly or easily extricate them.

Then came the new economic demand for Negro peasant labor on the Panama Canal, and finally the Great War. Black West-Indians began to make something like decent wages, they began to travel, and they began to talk and think. Garvey talked and thought with them. In conjunction with white and colored sympathizers he planned a small Jamaican Tuskegee. This failed, and he conceived the idea of a purely Negro organization to establish independent Negro states and link them with commerce and industry. His "Universal Negro Improvement Association," launched August 1, 1914, in Jamaica, was soon in financial difficulties. The war was beginning to change the world, and as white American laborers began to be drawn into war work there was an opening in many lines not only for Southern American Negroes as laborers and mechanics, but also for West-Indians as servants and laborers. They began to migrate in larger numbers. With this new migration came Marcus Garvey.

A most amusing and interesting question is presented in this analysis. It is this. Can a man be an unconscious liar? If he makes a statement that is incorrect or misleading, and he is not aware that it is incorrect or misleaning, is he a liar? We are of the opinion that ethics will hardly sustain the distinguished writer in his affirmation, "not that he was a conscious liar." If he were not a conscious liar that is did not know that he was lying then ethics would acquit him of being any liar at all. Even the truth told in a way to deceive is said to be a lie under certain conditions. Speaking of this phase of the situation, Editor William H. Ferris in the February 10th issue of the Negro World says:

Mistake No. 3. on page 541 of the Century Magazine, Dr. Du Bois says, Then came the new economic demand for Negro peasant labor on the Panama Canal." Answer: But Colonel Goethals in his book, "How I Built the Panama Canal." states that many West Indians were employed as engineers and mechanics, and many Italians as laborers.

Mistake No. 4. Dr. Du Bois, on page 541 of the Century Magazine says that "West Indians began to migrate in large numbers to America during the World War." Answer: In reality West Indians began to migrate to America in 1895, when the Brussels conference barred and boycotted West Indian and imported sugar and when the German beet sugar began to thrive. See article on Brussels in the Encyclopaedia Britannica. It would be advisable for the learned scholar to also read Crabbe's 'Guide to the British West Indies."

In our own analysis we shall be absolutely fair and we take this method of producing such refutations as may be available with reference to one of the most damaging philipics ever issued against a Negro leader during our day and time. Dr. Du Bois says further:

He established a little group of his own Jamaica countrymen in Harlem and launched his program. He took no account of the American Negro problem; he knew nothing about it. What he was trying to do was to settle the Jamaican problem in the United States. On the other hand, American Negroes knew nothing about the Jamaican problem, and they were excited and indignant at being brought face to face with a man who was full of wild talk about Africa and the West Indies and steamship lines and "race pride," but who said nothing and apparently knew nothing about the right to vote, the horrors of lynching and mob law, and the problem of racial equality.

Moreover, they were especially incensed at the new West-Indian conception of the color-line. Color-lines had naturally often appeared in colored America, but the development had early taken a far different direction from that in the West Indies. Migration by whites had numerically overwhelmed both masters and mulattoes, and compelled most American masters to sell their own children into slavery. Freedom, therefore, rather than color became the first line of social distinction in the American Negro world despite the near-white aristocracies of cities like Charleston and New Orleans and, despite the fact that the proportion of mulattoes who were free and who gained some wealth and education was greater than that of blacks because of the favor of their white parents.

Dr. DuBois overlooks the fact and fails to state that his type of colored people do not in the main affiliate with the type of people that Hon. Marcus Garvey represents. It is a fact that, while the highly educated class of Negroes, one hundred per cent Americans were excited and indignant over Garvey's wild talk thousands of others in the southern States noticeably so in Texas regarded him as preaching a "new religion" and they immediately became converted. Thousands had previously sold their homesteads to raise money to go back to the Fatherland, where they had been taught to believe equal and exact justice was to be enjoyed and where every owner of a homestead could "live under his own vine and fig-tree with none to molest him or make him afraid.'

Garvey's plan seems to have been to furnish the leadership primarily from this country and with the African Republic citizenship to be in existence in Africa and America. The discussion continues. He says:

After emancipation, color caste tended to arise again, but the darker group was quickly welded into one despite color by caste legislation, which applied to a white man with one Negro great-grandfather as well as to a full-blooded Bantu. There were still obvious advantages to the Negro American of lighter hue in passing for white or posing as Spanish or Portuguese, but the pressing demand for ability and efficiency and honesty within this fighting, advancing group continually drove the color-line back before reason and necessity, and it came to be generally regarded as the poorest possible taste for a Negro even to refer to differences of color. Colored folk as white as the whitest came to describe themselves as Negroes. Imagine then the surprise and disgust of these Americans when Garvey launched his Jamaican color scheme.

He did this, of course, ignorantly and with no idea of his mistake and no wit to read the signs. He meant well. He saw what seemed to him the same color-lines which he hated in Jamaica, and he sought here as there to oppose white supremacy and the white ideal by a crude and equally brutal black supremacy and black ideal. His mistake did not lie in the utter impossibility of this program,—greater upheavals in ideal have shaken the world before,—but rather in its spiritual bankruptcy and futility; for what shall this poor world gain if it exchange one race supremacy for another?

Garvey soon sensed that somewhere he was making a mistake, and he began to protest that he was not excluding mulattoes from his organization Indeed, he has men of all colors and bloods in his organization, but his propaganda still remains "all-black," because this brings cash from the Jamaica peasants. Once he was actually haled to court and made to apologize for calling a disgruntled former colleague "white"! His tirades and twistings have landed him in strange contradictions. Thus with one voice he denounced Booker T. Washington and Frederick Douglass as bastards and with the next named his boarding house and first steamship after these same men!

The above is written in a charitable vein and shows that 'away down in his heart of hearts," Dr. Du Bois has some respect if not sympathy for the man, who at one time he declared to be honest and that his plans were feasible. He complained that he was going the wrong way in executing them. He says further:

Aside from his color-lines, Garvey soon developed in America a definite and in many respects original and alluring program. He proposed to establish the "Black Star Line" of steamships under Negro ownership and with Negro money, to trade between the United States the West Indies, and Africa. He proposed to establish a factories corporation which was going to build factories and manufacture goods for local consumption of Negroes and for export. He was going eventually to take possession of Africa and establish independent Negro governments there.

The statement of this program, with tremendous head-lines, wild eloquence and great insistence and repetition caught the attention of all America, white and black. When Mr. Garvey brought his cohorts to Madison Square Garden, clad in fancy costumes and with new songs and ceremonies, and when, ducking his dark-head at the audience, he yelled, "We are going to Africa to tell England, France, and Belgium to get out of there," America sat up, listened laughed, and said here at least is something new.

This was indeed a popular idea, but the execution of it was a difficult task. Mr. Garvey was a British subject. This language might be regarded as treasonable. But he held to the doctrine of in all matters, the Negro race first. And again:

Negroes especially West-Indians, flocked to his movement and poured money into it. About three years ago he had some 80,000 members in his organization, and perhaps 20,000 or 30,000 were paying regularly thirty five cents a month into his chest. These numbers grew in his imagination until he was claiming 4,500,000 followers, and speaking for "Four hundred million Negroes!" He did not, however, stop with dreams and promises. If he had been simply a calculating scoundrel, he would carefully have skirted the narrow line between promise and performance and avoided as long as possible the inevitable catastrophe. But he believed in his program and he had a childish ignorance of the stern facts of the world into whose face he was flying. Being an islander, and born in a little realm where half a day's journey takes one from ocean to ocean, the world always seemed small to him, and it was perhaps excusable for this black peasant of Jamaica to think of Africa as a similar, but slightly larger, island which could easily be taken possession of.

Dr. Ferris, in his admirable reply to Dr. Du Bois declared that Hon. Marcus Garvey had never been a peasant. He says further:

His first practical step toward this was to establish the Black Star Line and here he literally left his critics and opponents breathless by suddenly announcing in 1919 that the Frederick Douglass, a steamship, had been bought by his line, was on exhibition at a wharf in New York and was about to sail to the West Indies with freight and passengers. The announcement was electrical even for those who did not believe in Garvey. With a splendid, audacious faith, this poor black leader, with his stormin tongue, compelled a word of admiration from all. But the seeds of failure were in his very first efforts. This first boat, the Yarmouth (never renamed the Frederick Douglass probably because of financial difficulties) was built in the year Garvey was born and was an old sea-scarred hulk. He was cheated in buying it, and paid $140 000 for it—at least twice as much as the boat was worth. She made three trips to the West Indies in three years and then was docked for repairs, attached for debt, and finally, in December, 1921, sold at auction for $1625!

And still again:

The second boat that Garvey bought was a steam yacht originally built for a Standard Oil magnate. It, too, was old and of doubtful value, but Garvey paid $60,000 for it, and sent it down to do a small carrying trade between the West Indies Islands. The boat broke down and it cost $70,000 or $80,000 more to repair it than Garvey paid for it. Finally it was wrecked or seized in Cuba and the crew was transported to the United States at government expense.

The third boat was a Hudson River ferry-boat that Garvey bought for $35,000. With this he carried excursionists up and down the Hudson during one summer and used it as a vivid advertisement to collect more money. The boat, however, ran only that summer, and then had to be abandoned as beyond repair.

Finally, Garvey tried to buy of the United States Shipping Board the steamship Orion for $250 000. This boat was to be renamed the Phyllis Wheatley, and its sailings were advertised in Garvey's weekly paper for several months, and some passages were sold; but the boat never was delivered because sufficient payments were not made.

With all of this vitriolic criticism who can refrain from admiring the nerve and audacity of this able black leader. It reminds us of the Saviour's comment in reference to the woman. "She hath done what she could." It seems that in this case, Garvey had done what he could. His own people must pay for his mistakes. He blazed the way for some other leader to follow even though he should not be able to reach the goal himself. Even Dr. Du Bois admits that both white and black people were filled with admiration over his venture. Dr. Du Bois continues:

Thus the Black Star Line arose and disappeared, and with it went some $800 000 of the savings of West-Indians and a few American Negroes. With this enterprise the initial step and greatest test of Mr. Garvey's movement failed utterly. His factories corporation never really got started. In its place he has established a number of local grocery stores in Harlem and one or two shops, including a laundry and a printing press, which may or may not survive.

His African program was made impossible by his own pig-headedness. He proposed to make a start in Liberia with industrial enterprises. From this center he would penetrate all Africa and gradually subdue it. Instead of keeping this plan hidden and working cautiously and intelligently toward it he yelled and shouted and telegraphed it all over the world. Without consulting the Liberians, he apparently was ready to assume partial charge of their state. He appointed officials with high-sounding titles, and announced that the headquarters of his organization was to be removed to Liberia in January, 1922. Such announcements, together with his talk about conquest and "driving Europe out," aroused European governments to inquire about Garvey and his backing. Diplomatic representations were made to Liberia, asking it how far it intended to cooperate in this program. Liberia was naturally compelled to repudiate Garveyism, root and branch. The officials told Garvey that he or any one else was welcome to migrate to Liberia and develop industry within legal lines, but that they could recognize only one authority in Liberia and that was the authority of the Liberian Government, and that Liberia could not be the seat of any intrigue against her peaceful neighbors. They made it impossible for Garvey to establish any headquarters in Africa unless it was done by the consent of the very nations whom he was threatening to drive out of Africa!

This ended his African program and reduced him to the curious alternative of sending a delegate to the third assembly of the League of Nations to ask them to hand over as a gift to his organization a German colony in order that he might begin his work.

Dr. Du Bois tells of failure and yet the history of the American continent and similar ventures were failures at first. Others took up the struggle and a stable government was established. Above all of this, we note the mistakes, but it should not be forgotten that Dr. Du Bois is on record with the statement that with the proper management and with discreet generalship Marcus Garvey's plans are feasible. But enough for this week. We shall deal further with this most interesting subject in our next issue.

"GARVEYISM."

The caustic denunciation of the Hon. Marcus Garvey and Garveyism as voiced by Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois and his coterie of followers seems to be bearing fruit, if we are to judge by the editorial utterances of that ably edited paper, The Philadelphia Pa. Ledger, which newspaper has always taken a friendly interest in the colored people and all that relates to their welfare. Under the caption of "Garveyism," in its issue of the 5th inst., it reaches the following conclusion:

Garveyism is the counterpart, among the Negro populations of America, what the Ku Klux Klan is among the white people. It is in its essence an appeal to prejudice and passion and if unchecked will bear fruit in the horrors of racial conflict. The formal protest, therefore, addressed to the Attorney General by a representative group of the leading educators, business men and publicists of the Negro race will be read everywhere with approval and sympathy by order-loving and humane people of whatever color.

It may be that the final conclusion of our able contemporary is correct, but to compare the Garvey movement to that of the Ku Klux Klan is an absurdity. The Ku Klux Klan believes in white supremacy or professes so to believe. The Garveyites do not believe in black supremacy. They advocate the leaving to the white man his own lands, so to speak, and advocate the transplanting of the black people of the world to their own land, which they specify as being Africa.

The Ku Klux Klan believes in concealment of membership. The Garveyites willingly display their membership and in all of their parades wear covering on every part of the body, but their faces, which faces, the Ku Klux Klan organization conceals. The Ku Klux Klan believes in regulating the conduct of others not members of the organization. The Garveyites have no such tenets in any part of their ceremony. The Ku Klux Klan believes in night-riding, in whipping men and women and in torturing other classes of people. They believe in a super-government and they take the law into their own hands.

During the entire career of this remarkable black leader, Marcus Garvey but one case of assassination has taken place and he and his followers have disavowed responsibility for the action of the notorious characters that committed it. It may be well to remark too that the victim was a Negro and not a white man. Just how this act would arouse the passions of the whites is a mystery. To speak plainly, Marcus Garvey has apparently pandered to the Negro hating elements of the South-land by advocating the removal of the Negroes from this country.

He is accordingly safe from injury at their hands. The lynchers, the hoodlum classes of the Southland regard him as a Negro Moses, who would remove from competition with them this working, industrious Negro, who has been the ever potent force in settling the industrial problems of the South-land. Disagree with the Hon. Marcus Garvey as much as you please, but do not be unjust to the extent of comparing him and his organization with one of the scourges of this Western world to-day, which scourge is equal in severity to pestilence and famine. The Public Ledger says:

The significance of this protest lies in its origin and in its manifestation of a growing realization among intelligent and educated Negroes that their liberation from injustice and oppression can only be brought about by a more perfect understanding between the white and colored races and by a co-operation in which the latter must take an equal part.

We agree with and emphasize the conclusion reached. It continues:

Great as are the evils growing out of the spirit inculcated by Garvey and his "Universal Negro Improvement Association," a spirit of hatred, distrust, violence and revenge, and important as it is to protect the ignorant and gullible from robbery and cruel exploitation, the graver injury that is being done by the Garveyites is the false impression their activities create in the minds of the white people as to the real aims and purposes of those Negroes who are striving earnestly and sanely for the advancement of their race, the elimination of prejudice and unfair discrimination in industry and in civil life.

This may be true. It concludes as follows:

While the Negro needs to be protected from the enemies to progress in his own race, the community at large in a greater degree needs to be safeguarded against an evil propaganda sowing the seeds of bitter antagonism and strife. This is why the letter to the Department of Justice should receive thoughtful consideration and preventive action in the interests of order and racial harmony.

If the Department of Justice at Washington cannot stop the Ku Klux Klan, an organization which is undermining the foundations of this Government, by what scheme of reasoning can it stop the propaganda of Marcus Garvey and his followers? The Congress has an opportunity to pass and enforce the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill. Let it do it. Collier's Weekly now advocates Federal legislation upon this subject. As for the Garvey movement, those of us, who are convinced that argument will do no good so far as the Garveyites are concerned, should repeat the words of the Scriptures with a slight modification "Let Garvey alone; he is joined to his idols."

This effort to play foster father to these many revolutionary organizations should be met with reason and argument without invoking the drastic operation of the law, when the Constitution of the United States is against such action. We are drifting slowly but surely to that imperialistic autocratic state, which has practically wrecked Europe. In summing this case up, we would advise our contemporary that there are two classes of colored people in this country. One class, not represented by the Garvey movement is loyal to the United States Government and the white and the colored folks composing the same. They do not regard exclusive race appeals, but accept the fact that they have been thrown into the "melting pot" of this

SAYS BEST PLACE FOR NEGRO IS THE SOUTH

INDIANAPOLIS IND NEWS
MARCH 2, 1923

Head of Lincoln Institute Sees Dangers to Race in North.

MORE EDUCATION NEEDED

"With rare exception, the negro goes north from Kentucky to his own damage," the Rev. A. Eugene Thomson, D. D., principal of the Lincoln Institute of Kentucky and a member of the board of trustees of Berea College, of Kentucky, said when in Indianapolis Thursday. Dr. Thomson was here to explain the purposes of the institution of which he is the head. He said that it was in need of money and would welcome any gift, although he made it clear he was not soliciting money.

He said that the place of the negro is south of the Ohio river and that if an opportunity for education is given him, he is more likely to be efficient, successful and contented, with the result that he will not leave the place where he belongs. To prove his contention that the negro should not go north, Dr. Thomson quoted statistics compiled by the municipal authorities of Cincinnati, which showed that from the 5 per cent. of the population of that city, comprising the negroes, come half the inmates of the county tuberculosis institution, large proportions of the dependent and delinquent children, 48 per cent. of the criminal police cases and 35 per cent. of the immoral women. These figures are about the same in Indianapolis and Chicago, he said.

Gravitates to the City.

The reason that the negro is worse off in the north, Dr. Thompson said, is that he naturally gravitates to the city, where he finds nothing to stimulate his ambition, and settles down in some subservient position. He said that an investigation conducted in Chicago showed that not one in 100 negroes was engaged in an independent occupation, even counting shoe-shining stands.

Dr. Thomson said that Lincoln Institute was organized when the Kentucky legislature enacted a law requiring separation of the races. At that time, he said, not one well-equipped colored school was to be found in the state of Kentucky. As a result of this condition, he said, enough negroes came north from Kentucky in the decade beginning 1900 to supply the entire gain in colored population in Indiana, Illinois and Ohio, and 7,000 in addition. The following decade, ending 1920, 2,000 more negores came.

The board of trustees of Brea College decided Kentucky needed a good colored school and $400,000 was raised for the work. Nearly 450 acres of land was bought twenty-two miles from Louisville and the school erected at a cost of approximately $300,000. It then was necessary to borrow $100,000, as part of the original $400,000 was set aside as an endowment fund.

Help From Carnegie.

In the spring of 1921, the Carnegie Corporation of New York, headed by Dr. J. R. Yale, now of Yale University, investigated the school and as a result, gave $20,000 on condition that a like amount be raised before January 1, 1923, Dr. Thomson said. This was done.

Now that the debt of the college has been met, the immediate problem of the institution is the current annual expense of $15,000, he said. The endowment provides for the salaries. The expenditure at the school, however, averages $12,000. Last year, much of the expense was paid by the persons in Louisville, Ohio, Chicago and vicinity. Citizens of Indiana contributed $2, according to Dr. Thomson.

ARE THE COLORED PEOPLE CONTENTED?

Dr. Robert Moton, head of the famous Tuskegee Institute, according to press reports, is quoted as having said that he is satisfied with general conditions pertaining to the race, and that he has more confidence in the white man's fairness to his people than ever before; that the colored people are contented to be segregated, disfranchised and otherwise ill-treated. We trust that the good doctor will refute these reports.

We clip the above excerpt from our esteemed contemporary, the Advocate, Portland, Oregon, and we are pleased to say that our contemporary is mistaken as to the attitude of Major Moton.

We have just returned from Tuskegee, where we were one of four business men who went to Tuskegee for the specific purpose of dicussing the race problem as it appears in the light of every day conditions. We had, indeed, a satisfactory talk with the great leader, and he expressed the deepest concern about our people. In fact, we understood from his conversation that he was everything but contented; that recent occurrences throughout the country, coupled with the attitude of the whites toward the hospital for maimed colored soldiers at Tuskegee, were greatly disturbing him and that his mind was full of unrest and discontentment, and that he was fearful of the final results, if our white neighbors could not be awakened to the necessity of moving many of the industrial and economic handicaps out of our way, with a view of developing out of us good and useful citizens.

The Major's mind is far from contentment, and he is deeply concerned and much grieved over the relative relations of the races, as expressed in many things in national life. Without prejudice to any section of the country, or raising a sectional issue, the Major nationally regrets many things that are happening to retard our progress and unsettle the mind of his race.

So our neighbor is entirely mistaken. The negro is not contented, neither is Major Moton.

THE SOUTH MUST PROTECT THE NEGRO IN EVERY WAY.

Atlanta Georgia
The Constitution

Mr. Peter O. Knight of Tampa, Fla., one of the foremost attorneys not only of Florida, but indeed of the country, in the course of a personal letter to the editor of the Manufacturers Record, said:

"I made a talk to the Credit Men's Association of Tampa at their annual banquet. As usual I spoke extemporaneously and the reporter had to take down what I said as best he could. But I touched upon a subject that I should be glad if you would take up and arouse the South about. More and more since I have been going North recently have I noticed the difference between the Colored population in the North and the Colored population here. The brightest, the healthiest, and the more intelligent are constantly flocking North and leaving the sickly, and the ignorant and very black ones here. Manufacturers everywhere are having their agents in the South doing all that they can to take the Colored laborer North, and they are going North by the thousands, and there will be a terrible awakening in the South in four or five years from now unless something is done to check it, if we are going to keep the darky here we shall have to see that he is properly housed and properly clothed, that he has better conditions and better wages and that he will not better himself by going away.

"This in my opinion is the subject that demands more attention at the hands of the Southern people today than anything else, and I know of no means whereby this subject could be brought to the attention of the Southern people more effectively than through the columns of the Manufacturers Record. You certainly would perform a distinct and valuable service for the South if you took this up vigorously."

The foregoing letter justifies the publication of a letter written more than a month ago by the editor of this paper to Mr. Milton H. Fies, vice-president of the DeBardeleben Coal Company, of Birmingham. Mr. Fies had made an admirable address on the duty of the South to the Negro and to itself. Mr. Frank H. Crockard, president of the Woodward Iron Company, of Birmingham, sent a copy of that address with his hearty commendation to the manufacturers Record and the editor wrote Mr. Fies as follows:

"Through the kindness of Mr. Crockard I am just in receipt of a pamphlet copy of your address before the Alabama Mining Institute entitled 'Industrial Alabama and the Negro.' I would like to broaden that heading and call it 'The South and the Negro,' for the subject you have discussed relates not merely to Alabama but to the whole South.

"I am very glad that you have discussed this subject so clearly and forcibly, for the South needs to study the Negro problem from every angle. I am in hearty sympathy with the idea that it is incumbent upon the white people of the South to protect the Negro in every legal right. We have as a people somewhat fallen short of our responsibility in that respect.

"I have made a number of addresses in times past in which I have pointed out the harmony that prevailed between the Negroes and the whites prior to the Civil War, and gave unstinted praise to the faithfulness of the Negroes who during the Civil War protected the women left at home and carried on the farming operations which made possible the maintenance of the war for four years. I have pointed to the fact that not until the 'carpet baggers' as we formerly called them—Bolshevists we would call them today—came into the South after the Civil War and stirred up hatred on the part of Negroes against the white people, did we have the conditions which have prevailed since.

"From 1865 to 1876, Bolshevists—worse even, I think, than the Bolshevist of Russia, certainly matching them in criminality of effect—largely dominated the Negroes, and out of that came the race hatreds which developed, and the passions engendered by the teachings of those criminal white people.

"On the other hand, the better class of whites, as a whole, did not set themselves to the task of protecting the Negroes as fully as might have been done. Many years ago, probably thirty or more, I heard J. L.

M. Curry, of Alabama, one of the great religious leaders of the South in those days, make a very thoughtful address before a religious gathering of Southern people in which he appealed to them to concentrate their efforts upon the betterment of the conditions under which the Negroes lived, and upon the education of the Negroes. The Negroes, said he, are in the South; they must be lifted up by the white people of the South, or they will drag the white people down to their own level. They will either advance through the leadership of the whites, or they will largely destroy white civilization.

"I have never forgotten the tremendous, soul-stirring appeal which Mr. Curry made and, as you perhaps know, some of the religious denominations of the South have been carrying on an intelligent and aggressive campaign of co-operation with the religious work of the Negroes. But it has not been as broad as it might have been.

"The faithfulness of the Negroes during the civil war and the way in which they protected the white women and children of the South is an everlasting proof of the inherent qualities which under right leadership can be made to save the Negro race from the tendencies developed by the 'carpet baggers,' or the Bolshevists, of reconstruction days.

"The work of Negro uplifting for the benefit of the South, as well as of the race, must not be left, however, merely to the religious influences that are at work. You have rightly pointed out the fact that every employer of Negro labor must see that his labor is protected in every legal right; that the Negroes in his employ have the advantages of decent and comfortable homes, for otherwise there can be no moral uplifting of the race.

"I constantly expressed my gratification at the fact that in Baltimore the Negroes are gradually moving out of the alleys into better homes, once occupied by whites. It is true that this has greatly depreciated the value of the property, for some entire sections have been taken possession of by the Negroes. It was once estimated that the depreciation in the value of property throughout the South owned by whites due to the incoming of Negroes into sections would equal the total value of property accumulated by the Negroes. Nevertheless, it is well to encourage the Negroes to come out of the alleys and to live in better homes on better streets. You cannot possibly secure the best results morally and physically of any people who are forced to live huddled together in small huts or buildings unfit for human habitation. Environment largely helps to shape the life of any race.

"If we looked at this question from no higher point of view than that of the welfare of the white race, and had no sense of responsibility for the uplifting of a lower race, it would still be incumbent upon the white people of the South to do their utmost for the betterment of the Negro race. Many Negroes are leaving the South; many more will leave it, and there is a certain advantage in this in that it gives to the North and Northwest the opportunity of studying the race question at close range, and this thus becomes national and no longer sectional.

"I am not greatly disturbed by the migration of a considerable number of Negroes from the South, but I regard it as a sectional handicap to industrial and agricultural development if the number should greatly increase over what we have already seen.

"The white people of the South depend to a very large extent upon the Negroes as cooks, as housemaids, as nurses for their children. Is it conceivable that if the Negroes are not properly trained in morality, properly educated, and every religious influence thrown around them, that the cooks and the housemaids and the nurses can be otherwise than a curse to the white families of the South, instead of an advantage? If we would have our kitchen and our houses clean they must be kept clean by the servants, who can never be trained to do good work unless they are given the opportunities of cleanliness in their own homes.

"If we would have the white children of the South, from babyhood up to youth, properly trained we must see that the nurses, so largely composed of Negroes, are properly trained and fitted for this tremendous responsibility in helping to shape the lives of the millions of children committed to their care as nurses.

"Our future civilization will very largely depend upon how the white people of the South co-operate for the betterment of the Negro population.

"The white man who mistreats or cheats a Negro deserves the severest condemnation of every decent man and woman, for the responsibility that rests upon a superior race to protect and safeguard an inferior race is of such a character that he who violates that responsibility by that very act shrivels his own soul and makes himself a curse rather than a blessing.

"Until the white men and women of the South unitedly work for the safeguarding of every right of the Negro, for the betterment of the moral conditions under which many Negroes are living. For the betterment of their housing, and for giving to them the advantages which make possible a higher civilization, the South will fail to do its duty to itself and to the Negroes.

"Some time ago a cook who has been in my family for thirty years spoke of some of her friends and said that their employers expected them to be clean and yet gave them no facilities for cleanliness. They work, said she, around a hot stove, cooking, and then their folks demand that they keep clean, and yet provide no bathroom facilities. How true this is. The harder, and the hotter, and the dirtier the work done by men and women, the more thoroughly do they need bath rooms if cleanliness is to be maintained; and no one wants one around a kitchen an unclean cook.

"These are some of the thoughts which I have often expressed in the past, and which have been brought to my mind again by reading your interesting address. I congratulate you upon your having expressed the matter so very clearly and forcibly. I trust the circulation in pamphlet form of your address may do great good."

United States

THE NEGRO FACES AMERICA

Washington Tribune

It is an outstanding fact that the Negro really faces America. The question naturally arises, How? 1-20-23

The complications arising from two hundred years of slavery and the resulting complications of freedom with all of its hatreds, proscriptions, ostracisms, disfranchisement and discriminations have had the opposite effect of what should be expected. The Negro faces America, with many traitors within his own ranks.

In Politics: Washington D.C.

There is not a single Negro politician of note that is willing to serve the race. His or her whole object is personal gain—personal aggrandizement—and he is a traitor to the very race he purports to serve; The first "job" offered him he falls for it and becomes an "Uncle Tom" and a rubber stamp for "superior" officeholder over him, selling out the race for a "mess of pottage."

Where there are sufficient numbers to put over a candidate for office, the "knowing" (?) Negro politicians "siggests" that it would not be wise "at this time." "Let's pull together for our white friend ———, and we will put up 'our' man next time." Hoping that if a Negro must be "put up" he will be the man—next time. Would a Greek put up a Turk to represent him, or an Irishman suggest an Englishman to run his office, or a Frenchman suggest a German to run in the district where he had the balance of power? It is just as ridiculous for the Negro politician to suggest to his fellow men to "support our white friends."

We are not going to make any headway in politics until we support ourselves. We have no friends when it comes to politics. Will it take fifty more years for the Negro to realize that? or is he wise enough to draw a lesson from performances, of the Republicans, notably their recent attitude toward the Dyer Bill? The Negro truly faces America in politics, with ranks broken and morale low.

In Education:

Along educational lines the Negro is in a precarius condition.

The literacy credited by the Government Census does not mean much. Reading and writing, at any rate the little needed to be classed as "literate" within themselves, do not mean very much. The simple fact is, the masses of the race are ignorant, educationally speaking.

It is thru education that we hope to build up loyalty. The schools are in the hands of the white people. All public schools are in their hands and the discriminatory allotments for educational purposes in the southern states are a disgrace to a Christian nation. The private schools, too, are all practically in the hands of white people or controlled by them. Therefore, we have no educational policy applicable and necessary to the race. So long as we have white presidents of our universities and colleges and white instructors in them merely because they are white and not because of superior qualifications, telling the world that we are truly a n the THE TRIBUNE of January 6, He said:

white the whole diameter of social differences which entails the regula-d action of all of the essential intimacies of life. . . . Special and specific white racial interests require as thotful and as wise deliberation as the for a Congress gives to the affairs of the nations. And yet today we e, the have no adequate or competent body to give our issues comprehenon in sive and statesmanlike consideration. At present the various interests and activities at work in the field are absorbed in their own objectives and are wholly without efficient co-ordination or m the union of purpose. The waste and friction are inexcusable.
c con- "The demand for a nation-wide conference is imperative."
th an May we draw up our "agenda" and set the time and place for a national conference and agree on a program for the race in iness. America and then eliminate every self-appointed, self-constituted all the and self-guided leader and all those who have proven traitors to the race. We shall also eliminate the hand picked leaders forced own. upon us by our "white friends." Those who are so entangled ever! that they cannot subscribe to the program agreed upon at this n and national conference will automatically eliminate themselves. This ffiable must be a conference of Negroes, by Negroes and for Negroes.
There
siness May we suggest a few subjects for consideration?
prises 1. Disfranchisement and the full use of the ballot in the states open to the Negro.
ng us 2. Selection of candidates in every district where we have se be- twenty-five per cent or more of the voting strength.
afford 3. Improvement of school facilities and better pay for our ple as teachers. Elimination of white presidents and instructors
Do the in our colleges and universities.
r their 4. Taxation without representation.
ers of 5. Discrimination and injustice in the courts.
ads of 6. A survey of farming conditions and the possibilities of e head Federal Farm Loans. A better tenant system.
God's 7. A survey of living conditions in the rural sections.
d race 8. Co-operation of business men. The establishing of manu-
? We facturing enterprises.
hen we 9. Encouragement of racial consciousness and the teaching of at the racial history.
10. The allotting of given subjects to given organizations with the view of preventing overlapping. And a central clear-

not capable of furnishing men for our own schools. It is truly a reflection on a Negro school to say that there is not a Negro in the whole United States capable of being president of the school from which he graduates, we therefore, have to select some cheap white man to be president of our best schools. No other kind would accept the presidency. With all of the race prejudice among white people of this country, we cannot have the proper respect for a cheap white man as president of a Negro school. Therefore, the Negro faces America educationally with his greatest weapon in the hands of his enemies.

Industrially: We are bound to work for the white man. We are not prepared to employ ourselves. We are debarred from the unions and must accept any employment under the poorest conditions for work. Industrially we are facing America with a economic status that is woefully in need of being built up.

In Business: We have just scratched the surface in business. With 74 banks and 60 insurance companies we are short in all other lines. We have not grasped the idea of supporting our own. Will a Jew walk by his own people to trade with a Gentile? Never! We must learn that racial clannishness for racial perpetuation and the proper support of our business enterprises is both justifiable and needed. We need more help in establishing business. There must be some sources from which to obtain capital for business purposes. We are facing America with our business enterprises sadly in need of Negro support.

In Organizations: There are many organizations among us but they are all out of harmony. There is no common cause between them. We must have racial leadership. We cannot afford to be "represented" by organizations that have white people as officers and dominating the policy of that organization. Do the Germans in this country have Frenchmen for the officers of their organizations? Do the Catholics have Baptists for the officers of their organizations? Do the Irish have Englishmen as heads of the Armenian organizations in America? Then why in God's name should we have American prejudiced, scheming and racedefaming white men at the head of our racial organizations? We are going to join racial organizations with white officers when we find white racial organizations in America with Negroes at the head of them. Not until then.

United States

THE NEGRO FACES AMERICA

It is an outstanding fact that the Negro really faces America The question naturally arises, How? 1-20-23

The complications arising from two hundred years of slavery and the resulting complications of freedom with all of its hatreds, proscriptions, ostracisms, disfranchisement and discriminations have had the opposite effect of what should be expected. The Negro faces America, with many traitors within his own ranks.

In Politics:

There is not a single Negro politician of note that is willing to serve the race. His or her whole object is personal gain—personal aggrandizement—and he is a traitor to the very race he purports to serve; The first "job" offered him he falls for it and becomes an "Uncle Tom" and a rubber stamp for "superior" officeholder over him, selling out the race for a "mess of pottage."

Where there are sufficient numbers to put over a candidate for office, the "knowing" (?) Negro politicians "siggests" that it would not be wise "at this time." "Let's pull together for our white friend ———, and we will put up 'our' man next time." Hoping that if a Negro must be "put up" he will be the man—next time. Would a Greek put up a Turk to represent him, or an Irishman suggest an Englishman to run his office, or a Frenchman suggest a German to run in the district where he had the balance of power? It is just as ridiculous for the Negro politician to suggest to his fellow men to "support our white friends."

We are not going to make any headway in politics until we support ourselves. We have no friends when it comes to politics. Will it take fifty more years for the Negro to realize that? or is he wise enough to draw a lesson from performances, of the Republicans, notably their recent attitude toward the Dyer Bill? The Negro truly faces America in politics, with ranks broken and morale low.

In Education:

Along educational lines the Negro is in a precarius condition. The literacy credited by the Government Census does not mean much. Reading and writing, at any rate the little needed to be classed as "literate" within themselves, do not mean very much. The simple fact is, the masses of the race are ignorant, educationally speaking.

It is thru education that we hope to build up loyalty. The schools are in the hands of the white people. All public schools are in their hands and the discriminatory allotments for educational purposes in the southern states are a disgrace to a Christian nation. The private schools, too, are all practically in the hands of white people or controlled by them. Therefore, we have no educational policy applicable and necessary to the race. So long as we have white presidents of our universities and colleges and white instructors in them merely because they are white and not because of superior qualifications, telling the world that we are not capable of furnishing men for our own schools. It is truly a reflection on a Negro school to say that there is not a Negro in the whole United States capable of being president of the school from which he graduates, we therefore, have to select some cheap white man to be president of our best schools. No other kind would accept the presidency. With all of the race prejudice among white people of this country, we cannot have the proper respect for a cheap white man as president of a Negro school. Therefore, the Negro faces America educationally with his greatest weapon in the hands of his enemies.

Industrially: We are bound to work for the white man. We are not prepared to employ ourselves. We are debarred from the unions and must accept any employment under the poorest conditions for work. Industrially we are facing America with an economic status that is woefully in need of being built up.

In Business: We have just scratched the surface in business. With 74 banks and 60 insurance companies we are short in all the other lines. We have not grasped the idea of supporting our own. Will a Jew walk by his own people to trade with a Gentile? Never! We must learn that racial clannishness for racial perpetuation and the proper support of our business enterprises is both justifiable and needed. We need more help in establishing business. There must be some sources from which to obtain capital for business purposes. We are facing America with our business enterprises sadly in need of Negro support.

In Organizations: There are many organizations among us but they are all out of harmony. There is no common cause between them. We must have racial leadership. We cannot afford to be "represented" by organizations that have white people as officers and dominating the policy of that organization. Do the Germans in this country have Frenchmen for the officers of their organizations? Do the Catholics have Baptists for the officers of their organizations? Do the Irish have Englishmen as heads of their organizations in this country? Do you find Turks at the head of the Armenian organizations in America? Then why in God's name should we have American prejudiced, scheming and race defaming white men at the head of our racial organizations? We are going to join racial organizations with white officers when we find white racial organizations in America with Negroes at the head of them. Not until then.

This brings us to the clarion call issued by Prof. Kelly Miller in THE TRIBUNE of January 6, He said:

"The Negro alone is separated from the rest of the nation by the whole diameter of social differences which entails the regulation of all of the essential intimacies of life. . . . Special and specific racial interests require as thotful and as wise deliberation as the Congress gives to the affairs of the nations. And yet today we have no adequate or competent body to give our issues comprehensive and statesmanlike consideration. At present the various interests and activities at work in the field are absorbed in their own objectives and are wholly without efficient co-ordination or union of purpose. The waste and friction are inexcusable.

"The demand for a nation-wide conference is imperative."

May we draw up our "agenda" and set the time and place for a national conference and agree on a program for the race in America and then eliminate every self-appointed, self-constituted and self-guided leader and all those who have proven traitors to the race. We shall also eliminate the hand picked leaders forced upon us by our "white friends." Those who are so entangled that they cannot subscribe to the program agreed upon at this national conference will automatically eliminate themselves. This must be a conference of Negroes, by Negroes and for Negroes.

May we suggest a few subjects for consideration?

1. Disfranchisement and the full use of the ballot in the states open to the Negro.
2. Selection of candidates in every district where we have twenty-five per cent or more of the voting strength.
3. Improvement of school facilities and better pay for our teachers. Elimination of white presidents and instructors in our colleges and universities.
4. Taxation without representation.
5. Discrimination and injustice in the courts.
6. A survey of farming conditions and the possibilities of Federal Farm Loans. A better tenant system.
7. A survey of living conditions in the rural sections.
8. Co-operation of business men. The establishing of manufacturing enterprises.
9. Encouragement of racial consciousness and the teaching of racial history.
10. The allotting of given subjects to given organizations with the view of preventing overlapping. And a central clearing house located in the Nation's Capital for all racial organizations.

NEGRO IN THE SOUTH ALWAYS ON VERGE OF MALTREATMENT

Writer for The World Tells of Incidents of His Trip Through Georgia With Dr. Moton.

POLICEMAN RESENTED HIS EASTERN ENGLISH.

N. Y. C. WORLD

Arrested and Persecuted on the Slightest Provocation—Discuss the "Negro Problem."

By Lester A. Walton.

In discussion of race relations and their attending complexities as they exist in the United States between Negro and Caucasian, our speakers and writers are evincing a disinclination to employ the hackneyed and indigenous phrase, Negro problem. More and more it is being looked upon as a misnomer.

On four occasions during Dr. R. R. Moton's good will tour through Georgia, prominent white speakers, while not guilty of pointedly denouncing the use of this familiar expression, showed themselves in an abnegatory frame of mind by professing reluctance in referring to the issues involved as the Negro problem, contending it a misapplication.

The primary reason for this tendency to throw the term into discard doubtless is in consequence of conclusions that the Negro is not the only contributory cause to racial unrest; that not infrequently strained relations are unquestionably precipitated and aggravated by others. Once upon a time the burden for the prevalence of racial ills and eruptions was laid at the door of the Negro; but the thought is beginning to dawn on those searching for the truth that many of the disagreeable happenings in which the Negro prominently figures are not always of his own making.

Dictionary Definition.

My dictionary defines the word problem as "a question proposed for solution; a matter put forward for examination or proof." But the habitual race agitator makes no effort to solve nor is anything concrete put forward for examination or proof.

The political demagogue, for instance, personally profits by arraying the poor whites against the blacks and wants no adjustment of race relations; for he rides into power on the wave of race hatred and bigotry. He is more concerned over making problems than in solving them. The greater the agitation the broader his smile.

Growing out of this racial hysteria are conspicuous resultant evils, as contempt for and breaking down of the law, lynching, peonage, disfranchisement and Jim Crowism. Of the hundred and one treacherous undercurrents helping make the Negro's daily existence hazardous and unbearable we hear little, if anything.

While travelling in the South during the spring of last year it was vividly brought to my attention that in some sections it is not necessary for a Negro to commit an unlawful act to get into trouble or unexpectedly find himself in the clutches of the law. Sins of omission offend the provincial mind as easily as sins of commission. What keeps a Negro in constant trepidation is that he never knows when he unconsciously is apt to give offense and be put behind the bars, in the hospital or in the morgue.

Tale of a Telegram.

I was in a Southern city of comparatively large population one evening and desirous of sending a telegram. Where I roomed the suggestion was made that I take a walk to the main office of the telegraph company, thereby enabling me to see the town by night.

To make sure I was wending my way in the proper direction I accosted a six-foot police officer, saying: "Pardon me, will you please tell me how far I am from the — Building?" Instead of promptly replying he looked daggers at me. I unflinchingly met his unfriendly gaze, all the while wondering what had incurred his displeasure. After remaining mute what seemed to me eons of time, the blue-coated sphinx blurted out gruffly: "Three blocks down!" I made a nasty exit with a loud "thanks."

Returning to my stopping place, I was curious to learn what had provoked the policeman's hostility toward me, especialy when I had been courteous in my query. I repeated what had transpired to friends. They laughed aloud. "He did not like the way you talked; your English was too Eastern," I was told. "But I was talking natural!" I exclaimed. My friends gave me to understand that, natural or unnatural, the cop did not fancy my way of talking. Wonderment was expressed that I had not been given a good clubbing. It has often occurred to me how fortunate it was that I did not hail from Boston.

On another occasion I was guest of a well-to-do Negro who owned an automobile of expensive make. We had motored some fifty miles and were returning homeward when we passed a white man driving a frisky colt. The buggy was of ancient vintage. Seeing the car, the animal became frightened and unruly. We were surprised when the driver shook his fist at us and called us names. He appeared more interested in invoking his wrath than in managing his horse.

Colt Owner's Charges.

Our big surprise was handed us when we drove into the next town and my friend was told by the Sheriff he was under arrest on charges preferred by the owner of the obstreperous colt. The complaint had been made over the telephone. Ananias could not have been more prolific in trumping up charges. In court the owner of the car was depicted as a ruthless, reckless, impudent Negro who thought he owned the entire road, who was callous as to the safety of others and had deliberately run into the complainant's buggy. These misrepresentations cost my host in fines and attorney's fees over $50.

One afternoon I was a member of an automobile party in another Southern town. We were on our way to a barbecue. Without warning, one of the cars was stopped and white men brusquely demanded to know if a certain female occupant was white. She answered in the negative. Not until her sister, who was of darker complexion but bore a striking resemblance, registered emphatic denial was the incredulity of the investigators appeased. Then they drove off. Two blocks away we spied a white woman of apparent wealth and social position driving a car and a colored maid comfortably ensconced on a rear seat.

While eating an appetizing Southern breakfast on a Sunday morning an S O S reached me to aid in extricating from the meshes of the law two members of a Negro theatrical company sent from New York to tour the South. One of the Thespians was languishing in a suburban jail some miles away. The other had succeeded in securing temporary release by putting up as bail his gold watch and chain plus some cash.

The night previously, after the show, the defendants had escorted two female acquaintances to their respective homes in the suburbs. While standing on the corner at 1 o'clock, waiting for a car bound for the city, a police officer inquired as to their destination. Having politely answered the question, they were next asked where they lived. Unwittingly they told him New York.

"Oh, you're New York niggers; you'd better come 'long with me," quoth the police officer, who arrested them for loitering.

$100 Is Required.

Sunday morning the police magistrate, worshipping in a church a block from the jail, was called out and importuned to arrange matters so the defendants might leave town with the company. The impression he sought to give was the case was too serious to permit his interference. After we had indulged in oceans of obsequious talk, another official finally agreed to release the prisoners if $100 was left to pay their fines by default the next morning. The defendants were not fined $50 each, but the amount returned them after the fines and charges incident to trial were deducted was small.

In another town one morning, about 11 o'clock, a woman member of a Negro show was going to the theatre for her mail. She was approached by two men whose attitude was one of familiarity. She resented what she regarded as an insult in forceful words. They happened to be detectives and arrested her for disorderly conduct. Only prompt action by the theatre managers made it possible for her to work at the matinee performance.

Riding in an automobile with two acquaintances one day in the business district of a thriving Southern city we were caught in the traffic congestion and held with other cars going in our direction. When the traffic policemen gave orders to start, the driver of our car promptly obeyed. At the intersection our car was brought to an abrupt halt to avoid a collision. Although we had the right of way, a white driver coming from another direction deemed it his prerogative to cross us because we were Negroes. This attitude renders it dangerous and difficult for Negroes to drive automobiles where traffic regulations are a legal vacuity. Only Negro chauffeurs working for white people can, with complacency, adhere to the law without fear of losing life or limb.

Needn't Break L[aw]

The foregoing incidents were only a few of the many coming within the scope of my personal observation. Nevertheless, I regard them sufficiently corroborative to bear out my assertions that in some sections of the South it is not necessary for a Negro to break the laws to suddenly find himself in durance vile or the subject of racial controversy.

It should be borne in mind that social equality, Negro domination and other imaginary bugaboos did not enter into any of the happenings I have related.

Telegraphic reports of the recent race riots at Rosewood, Fla., told of two innocent Negro women shot down and the burning of all the houses and churches in the Negro section. This record for barbarism and outlawry speaks for itself.

I have referred advisedly to "some sections of the South" where intolerable conditions are prompting Negroes to leave in large numbers. I may also refer to "some sections of the North" where turbulent conditions arise and the Negro is not the aggressor. The East St. Louis, Washington, D. C., and Chicago riots are cases in point. As in Tulsa, lawless whites invaded the Negro section. You never hear of Negroes burning homes and churches in a white section.

When a law-abiding citizen is not a charge on the community, but is industrious, provides a good living and a comfortable home for his family and educates his children, where lurks the problem?

The problem only raises its sinister head when organized effort is made to arrest his natural progress and take from him his inalienable rights guaranteed by the Constitution, which is done by enactment of obnoxious laws, mass bullying and the dissemination of insidious propaganda to pervert his and the public's psychology, as to real conditions.

Hypothetical Case.

Many of our so-called race problems are crystallized and projected by the confirmed theorist whose fallacious preconceptions lead him to believe he is a self-appointed and duly annointed overlord vested with the sovereign right to dominate the very life, liberty and actions of others.

Here is a hypothetical case that ought not tax the gray matter of even a child in the elementary grades in arriving at a prompt and correct answer:

If our great dry goods merchants in the appraisal of cloth adopted a set policy of fixing values and prices according to color, ignoring texture and quality, and forcing an artificial standard of values, based on the assumption that all white goods are superior to all colored goods (white cotton even costing more than black silk) would there soon evolve a problem?

This is another: How soon would chaotic conditions prevail on the turf if the pedigree and speed of a horse were judged, and bets made based fundamentally on color?

Race Problem—1923
United States.

Negroes Want Social Equality

Jew says "Birth of a Nation" Should be Excluded

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is having its hands full just at present. The action of President Lowell of Harvard in excluding negroes from the dormitories of that institution has stirred the Black and Tans to the very depths of their hearts. Rosco Conklin Bruce, gentleman of color, whose father was once in the Senate from Mississippi, has written the president a letter that from a literary standpoint is a gem in which he takes that gentleman to task for his action. Bruce is indeed one of the most pitable things in our land, a man, the bulk of whose blood is white, whose education has been along lines of equality, and yet his negro blood denies him access to the best white society. The writer can think of no more pathetic situation that a man could be placed in; therefore no emotion other than pity was aroused in us by his letter. Oh, when will the crime of race pollution cease?

Of course, the New York World, the greatest advocate of amalgamation, has joined in the clamor against the Harvard recognition of a bar raised by racial difference. The World can be depended upon to stand against the White Race at any and all times. Moorfield Storey, another renegade white man who makes a business of stirring up race strife, and who would, if he could get the backing again, enact the civil rights bill of Thad Stevens and place "Black heels upon White necks," has taken his pen in hand considerable, in every paper that will publish his articles to tell Harvard what an awful thing it is, that they should recognize any difference between Black and White. But "Blood is still thicker than Water."

The N. A. A. C. P. is also much helped up by the opinion of a Jewish lawyer that the "Birth of the Nation" should be excluded from the movie stage on account of the fact that it is a breeder of racial strife. The association protested play with the New York motion picture commission. Two of the commissioners, Mr. George Cobb, chairman, and Mrs. E. T. Hosmer, voted to dismiss the motion but one Joseph Levenson, filed a minority report in favor of the motion. It is a strong plea for racial equality. He thinks the picture provokes racial hatred and refers to the present-day Klan and other evidences of a growing sentiment for White Supremacy, which the Semetic gentleman believes are much encouraged by the "Birth of the Nation."

Moorfield Storey is also endeavoring to save the lives of the leaders in the Helena, Ark., race war, from the scaffold. The commutation of the sentence of many of the Houston rioters is another t[r]iumph for the N. A. A. C. P. and is so listed by it. The dark side, as seen by the organization, lies in the fact that Congress failed to pass the Dyer Anti-Lynching bill and the further fact that the organization is falling off in numbers.

On account of this falling off of members, the N. A. A. C. P. is to have a drive, beginning April 1, and for the information of our readers, we reproduce the official call. You will notice its uncompromising call for equality. It is in line with the pronouncement of W. E. B. Dubois, the association's chief colored ramrod: "Of course I want Social Equality. Of course I want to go to the Theater, dine and, if I will, dance."

The Official announcement of the drive is given below:

"The Annual Membership Drive of the N. A. A. C. P. begins April 1.

"The object of the drive is:

"1. To increase our branches to 500.

"2. To revive a majority of dormant branches which now number nearly 100.

"3. To increase the number of branches with over 500 members so that they may include each city of considerable size, especially in the North. These dropped deplorably last year.

"4. To increase our branches of over 1,000 members, until they shall include every major city in the North and a number of points in the South. These dropped to four last year.

"5. To obtain a general increase of at least 50 per cent in the membership of the association.

"The N. A. A. C. P. proposes:

"1. To show that colored people are not quitters—that we have just begun to fight.

"2. To gain power to use in 1924 for fuller freedom.

"3. To aid in continued fight on lynching, segregation, Jim-Crowism, disfranchisement and peonage.

"4. To stand always at forever at the Gate of Freedom—on guard, full-panoplied, uncompromising, unafraid.

"We ask the help of all Americans, and especially those of Negro blood:

"1. Because this is their organization, the most democratic in America, knowing no color line, no class line, no race line, and no sex line.

"2. Because they must realize that hostile forces now being closely organized have got to be met by better, bigger, and more powerful organization on our part."

—American Citizen.

From the above, the American Forum readers will readily understand, the importance of the Color Line. Unless it is marked in an indelible line, so plain, that no mistake can possibly be made, the time will come, when it will be red—red as human blood—for White Americans will never for an instant, tolerate the slightest semblance of social equality with the African—or his pie-bald, degenerate successors—the mule-nigger. It is just as well, this question be settled now, for by the Eternal God, who rules the heavens, and the earth, the white race will have to be first put out of business, before the black and tan race will ever reach the goal, at which it aims.

I began this fight —alone —over a quarter of a century ago, and I intend to remain on the job, until this race equality question is settled, and settled for keeps. The North—with its hordes of mixed-bloods, will feel the pressure, before the South feels it, and will have to defend their homes, against the combined forces of these miserable, degenerates. If he's not white he's a mulatto.

There flannel-mouthed coons can talk mighty big "up North", where white folk address them as "Mister"—but the moment they cross the Mason and Dixon line, they change their tune.

Nothing on earth, appeals to the man who has one drop of African blood in his veins, like the magic word of "Social Equality," with the white man. It is his thoughts by day, and his dreams by night, and failing in this ambition, has strewn the Southland with wrecked homes—and outraged woman and young girls. None are safe.

But the day of reckoning draws nearer—for the white man's patience has fled. From now on, it will be action.

The negroes should realize this—for a few more steps brings them to the Dead-Line and when they go, their white Daddies will go with 'em—for they are well known.

Says Black Races Will Dominate the World As Nordics Lose Power

BROOKLYN N Y EAGLE
APRIL 8, 1923

By RUFUS LEWIS PERRY.

I HAVE read with interest the article in The Eagle, by Frederick Boyd Stevenson, "What a Decrease in the Birth Rate of Nordic Race in the United States Means to the Future of America," and the uneasy sensation entertained by him which would seem proportionate to the danger of his prophesy. I am not ignorant of this just apprehension and question whether the advance made by the Hamitic and Shemitic branch of the human family can be checked. But the danger has not as yet reached the stage where the sons of Japheth accept, as applying to them, the handwriting, big with gigantic destinies, that was translated to Belshazzar, the last King of Babylon.

Rufus L. Perry.

The sons of Japheth, through whom the Nordic race springs, is one-third in numerical strength to that of the combined strength of Ham and Shem through whom the colored races spring. In the beginning, the Hamitic branch of the human family led the van of civilization, and did so lead until, having become drunk with power, forgetting the transient nature of life and the checkered history of nations and races who while ruling are overruled, it became the easy prey of Cambyses, who captured Egypt in 525 B.C. and reduced the country to Persian domination, from which time Egypt began in earnest to get white and even to this day the task is unfinished.

In tracing the development and progress of this dark problem through Ham, whose descendants spread themselves over Africa, one is persuaded that any race is capable of becoming dominant in the world through the development of intrinsic qualities, and that it is illusive in the light of history to consider any race inferior.

The ancient Egyptians, the Ethiopians on the south of them and the Libyans on the west, were all descendants of Ham, and while Shem and his descendants were spreading over Asia and Japheth and his descendants over Europe, groping in ignorance, Ham was exploring the untrodden field of art, literature, science, navigation, architecture and plastic art.

Ethiopians as Kings.

Herodotus tells us that the priests of Egypt read to him from a book the names of 330 Kings of Egypt and one Queen, and among them were 18 Ethiopians. The name of the Queen was Nitocris.—Herod. II. 100. By the term "Ethiopian" in this passage, Herodotus does not mean that the other kings were not of the Hamitic race, but simply Hamites of Ethiopia, in contradistinction to Hamites of Egypt. Those Hamites of Ethiopia taught art, science and theology to the Egyptians, and the Egyptians taught the Eastern nations and the Greeks and Romans. Even Moses, in writing the Pentateuch, employed the knowledge of sacred things and human rights which he had gained among the Hamites of Africa and mayhap from Tharbis, his Ethiopian wife; for we read he was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," under an Ethiopian dynasty. (Herod. ii.-160; Joseph. VIII:2; Ats. VII:22.)

The intellectual sun of the Ethiopians had nearly reached its zenith before that of Greece and Rome had risen above the horizon. This is witnessed by Heeren, who says that the Ethiopians were "one of the most celebrated and mysterious of nations;" "that when the Greeks scarcely knew Italy and Sicily by name, the Ethiopians were celebrated in the verses of their poets," as "the remotest nation, the most just of men, to whom the lofty inhabitants of Olympus journey and partake of their feasts." Pliny says (Hist. Nat., VI:35) that Ethiopia "was powerful and illustrious as far back as the Trojan war, when Memnon reigned," and Pliny might have gone far back behind the Trojan war, which was in the days of Jephthah, the ninth Judge of Israel, about 1188 B.C. and about 436 years before the building of Rome.

Of the Same Black Race.

The Egyptians always called their country Chamia. Treating of Ham in his elaborate Key, Dr. Stock, under the head of Cush, says: "The father of Mizraim, the founder of the Egyptians, was Ham, whence from this name Egypt was now called Ham; now the land of Ham. St. Jerome (in Gen.) asserts that always even down to his time, Egypt had been called Ham, in the tongue of the Egyptians." "Cush, the eldest son of Ham, gave his name to the Ethiopians, whence Ethiopia was called Cush;" the only inference to be drawn here is that the Egyptians and Ethiopians were of the same race, and that they were black.

In some passages of the Bible (Isa. xxvii:12; Josh. xv:4; II Kings xxiv:7) the Nile is called "the river of Egypt," literally, "the Nile of the Mizraimites." Now to deny that the Egyptians were Cushites involves the denial that Mizraim was of the Cushite family, and that, in turn, denies that Ham, the father of Mizraim was a Cushite, leaving the negro without any ancestral connection with the household of old Noah. Thus, as usual, where the negro and his glory is involved, error may be traced to absurdity.

The Mizraimites, Cushites, Egyptians and Ethiopians are so joined together by God that no man can put them asunder without doing violence to the testimony of the Bible. Isa. xx:3-5; xiv:14; Eze xxx:4-5; Jer. xlvi:8-9; Nah. iii:9; Dan. xi:43.

Speaking of the architectural monuments of Ethiopia, in his "History of Nubia and Abyssinia," Dr. Russel says: "The whole strip of land from shendy to Gerri teems with them, and must therefore be regarded as a portion of the classic ground of Ethiopia." The monuments referred to consist of both temples and pyramids. It is impossible to behold these monuments without astonishment. There is no greater contrast to be witnessed than between what now is and what must once have been in Ethiopia and Egypt. There is even great difficulty in passing, by an effort of thought, from one condition to the other, through the various scenes of conquest and desolation which seems necessary to have produced the effects we contemplate. We might question history, but we should receive no answer as to events and characters which the lapse of 3,000 years has thrown into impenetrable obscurity. Surrounded with darkness we grope our way amid superb structures, dedicated to gods and heroes whose names make but a faint impression on our ears; and we satisfy ourselves with the conclusion that a great people had existed there before the era of recorded time, whose literature and philosophy have been outlived by their architectural monuments. Dr. Anthon says: "No description can give an adequate idea of these wonders of antiquity, both in regard to their incredible number and gigantic size. Their form, proportion and construction are almost as astonishing as their magnitude. On the western side of the river are numberless tombs in the form of subterraneous excavations and contain many human bodies in the state of mummies, sometimes accompanied with pieces of papyrus and other ancient curiosities.

Egyptians Black and Curly Haired.

That the Egyptians were black and curly haired, we have the testimony of the "Father of History." Speaking of the Colchians, Herodotus supposes them to have descended from the Egyptians, first, because they were black and had short curly hair, and secondly, because they, the Egyptians and the Ethiopians, are the only people who from time immemorial have practiced circumcision. (ii:104).

Commenting on Herodotus, Volney says that "the ancient Egyptians were the same species of all the nations of Africa. Herodotus says (iv:197.) 'The Libyans and Ethiopians are aborigines, the one inhabiting the northern, the other the southern parts of Libya.

Now what historian, modern or an ancient, is better authority on Egyptology than Herodotus? He is more than twenty-two hundred years nearer in time to the first Egyptians than modern writers, besides having had personal observation among them and made careful inquiry in regard to their physical type and remote history. He was not dominated and biased by an ungovernable prejudice against the black man. His aim was to make a true statement concerning the different nations about whom he wrote, and flatter none, not even his own.

"Ham, the son of Noah, first peopled Egypt and Libya, after the flood; and when idolatry began to gain ground in the world, some time after, he was the chief deity of these two countries, in which his descendants had continued. A temple was built to his honor in the midst of these deserts, upon a spot of pretty good ground about two leagues broad, which formed a kind of island in a sea of sand. It is he whom the Greeks call Jupiter, and the Egyptians Ammon. In process of time these two names were joined, and he was called Jupiter Ammon."—Rollin, An. Hist., Vol. 1, p. 555. Cincinnati, Applegate & Co., 1856.

But higher still is the testimony of the Bible that "Israel came into Egypt" (Mizraim) and God did "wonders in the land of Ham" (Ps. cv, 23, 27). Surely the Hebrews knew to what race the people belonged whom they served so long in Africa. Throughout the Old Testament Moses and the prophets called the country after Mizraim, the second son of Ham; call a native a Mizri, and the people generally Mizrim, the plural of Mizri. Hence in Isaiah xliii, 3, it is said "I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee."

Tutankhamen King of Negroes.

Therefore, if the Egyptians, Libyans and Ethiopians were one and the same, they were negroes and ancient Tutankhamen was one of their kings, notwithstanding the fruitful imagination of the modern Egyptologist who can see nothing great in the black man but finds unlimited wisdom in the white man, and delights to robe all ancient Egypt in white. The old monarchs are made to conform in figure to the Grecian and Roman mould, and in color to the Shemitic race of Asia, or the Japhethic race of Europe. The black mummy is aroused from his ancient sleep and transformed by the art of Pythagorean Metempsychosis into a white mummy, with a look of disdain upon its former self. The negro is simply not in it. But they forget that the ideal or symbol of beauty and purity with the Ethiopians was black. The Ethiopians and Egyptians regarded white as a symbol of impurity; the sons of Japheth, on the other hand, have so regarded black. The Ethiopians say: "As white as the devil"; the white man says: "As black as the devil." And I say black is very pretty, and this, too, from personal contact, I know that, as color is manifested by light, white bodies are those which reflect all the rays, and black are those which reflect none, but absorb all the rays of light.

But to return to the subject of Mr. Stevenson's article, from which to have thus far departed may not be wholly without excuse; the fact is, the Nordic branch of the human family has run its race and is on the decline, while the Hamitic branch is slowly but steadily increasing and ascending from a position that must inevitably come to the Nordic race. This is as true as any of the axioms of Euclid. The trouble with the Nordic race is just this: Having been favored for a season over the less fortunate descendants of Ham, the exalted station in which it has been placed through valor has led it by that same valor to fight within its own loin for supremacy; and the killing and dwarfing of the stock, its excesses in prosperity, and the disinclination to propagate the specie in numerical proportion to the other race, must inevitably tell, to its disadvantage.

The recent decision of our highest court in checking those who would throw off the colored yoke and be esteemed Nordic is simply the unseen hand of Providence in holding this dark element together until—well, history will record that. Races and nations proceed along lines that are governed by certain immutable rules and laws; government, morals, wise counsel, environment and progeny determine the length of their existence as either a master or dependent.

No race or nation can remain a master of the world that does not at all times sustain the same degree of endeavor that raised it to its exalted position, guarding with diligence that which has been achieved with valor. The span of human life and the natural propensities of mankind are such that the generations of the loin in power for a few centuries are sufficient for it to decline and fall from its position as master by losing sight of those principles which sustain masters of the world. The more prosperous the race or nation, the greater the power it wields, the sooner the decline and fall. Glance for a moment at the history of Egypt and Ethiopia, Babylon, Arabia, India, China, Persia, Rome and Greece, and you will note that the master of today is the slave of tomorrow. England today is master in a sense, and has had her slaves. But, says Cicero, a certain Roman military expedition found no plunder in Britain save slaves who were too dull to learn.

"Neque ullam spem praedae nisi ex mancipii, ex quibus nullos puto te litteris aut musicis eruditos expectare."—Cicero to Atticus, Lib. iv., 16.

So you see how races and nations rise and fall; and thus be admonished by those words of Oriental piety:

"Beware of the groans of the wounded souls, oppress not to the utmost a single heart; for a solitary sigh has power to overset a whole world."

ANSWERS: "TIME IS RIPE" FOR "ONE BIG CONFERENCE"

1/28/23

By W. H. RANDOLPH

This subject was discussed by Prof. Kelly Miller of Howard university in the Chicago Defender, issue of Dec. 30, 1922. It embraces, among other things, the most important suggestion, timely warning and request that have been uttered tending toward the betterment of the Negro Race since agitation for a solution of the so-called Negro problem began.

For several months past I have been meditating upon the same ideas expressed by him in the article above referred to, so much so that I had begun to write thereon, and included therein suggestions for a permanent Race conference or congress to meet annually at such place or places as might be determined upon by representatives or delegates of whom it would be composed. In this connection I had also drafted a sort of plan for its initial organization and operation.

Learning that he has taken the initiative, preceding my intended presentation of the subject to the public and realizing that he is far better qualified, more powerful and more influential than I am or perhaps ever will be, I immediately ceased to complete my undertakings in the matter, accepted, approved and do hereby most heartily indorse his presentment, advice and request. To this end I earnestly request and urge all members of the Race who have not read or heard read Prof. Miller's article on "One Big Conference" to obtain, read or have it read carefully and give it your thoughtful and most favorable consideration, then act in accordance with his suggestion without unnecessary delay, because "Procrastination is the thief of time."

Many of us have learned by experience or otherwise that this saying is true. Let those of us who have not been so informed as to its verity be kind, generous and prudent enough to assume that it is true. Then with our knowledge and assumption of the fact and with one common accord—our Race leaders in particular—heed his admonition and pursue the course he has therein indicated, for time truly is ripe—yea, almost "rotten ripe," as some would express it, for just such actions on the part of the Race are urgently in demand. If we consider for a moment we cannot fail to admit. If the Race desires and would enjoy life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness it is now up to the Race not only to make provision for such enjoyment, but also to devise such plan or plans, adopt and put over such program as will safeguard these things unto the Race, and make for it a safe, steady, unoppressive, unsegregated, undiscriminated and otherwise unhampered position here in the civic, political and other affairs such as occupied by the white race.

Truly the day has dawned upon the Negro Race here in America when it must champion its own cause and not rely upon others to do it, as has been done heretofore. It must see to it that justice and equality are meted out to the Race as such, and to its members individually, that the same scales by which the white race's rights and privileges are determined shall also be applied in like manner to determine the rights and privileges of the Negro Race.

Prof. Miller well says, and truly, that forces and influences are now at work which, if unchecked, will fix the Negro Race for good in a helpless and hopeless position. Instant action, says he, is demanded. Delay is dangerous, as indicated by the current trend of events which conclusively show that the existence of the Negro Race is indeed precarious, and that it is hanging over a veritable smouldering volcano which may burst forth in eruption at any moment.

Wake up, my people, wake up; bestir yourselves from your lethargic repose, from your apparent indifference, and heed the warning and admonition of that able scholar, fearless and courageous champion of the rights of the Race, and follow the course he has just prescribed in order that you shall not be utterly subdued, overwhelmed, submerged and rendered absolutely powerless by those dire hostile and indifferent forces which have so long hitherto sought not only to keep the Race back and down, but also to return and assign it a victim to the confines of chattel slavery.

Come? Yes, surely such a time will come, and that not far off, unless the Race unites its forces in accordance with the advice of Prof. Miller, under whatever name it may be called. That the Race possesses men and women of ample qualification to measure up to the full requirements of the task indicated is an absolute certainty. In such an assembly a strict adherence should be had to the mapping out of a program embracing ways and means of solving the great, perplexing questions which serve as barriers to the progress and development of the Race in order that it may receive and enjoy the highest, greatest and most gratifying benefits obtainable.

Therefore let us all join Prof. Miller in asking for such a meeting—not only one, but many of them. Let us have them. Let them be forthcoming. Let us thereby arouse public sentiment to the extent of recognizing that the Negro is not only an American citizen, but that as such he is entitled to the equal rights and privileges accorded any other American citizens; that he is not only entitled thereto, but that he must and shall henceforth have those rights and privileges safeguarded regardless of cost or sacrifice. Let us secure them in such a way that no man, set of men, race or races shall ever dare to deny them unto us or venture to discriminate against the Race because of color, previous condition of servitude or otherwise.

Calling the Race Conference

Pittsburgh American Pittsburgh Pa.

Mr. Kelly Miller has suggested that a conference of American Negroes be called to discuss our multifold problems and to map out a program of action. Mr. Miller is usually considered a safe and sane leader, a sort of liberal conservative. There was a time, in his pamphleteering days, that he was more liberal than he is today and extremely skillful and forceful in written debate. With the passing of the years he seems to have become more conservative, more "safe and sane." However, he has said that a race conference should be called and has given some reasons therefor. As yet no definite steps have been taken and all concerned are perhaps waiting for more concrete proposals to be made.

A race conference in which all grades, classes and opinions among Negroes will be truly and genuinely represented, will be something new under the sun. Hitherto we have had what purported to be race congresses but they have never been even partially representative of the great masses of the people. They have all been organizations that revolved around a single individual or a group of individuals that might or might not know the mind of the racial group whose spokesmen they pretended to be.

The problem then is to get together a conference that can get down to work with the feeling that the personnel of the conference has the confidence and active good-will of Negroes at large. It should be no mere social gathering of notables and race leaders to push their personal programs, to issue addresses to the country or to denounce anything and everything. The men and women who attend should understand, that since none of their programs has thus far got us any distance on the road to the millenium, that it is the part of wisdom to go with open minds and in a mood to follow as well as lead. To paraphrase Huxley somewhat, it will be their duty to sit down before the race problem as a little child and be prepared to follow unselfishly wherever the facts lead, to whatever abysses. They must learn to do this or they can do nothing.

Before now our besetting sin has been our proneness to fly asunder like a bursting flywheel, to go off with a little coterie of followers, to set up an organization and fight all other organizations calling our movement the way, the truth and the light. These movements have as a rule been formed by a few leading Negroes who have established themselves as dictator and protector. These movements have not succeeded and the reason they have not succeeded is because the leaders have not had the acumen or the foresight to feel the pulse of those whom they would lead.

The American Negro has lost confidence in the so-called leaders and the responsibility for this loss of confidence and faith rests squarely on the shoulders of the leaders themselves. Their conduct has not been such as would establish confidence. They have not been interested in the race but in themselves and in their own aggrandizement. The American Negro has produced no Gandhi and no McSwiney from among its educated and leading citizens. It has no man who in any way even approaches the character of these two heroes of other oppressed races. Yet this is our supreme need; a man who can rise above the people and still no gap grow between them.

Should a race conference be called a man of this type will be needed there. To be sure he would meet opposition from the great ones who would be looking for honor and glory without paying the price in sacrifice and inconvenience. But when such a man comes he will rise above our present set of petty, bickering and mercenary leaders.

RACE CONFERENCE DATE ANNOUNCED BY N. E. R. LEAGUE

Pittsburg American

3/9/23

(Crusader Service)

NEW YORK, March 9.—Dr. M. A. N. Shaw, president of the National Equal Rights League, which simultaneously with Kelly Miller, issued a call for a United Negro Front Conference, announced last night as he left this city for Boston that the preliminary negotiations for a United Front Conference have been successfuly concluded and the dates of March 23 and 24 set for the same.

Dr. Shaw has been in conference with the heads of the African Blood Brotherhood, the Race Congress, the International Uplift League and with Professor Kelly Miller, and reports perfect agreement as to the necessity and purpose of a United Front Conference. Dr. Shaw reported that he was advised by Professor Miller that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which was reported by this Service as having declined the invitation to a conference, had reconsidered its decision and decided to accept the invitation and participate in the efforts to realize a strong United Front with which to meet the onslaughs of the enemies of the Race.

The preliminary conference on March 23 and 24 will be participated in by the National Equal Rights League, the N. A. A. C. P., the African Blood Brotherhood, the International Uplift League and one or two other organizations, with Professor Kelly Miller and a few other outstanding individuals. The purpose of the preliminary Conference will be to draw up an invitation to be signed by all the participating organizations to the big Conference which will include all Negro organizations. The preliminary Conference will also draw up an agenda for the big Conference.

The Pittsburgh American has some opinion about this conference that will be expressed from time to time but it is enough now to say that the conference should be one that represents all Negroes and not composed of those only who have ambition and the necessary railroad fare.

Inter and Intra Racial Factors

The Negro is a part of, and at the same time a part from the great body of the American people. As a citizen he enjoys the constitutional guarantee of equal rights under the law; as a Negro he is practically deprived of his guaranteed rights.

That part of the Constitution specifically calculated for his especial benefit has become a scrap of paper by the contrivance of the South and the connivance of the North. He is segregated, circumscribed and shut into himself despite the fact that the Constitution and the laws apply with equal favor to all. He alone among the diversities of our component population is assigned by public sentiment, which is stronger than the written cede or preached word, to segregated and separated social life. 2-16-23

Unlike the Jew or the Oriental, or even the Italian in our great cities, this segregation is not self-imposed and cherished by the group consciousness, but is forced upon him by outside compulsion.

We must keep ever in mind this dual aspect of the race problem. As part of the life and power of the American people, the Negro must insist with the fullest measure of profitable insistence upon all that he is entitled to under the law. He should cooperate with his white fellow citizens in every feature of the common life that makes for the general weal.

There are two leading forms of racial endeavor; cooperative movements and independent undertakings. One of the hopeful signs of especially in the South. Great good may be expected to flow from the times is the growing tendency towards inter-racial projects, such cooperation and mutual understanding. In such questions of law and order, health and disease, vice and crime, neither race can function effectively without consideration of the other.

The Negro is almost wholly dependent upon the white man for employment and is conditioned by him in many of the essential relations of life. In such matters the races can no more be divorced than labor can function independent of capital or capital of labor. Effective industry is the resultant of the joint cooperation.

We may also expect a wholesome measure of racial understanding and good-will to come out of these inter-racial conferences. If the Negroes and the whites have no point of contact the situation would be greatly aggravated. Mutual exclusion begets misunderstanding and suspicion.

Let us have inter-racial conferences, the more the better. But let us not beguile ourselves with the delusion that these inter-racial meetings make our internal racial activities unnecessary. Many good white people would have us believe that the entire circle of racial interests and activities can be handled in this manner.

These inter-racial meetings are usually one-sided. They are intended to consider only Negro matters. They are not supposed to function in matters where the white man is primarily concerned, nor yet to deal in general issues where the public weal is uppermost.

The white man has the feeling that he should be let into the intimate secrets of the Negro, but does not for a moment tolerate the idea that the Negro should know any of his secrets. There is a survival of the old Homeric conceit of the super race: "To the feasts of lesser men, the Gods unbidden go."

Intra-racial conferences are made necessary by the very nature of our segregated situation. The Jews have many relations with the gentiles which they consider on common grounds without distinction on account of race or creed. And yet when they deal with matters peculiar to their race and religion, they meet behind closed doors, with the gentile world on the outside.

The Catholics form a solid part of our common citizenship. Most of their relations of life are considered as American citizens. There is no hint or squint of religious distinction in their ordinary daily dealings with their Protestant fellow citizens. But when it comes to the internal intimate affairs of the church, no Protestant may seek to know their internal procedure or dare suggest sharing in shaping their religious plans and policies. If the laborers had no other sessions than the joint meetings with capitalists, they could make no headway in the advancement of their cause.

If the Negro should be contented with the inter-racial conferences, the race would remain stationary or retrograde. Let the white race agree that it will never hold a meeting without the Negro might well consent to hold no separate sessions.

* * * * * * *

Group consciousness is easily frustrated by foreign intrusion. The presence of a single adult will upset the plan of children who desire to formulate their own procedure. The presence of one Protestant would chill the spirit of a meeting designed to advance Catholicism. One Negro by his presence will frustrate the racial schemes of a white group; and one white man can easily upset the social composure of a Negro assembly. The most intimate and vital aspects of our life must be discussed and considered by ourselves alone.

Matters of mutual concern to all should be considered by all. A proposed all-Negro conference is absolutely without prejudice to the various inter-racial movements that are promising good results. In the final analysis, the race must develop its independent life and leadership in all matters where race prejudice sets us apart.

THE NEGRO SANHEDRIN

Kelly Miller calls the proposed all-race conference, which has met with a nation-wide response, a Negro Sandhedrin, after the great judicial council of the ancient Jews, composed of seventy-one priests, scribes and elders, presided over by the high priest. Prof. Miller calls attention to the fact that in 1807 Napoleon Bonaparte suggested a Sanhedrin of the Jews of Europe, and that the East Indians meet in an All-Indian Conference. The need is plain for Negroes taking some thought together about the condition, problems and possible solution of increasing racial difficulties. Wilmington Advocate, Del. 2-18-23

Prof. Miller suggests a conference of conferences, a representative gathering of respresentatives from various organizations to meet in Washington—because of its central location and focal advantages. This conference will, in turn, form a committee which will express the findings of the best minds, hearts and conscience of the race, and be based upon counsel "as wide as the race and as broad as its needs."

This is indeed a big idea and a broad program. Prof. Miller deserves the highest commendation for his truly wide vision and clarity of expression in his call to arms. It remains to be seen if the race will measure up to his ideals, and in the event that the Negro Sanhedrin meets, if it will do more than deliver speeches, froth over conditions, look askance at each other in jealous fear lest some "leader's" prestige be threatened, and present resolutions. A representative gathering of representatives of our most representative organizations. Let's try it, and see if we can get somewhere. Just about now we are marking time.

Negroes in the Professions.

Negro slavery has been abolished in the United States less than sixty years. There are still living men and women who were slaves. The majority of the colored population in the United States are only one generation removed from slavery. It is valuable to note the advance in learning and civilization that has been made.

The "Liberian Methodist" has been compiling figures of the number of negroes in occupations and professions which require a mental development greater than, or at least equal to, that of the average white man.

There are 38,000 negro school teachers, 4,000 physicians and surgeons, 2,000 lawyers, 237 engineers, 578 dentists and 125 chemists. There are several hundred negro authors and newspapermen. Every year there is a larger number of graduates of colleges and professional schools whose ancestors were slaves. N. Y. C. MAIL. JANUARY 12, 1923

Race prejudice is a curious thing. In some countries it does not exist at all. Among the Latin races it is rare. In most parts of Europe there is no distinction made in hotels, restaurants, theatres or other places of public entertainment because of the color of a man's or a woman's skin. In some of the South American countries there is no prejudice against racial intermarriage.

In parts of the United States racial prejudice is apparently on the increase, while in other sections it is lessening. Where there have been race riots in northern cities the causes have been more economic than social. In the South race wars have caused a scarcity of negro labor in localities most affected, which is injurious to the white employer. One fact is certain, that the negro can work out his own salvation better than any one else can work it out for him, and that he is making a splendid attempt to do so.

Race Statesmanship — Morgan College
Howard University — The Graduating Season

* * * *

Race Statesmanship

A statesman is one who can formulate a policy of procedure and impress it upon the acceptance of the people so as to make it a program of practical action.

The Negro group in the United States has never been guided by a wise or comprehensive statesmanship. The race has wandered at random as sheep without a sheperd. Its leadership has been limited and inadequate.

Any Negro who rose a little above the rest has assumed the role of leader. The orator whose vocal powers carried farthest has exerted the greatest sway. The preacher who professed divine vouchsafement had his claim readily allowed.

The ignoramus with a loud voice and self-assertive conceit easily gathered a following. Some of these self-proclaimed leaders have good hard sense and sane judgment. Some have been characterized by devotion to the people who looked to them for guidance. On the otherhand many have merely sought to exploit the ignorance and credulity of the unenlightened masses.

The difficulty of the task of race statesmanship is not only apparent but apallingl. There is no definitely determined ethnological identity. The term "Negro" is synonymous with "non white" which covers a multitude of ethnic diversities made up of all the breeds and bloods of the human family.

The best definition of a Negro that I can think of is one who would be jim-crowed in Virginia.

The only uniting bond is the ban of oppression. There is no racial culture which holds its adherents by ties of tradition. The Negro lost his ancestral cult as he crossed the seas. His manners customs and modes of life are drivative from the environment of his captors. He has no spiritual nationality.

His religion is borrowed from the white man who has never exemplified its principles. Christianity is a misfit when applied to the Teutonic type of mind. It is twisted and distorted out of all resemblance to the original.

The religion of Jesus suits the Negro nature. The two have the same spiritual wave length. It vibrates in sympathetic resonance with the attunement of his soul. The Negro's attempt to imitate the white man's caricature of Christianity instead of exemplifying its original inherent virtues is one of the strange anomalies of human history.

Again race statesmanship is made difficult in that the race is widely and unevenly distributed among a more powerful and populous race which controls the principle activities of its life. The political and economic interests of the Negro are manipulated by the white man. The exploited race has little or nothing to say in the determination of these important phases of his own welfare.

As consequence of these embarrassments and disabilities, the Negro can hardly develop a race consciousness. Indeed, it has been, and to a considerable degree still remains the policy of the white race to frustrate the formation of such consciousness for fear of unwelcome consequences that might naturally flow from it. The Negro labors under a dilemma of which he may not grasp either horn. The white man declares that "you shall not become as one of us," and at the same time denies him the right and power of the complete development and assertion of selfhood.

What shall we do, what can we do in a situation like this? Shall give the matter no serious thought, fellow race men of mine? Shall we satisfy our souls by eating and drinking and making merry while enjoying the fullest measure of the white man's civilization that he will permit us to share?

Or shall we devote ourselves to serious consideration of the contemplation as to the well being of our group, not merely for the day that now is but for the day that is yet to be?

Our leaders in the past have led according to the measure of their light. Mr. Douglass preached the gospel of political rights the panacea of all racial ills. Beyond this he had no philosophy, no vision, no social policy.

Dr. Booker T. Washington believed that material possession would cure many of the evils of the situation.

Both philosophies are good as far as they go, but neither singly nor in combination are they adequate to the requirements of case. If the Negro had all of his political rights as demanded by Douglass. the race problem would not be solved; if he acquired property, thrift and good behavior, as advocated by Washington, the issue of race would still persist. If he possessed political rights, property, intelligence and good behavior, the ghost of race friction would not down.

Mid way between these two philosophies we have had and have a number of rhapsodists who repeat this or that feature of these policies with heated insistence, or condemns deviation therefrom with righteous indignation. But there is not yet vouchsafed to us a reasoned statesmanship whereby this Negro group, now eleven million strong, may determine what is its own and the means by which it might come into its own.

We yet await the statesman with the vision to see and the passion to say, and the power to sway. Has India found its race statesman in Gandhi? No one may hope to match power with the white man in the day of his power. Gandi harks back to the Judean prophet, yet, more than a prophet, who says "Resist not evil." Can the Negro compete with the white man for political, economic or individual power? Can we cast out Belzebub by the methods of Belzebub?

Where, oh where, we utter in despair is the requisite a race statesmanship? Will it be found in the Negro Sanhedrin? Come and see.

PAUL D. CRAVATH AND "THE SOLUTION OF THE NEGRO PROBLEM"

Mr. Paul D. Cravath, eminent New York lawyer, chairman of the Trustee Board of Fisk University and son of the illustrious Erastus Milo Cravath, founder and first President of that institution, is credited with contributing the following to the literature of "Negro Problem" solution

> "The only solution of the Negro Problem is complete segragation and the building up of a separate Negro society. To do this it is necessary that we educate Negro leaders to build and maintain that society."

Mr. Cravath is credited with uttering these remarks in a speech at a dinner at the Union Club in Cleveland, Ohio. We have not seen the speech and do not know the connection in which such a remarkable utterance was made, nor do we fully understand what Mr. Cravath means by "complete segregation." Also it is difficult to understand why a trustee of Fisk University should feel called upon to discuss the so-called Negro Problem with segregation as its solution. Fisk University has recently been endowed, through Mr. Cravath's influence, no doubt, with practically a million dollars. It is inconceivable that it was necessary for Mr. Cravath to apologize for his interest in Negro education and urging aid in that behalf by suggesting that Negroes would be educated at Fisk University to accept "complete segregation."

As one of the sons of Fisk University we declare with all the energy of our might that if the benefactions were given with any such intent, or because of the necessity for segregation they should be spurned. The money would taint and corrupt the manhood and womanhood of the young men and women who would receive training there if its professors and instructors bow to the behest of Mr. Cravath and the donors.

It would be a thousand times better to close the doors of Fisk to education forever than that its sacred walls should be prostituted by the teaching of inferiority and its sacred halls should resound with the tread of men and women who would accept the doctrine and principle of inferiorty, and impliedly agree to live the lives of inferiors as would be involved and established by "complete segregation." Dr. E. M. Cravath, its founder, would himself, if living, spurn with indignaton and contempt a proffer of money accompanied with such conditons.

Mr. Paul D. Cravath, if he is out of harmony with the spirit and attitude of his father as exhibited in his life and teaching at Fisk University, should either maintain silence as to his views or resign.

ONE STANDARD

"A dual civilization within any nation is unsafe for that nation. Every statesman of every nation knows that is true. It is also true that every nation that has stood for any considerable time is a nation that has had one standard for its people—one law, one church—one flag, with one meaning in it, one nation, regardless of color, wealth or poverty, and all with one great idea—freedom, liberty, justice and prosperity for every section of the nation and all people under its flag. Will the United States measure up to this standard?

"Most countries have some central idea around which they can rally their countrymen for any great event; their religion, their oneness of thought, their national song, love of country or war. Not so with the United States of America; it has no national religion; it has no oneness of thought; it has no national song—some sing 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' while others sing 'Dixie.' About the only thing which all the people will rally to is war."

The above excerpt, taken from last week's contribution by Dr. H. R. Butler, speaks volumes, and should claim the serious consideration of every red-blooded American. There is no question of the fact that there exists here in America a dual civilization—made so, possibly, by a heterogenous people with unlike thoughts, customs, ideals and sentiments—who have for themselves different religious inclinations, different traditions—different interpretations and applications of the law—different views as regards to imaginary geographical sections, made real by an assumption of adverse interests—different ideas and feelings as to race groups, because of color; when, in the best interest of the entire people, there should be one standard around which all of her people might rally. There is ever present a racial and sectional system, similar to the ancient cast and lord system, which for centuries were impediments to European civilization.

America has rightly been dubbed the melting pot of the globe. Her civilization has flown to her from all sections of the world. Much good, as also much evil, has come. Science, art and literature have come; but, possibly, the greatest evil that has come is that hidden influence of highly assumed individualism which characterizes a polyglot people, who, either willingly or unwillingly, refuse to blend their ideals customs and thoughts to one standard for the production of the highest good of the whole.

This, possibly, is the greatest mischief maker in any nation. Civilization is as much a fact as any wholly material something—it is human doctrines, science, art, literature, religion and a moral condition, that to be called real must ascend to the highest point of both individual and collective development. It must produce a force or group of forces which will raise the moral, intellectual and religious standards of the people, and organize society for the purpose of rendering the greatest good to the nation in improving its environments, its political and industrial status.

America has fallen into that form of civilization which bloomed in many nations, then faded and died; she has made the mistake of attempting to develop the individual without developing the social conditions. There is present that spirit of individualism productive of selfishness which rebels against the very idea of communicating its development to the mass, which is not a part of the individual's ideals, customs and thoughts.

If America would be safe and realize the highest form of civilization, she must bring about the highest perfection of the relation between man and man. She must adopt a single standard for her people—she must abuse and destroy the prevailing ideas of disloyalty, or loyalty to so many flags, race hate, sectionalism and race interest existing in contravention to the promotion of the best interest of society and humanity. She must develop a conscience of kind—a oneness of thought in terms of America's interest first. She must realize the fact that all of her people go up together, or go down together. She must develop a social sympathy that will spread to all her people—penetrating their very souls. She must wipe away that imaginary "Mason and Dixon Line," and that barrier of racial interest so well demarked to her detriment.

She must either Americanize or expel from her shores every foreign element—rid herself of all people who are more loyal to some other flag than Old Glory. She must humanize herself while developing her great material resources—instilling in every breast a feeling of kindly interest and co-operation, one with the other. She must establish a social order which will produce peace and good will among all her subjects—taking them higher and higher in all their aims and aspirations, binding them together as one common family—loyal to her traditions and jealous of her honor. She must promote an even distribution of justice, liberty and local and national immunities. Or, in a word, she must adopt a single standard for all her people without regard to race, color or creed.

Pacific Coast News Bureau.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23—"Had the Negroes of the South the energy, industry and power of leadership possessed by the Japanese, the whites would have been entirely excluded from that part of the country," declared Attorney General Webb of California in his argument recently before the United States Supreme Court on the four alien land cases brought from California and Washington.

In the lower courts the constitutionality of the laws of the Pacific states which prohibit aliens who are not eligible to citizenship (particularly the Japanese, Chinese, Hindus and native Africans) not only from leasing and owning real estate but also from holding stock in land-owning corporations, was sustained. The lower courts however held that aliens could lawfully enter into contracts with land owners under which they undertook to farm the land upon a crop sharing basis.

Violates 14th Amendment

Louis Marshall counsel for those challenging the laws contended that the legislation was invalid in that it constituted an unconstitutional discrimination against persons of their color and race and violated the 14th amendment to the Federal Constitution.

Another Race Problem

In completing his argument, Attorney General Webb of California in answer to an order from Chief Justice Taft to speak plainly in stating what the Japanese were doing to which he (Webb) took objection, replied "The white people refuse to assimilate with the Japanese and as the Japanese line advances, we retreat, and we do not like to retreat. We had one race problem which was settled by the Civil War," continued Mr. Webb, "There is another growing up now on the Pacific Coast that is more threatening. We have already lost the Phillippines. The Japanese dominate there now."

Reason for Alarm

According to Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., in a series of articles on the Japanese question published in the Los Angeles Examiner, "On Jan. 21, 1923, figures for last years birth rate for California, were announced. The number of Japanese births had decreased 5 per cent. Still at that it was found to be three and a half times greater than that of the Caucasian race. There were 63 born to every 1000 Japanese, and 19 born to every 1000 whites. In 1922, 66,388 whites and 5093 Japanese were born in the state.

Our coast is our heritage. To-day there are in the states of the Pacific slope approximately the same number of Japanese as there were Negroes south of the Mason Dixon line at the outbreak of the Civil War. The Colored races of Africa are slow, shiftless, assimilable. The yellow races of Asia are quick, energetic, unassimiable."

A SOLUTION OF THE RACE PROBLEM

New York Herald 2-10-23

A movement insignificant in its proportions as yet, but adequate, timely and courageous in its conception, has started in one or two of the barbarous, race-baiting Southern States to solve the race problem in those States. We are not sure that when it shall have assumed its full proportions, that when it shall have settled conditions there, that it will not solve the race question throughout the nation. We are not in a position to approve en toto of the business policies and program of those now making the initial start. We neither know of their business integrity nor their executive ability. That movement, stated simply, is the migration of colored people from the mob-law infested portions of Dixie to Mexico. The two principal movements so far have been led by colored preachers from Oklahoma. The numbers they have carried in the aggregate now total only a hundred families, more or less. These colored preachers are religious zealots. That is not to our way of thinking to be derided. It is the right way for the movement to start, giving good omen to the movement that the blessings of Providence should be invoked to guide aright this hazardous effort, which is destined to be historic. Such was the start of this Republic at Plymouth Rock when the Puritans came to America that they might worship God according to their own conscience. Reduced to simple language, the situation and the significance of this movement are these:

In the portions of Oklahoma from which these pioneers have gone bag and baggage, their communities are Ku Klux ridden. These pioneers are not the shiftless, poverty-stricken, ne'er-do-wells, but they are those hardy, substantial farmer folk whose thrift and possessions have excited the envy and greed of their cracker neighbors. They are that type of simple colored country men to whom religious devotion is not a pastime, but a vital, living thing in their lives. Unprotetected by the State and local officials of Oklahoma, the prey of the mob outlaws and murderers, unable to challenge or to combat their fiendish foes—with all the machinery, the gattling guns and the courts in their hands, they are moving to a richer and an hospitable clime. They are moving as if from the plague of death, hampered and held up at every turn by the Southern State and customs officials, who seek to block their exodus. The Pilgrim Fathers were no more beset than these black pioneers, but they press on toward the promised land. In caravans drawn by mules, with six months' provisions on hand, these men, women and children crossed the border on January 23, and on January 25 these caravans disembarked a comparatively few miles from their future homes in the rich State of San Luis Potosi. They have bought there thousands of fertile acres and there they will pitch their camps and build their homes from the abundant timber on their own land. The land to which they have gone is high, dry and yet well watered. The temperature in this high plateau land of rare and rich Old Mexico is warm and yet not torrid. The people of Mexico themselves, for the great majority, are not only colored but more than hospitable to the colored citizens of the United States. The Government of Mexico knows no man by the color of his skin—indeed, there is no such thing as color recognition among the Mexicans. These black American pioneers have gone to join the descendants of the hundreds of brave, black men that were with Cortez and Coronado three hundred years ago, and theye are gone to join the tens of thousands of black slaves carried to Mexico by the Spanish explorers. This wonderful country, now undeveloped by reason of the ignorance and indolence of the Mexican peon, will respond in abundance to the touch of the workers now settling there. Let the number of such black Americans continue to go from the Ku Klux ridden portions of Oklahoma, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Texas and Louisiana to the number of one million, and we prophesy that peace and prosperity will attend all the ways of Mexico. Let one million such brave black Americans leave their unhospitable homes and go to grasp the outstretched hand of Mexico, and the Mexican Government and Mexican industry and Mexican progress will be stabilized, and Mexico will become one of the greatest republics in the world.

Let these million black folk leave those Ku Klux States and they will paralyze their industry and progress and bring the Southern people to their senses. The South without these black pioneers will go to seed. Its fields will be waste, its agriculture and commerce will become stagnant and the best whites of Dixie will stop the persecution of the black folk that are left. As a matter of self-preservation they will stop the disfranchisement, the jim-crowing and the persecution of their black neighbors. Then and not until then will the South grant the boon of equal opportunity, equal education and equal protection to her black citizens. Then the national government and the national Republican party will speedily see the necessity of stopping short the race-baiting and the rebel South and the Southern propoganda that is now undermining the sentiment of the North and the principles of the Republic. This is a great program. But we believe it is the solution of the nation's greatest problem.

Alabama as Seen by One of Her Sons.

Commercial Appeal

The Nation, which is always interesting, not always true, but always crusading, is printing a story of all states of these United States. Every state is invited to see itself as others see it. Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. Mencken wrote the first story and it had to do with the state of Maryland. Up to date we have had stories of Ohio, Delaware, Mississippi, Michigan and a number of western states. 1-23-23.

Some of the writers impregnate their stories with the spirit of gentle cynicism and sarcasm. This may be due to the imitative qualities of all of us. Mr. Mencken writing the first, others seem to get into cadence with him, insofar as anybody can keep step with this very remarkable and bitter brained critic.

Now comes Clement Wood with the story of Alabama. Mr. Wood should know his Alabama. He was born in that state and he is a graduate of the University of Alabama. Then he went to Yale. He practiced law and held a public office in Birmingham. Now he lives in New York.

Mr. Wood sees little good in the state of his birth. He seems to be in bad with everybody in it. Probably Mr. Wood is in bad humor with everything that is or is to be.

One reading Mr. Wood's article, would think that Alabama is continuously discussing the negro question. He would have it that human life in Alabama everlastingly spins around something black.

There are many interesting things in Alabama, but Mr. Wood devotes about all of his space to Alabama negroes and to white people in their relation to negroes.

There is romance in the early days of Alabama. Spaniards and Frenchmen swept across it. The Spaniards left their imprint on Mobile and its environs.

DeSoto marched across Alabama when he was seeking the big river. When the Latins passed on the English speaking people went into Alabama, some from the lower Atlantic seaboard, while others came down from the Virginia country and thence along the shores of the Tennessee River.

Some of these people were cultured, others were plain folks. Some brought copies of Shakespeare, Pilgrim's Progress, Paradise Lost and Young's Night Thoughts. Here and there was a copy of Hallam's Middle Ages and Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. Of course many of these early settlers were unlettered, but by and large they were like the plain folk who came out into all of the states in the Mississippi valley and the Alabama River Basin.

The Indians of Alabama were virile. They gallantly fought Jackson and others.

Alabama bore her share of the burden of the Southern Confederacy. Some of the mountain people in the northern part of the state regarded the rebellion as none of their fight.

There is much illiteracy in Alabama today, but illiteracy is not a mark of infamy. It is a misfortune to him who is not able to read, but some mighty strong men and some good men have been strangers to the printed word. It is better not to read at all than to read some of the vile outpourings of the printing press and it is better not to write than to put into type some of the stuff that now passes current as philosophy, poetry and literature. Yet it is the right of every American citizen to have an education. If he puts it to a bad use it is not the fault of the education, but the cussedness of the individual.

Mr. Wood makes one statement as to the relation of whites and negroes which is absolutely false and we are amazed that he made it. The statement is so shocking to a racial instinct that it falls of its own incongruous absurdity.

But there are many things worth while in Alabama and Mr. Wood's picture is incomplete without them. In many parts of the state there remains a strong imprint of the old culture that marked gentlemen and gentlewomen before the war. Among the humblest white people there is a simple hospitality that is the joy of a man passing along the road.

Our intimate knowledge of Alabama comes from experiences along the Tennessee River valley and in Montgomery. Personally, we know little as to the rest of the state, but we believe we get from what we have seen a reliable cross section.

Alabama is a state of enormous resources. The mills, mines and furnaces in and around Birmingham are as the same things around Pittsburgh.

The valley of the Tennessee to our mind is much like the valley of the Mohawk. The lower rivers have on either side rich bottoms which remind one of the Yazoo Delta and the St. Francis Basin.

Mobile has a touch of quality as varied and rich as that of Charleston.

Of course, Alabama has rotten politics, there are many demagogs in the state who get in public office. While most of our Southern states send lots of demagogs into high places, we submit that you will find as many ignorant and loud voiced louts representing northern and western states in the halls of Congress as you will find from any other section of this great country.

Alabama today has a good governor. One of its United States senators is respected throughout the nation. On every public question and in every situation Senator Underwood bears himself with dignity, urbanity and when he speaks he reflects the opinions of a hard working, thoughtful man.

Alabama is a great state, having some shortcomings, but Alabama is moving forward into a better order of things.

Mr. Wood should take a course of calomel and quinine.

THE NEGRO QUESTION IS A QUESTION OF "EATS."

A Brief, Frank Discussion by Hon. Hugh E. Macbeth, General Counsel of the International Community Welfare League.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 30.—"I have been asked to make public the attitude of the International Community Welfare League toward the American Negro problem. In response to this request I might sum up the League's view of this subject by saying that the American Negro problem is largely a question of "eats," to use the language of the street.

"To say that the American Negro is not anxious to rid himself of jim-crowism, political disfranchisement, etc., is but to utter a bold untruth. The truth of the situation is that the Negro yearns to get away from these terrible conditions which surround him in most parts of the United States, but h the financial ability to break a to a better environment.

"The average Negro is unable to go more than a hundred miles from his home without running the risk of starvation. In other words, his rations are so short that he is unable to range very far from the spot of oppression which he calls home. And when the occasional Negro by accident or otherwise acquires sufficient means to extend his range to more distant and more favorable fields he evidences little or no desire to assist his unfortunate brethren to take advantage of the new-found opportunities.

"The white gentlemen who control the economic situation of the American Negro have taken full pains to see that the Negro is kept on such short rations that he will never muster sufficient energy from his daily task of keeping body and soul together, to be able to do much serious work along the line of improving his general condition.

"In other words, until the Negro controls his own "eats" he need expect but little more along the line of general racial advancement than the opposition is willing to have him enjoy.

"When the opposition desired to put an end to the Chicago race riot they cut the supply of food stuffs which fed the Negroes in the riot zone, and soon all was peace and quiet in the zone, and thus it will be in all future race riots, etc.

"The International Community Welfare League encourages the Negro to go to such communities wherein he can control his food supplies. In lower California, Mexico, the Lower California Mexican Land & Development Company which is one of the developmen companies under the supervision of the league, farmers are now busy growing foodstuffs sufficient to feed two thousand Negroes a year. When these foodstuffs are raised and stored, two thousand Negroes will be able to look to members of their own race for direction as to when and how to work and when to eat. These two thousand people can then raise foodstuffs and erect buildings to shelter other thousands who will follow them. As to these people, the question of "eats" shall have been solved, and their energies, geniuses and ambitions will be free to follow along the lines of the best interests of their race."

HOWARD DEFIES DU BOIS-JOHNSON FORCE IN DEBATE

In Open Letter Perry W. Howard Challenges N. A. A. C. P. Heads to Prove Assertions or Withdraw Them

1-20-23.
New York
New York Tribune

Washington, D. C.,
January 5, 1923.

Messrs. W. E. B. Du Bois and James Weldon Johnson, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Gentlemen: — I hereby challenge either or both of you to a joint debate in either New York city, Washington, D. C., or Chicago, Ill., in order that you may make good your assertions on the three following propositions:

1. That I contributed—directly or indirectly—to the defeat of the Dyer Anti-Lynching bill.

2. That, under the present rules of the Senate, the Republicans could have passed this bill in the face of the Democratic filibuster.

3. That I have not done as much for the passage of the anti-lynching bill as any man among the 12,000,000 of our group.

I submit that it is now up to you either to accept this challenge and prove your assertions or make the amende honorable, which gentlemen would be pleased to do.

Respectfully,
(Signed) PERRY W. HOWARD.

Best Negroes Of Georgia Live In Athens Says Mayor Who Also Praise Work Of The Athens High School

Afro-American
Baltimore Md

To the Editor:

Your information with reference to the colored people being arrested by Southern Policemen whether they break the law or not and the police are especially severe on visitors from the North is untrue. 2-16-23

Our doors are open to all visitors and citizens whether they be from the North or elsewhere. The only requirement is that they are good citizens and recognize our laws and ordinances.

The colored race, especially in the city of Athens is treated in the Courts, with the same rights and safe guards as our whites.

This is absolutely true in this city where we have as a whole the best colored citizens in the State of Georgia. We have no trouble with them.

As a matter of course we have some bad Negroes, who have to be dealt with harshly, but they are largely in the minority.

Suppose you write to Prof. Sam Harris, the principal of the Colored High School of Athens, and I have no doubt but that he will write you frankly. His school numbers several hundred and there has never been a case against one of them charge with crime or disorderly conduct.

Jacksonville, Fla., Head Disagrees With Lester Walton On This Point

Jacksonville, Fla., Feb. 6—After being shown an article in the AFRO-AMERICAN of last week in which Lester Walton declares that police in Southern cities are always hankering to arrest colored people, especially if they happen to be from the North, Acting Mayor W. J. Baker made the following comment:

"Our police have never been accused of arresting anyone without cause. It has always occurred to me that there are as many white as colored prisoners before the courts each morning.

"We do not have any race troubles in this ciyt. We have some very wealthy Negroes who have always co-operated with the officers to the fullest extent. I can say truthfully that the Negroes are in no more danger in Jacksonville than are white people. When instructions are given to police for the enforcement of any law, ordinance or order, no distinction is made as to race or color.

THE CONFERENCE OF LEADERS

2-8-23 Philadelphia Pa.

We see by the newspapers that Prof. Kelly Miller of Howard University has suggested a conference of Negro leaders to decide upon some kind of racial policy. This seems to be a good suggestion from the professor. The chief question that arises is, who are the leaders, who shall invite them, and how shall they get together?

There was a time when certain of our white friends pointed out in each community this gentleman or the other as the leader of the colored people; or that certain people because they had graduated from high school or college, or had come into possession of a few dollars, constituted themselves as leaders. In fact, most of the so-called leadership which we have heard most about, was the self-constituted leadership. Mr. Booker T. Washington in his lifetime, used to poke fun at the so-called "leading" colored man. He didn't have anything, he didn't represent anybody, he was just a talker and a time killer. This type has not entirely disappeared, though it does not predominate today. We say, however, that the men who talk most about leadership, usually are those who have least of it.

It would be a good thing, however, if men who really have power and influence among our people, and their confidence, should get together. The fact is that outside of the church, the Negro is unorganized, and that the so-called leaders are not leading anybody except a few of their own group. The most lamentable thing about Negro leadership is, that it is a sort of auto-intoxication. A few white people laud a certain Negro because they do not know much about other Negroes, or because he is their willing and often slavish tool; they think that this particular Negro ought to be a leader of his race, and he forthwith sets himself up as a leader; but he takes no particular interest in the great things of the race. He knows very little about the labor of the people, he knows but little about the Negro church, or the Negro secret order, or any of the great mass movements among the Negroes.

Now, if Prof. Miller can get a group of Negroes, not the professional Negroes, who are actually leaders in labor, in church, in secret orders, etc., among organized Negroes, he will probably do a good thing.

Race Problem—1923

United States.

GREENVILLE S. C. NEWS
MARCH 29, 1923

NEGROES DESERVE CONSIDERATION

The negro leaders of the South are as much, if not more, interested in the so-called exodus of colored people as are the white people. Naturally, they are in better position than white people to understand why the negroes are leaving the South, and any suggestions which come from reputable members of the negro race is deserving of consideration by all good citizens. Therefore, the series of resolutions recently adopted by representatives of 1,000 colored homes of Greenville will receive the attention and consideration of the white population of the city.

The negroes state that as much has been said by the press and public speakers about the exodus and that as "the remedies which have been suggested to alleviate the underlying causes of the conditions that cause this unrest have been unheeded," they respectfully ask consideration of some suggestions they make. They suggest that the condition of their schools be looked into by those in position to help; that improvement of their streets be looked after, and that at least good sidewalks be built to their schools; that the police show less aggressiveness in arresting members of their race, calling attention to a recent case where a negro was unmercifully clubbed without apparent just cause; and that the wage question be looked into, claiming that it is almost imopssible for the average negro to earn an honest living under present conditions. They consider the better school advantages offered colored people in the North as one of the main reasons for the exodus.

These suggestions and requests are reasonable, should be looked into, and if the negroes are receiving unjust treatment in any of the instances, some measures should be put in operation to help them. The decent negroes are not looking for anything like social equality. They know that will never be, and they do not expect it or want it. They do, however, desire just treatment before the law and in other ways, and no one should begrudge them that. They are entitled to it and it will make them better citizens. The more good citizens a community has the better the community becomes. We must not overlook the fact that we cannot mistreat the negro without at the same time do an injustice to ourselves, while on the other hand, when we help him we are helping ourselves as well. This is only the selfish viewpoint of it, without taking into consideration any altruistic motive. Either is sufficient to cause us to give the negro proper consideration.

THE FRENCH ARE USING MULLATTO TROOPS IN GERMAN RUHR VALLEY

TRUE TO THEIR SPIRIT OF "LIBERTY, EQUALITY AND JUSTICE," WILL "STAND BY THEIR GUNS."

Associated Negro Press.

Paris, France,—"What's in a name?" French officials have admitted they are using "mullatto troops" in the Ruhr valley.

The Observer
Little Rock, Ark.

The admission stated that the mullatoes are French citizens of the Antilles, a group of islands in the West Indies.

It is well-know that the majority of these troops are of a dark hue, some of them almost black in color. This announcement promises to arouse much comment, particularly in America and Germany, but it is believed that the French true to their spirit of "Liberty, Equality and Justice," will literally "stand by their guns."

AN OPEN LETTER TO WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

We have just read with the deepest concern a statement made by Mr. Bryan touching the Negro question for publication in the New York Times, in which Mr. Bryan sets up some strange and inconsistent views.

The Atlanta Independent

What Mr. Bryan says has much weight in this country, for the reason the public believes Mr. Bryan honest and sincere in whatever he says. One of the things that has added much to his breadth of character and rugged honesty has been the discussion of all national problems without referring to the Negro question. Whatever may be said of Mr. Bryan, it must be admitted that he is largely a statesman with views and the courage to express them. Like other human beings, he is not always right. On most national and international questions, Mr. Bryan's countrymen have differed from him. While they all admit his honesty and sincerity, they have never thought his policies sound and sane. The great commoner has made himself popular with the colored man, because of his failure to discuss their question, and we have very largely thought him to be so broad in mind and liberal in views that his conception of Americanism included all the people. We have never thought Mr. Bryan capable of announcing a program that did not mean protection and equality before the law for every class of our citizenry.

But, in his address before the Southern Society in Washington a few days ago, which he amplified for publication, he seems to have run counter to his well established policy of discussing American questions by taking up for discussion the Negro problem. In this discussion, Mr. Bryan does not make himself clear; his argument does not support the premises laid down. To allege that Mr. Bryan was shaping his sails to fit into his new environment, would be in contravention of our opinion of the man. But when we read his efforts to justify disfranchisement, which destroys the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence, by shifting responsibilitty for crime to the law of self-preservation, we can hardly escape the conclusion that Mr. Bryan is qualifying himself for admission into southern environment by accepting the policy that the ends justify the means.

Mr. Bryan takes the position that the limitation of suffrage to the black man is not and ought not to be based upon the repudiation of the Declaration of Independence; but upon principle. How Mr. Bryan is going to discover a set of principles which destroys the doctrine of equality among men, set up in the Declaration of Independence, without repudiating the instrument, is a question hard to answer. Mr. Bryan calls his new principle, "the first law of nature" or the right of self-preservation. We believe Mr. Bryan wants to be fair in the discussion of this problem as he is in the discussion of other problems, but transfiguring himself from a northern man with northern views to a southern man with southern prejudices, he has a delicate job to perform. He is thoroughly committed to the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence—that all men were created equal and have certain inalienable rights, among which is the right to life, property and the enjoyment of happiness. He believes, and has often given expression to the doctrine that there is no just government without the consent of the governed, and any government inflicted upon people without their consent, is destructive of the ends of all just government. How Mr. Bryan is going to develop a set of principles that will uphold disfranchisement and the limitation of suffrage to a group of people created equal without repudiating the Declaration of Independence, grows in difficulty the more we think about it.

The law of self-preservation is inexorable, and does not rest upon the destruction of the other fellow's rights. It is true that the first law of nature is self-preservation; but the principle of the law of self-preservation means exact justice to all men, and does not contemplate that one group of men have the right to deprive another group of men of their inalienable rights in order to preserve supremacy for themselves. If the white man must destroy the inalienable rights of the black man to preserve his rights, such arbitrary action is neither the application of the law of self-preservation or an application of such equality and justice as Thomas Jefferson had in mind when his soul breathed the principles of government enunciated in the Declaration of Independence.

It is fundamental that man can preserve his own rights just in proportion as he seeks to preserve the rights of other men in common with his own. When one man takes the life of another man, because he is in imminent danger of losing his own life, such is a correct application of the law of self-defense or self-preservation; but for one set of men to limit the rights and possibilities of another by law, in order to secure unto themselves race supremacy in politics or economics, such conduct is based upon the repudiation of the Declaration of Independence. The great commoner's denial to the contrary, notwithstandlimitation of Negro suffrage in the south is not based upon ution of Independence, but upon the principle—the first law must resort to legalized theft, murder, high crimes and mispremacy, his supremacy will not live any longer than he can ividuals, will out, if it has to come in failure of government.

Mr. Bryan's argument does not take him any further than to say that if a

OPEN LETTER TO COLORED STUDENTS

Pittsburg American Pittsburg, Pa.
3/9/23

Fellow Students:

In addition to inconveniences which you must bear from birth, events which vitally affect you are happening here in great America each day. Are you wide awake and aware of their vital significance to you? You are in school to better yourself. (Surely this is praiseworthy; without it we are lost.) You have decided that when you come out of school you will make good in your chosen calling. But is that enough? It is not. Mere training and mere decision won't do it. There are things you must face as groups, not as individuals. Group action is an established method of progress. Your interest in the problems of our race is a selfish one, for whatever you may be or whatever success you may ever achieve you must gain it largely through your own people. It may sound narrow, but is it not a fact? To whom do our great papers, insurance companies and doctors sell, or whom do they serve? Who will listen to your sermons? And whom will you teach? Your people. Now, if it is as simple as that, what stands in your way?

Have you ever heard indictments that Negroes will not work together; that we lack race pride; that we are in part, denied opportunity and Jim-Crowed because we are so uncultured? Yes, you have. At school and by fireside you delivered great orations on these topics. You complain about the lack of unity among us and the lack of opportunity. You bewail the failure of the Dyer Bill. Is that getting anywhere? Lament and discuss the dying of the liberal spirit at Harvard, or talk of the rapid growth of the Ku Klux Klan. Is that gaining anything. Positively, it is not.

I do not means that we students should take up weapons, or in like methods attempt to fight the klan; but there is something we can do and we can do it while we are students. Now:

1. Can't we find the causes of the lack of co-operation among us and hammer on our students throughout the nation, until, as in other races, combined efforts is a reality?
2. Don't you believe we can make ourselves socially efficient?
3. Can't we give intelligent and profitable consideration to the race problem?

Students throughout America are asked to work on these things.

A fair-sized delegation of colored students from high schools, colleges and universities are meeting in Washington, D. C., on April 6 and 7, to attempt to draft a practical program which will make possible the realization of these things.

An executive committee of the American Federation of Colored Students—an organization of colored students at Atlantic City during the summer, from Howard, Yale, Lincoln, Oberlin, Cornell, Tuskegee, Downington, Monte Claire Normal and the Atlantic City High School—have perfected plans for holding the Washington convention.

The plans and purposes of the executive committee have been favorably criticized by some of the ablest thinkers of the day, including Kelly Miller and Emmett J. Scott of Howard University, Dr. David A. Lane of West Virginia Collegiate Institute, and Dr. George Johnson, Ph.D., Dean of Lincoln University.

There are cities in Americe containing 50,000 Negroes without a single department store or real bank. Why don't we have them? Why aren't we trusted and supported? Are these things nothing to you? This is something practical. If you are a student these are things to study. Use your sociology. Apply your psychology.

This is the first and only movement of its kind ever attempted by colored students. Will your school be represented at Washington? Think! Then roll up your sleeves and act. Be progressive.

God help you to see the righ and to do your duty as you see it.

ing. Mr. Bryan says that the limitation of Negro suffrage in the south is not based upon the repudiation of the Declaration of Independence, but upon the principle—the first law of nature. If the white man must resort to legalized theft, murder, high crimes and misdemeanors to establish his supremacy, his supremacy will not live any longer than he can get away with the goods he steals. For, crime, like the truth, will out, and crime against groups, like crime against individuals, will out, if it has to come in failure of government. A government erected upon error and wrong doing will not last any longer than truth can assert itself. The law of self-preservation must proceed within the lines of right and justice, or it will prove not to be the first law of nature, but the will of designing men, demagogues and race haters.

Mr. Bryan quotes his experience back in 1898, when a white man from the south took him to task for stressing the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence. He said that this man, in cautioning him, said: "Don't put too much emphasis upon the Declaration of Independence; that in the states where the blacks menaced white supremacy, it had been found necessary to ignore the doctrine that all men are created equal."

Now, here is a man who helped to perpetrate the crime of disfranchisement who tells Mr. Bryan that in the states where the blacks, by reason of numbers, menaced white supremacy, the whites had found it necessary to ignore the doctrine that all men are created equal; yet Mr. Bryan says that disfranchisement is not based upon the repudiation of the Declaration of Independence, but upon principle. Mr. Bryan said that he defended the doctrine of equality and inalienable rights enumerated in the Declaration of Independence and explained that the problem which the whites of the south had to solve did not involve the question of equality before the law. The question is which race shall control the government and make the laws under which both shall live?

We agree with Mr. Bryan so far as the laws of the survival of the fittest shall go, but we think his position is untenable, when he resolves the entire question into which race shall make the laws for the government of all. We believe thoroughly in the doctrine of intelligence and wealth controlling ignorance and poverty, but we do not believe in a policy of wealth and intelligence oppressing and taking from the poor and ignorant their rights under the law. We do not believe that wealth and intelligence should deny to ignorance and poverty any right, privilege or protection under the law that they reserve unto themselves Mr. Bryan says the law makes no distinction in the matter of crime between whites and blacks, but Mr. Bryan does not go far enough. Mr. Bryan's argument does not take him any further than to say that if a white man commits a crime and a Negro commits the same crime, the law denominates the act of both the same. Now, if the act of both is defined by law to be the same, there is no discrimination in the fixing of punishment. While there is no distinction in crime between white and black men, the law certainly upholds a distinction in the distribution of rights and protection. The law fixes one qualification for Negroes for saffrage and another for the white man. It undertakes by chicanery, unfairness and dishonesty to place a burden upon a Negro to qualify that it does not impose upon a white man. In the distribution of protection under the law, the white man is protected in mob law and many other crimes against the peace of the country, where a Negro is punished for the slightest provocation. In the distribution of educational funds in the south, the state appropriates one dollar for the education of the Negro child, and twelve dollars for the education of the white child. The Negroes are driven from home, their property confiscated to white men without due process of law, and the law officer often tells the Negro that he cannot protect him, and he had better hide out for a more agreeable climate.

Mr. Bryan asks some very absurd questions; among which is "Will any white man, who believes that the law if made by Negroes, under the circumstances, would be better for both or administered with more fairness than now?" Of course, every white man would say no. And in like manner, every black man will say, if black men made the laws governing both races, as the white people do, the laws would be better for both and administered with more fairness.

It is evident as you read Mr. Bryan's argument that he is qualifying himself for political success in the south. There is only one qualification necessary for a white man to succeed politically in the south, and that is to deny the Negro his political and economic rights. Abuse the Negro, and you are a statesman. If you are fair and stand head and shoulders above your contemporaries for the principles of equality and justice as enunciated by Thomas Jefferson and subscribe to the doctrine that all men are created equal, you are regarded as a Negro lover and you are driven from public service by some little tomtit, who knows nothing and has no other platform than race hatred.

Mr. Bryan's argument in reference to northern republicans is unworthy of the man. If the majority is to rule, and he has heretofore been in favor of the popular will, Negroes have not been sufficient in number in any northern district to be elected to congress. It has not been a question of Negroes or white men. White men and Negroes have contested in the same primaries where both white and black men voted and the white man went to congress or to the legislature because he received a majority of the votes of his constituents. Negroes do not want to go to congress or vote because they are Negroes. They want to vote and go to congress because they are American citizens and entitled to representation. They are adversed to the slavery of taxation without representation. Representatives of the people in any form of government should be the choice of the popular will expressed at the ballot box, without regard to race or color. Anything else is not the democracy that Mr. Bryan propagates.

We no more favor black supremacy than we do white supremacy. We favor the majority rule. If the majority selects white people because of their special fitness, we submit. And if black representatives are selected for the same reason, we acquiesce. No inconsistency of the northern republican that may be pointed out by the great commoner can justify the south in taking from the Negro his inalienable rights or depriving him of his vote by intimidation, molestation or fear of bodily harm. But Mr. Bryan subscribes fully to the southern position, when he admits that the restriction placed upon suffrage in the south is based upon necessity; that is to say, it is necessary to legalize the theft of the Negro vote by cunning and designing statutes in order to insure white supremacy. Mr. Bryan, recently baptised into his new environs, becomes an expounder of their fallacies and intrigues by admitting that if the suffrage of the black man was not limited, white supremacy would fail. Mr. Bryan adopts the policy that the end justifies the means.

Personally we would not displace white rule in any state for black rule under the present conditions. We do not feel that our people are sufficiently advanced in the science of government to take charge and control this country; but we do insist that we be given every opportunity afforded every other class of citizens and that we be permitted to qualify by helping and learning. Right cannot survive with error as a foundation. It is too little for a big man like Mr. Bryan to quack about social and political equality. Social equality is a personal question, but political equality is a right recognized by the Declaration of Independence and affirmed by the Constitution. If the race ever had a class of men who placed social equality before the cultivation of character, that class of Negroes has passed. We are entitled to political equality and every other equality before the law, and the question of social equality will take care of itself. We agree with Mr. Bryan that both races are here and here to stay, and we should strive to get along together by the exchange of services and cooperate for the promotion of the common welfare. Mr. Bryan states this is only possible upon the basis of friendship, and friendship is possible only on the basis of honesty and frank understanding. We assent to this sentiment, but we add that the white man's program must include the Negro and the Negro's program must include the white man.

We carry Mr. Bryan's article on another page in this issue.

OUTCAST AMERICANS

The Chicago Whip 8-18-23

When the United States government paid its final respects to the late President Harding a splendid occasion arose for the black people to realize just how much this nation respected them and how they were figured in the general scheme of affairs. America paid an unparalleled and unprecedented tribute to the dead president, and all recognized Americans were permitted to make their grief manifest. The twelve million black people of this nation wept alone, "seemingly outcasts in men's eyes." They were either intentionally or inadvertently omitted from the organized ceremonies in which grieving Americans indulged. Even in the hour of natic al bereavement the hate of the living was made manifest bef re the altar of the dead.

Jews, Lithuanians, Poles, Slavs, Chinese, Irish, German and English, and in fact all of the heterogeneous groups which make up this nation were recognized and permitted to pay their respect by way of representation at Mr. Harding's funeral. We alone were ignored and slighted. Whoever doubts that the black Americans do not feel the sting is ignorant of the black man's character. He feels it and silently resents it, but what can he do?

Chicago Ill.

What can we do when we are shut out from the enjoyment, the benefits and even from the prescribed mourning of this government? We are again brought face to face with the great color problem, and those who have studied it know that we must win respect from this government before we will be granted recognition. The Jews are respected because of their wealth and mental brilliancy; the Ku Klux Klan is respected because of its existing and potential strength as well as its popular preachments; the Catholics are respected because of their numbers, their glorious history and their power. America respects brain and power even where method and motive is repulsive. The black race in this country must develop its brain, and work with the great natural energy and potentialities which comes to them by virtue of citizenship and by reason of their numbers.

When it is considered that there are more black people in this country than there are Jews, and when the voting and earning capacity is estimated, it is invigorating and enthusing to muse over what could be done by the application of intelligent direction to our efforts. Time heals all wounds and time will play its part in developing the natural strength of the American black people, but the time element can be cut down appreciably by the dissemination of intelligent and comprehensive doctrines. These doctrines must emanate from the press and the pulpit. The masses of the black people must be reached and the spirit of the times must be infused in their minds by those agencies which reach them. It is in the province and duty of the press and the pulpit. The possibilities of the black American winning respect and recognition are definite and determined. The probability is left with ourselves.

RAISE LEARNING OF THE NEGRO, IS WM. PICKEN'S PLEA

St. Louis Clarion

William Pickens Speaks To Large Audience

St. Louis, Mo.

DECATUR, Ill., Oct. 10 — Speaking to a packed house in the Methodist Church Tuesday night, William Pickens, field secretary, made a plea for a better understanding between the black and white races in the United States and an effort to raise the intelligence of the black race, predicting that if this is done, the intelligence of the nation as a whole will be advanced.

10-13-23

Local Organization

The association has 450 branches in the United States and has a membership of 100,000 colored people and 10,000 whites. Ther is a local organization in Decatur headed by Edward P. Jacobs, 1002 West Forrest avenue. Miss Marie E. Gray, 1405 North Monroe street is secretary of the Decatur branch.

Mr. Pickens pointed out that in the United States there were one hundred million whites and twelve million blacks and that common sense points out that the two races should get along without misunderstanding.

Can't Have Two Types

"Must Abraham Lincoln come back from his grave and tell you that the nation cannot exist half slave and half free, half 'Jim Crow' and half lynching?" he asked. "You cannot have two types of civilization in this country."

The speaker stated that the black man knows more about the white man than the white man knows about the black because the colored man lives in a world ruled by the whites and reads the white man's papers, absorbs his mode of life and does as the white man does.

Group Not Individual

He also pointed out that crimes committed by a Negro are pointed out in the press as crimes committed as a group and not an individual. headlines adver se the group as "Negro Commits Crime," he said. He went on to show from this association of ideas the word "Negro" instantly arouses the idea of violent crime.

The White Man's Negro

Kansas City Sun

"Down With Subserviency, Long Live Manhood and Courage," Says Kelly Miller.

Kansas City, Mo.

(By Kelly Miller.)

"There are no good Indians but dead Indians." "The good Negro is the one who does what I tell him." These are well known mottoes which express the white man's appraisement of the Red Man's indomitable disposition, on the one hand, and of the Negro's pliant docility on the other. Self abasement and enfeeblement of will are the prime requisites of the slave. It was because the white man found, or thought he found, in the Negro an easier instrument of his will than in the stubborn, defiant Indian that the black man was imported to supplant Indian slavery on this continent. The whole superstructure of modern slavery rested upon the assumption of racial overlordship on part of the white man and acceptance of the assumption on part of the Negro. The individual who possessed innate courage and stubbornness found that he could either conform and be comfortable or resist and incur the coercion of the cruel club. The white man's Negro as a type is the product of the institution of slavery, and is more to be pitied than blamed. Where resistance is risky the temptation to yield is great. Ajax defying the lightning is the apotheosis of foolhardy temerity. Frail human nature is readily prone "to bend the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning." The seeming servility which the Negro displays in the presence of the white man is often more spurious than genuine. It is a part of his scheme of calculated cunning. He feigns a submission which he does not feel, and makes believe what he does not believe as part of his protective philosophy. The white man is easily flattered and fooled by appeal to racial vanity. Concede his racial superiority and he will readily grant the submisve Negro any subordinate request. The Negro knows this and plays upon his vanity as his trump card. The white man and the Negro are equally gullible in face of mutual flattery. Each believes that he is deceiving the other when he is only deceiving himself.

The South is endeavoring to encourage the white man's type of Negro, and to eliminate those of more robust and manly spirit. In the August number of Current History, Judge W. R. Winston of North Carolina has pointed out the whole situation in a free, frank and fearless manner. Listen to the learned Judge:

"So long as the Negro 'behaves himself' in the South he is safe. But once let him cross the dead line of race separation and endeavor to assert his manhood rights and he becomes a menace to the existing order of things. With hat in hand, the Southern Negro is more than safe, he is happy—if he is that kind of Negro. For his sake and in memory of the old-time 'darky' schools, hospitals and orphanages have been set on foot. A tender, patient relationship exists between this unambitious, likeable creature and the white people of the South. The white man's Negro gets all that he is entitled to and often more in the courts, as a domestic, on the farm, with trowel or hammer. The white man who undertakes to impose on a white man's Negro has his hands full. Many years experience as a circuit judge enables me to declare that I never witnessed an act of injustice to such a Negro—who does not desire rights, social or political. But what of the increasing number of Negroes who are not white man's Negroes, and the widening gulf between the races?"

Daniel has come to judgment. The cards are laid on the table, face upwards. The crux of the Negro problem depends upon the relative role played by the white man's Negro and the courageous Negro of more manly type. But Judge Winston does not state the whole case. It is not only the ignorant, unambitious mendicant who fills the requirements of the white man's Negro. He is found in every stratum of life and of every degree of intelligence and culture. The Negro of property, learning and position is as easily prone to render racial homage to the white lord and master as the humble hat-in-hand prototype in the South. Change in condition does not always alter character. The essential servility of soul manifests itself in the man highest up as well as in the man farthest down. The educated and favored Negro often assumes a submissive attitude for motives of profit the same as the ignorant and unfortunate. They are both motivated by innate weakness of will and desire for the crumbs of favor that fall from the white man's table. The white man, North or South, seeks out the complaisant type of Negro upon whom to confer his favor. He can make little use of the Negro who does not readily yield when there is a conflict of will and opinion. A good Negro has the same definition whatever his station in life. He is always considered safe and sane, while the one of a different mind is deemed impracticable and dangerous. The acquiescent Negro becomes the beneficiary of whatever good gifts the white man has to bestow. He enjoys a monopoly of his gratis, grace and goodness. He is made the receiver for the colored race. In this way the Negro who would be thrifty is impressed with the feeling that obedience and submission is profitable in all things. The temptation is indeed strong. It is easy and comfortable to secure a seat on the band wagon. We find the same motive operating in politics, in the church, in the school, in business, and in every relation of Negro life and activity.

Over against this type of the white man's Negro there is developing a type of defiant, discourteous, contentious, bumptious Negro who resents and resists the white man merely because he is white. These are found among the city toughs, quick with gun or razor to avenge any offense, real or fancied, which the white man commits against the Negro race. The iron has entered their soul. He is actuated by the spirit of retaliation and revenge. We also find his counterpart in the educated class. A certain brand of intellectual firebrands are quick to denounce the white race without the least restraint of caution or courtesy. With chip on shoulder, they are eager to fly into flurry at the slightest affront or insinuation. They keep hat on head when it should be in hand in order to display their "manhood." Both extremes are equally dangerous to the best welfare of the race. Neither submission nor defiance is calculated to secure the desired results.

The salvation of the race depends upon that type of Negro who is intelligent, courageous and manly, who is courteous, considerate and sensible, but who will not, in any mood, compromise the manhood rights of his race by servile submission, nor sacrifice them by rash, intemperate impetuosity of passion which would curse the white god and die.

Although the white man affects to like the white man's Negro, yet in his heart of hearts he despises him, and while he avowedly dislikes the manly Negro whom down in his hidden soul he admires. You cannot esteem in another qualities which you despise in yourself; nor yet despise in your neighbor the manifestation of the virtues whose possession you covet.

The white man's Negro t decrease; the manly Negro t increase.

(From Letter to Richard H. Edmonds, Editor Manufacturers Record.)

I have had the feeling for some time that the thing for us to do, who live and believe in the south, is to face squarely our difficulties, racial and otherwise, and to use every means urselves to remedy the situation.

Undoubtedly the south is now entering upon a new era of economic and industrial development, and unless something is done, the north, with the present scarcity of labor in the industrial centers, will embarrass us by its strong and flattering bid for negro labor. There is even now a shortage of labor, especially on many plantations and, provided the immigration bars are not let down, this section will experience still greater embarrassment. Negroes are leaving the south and will continue to do so, and I have been surprised at the comparative ease with which, in spite of some hardships and friction, they have adjusted themselves to northern conditions.

Here in the south we can offer conditions equally as attractive as the north, and in some things very much more so—certainly along essential lines, and in the last analysis those are the lines that really appeal to the negro.

I have felt very happy over the fact that the south itself is taking the initiative in seeing that the negro gets here in the south the things which many are seeking in the north. This, I feel, can be done without sacrificing the south's highest standards and best traditions. In meetings of editors, business men, educators and planters I have taken this position with candor and vigor. That is, in my opinion, the quickest and best way to stop migration.

Without doubt economic opportunities for the negro are far superior in the south to those offered in the north, as the record for negro progress shows. No part of America offers a better opportunity for real progress for both races than the south and I think the race problem for the world will be worked out down here. It is being done now with a success and satisfaction which, in spite of cross-currents, is almost a miracle when the whole situation is considered.

Let me thank you again for your letter and express the hope that upon your next trip to Florida you may find it possible to visit this institute which my distinguished predecessor has built up here in the heart of the south. It has always had the heartiest co-operation and support, financially and otherwise, from southern people, among whom are some of my staunchest and most helpful friends.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) R. R. MOTON,
Principal Tuskegee Institute.

Prominent Negro Preacher.

Editor Constitution: I love my state and all of her people and, regardless to what is going on elsewhere, I want our state to be happy, peaceful and prosperous. I am willing to pay any price that will accomplish this end.

In none of my cards and communications have I any thought of social equality (so called). None of my people have. We believe in fair play and justice, an equal chance in the game of life. And while I believe all of this, I do not believe we ought to reduce this to a race issue. There is no race problem except in the mind of the politician. It is a human problem, pure and simple, and we should approach it with humanity in mind instead of a certain group.

We can live together in peace and we must do it. We can change economic conditions in Georgia and we must do it. All of us must put our heads together for Georgia and the south. You have no more right to love Georgia than I do. You have no more right to defend her than I do, for I am as much a Georgian and southerner as you. I am not an African. I was not born in Africa. I owe my first and my best to my state and my country.

God bless you and all those of every group who are striving honestly to stem this restless tide and to make Georgia the once proud commonwealth she used to be.

NEGROES ARRESTED

Charged With Attacking White Girl And Using Abusive Language.

Elizabeth Daniels, negro woman and Hannah Lee Williams, sixteen year old negro girl are held in the city jail for attacking and using abusive language on Zettie and Edna Dean, white girls 14 and 12 years of age respectively, 119 West Jeff Davis avenue, at 8 o'clock Monday night.

Officers asserted the negro women had practically blocked the side walk near the childrens' home and when they asked to be let by, the negroes beat them with umbrellas. City Detectives Johnson and Roberts made the arrest and it is understood warrants for assault and battery will be sworn out for them today.

The Negro "Elevation" By Revilement.

The habit of abusing every individual whose head emerges above the crowd, has become one of the damnable curses of the Negro in America. The custom has infected the race in every community with a Negro population. Those with whom the habit is habitual, seem to think the way to raise the race is to revile every "leader" except one's self. So they "carry on." It is a community and national habit of the Nergo race in America—this throwing of stones at the head of the person who rises above the crowd.

The Negro believing himself "divinely called" to lead his people to a "Promised Land," is never willing to follow his brother anywhere in any matter whatsoever. But he wants every Negro on earth to follow him. He appoints himself shepherd and looks upon the rest of the people as sheep to follow him to some pasture where he must feed and they are likely to starve. No other "shepherd" must dare or do, or he'll be damned—tongue or press lashed every time he lifts his head or raises his voice. This is the habit of the average Negro "leader" more interested in himself than in any one of his race or community. It is a habit characterizing every class and breed of Negroes in America.

Some preachers are guilty of reviling their brother ministers in well doing; some educators castigate their fellow-workers for the safe reason; some physicians are known more for the bludgeon with which they knock brother physicians, than for their knowledge of medical science; some lawyers think the best way to dignify the purple toga, is to administer a sound whack upon the head of any member of the profession who seems bent upon rising above the crowd; some politicians seek the favor of climbing upward with "the powers that be, by pulling down the Negro highest above. And revilement continues to be the order of the day with every Negro "leader" trying to climb up by pulling down.

Undoubtedly this habit of revilement must surely distress the real friends and well wishers of the Negro race in America. It impedes, obstructs, discourages and menaces the future of the entire race in this country. It will be a great day for the Negro in this country when the "leaders" of the race are awakened to a full sense of duty to each other and the race—when they make up their minds to say something good of each other when they can, and when they can not do so withhold judgment in order to give the other brother a chance and also stabilize confidence of the people in those whose service for the race entitles them to rank as unselfish and acknowledged leaders. Fighting for principles for the good of men, is one thing. Fighting men, is entirely another. It will be well for Negroes to regard this difference.

NEGRO RACE LOOKS TO JEWS FOR SYMPATHY AND UNDERSTANDING

FROM JEWISH FORWARD

Negro leader avers that the twelve million Colored men represent the exploited and persecuted group in America just as the Jews are oppressed and downtrodden in European countries. The "Poor White Trash" lynch Negroes, but the basic race hatred is a matter of the educated leaders of white culture.

By L. HONORS

That so few of us, such a miserable meager number, should be even slightly acquainted with the inner life and terrible sufferings of the 12,000,000 Colored people in the United States is a thundering accusation against American civilization. Think of it; over a tenth of our entire population are Negroes; we meet them in the theatre, in the street, in the subway, in the restaurant; we brush elbows with them day and night; we hear lies about them; and yet what honest attempt have we made to understand them?

And particularly—we Jews! If there is any race that has suffered and bled and been persecuted as much as the Jew, it is the Negro race. Yet, how many of us know the Negro?

Take the Negro problem in its relation to the immigrant.

"When the immigrant from Eastern Europe meets the Negro in New York," Dr. W. E. Burgham Du Bois told us, "he is curious and interested. He has never before seen a Colored man; he therefore gazes at him as a something new and novel. In his next step, through the process of Americanization, the immigrant will be told to avoid the Negroes, not to have any dealings with them, etc., etc., and later the final step, he will unconsciously begin to absorb the current prejudices against Negroes."

Dr. DuBois, the famous leader of the American Negroes and founder of the Pan-African Congress spoke in a matter-of-fact tone. He is too well acquainted with the poisoning effects of this sort of "Americanization" to be affected by his recital.

The Martyrdom of the Negro

"But before the immigrant goes any further, he should be stopped and warned. The millions of Negroes in America represent the exploited and persecuted group, just as these wanderers from Russia and Poland and Roumania represent that of their countries. And the persecuted group gets little chance to be understood by the foreigners. The press, society, all the domineering forces of the state are against it"—and for the first time in our conversation the Doctor's brown eyes flamed up.

It was Dr. Du Bois, proud son of a tortured race, the courageous fighter for his people's rights and liberties that was speaking. He is an eloquent orator, one of the foremost in America.

"If the Negroes are backward in many respects, we must not forget that they have still to fight for civil and legal equality.

"The main problem of the Negro," Dr. Du Bois said, "is not the struggle for a higher economic plane of living, but the racial discrimination and the struggle for a voice in the state. Consequently, the Negro still thinks about work and wages in terms of the early nineteenth century. He has no time to think of the modern economic revolution, for he has no knowledge of socialism, modern division of labor, socialization of industry, and the other solutions which we radicals put forward for the happiness of all."

'What is the attitude of the Negro toward the Jew?

Jewish Philanthropy and the Colored Race

"A persecuted people sees other people with the eyes of the persecutor," the author of "The Souls of Black Folk' replied. "The ruling class oppresses and exploits the Jews, the Negroes, the Chinese and other races. Meeting each other through the glasses of the newspapers, moving pictures, books and all the organs of the ruling class. The Jew will therefore think of the Negro what the moving pictures tell him to, and vice-versa. Within the last ten years, due to the effective interests which Jews like the late Jacob Schiff and Julius Rosenwald took in the life of Negroes toward the Jews has changed toward sympathy, though, here again, you see, it is apt to be a sympathy for the philanthropic Jews."

Dr. Du Bois is the spiritual leader of the American Negroes. He was born in Great Barrington, Mass., on February 28, 1868. He graduated from high school at the age of 16, and attended Fisk University at Tennessee, where he obtained his A. B. He received his M. A. and Ph. D., at Harvard. He was a brilliant student in both universities; in fact he was so exceptional in his studies that he got a fellowship from Harvard, and studied in Germany at the University of Berlin for two years.

'Away back in the little years of my boyhood ---------- I dreamed of being an editor myself some day," he writes in his extraordinary book 'Darkwater.' "I am an editor. In the great, slashing days of college life I dreamed of a Colored organization to fight the battles of the Negro race. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in such a body, and it grows daily. I planned a time when I could speak freely to my people and of them, interpreting between two worlds. I am speaking now through this book."

Remember that Dr Du Bois was Professor of Economics and History in Atlanta University from 1896 to 1910, is editor of the Crisis, author of many books, champion of the Colored race—and you have a dim idea of his picturesque and inspiring personality.

He is now writing a History of the Negro Race in the Great War, which will be published in the Fall of 1924, if he "succeeds in getting a publisher."

"Why, you don't mean to say that you expect to have any difficulty in obtaining a publisher," we were unpleasantly surprised.

Negroes Misunderstood by Foreign Born.

'Literature treating the Negro problem in America is not very popular especially a history, and a history which will not be very complimentary to Americans. Of course, it will be published, not only because the publisher will expect a big sale of the books among the Colored population."

He spoke of the poverty, the hopeless poverty among Negroes in the South. He spoke of bloody persecutions, of the lynchings, which will remain forever a blot on the pages of our history—of the physical and spiritual tortures of his race. If one wants to get a glimpse of our present American civilization it is well to turn to Dr. DuBois' masterpiece, "Darkwater."

"So with some circumstances having finally gotten myself born, with a flood of Negro blood, a strain of French, a bit of Dutch, but thank God! no 'Anglo-Saxon' I came to the days of my childhood.

"Then, slowly, I realized that some folks, a few, even several, actually considered my brown skin a misfortune; once or twice I became painfully aware that some human beings even thought it a crime."

The words have a familiar ring to those that have read Ludwig Lewisohn's Up Stream.

We talked about literature, Dr. Du Bois believes American literature has made tremendous strides in the past decade.

"But then again," he said with a smile, "the most dramatic thing in American History is the Negro. He is always the turning point, the crisis. He is kept out of novels, for publishers are afraid to print anything about him. The Negro is in every city; he is, after all, the real American, but you dont find him portrayed in the American novel, and attempts are made to keep him away from American art and literature."

"How did the affair of Augusta Savage, the Colored girl, who was denied a scholarship in the Fontainebleau School of Fine Arts by the American directors, strike you?

The Shame of our Civilization

"Here you have it in the naked shame, the technique of American race prejudice. It is idle to charge up lynchings solely to the 'poor white trash,' the ignorant and poor may lynch and discriminate but the really deep and basic race hatred in the United States is a matter of the educated and distinguished leaders of white civilization. They are the ones who are determined to keep black folk from developing talent and sharing in civilization. Not only do they not raise a hand to stop the discriminations, they even gently and politely, but in strict secrecy put their shoulders to the wheel and push it forward."

We asked Dr. Du Bois what he thought about the Ethiopian Theatre which gave performances of Wilde's Comedy of Errors.

Failure of Ethiopian Players

"If this new thing had come out of France with a European imprint. I cannot but think that New York would have gone wild in praise at its daring originality. At it was, on the night I saw it, three tall white gentlemen sitting in the very front row, almost insulted the actors with their goings and comings, their gestures and comments.

"Despite singular prejudice on the part of some people, the Negro actor can give the world an interpretation of the same great plays which white actors have portrayed. The Negro actor can give the world an interpretation of the same great plays which white actors have portrayed. The Negro may do in his own theatre a great work in passing on the message of the drama to the masses of his own folk. Finally, Negroes as actors and as dramatic writers have a wonderfully rich field to exploit in their own terrible history of experience. The sombre pen of some black Ibsen, the religious fervor of some Colored Tolstoy, or the sarcasm of a black Moliere have here a marvelous chance to develop. For these reasons, these Colored players were splendid pioneers and the artistic finish of their work does them great credit."

Dr. Du Bois then spoke about Marcus Garvey, the Jamaican Negro, who was found guilty and sentenced to prison for squandering big sums of money, the last savings of poor Negroes who trusted him. Garvey was the initiator of the Back-to-Africa movement among the Colored people.

"I believe the man is crazy," Dr. Du Bois said. "Or, at least, suffering from delusions of greatness. He meant well, but he knew nothing about the thing he was undertaking. For instance, he was going to buy vessels for the transportation of Negroes while he knew nothing of maritime affairs. He should have been sentenced to a sanatorium, not a prison.

It's well to remember that Dr. Du Bois' ancestors came to New England more than two hundred years ago. His forefathers fought in the Revolutionary War. Who, then, is a real American? We wonder if the Ku Klux Klan could answer?

RAN CAR INTO RIVER.

Negro Forced to Give Up Vehicle By Three White Men.

GREENWOOD, Miss., Oct. 10.—Though efforts have been made to ascertain the identity of parties who forced a negro, Jay Jones, to surrender his car, and then ran the car over the bluff into the Yazoo River at the foot of Main Street, nothing sufficient to warrant an arrest has been discovered as yet, but a number of clews are being worked on, and it is likely that the mystery will be solved within the next day or two.

The negro's story of three white men, accompanied by a woman, beating him with clubs and taking the car was at first doubted, but the negro's account of the affair has been corroborated, and numbers of conjectures made as to the cause of the acts of the men.

The more plausible story is that the men were acting under the impression that the negro failed to give them sufficient room to pass on the highway where the car was taken, and ran the vehicle into the river in a spirit of revenge. The guilty parties will be punished heavily when caught.

THE NEGRO IN NEW ENGLAND

Kelly Miller—Afro-American.

I was in Boston last week. Boston is New England, and New England is Boston so far as the Negro is concerned. After delivering my set address on the Negro Sanhedrin I was invited to meet with a delightful group that was giving a reception to the graduates and students of Harvard, Boston University, the New England Conservatory of Music and other regional institutions.

Hon. William H. Lewis, ex-Assistant Attorney General, was the orator of the occassion. His address was up to his usual high standard of eloquence, wit and wisdom. By the way, Mr. Lewis is recognized as being one of the great lawyers of New England. He has found ample room in his profession, on top.

It was an inspiration to witness these thirty or forty young men and women gathered from all parts of the country seeking the forms of knowledge and culture of the highest scholastic type. I could not but advise them that their special attainments would find useful expression mainly in service to their own group, but would become comparatively impotent and barren unless quickened by the human motive and charged with missionary zeal and enthusiasm.

The situation of the New England Negro is a study and a puzzle. The old traditional spirit of philanthropy is dying with the years. The abolitionist freed the slaves, and are dead. Their descendants maintain a decent and distant respect for the deeds and devotion of their ancestors. They have little interest in the Negro in New England in the year of our Lord, nineteen twenty-three. The forms of traditional equality still survive. Harvard was forced to the right decision out of deference to its traditions rather than the dictates of contemporary attitude and feeling.

Trotter and the Equal Rights League are fighting manfully for the maintainance of the old foundations. Foreigners are flooding New England with moral indifference.

On the whole the race is losing rather than gaining in the sphere of racial rights and recognition. The numbers are increasing slowly. There are scarcely enough Negroes to sustain a highly functioning life of their own, while there is a lessening disposition on part of the whites to have them amalgamate with the general life of the community. There are no Negroes in business who measure up to Lee and Lewis of a generation ago.

The ordinary working man is scarcely more than holding his own. The professional men are doing well. There is shown a fine spirit of social service on part of a number of noble women and worthy men. Associated business enterprise is making a commendable beginning. The race problem, however, is as evident in Boston as it is in Baltimore. It merely takes on different modes of manifestation.

The Negro is brought face to face with himself and his problems in all places and sections of the country. The Negro in New England like the Negro in Mississippi, must keep constantly on the alert to keep from losing out. The Negro problem is one with only local variations and the Negro must understand and deal with it as such.

NO EFFORT IS MADE TO ENFRANCHISE NEGRO

—SAYS MILLER.

COLUMBUS JOURNAL
JUNE 29, 1923

All Colored Organizations Should Combine to Aid in Uplift of Race, He Says.

"No president since Garfield has tried to enforce the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments," declared Kelly Miller, dean of the college of arts at Howard University, Washington, D. C., last night at St. Paul's A. M. E. Church.

"Even president Harding, who vigorously attempting to enforce the eighteenth amendment, does not try to enforce the two relating to the colored race," Dean Miller continued. "It is through no fault of his own, but public sentiment is not yet ready for it. The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments were left stranded when the high tide of sentiment of the civil war period receded."

Wherever there is racial distinction there also is racial discrimination, Dean Miller asserted. It is found, he said, not only in states where there are specific "Jim Crow" laws and statutes forbidding interracial marriages, but even in such states as Ohio, where the state constitution denies the negro the right to vote.

Dean Miller urged negroes to combine their many organizations into one group, which would work for the uplift and real equality of the race. "The white man must help t negro, but the latter must also himself," he said.

FOREIGN VISITOR IMPRESSED WITH NEGRO PROGRESS.

(By The Associated Negro Press.)

NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 10—The effective constructive work being done in the South under direction of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation has so favorably impressed Dr. James Henderson, principal of the Lovedale Institution, South Africa, that he has returned home with the intention of organizing a similar Commission whose personnel shall consist of natives and white people interested in South African problem.

For thirty years Dr. Henderson has been engaged in missionary education. His school is the largest in South Africa conducted in the interest of the native youth. After spending seven weeks in the United States, studying at close range the educational, economic, social and industrial development of the American Negro he has formed some highly favorable impressions.

The absorbing passion of the American Negro for progress, his intense loyalty to his country and the American flag, the facility with which he speaks the English Language, his thirst for education and his strong religious tendencies were among the commendable characteristics to come within the range of Dr. Henderson's observations.

The two things to puzzle him most while in America were: First, the inclination of white America to accord better treatment to the foreigner than to the Negro, although the former comes to these shores as a rule purely for selfish and mercenary reasons; second, the lack of appreciation shown for its leaders by members of the Negro race.

While on his extended tour of observation Dr. Henderson visited among other places, Tuskegee and Hampton, also Atlanta, Savannah, Gulfport, Miss., Calhoun, Ala., Gloucester County, Va., Kings Mountain, N. C., Richmond, Petersburg, Washington, New York, and Boston. His itinerary enabled him to study Negro life in both urban and rural communities.

He was first impressed with the great desire of Negroes to own their own homes. Wherever he found landowners he noted progress, good houses, well furnished homes and decent, self-respecting home life. Negroes owning their property aim to send their children to schools and colleges, it having been no uncommon experience for the South African educator to hear of three or more children in a family having graduated from different institutions of learning.

In the opinion of Dr. Henderson, the system of tenacy without lease affects both white and colored people and is a very serious barrier. The relative progress made in a community as distinguished between owner and tenant was most noticeable in Calhoun, Ala. Dr. Henderson was struck with the progress made by Negroes in Gloucester, County, Va., where all but sixteen farmers own their own land, have good homes and are improving the soil.

The keenness displayed by the Negro farmer about agriculture, his extraordinary readiness to learn new methods from Federal and State farm demonstrators were strikingly apparent to the visitor.

Tuskegee and Hampton Institutes came up to Dr. Henderson's expectations. Some phases of their work even exceeded his expectations. He thinks it would be unsound for these two great schools to merely turn out common workers from their respective industrial departments, for the care and thoroughness of the training fits students to go out into the world and serve as "masters" of the trade and not merely ordinary workmen.

The spectacle of Negroes living in elaborately appointed homes and enjoying all modern conveniences was quite an eye-opener to the South African during his tour of inspection in New York, Boston, and Washington.

Dr. Henderson is a Scotchman of strong religious convictions.

He believes that in God's providence Negro slaves were brought to America hundreds of years ago for a great purpose, and that the American Negro is destined to fill the pages of American history with glorious service to themselves and to the Nation.

POSTON MAKES EXPOSE OF NEGROES' LEADERS

The Negro World—New York City

Regrets the Necessity of Fighting Certain Leaders, but Says It Is Necessary in the Interest of the Race—Points Out How DuBois, Kelley Miller and Moton Are Controlled by Alien Influences—U. N. I. A. Is an Independent Movement and Needs No Alien Agencies to Direct Its Activities—The President General Has Demonstrated His Independence Before, During and After His Trial

O'MEALLY DRAWS ATTENTION TO SUBTLE PLANS OF WHITE RACE TO EFFECT THE DESTRUCTION OF THE NEGRO RACE—SAYS NEGROES IN WESTERN WORLD MUST GIVE MORE THOUGHT TO THEIR BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN AFRICA—FREEDOM FOR THE NEGRO MUST BE FOUGHT FOR AND WON BY HIMSELF

Rudolph Smith Emphasizes the Necessity of Race Pride—Negroes Must Eliminate Petty Jealousy and Combine Without Regard to Place of Birth—U. N. I. A. Is Proving the Possibilities of Negroes Being Able to Govern Themselves

LIBERTY HALL, NEW YORK, Sunday Night, September 23. — Notwithstanding the inclement weather which prevailed today, the friends and followers of the New York local of the Universal Negro Improvement Association turned out in their usual large numbers and filled Liberty Hall almost to capacity. Whatever may be said to the contrary, the tremendous following that the Universal Negro Improvement Association is able to command wherever and whenever its doors are thrown open is abundant proof that its principles and program have stirred up a feeling which is forever craving for more and more enlightenment about the things that concern the race. For this enlightenment the masses have come to regard the Universal Negro Improvement Association as the only source from which it can come, since it is the only national and international uplift organization that is controlled and conducted exclusively by Negroes, and that has set for its goal the redemption of Africa and the establishment of a Negro government.

The program rendered tonight was of an inspiring character. The audience was treated with brilliant speeches delivered by R. L. Poston, Secretary General; James O'Meally and Rudolph Smith, together with a wonderful demonstration of the budding talent which the organization is developing among the young element of the race by an oration delivered by Master Samuels, a lad of about twelve years old, of whom the Chairman, Hon. William Sherrill, said that if the Hon. Marcus Garvey had done no more than to inspire boys like that with the doctrines of the Universal Negro Improvement Association, he will have served his day and his generation well. Mr. Poston spoke on the subject of "The Master's Voice and Negro Leaders," in which he showed the striking difference between the kind of leadership that the U. N. I. A. was giving the Negro race and that which men like DuBois, Major Moton and Kelly Miller were attempting to give. The U. N. I. A., he said, was admitted to be the most powerful movement among Negroes today because it was a movement that hears no master's voice, a movement entirely Negro, for the Negro and by the Negro. It needed no alien agencies to direct it and had at its head a president who had demonstrated his independence during his trial and after the trial and had sacrificed every comfort in order that the race might gain absolute freedom under the banner of the Red, the Black and the Green.

Hon. James O'Meally spoke impressibly of the need of Negroes exerting themselves to gain their own freedom and drew attention to the plans and activities of the alien races to effect the destruction of the Negro race. Hon. Rudolph Smith captivated the audience with a wonderful address on the subject of "Negroes' ability to govern themselves." He dwelt on the necessity of Negroes learning more about themselves and by aspiring to a government of their own create the respect which is given other races who had behind them a well organized government to protect their interest.

Following are the texts of the speeches:

SIR R. L. POSTON'S ADDRESS

Sir R. L. Postton, Secretary-General, was the first speaker. He said:

"The chairman was absolutely right when he said that nobody will make a speech excelling that of young Samuels. It is not often that we have such budding oratory as shown in this boy, young Samuels. Samuels and another boy by the name of Patterson, whom I heard from this platform some time ago, represent the possibilities of this great organization. If the Hon. Marcus Garvey has done no more to inspire boys like that with the doctrines of the Universal Negro Improvement Association, he has served his day and his generation well.

The Master's Voice

"I am going to speak briefly tonight from the subject, 'The Master's Voice and Negro Leaders.' Now by 'Master' I do not mean 'Master' as we have looked upon Him. I do not mean God. By 'Master' I mean man. The person who employs us usually has a claim upon us. The person who loans us money usually has a claim upon us. When a person does us a favor of any kind we are in a measure obligated to that person, and when I speak of 'The Master's voice and our Negro leaders,' I speak of the voice which, when heard, directs the activities of certain of our leaders.

Fighting Within the Group

"There is one unfortunate thing that confronts us today in the Universal Negro Improvement Association, and it is this—the necessity of fighting certain leaders, and, through them, possibly certain organizations. We do not want this condition to prevail, and yet it is nothing new with us. Every race of people, every group that has sought freedom from a certain condition, has had to fight within the group certain persons who were controlled by certain influences which had as its purpose the enslavement of that group.

Du Bois' Change in Thought

"Now the leaders that I shall speak of this evening are W. E. B. Du Bois, Major Moton and Kelly Miller. These are the men who heard their master's voice and heeded. Du Bois started out in the Niagara movement to speak with a degree of independence, but when the shoe began to pinch him and when finance was not coming as fast as it should, he was approached by those who wanted to use him for the purpose of keeping down the awakened spirit of the Negro. In 1907 Du Bois heard the master's call, and from that day until this he has been very guarded in his expressions. The book of which we have heard so much, 'The Soul of Black Folks,' in some respects the wail of the disappointed, had in it certain indications of an independent mind. Du Bois spoke out boldly and bravely about certain conditions back in 1893, about the time this book was written. But since 1907 we have not heard from this great leader any expressoin of independence. He wrote a book of essays entitled 'Dark Water.' But 'Dark Water' in no measure approached the book he wrote, 'The Soul of Black Folks.' And 'Dark Water' was written, of course, since this man has sold himself body and soul to the white man.

Major Moton's Faithfulness to Environment

"Now we shall take next Dr. Moton Major Moton was trained almost from a boy for the task that he assumed after the death of Mr. Washington. Major Moton slept, as I stated here some time ago, with the man who trained and molded his character, one of the white philanthropists, the head of the Hampton Institute, and we know that since Major Moton has assumed the leadership of Tuskegee he has in no measlure expressed any thought of independence, where the colored man is concerned and where white men expect him to support the sentiments of the South. Recently when there was a great controversy about conditions there at the Veterans' Hospital in Tuskegee and when pressure was brought to bear upon Mr. Moton by the race to express an independent thought, Mr. Moton was found, without giving an address, sojourning in some parts of the North where it would not be necessary for him to express himself in the interests of the race, showing clearly he is directed by those influences which have as their aim the enslavement of our race.

Kelly Miller's False Alarm

"Recently the hope of the race was boosted to a certain extent by the announcement of Kelly Miller that he was going to call a Sanhedrin or a kind of a conference of the various Negro organizations in order to elect an independent leader. But we find Mr. Miller prompting certain individuals to meet in caucus and make him the temporary chairman, which is the next step to picking him and making him the president of the congress which he shall convene. And I venture to predict that when they do convene there will not be an elected leader of that organization. Again we have the handpicked leader, another indication of hearing the Master's voice.

No Quarrel With the People

"Now our quarrel is not with the people these men lead, because usually their followers are misguided and misled. We have no quarrel to make with the rank and file of the membership of the N. A. A. C. P. or the Equal Rights League or the various other organizations. We sometimes make a mistake when we start out in an extended warfare against the rank and file of this membership. Our fight is against the leaders—those who exploit and those who mislead, for their own selfish aggrandizement, the thousands of followers who are seeking diligently like ourselves for the light. This is no new thing with us as a race. When De Valera started his fight against certain influences in Ireland, he found there were Irishmen touched by the hand of Britain, which had as its aim the enslavement of the people. When Mahatma Gandhi started to liberate the Indians, his great fight was against the titled nobility among the Indians, who were used for the purpose of blinding the rank and file among the Indians. Those of us who read the revolution in Haiti, the history of the great movement which gave to the world Toussaint L'Ouverture, know that Toussaint L'Overture found it necessary to slay thousands of his own before he could reach the goal of independence. We do not like the idea of fighting among ourselves. It is indeed distasteful. But those who will fight the battle of freedom will always find those of our own blocking the way. And so, friends, when we speak against the heads of these organizations, we would like to be understood as not opposing so much the people that are led as we are opposing the deceivers who lead them.

The U. N. I. A's Independence

The great movement of the world to-day among Negroes, admitted to be the most powerful movement, is a movement that hears no Master's voice, a movement entirely Negro, for the Negro and by the Negro. The Universal Negro Improvement Association is an independent movement. We say what we want to because no alien agencies direct our speech. We do what we want to because no alien agencies direct our activities. Our President is entirely independent. That was demonstated not only before his trial but during the trial and after the trial. For certain considerations the burden would have been light on him, but he demonstrated his great love for the race by sacrificing every comfort that may have come to him individually in order that the race, of which he is the leader, might have absolute freedom under the banner of the Red, the Black and the Green. (Applause).

"And so, friends, that is my message for you to-night. Follow the Universal Negro Improvement Association because the Universal Negro Improvement Association has no master out of the race. We are the masters of our own souls. We are the directors of our own destiny." (Applause).

SIR JAMES O'MEALLY SPEAKS

Sir James O'Meally spoke as follows: "To be or not to be, that is the question. Whether it is nobler in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune or to take arms against a sea of trouble and, by opposing, end them." In these few lines of the immortal Bard of Avon we have the problem that is now facing the Negro race. To exist or not to exist, that is the question. Whether we shall remain passive and indifferent while the white man carries out his aim of destroying the race or, by opposing him with all the means available, save ourselves and our motherland, Africa.

Plans Destruction of Negro Race

Probably you are not aware that the white man has formed elaborate and well laid plans for the utter destruction of our race. When you stop to consider what this really means, you say it is hard to believe that human beings could be so soulless as to plan to remove an entire race that has never done them any evil. You must realize this, however, that the white man in his dealings with the colored race leaves God and justice out except where Christianity helps to further his diabolical plans. The white man is determined to make this world white; if in doing so it is necessary to kill and starve black men and women, then he is going to do so, for his doctrine is "that the end justifies the means."

One of the most pathetic stories of any group of our race has been that of the destruction of the noble Zulu. It is hardly possible to read an unbiased history of these great Negroes without the heart swelling with pride at their achievements on the field of battle and the tears gathering in the eyes at the destruction which came upon them. When the white man went to South Africa he found it peopled by the finest specimens of black men that the world has ever seen. They were not the wild savages that the white man would have us believe, but, on the contrary, they were a well organized people with a good system of government. The white man realized from the very outset that he could not live side by side with such proud and warlike Negroes, and, as there is nothing so galling to white men as to live in close proximity to Negroes who will not crawl or bend the knee, they calmly and coldly decided to destroy our brothers. But the entire destruction of the race was not to come just yet. He would use the Negro as a tool and as a convenience until the proper time came, when he would cast him off and destroy him. Then began one of the dirtiest political and diplomatic games that ever blackened the pages of British history. Certain white officials were sent into the Zulu country to allay the suspicions of the natives and to impress them that their white brothers only wanted to trade with them and to introduce to them a knowledge of the true and living God. Another group was sent into the country to commit atrocities and violate the laws in order that the Zulus may discipline them, and thus furnish the English with an excuse for sending armed troops under the pretext that those Negroes were unable to protect the foreigners in their country. Other and deeper causes involving issues of land were raised and war entered into with the Zulus. The purpose of the war was to break up the organization of these Negro warriors and furnish cheap labor for the white man. The whites thereupon entered into a struggle with the blacks, who fought valiantly, desperately and with a courage not to be excelled. The white man won. But we have this satisfaction: that he had to wade deep in his own blood before he could achieve his aims. When these Zulus were defeated we were defeated; when these Zulus were crushed we were crushed, when they were humbled we were humbled.

But the white man is not satisfied to humble and crush the Negro. Nothing but the complete annihilation of our race will satisfy him, and, accordingly, General Smuts and his ilk have been pushing the natives against the wall. Thy began by taking away their fertile lands and by making it hard for them to obtain employment of any sort. They segregated them and compelled them to live in barren districts, where even the carrion found it difficult to find food. They adopted some of the same tactics that the Spaniads adopted when they went into Cuba, which cruel treatment of the Cubans caused the United States to intervene in behalf of humanity and drive Spain from the West Indies. But who cares about the Negro to intervene for him? What does it matter if a dozen or a million Negroes died or were murdered? There is only one person who cares about the Negro, and that is the Negro himself.

The Negro Must Save Himself

If you do not toil, if you do not begin to save yourselves from annihilation, then your blood be upon your heads and upon that of your children. I crave indulgence while I read a few extracts from an African paper under the heading of "Agricultural Labor": "And consequently we find in the country (that is, in South Africa) natives working for practically half a loaf of bread a day." But you sit here, living in comparative comfort, and do not think of your brother, do not think of redeeming him. "In other parts of the country, owing to land monopoly, natives mortgaged their stock and indentured the labor of their children and their homes in consideration of the right to remain on the farm and graze their stock; they sold their children into slavery to remain in the land of their forefathers and their own ancestors." Can you imagine any greater insolence of the white man than this? The object of such indentures and mortgages are that the natives shall allow their daughters to work for their masters.

For Christ's Sake

The other extract is under the heading of "For Christ's Sake," because it has to do with the Christian Church. There is a certain church that went out to christianize the natives. Immediately it got a few converts it suggested the idea of purchasing a farm on which to establish a mission station and induced the native adherents to contribute toward the purchase price. These poor Negroes gave of their best talent, their hard-earned money and stock in the hope that they would help to establish a permanent home for themselves. Their hopes were blasted, for after 50 years of occupation the Church Council—good Christians—levied heavy taxes and made life intolerable until the natives complained. Those who raised a protest against the heavy taxes were served with notice to quit the farm. This is interesting news for those of you who contribute so much to foreign missions to help to put your own brothers and sisters deeper into slavery and increase their misery. Other cruelties are practiced upon the natives, such as the chaining of native girls to wagons in the open and compelling them to sleep in the open veldts with a chance of being eaten up by wild animals; flogging men and women until the flesh hung like ribbons upon their backs and yoking young women with oxen and compelling them to draw the plow.

Surely it is not possible for any black man and woman to read of the misery, the wretchedness and the suffering of these our brothers and sisters without mingled feelings of sorrow for the Kaffirs and intense hatred for the white South African. And yet our colored preachers are telling us to leave everything to God. The reason we are in the position we are today is because God is tired of us lazy folks leaving everything to him. The old Uncle Tom Negro loafed on the job and went to sleep and God left him sleeping. God helps those who help themselves.

Must Fight for Freedom

If you want freedom you must fight for it and not beg for it. One thing only will give us our freedom, and that is force. It was force that compelled King John to sign the Magna Charta which gave to Englishmen the rights of which they are justly proud. It was force which battered at the gates of the Bastile and freed France from tyranny and made her the nation that she is. It was force which drove the English out of the United States and made a new nation in the Western world, and, as sure as there is a God, force, and force alone, will restore Ethiopia to her pristine glory and redeem this race. (Applause.) May the day come quickly when Ethiopia shall unsheath the avenging sword and black men be given a chance to show that heroism which is the dazzling and glorious concentration of courage—a heroism which is the brilliant triumph of our unconquered souls. (Applause.)

THE HON. RUDOLPH SMITH'S ADDRESS

The Hon. Rudolph Smith spoke on the subject, "Negroes' Ability to Govern Themselves." "The Negro race," he said, "has been criticized over a very lengthy period. It has been criticized because it was somewhat spasmodic and not attempting to do things on a constructive basis like other races until recently. The Negro race during the last decade has caused the world much anxiety, because Negroes form a part of the great governments of modern times. Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium and other countries of Europe had fastened their tentacles on Africa, and the United States of America had charge of the Western Hemisphere. Wherever one turned, the Negro race was found under the control of the white man.

The Negro in Conference

"When the great world war took place from 1914 to 1918," he continued, "with a triple entente and a triple alliance, when Great Britain called upon her subjects from various parts of the world, Negroes were brought from the land of Africa to the battlefields of France and Flanders. Belgium, who had oppressed black folks most vilely for several decades, called upon her Negro subjects to fight for democracy. France called upon her Negro subjects and they responded. The call soon came to us here in the South and the North to go and help fight for democracy, and Negroes again trooped to the battlefields of France and Flanders. But the Negroes who assembled there had creative minds. They knew how to plan for the future, not to think of the past, but of how to prepare for the future. And West Indian and American and French Negroes began to exchange ideas and to compare notes, and they said, 'Something must be done.' The American Negro said, 'Yes, they lynch and insult me way back home.' The Belgian Negro said, 'Yes, they gouge out my eyes and trample my body on the earth.' The Negro from Africa said, 'Yes, they treat me mighty bad.' The Negro from the West Indies said 'Yes, Great Britain took away from us the sugar trade and gave it to Germany, the same country we are going to fight against. Things have been mighty hard with us. Some of us could only work for two shillings a day.' And they said, 'Let us work together. Let us settle all of these national differences.' God in His infinite majesty called upon a black man to draw together the Negroes of the earth and said to him, 'Go and unite your race.' The New World 9-29-28 God selected a man to do this. He meant that Negroes should get together to build up a government of their own." (Applause).

Banishing Petty Jealousies

The speaker then dwelt upon the splendid progress being made by the Universal Negro Improvement Association in eradicating petty jealousies between American Negroes and West Indian Negroes. "These Negroes," he said, "did not understand each other. And it was the business of the other fellow to foster this misunderstanding. The American Negro would call the West Indian Negro 'Monkey chaser,' and the West Indian Negro would call the American Negro 'Possum eater.'"

Mr. Smith created much laughter with his explanation of the origin of the term "Monkey chaser." He said there was a girl from St. Kitts, British West Indies, employed by a white woman in New York. The girl had but recently arrived in New York, and her employer, noting this, tried to take advantage of her. One day she was sweeping the steps and she was told to sweep the steps of the woman next door also. The girl became incensed. There was a place in St. Kitts named "Monkey Hill," and the girl told her employer, "Before I do that I prefer to go back to Monkey Hill and chase monkeys." Thus it was that "Monkey chaser" came into existence. As far as possum eating was concerned, no one ate more possums than white Southerners.

Negroes Able to Govern

He was convinced that Negroes were able to govern themselves. Negroes had visited the various institutions of learning, they had equipped themselves, and it only remained for them now to gather their forces together. No one was asking all Negroes to pack up and quit the United States or wherever they lived and go back to Africa. That would take a very long time indeed. But Africa was ready now to receive pioneers, men able to till the fields, build, bridge rivers, run factories and do some of the countless things on which modern governments thrive. One of the pressing needs was the establishing of a commercial exchange, so that goods could be readily sent from one place to the other, all handled by Negroes. There was a large industrial field waiting for Negroes to conquer, if only they would awake and see. There were limitless possibilities of trade with Japan and China, not to mention others, and the Negro could be kept busy in spite of any unwillingness on the part of some to keep him at the bottom industrially. The backbone of a nation was its industries, and Negroes must be prepared to create factories of their own, and they must have steamships to transport their goods.

U. N. I. A. Only Organization Bringing Independent Minds Together.

In conclusion, Mr. Smith said the Universal Negro Improvement Association was the only international organization that is bringing the independent minds together. But there is one thing which the organization was asking and that was to eliminate petty jealousy and hate. Africa cannot be redeemed, the speaker said, while those evils prevailed. The thing that is most important with us now is the creation of a black government by which means the Negro will be respected. All the other races and peoples of the world are respected because they had behind them a well organized government, but colored folks were kicked around and assaulted and insulted. When we consider how much the Negro had contributed to Western civilization and have helped to establish the governments of the world and behold him being kicked around and given no respect, we reach the conclusion that something is wrong. It meant that we have got to get together and create respect for ourselves. Mothers and fathers will have to bring up their children in a different way. Instead of giving their children white dolls to play with they will give them colored dolls. The Japanese children played with Japanese dolls; the Chinese children played with Chinese dolls, and the white people's children played with white dolls, but the colored people's children played with white dolls. Go into the houses of some Negroes and you find pictures of great men hung on the walls but never a picture of a great Negro. They read books telling them of the deeds of white men of the past, but very little is said about Touissant L'Ouverture, the hero of Hayti, or of Hannibal, who crossed the Alps and went to the gates of Rome and defeated the Romans; about Poushkin, the greatest Russian poet, or of Alexander Dumas, or of such men as Nat Turner and Frederick Douglass and Paul Lawrence Dunbar. But as long as there is a Universal Negro Improvement Association and a Marcus Garvey, Negroes shall learn about Negroes from now, henceforth and forever. (Applause). Learn something about Negro history, and after you have learned about Negro history, learn to do something for yourselves. That is what this movement is asking of you. (Applause).

THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

The larger and more influential newspapers of the north and west have recently shown a most friendly disposition toward the south in the discussion of the causes for the more recent discontent and unrest of negro laborers in certain of the southern states and which have resulted in a renewal of the "migrations" which followed the close of the World war. The hegiras of 1919-20 had no significance other than that southern employers simply worked upon the cupidity of negro laborers with promises of easy work and large wages. Thousands of negroes were drawn away from their southern homes and environments by these glittering promises that were never realized, and the vast majority of them drifted back to the "old plantation" and their old familiar and none too exacting jobs "back home," wiser for their experience and more willing to remain among their own "white folks."

Chattanooga Times 7-8-28

The present drift has something more stubborn and alarming back of it. The negro isn't deceived now about wages and "easy work;" he knows that is a delusion and a snare. He has found out that wages in the north are based even more firmly on economic demands than in the south, and he has learned that "work" up there means "work," and that, too, of a kind that doesn't altogether appeal to his inclinations.

So there must be something else than the mere question of "wages" and "work" back of the present movement. It cannot be the ku-klux organization, for that organization is just as numerous and as active north of Mason and Dixon's line as it is in the south. "Social equality," so-called, has likewise lost its drawing qualities so far as northern communities are concerned. Negro writers and negro educators know better than to say that the negro's social conditions are better elsewhere than in the south. The only part "social equality" may have in the matter is that a few southern whites use it as a sort of propaganda in keeping alive racial prejudices. The negro himself is under no such delusion as that he may enjoy more privileges with the northern than he does with the southern whites. He is not thinking of social equality and is not seeking it, realizing, to his credit, that any movement looking to that condition would be his absolute undoing and destroy the splendid record he has made since slavery in advancing himself in material, spiritual and educational fields.

The New York World is fair enough to say in a recent editorial that southern men, and especially the editors of the leading southern newspapers, "are courageously demanding a 'square deal' for the negro," and that "they do not hesitate to say that conditions will have to be changed if the migration wave is to materially subside."

Interviews with leading negroes and manufacturers of this city establish the fact that herein is the real remedy for the situation. We have got to improve the living conditions of the negro; we have got to guarantee him a square deal before the law, and especially are we required to protect him against official oppression and rescue him "as the football" of the fee-grabbing gentry who find his little delinquencies and peccadillos the most prolific sources of their grafting; and, above all, we have got to give him better opportunities for education and for clearing himself of the stigma of illiteracy which is flouted against him at all times in statistics giving percentages of illiteracy in the southern states.

Herein, there would seem to be no doubt, is the remedy for this "migration" mania which seems to have seized the negroes of a number of southern states. Tennessee may point its neighbors to the reason why this state has not suffered greatly from a loss of negro laborers. There has grown up in Tennessee for the past twenty years a most generous spirit toward negro education and the betterment of his living conditions. The state normal school, maintained at Nashville, at which hundreds of deserving negroes are trained in industry and agriculture, domestic science, etc., under the wise and efficient guidance of President W. J. Hale, has had a tremendous effect for composing any dissatisfaction or discontent that agitators might otherwise be able to organize in the state. Negro schools in most of the cities and towns are thriving and are given at least sufficient support to enable them to run six and eight months of the year.

What is needed now is the following up of these proposals for negro betterment. The business men of the city are considering the employment of a public defender for the protection of the victims of official oppression; a strong sentiment has been growing for the enlargement and improvement of the facilities for affording negro children opportunities for getting at least primary education, and a disposition has been manifested—and it must be strongly fortified with practical and effective demonstrations—for improving the living conditions of negro families. Better buildings are to be provided for them; some of the comforts and conveniences of life are to be added to these homes, and the negro workman is to be taught that he is something more than a mere animal in the matter of his domestic living. Hundreds of well-to-do negroes are improving their homes and that is stimulating others at least to a point of desiring better things in their own living quarters.

FOOLS WILL TALK.

The Guardian 9-29-28

A certain white minister of the Gospel (God forbid), advances the matured idea, matured evidently in an incubator, that all black Americans be segregated into a separate and distinct part of these United States of America, where the Colored people could develop their own civilization.

He advances the statement that the white culture is getting dry rot thro contact with the black people.

He certainly woke us up for we have been thinking that white people had pretty well kept our civilization away from us until recently when news of King Tut's tomb accidentally got into burning print.

As a people we have been pretty good imitators of "Masser" white man's brand of civilization to be told that we are ourselves in some information so startling that we are almost speechless. The wild idea that some white people have is a conviction in itself that as a class they are slipping.

White Supremacy Shaky

White Supremacy Shaky

"WHOM the gods would destroy they first make mad." The much-vaunted superiority of the white man is being challenged as never before in these United States. Despite all bars and obstacles the black brother is proving every day that he is the equal and often the superior of the whites. In business, athletics, music, art, literature, industry and general culture, he is alarming his white brother by his rapid strides. Naturally no one likes to have his position endangered by an "inferior." How can we preserve the myth of white superiority when Negroes of ability and courage in every walk of life are capturing first places? All around us we see the answer: Refuse to employ him in the skilled and professional positions. Don't play football or baseball with him when you can prevent it, or allow him to join your teams. Segregate him and discriminate against him at every opportunity. Don't allow him an inch because we know he is capable of taking a mile. What then would become of our much vaunted "Nordic" ascendency?

Portland Oregonian

It is this dreadful fear of the Negro and the other darker peoples capturing all the coveted prizes; intellectual, economical, artistic and athletic, that constitutes the foundation for the spirit of Ku Kluxism possessed by nine-tenths of our white brethren. Is the Negro an intelligent, thrifty workman, liable to become a property owner? Then, since the God of America is Property, we must, by hook or crook, keep him as far removed from the deity as possible, by the well known methods—discrimination and segregation. Is the Negro a great athlete? Then we must refuse to box him, play baseball or tennis with him, or allow him to compete in any championship contests. Is the Negro a great artist? Then we must do everything to discourage him. Is the Negro a great scholar? Then we must do everything to prevent him from showing up the ignorance of second-rate white boys and girls.

But the black brother seems to get on closer to the laurels, whether or no. Despite everything his ruddy-skinned friend has done, he continues to threaten the seats of the mighty. Even though the white papers do soft-pedal the achievements of Negroes, the pale-face brethren in the mass are beginning to feel insecure. The fear that they may not be as superior as they have always believed—is gripping their hearts as never before. The idea of Negroes owning banks, Locomobiles, mansions!

The destruction of a great idea is underway. In the general panic of "Nordic" America, force is resorted to as the only alternative to stem the rising tide of color that is threatening white world supremacy. So we have Johnstown, Stowe and the Indiana deportations.

How often will this happen in the future, with the dark brethren making rapid strides every day? No one knows. One thing, however, the Negro must resolve to do in the future: Not to leave his home and run away every time some white man shoves a Ku Klux letter under his front door. Such conduct is inexcusable in people aspiring to full manhood rights. A man's home is his castle and he has a right, yes, a duty, to defend it. There are times to go and there are times to stay, but there is no special virtue in consistency. Negroes are coming North in droves. Good! They found it expedient not to stay any longer in the South. It was time to go, when Northern industry and better living conditions beckoned.

Now the Negroes are here. It is time to stay, and no time to go, even when warned by a vigilance committee. If the Negro could stand the endless drill, confinment, segregation and discrimination of the cantonments in this country, and the filth, vermin, danger, disease, death and soul-sickening experiences in France, to make the world safe for democracy surely he should be willing and anxious to make America safe for himself.

WHY NOT A BUSINESS MAN AS HEAD OF THE BUSINESS LEAGUE

Dallas Express-Dallas, Tex.

Dissatisfaction with the failure of the National Negro Business League to function efficiently for the improvement of Negro Business is a fact and not a theory.

Sept. 1, 1923

In the past few years it has failed miserably to show any vestiges of a policy of any sort looking toward its growth into a potent factor in the economic life of the race.

It has no closely allied branch bodies in various cities. It does not seek actively to stimulate the organization of local leagues. It does not even employ methods in its own management businesslike enough to protect its own funds by bonding its treasurer. Though efficient enough in its inception by Booker Washington, by failing to keep pace with the economic development of the race it has actually fallen below the level of respectable living up to its name.

Shall it continue thus? We hope not.

But if it is to change from its present impotent state it must have different direction. And certainly a man who devotes his time solely to business would seem most fitted to give it the desired change of policy.

And in this connection let it be remarked that the suggestion of the change in president to a business man does not discount in any way the splendid service of its present head who doubtless has given to it of his best effort.

But a business man, conversant with the crying needs of Negro business today would have definite ideas of how best to supply those needs.

A business man would have a mind trained to concentrated effort along a certain line and that line would be business only. Other problems would more nearly be delegated to organizations whose duty it was to care for them.

As it now operates the league has no such direction. And its lack of direction is proof apparent of the racial failure to grasp its possibilities for good. It is an evidence of our economic backwardness. It stamps us as unable to enter largely into a co-operative scheme of commercial improvement. To allow this to continue to be true is unthinkable.

WM. PICKENS REFUSES TO BE SILENCED

St. Louis Argus

Banquet Is Arranged So He "Can Be Talked" To" Before Lecture At Terre Haute, Indiana, But The N. A. A. C. P. Field Representative Fails To Attend.

Associated Negro Press.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Oct. 17.—The Terre Haute correspondent is not "calling names" just yet, but reports that that K. K. K., of this town when they heard William Pickens, Field Secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., and Contributing Editor of the A. N. P., was to deliver a lecture to a mixed audience down town, got alarmed lest the Dean might flay the klan, and actually rigged up a little scheme to buy him off or soften him without his knowing it.

This is how: The K. K. K. is said to have furnished a big check to certain usable Negroes to prepare a banquet for the speaker, said banquet to take place before the meeting. At this banquet there would be colored and white "friends," the whites being certain Republican leaders who are Kluxers. This combination was supposed to do the softening act, indirectly and cunningly, without letting on. This alarm came from the fact that the great downtown hall, at which the Field Secretary was to speak, was donated for the occasion by the Anti-Klan Whites of Terre Haute. The Klan wanted to counteract this by slipping something over to the Dean gently.

It was learned that telegrams and letters were sent to the Dean by both sides, and while the contents of these could not be learned, it is to be noted that William Pickens did not allow himself to be banqueted.—although the chickens were all bought and waiting for execution.

The Pickens meeting proved to be the biggest thing of its kind that Terre Haute has seen, the Knights of Columbus and the Jews were there strong with the colored people.

When asked about the Klan attempt, the speaker only replied:

"Frankly, I don't know. But one thing I do know: if the Klan had succeeded in getting a dinner into me, I could not have kept me from saying my say, unless the food were poisoned."

PROMINENT WHITE EDITORS BELOW MASON-DIXON LINE ASK SQUARE DEAL FOR NEGRO

By LESTER A. WALTON
In N. Y. World

The frank analytical discussions of the causes of Negro migration, engaged in by editors of Southern dailies who are courageously demanding a square deal for the Negro in the South, should not escape the attention of the North. Many of the leading editors of that section do not hesitate to say that conditions will have to be materially changed if the migration wave is to materially subside.

"Let no Southern white man dodge the issue by contending that the Negro always gets a square deal here. He doesn't, and he knows it; and his white neighbors know it," says the Albany (Ga.) Herald.

"No people want to live in a state of fear, and night-riding has an element of terror that people like to run away from," declares the Macon Telegraph. "Unfortunately, some of the night-riding has had no better excuse than that the Negro drove an automobile or engaged in some new business that conventional prejudice was not accustomed to. Happily the whipping of Negroes for owning and driving cars has disappeared from most places, but the state of mind that caused things of this character and tolerated them is unfavorable to justice and opportunity to the Negro, and one of the shames of the worst moods of certain classes of the South."

The Enquirer-Sun of Columbus, Ga., thus comments on the exodus: "From time to time, for more than two years, the Enquirer-Sun has attempted to draw attention to the fact that the Negro was—and he still is—leaving the South in large numbers. Furthermore, we have asserted that the principal reason for the exodus is that he is not fairly treated in the South—that he does not receive justice in the same measure that the white man does, and that he is not given adequate protection. Too scant attention is paid to his physical needs. Those who rent him houses think that any sort of shack is good enough for the Negro.

We have been asked to make it clear that the South is the best place for the Negro, particularly its climate; but climatic conditions mean nothing if a human being, black or white, feels that he is unjustly treated, feels that his life and property are not safe from night riders and cowardly masked organizations; if he feels that he has no voice in making the laws under which he must live. In the past certain newspapers have looked upon our warnings as the result of an alarmist attitude. We have no feeling of pride in the fact that we are right. Our sentiment is one of chagrin and regret that we are not strong enough to prevent what is happening and what will continue to happen unless we decide to make it known that we intend to assert our Anglo-Saxon love of fair play."

"Why not tell the truth about the exodus?" inquires the Jackson, Miss., Daily News. "Nothing can be gained by fooling ourselves. We are facing a condition, not a theory. The Negroes are moving northward because they are offered better wages. The plain gospel truth is that we have not been giving the Negro a square deal on the wage question. This applies to the agricultural districts as well as the industrial centers. The wage scale for Negro labor has been too low. Worse than this, our employers of Negro labor have not shown their employees the kindly consideration they deserve. Housing conditions are almost invariably bad."

"Take in the matter of house servant. The average cook here in Jackson is paid $5 per week—and what she can carry off. She pays $2.50 per week rental for the hovel in which she lives— usually a two-room cabin—and usually she has a family to support. How in the name of common sense can your cook clothe herself, buy food for herself and family and meet other living expenses on $2.50 per week? She carries food in goodly quantities out of your kitchen because she is forced to do it in order to keep body and soul together.

"If we are going to keep our Negroes in the South we must quit trying to kid ourselves into believing that we are dealing fairly with them. * * * It is useless to try to ease our conscience with the idea that thousands of Negroes who are migrating northward are going to be bitterly disappointed. That is dodging the issue. Even if they all starve to death, if they are persecuted by labor unions, it cannot alter the fact that they are leaving us, and that is the trouble we are seeking to remedy. We can stifle the restless, migratory spirit of the Negro in the South only by seeing to it that life is made more pleasant for him; by giving him wages sufficient to support his family decently, by protecting him in all his rights, social, legal and moral; by giving him an honest deal in all business transactions, and not imposing on his ignorance or credulity. This may not be pleasant reading for a lot of folks, but it is cold and indisputable truth, and we may as well face it."

TOLERANCE—THE ONLY CURE FOR INTOLERANCE

Impatient rejection of all class prejudice and kindly toleration and respect for all mankind—that's what we need to preach and practice in Atlantic City, as elsewhere, in order effectively to cope with the poison of bigotry and fanaticism.

"One of the humorous incidents that will accompany its decline," was the way the Philadelphia Evening Ledger commented upon the recent anti-Klan agitation of Mayor Bader's, staged here in an unfortunate moment of unguarded enthusiasm against class hatred. Unnecessary absolutely and dangerous perhaps, but certainly not very "humorous," particularly when it is considered that an appeal to class hysteria is almost as destructive to the cause of human tolerance as an appeal to class prejudice; neither points the true way to common brotherhood and love.

Only this week a colored man discharged a pistol at nothing on New Jersey avenue, explaining that he was nervous and thought the Ku Klux Klan was after him. One cannot blame colored people who are sensitive on this point and overly-apprehensive, especially when we thoughtlessly exaggerate the "Klan menace" ourselves; less than a century ago they were enslaved and treated as chattels by some white men, and it is going to take still more time to build up their confidence and faith in the preponderance of the white man who regards them as fellow human beings and brothers.

The age of tolerance so much desired by thinking and sensible people means the completion of that confidence and faith, and it can be done only by showing the colored man that we regard and treat him exactly the same as the white man or the man of any other color—according to his interests in the community, his standing, education, personality and the like, not according to his color. It most assuredly cannot be done by frightening him into the false frenzy that a thousand demons are after him.

"I am a Protestant and my skin is white," said Lt.-Colonel Raymond Robins at the High School this week, "but I have the utmost contempt for those who condemn a man because he is a Catholic or because he is a Jew or because he is a Negro." And the lecturer went on to demonstrate the folly of mass prejudice and class bigotry, citing the Catholic religion of Marshall Foch, French general, whose genius in leadership saved civilization in the Great War, and the religion and race of many other great, noble and lovable men and benefactors of mankind among Catholics, Jews, Protestants and all.

People who think require no brief on this point. They agree absolutely with Colonel Robins. They have not a particle of sympathy with any prejudiced people who would mask their faces to wage war on class or creed, nor have they any sympathy for any movement which arrays class against class, creed against creed, or race against race. Thinkers recognize in this the height of human folly and the essence of danger to civilization.

But there is no use fooling ourselves. Many people do not think beyond their prejudices; thoughts are chained by their passions. The great mass of human beings would not raise a lawless hand against any creed or race, and yet they do not hesitate to measure men by their religion and race instead of their heart and personality—the silliest and most erroneous measuring-stick that could be imagined. You hear them every day—they hate the Jews, or they distrust the Catholics or the Negro is a menace; you know the whispered prattling of ignorant prejudice—in all communities. It is human, as history shows; an inheritance of the human family. Condemnation and blame of those who so whisper may be justified, but it is all to no purpose. Why toy with purposeless condemnation of a thing which is a human weakness, to which all of us in a measure are heir? The only logical thing to do is to dissolve these petty prejudices that blind the vision of so many humans in the acid of enlightenment—enlightenment that preaches tolerance through a demonstration of the utter falsity and unreliability of prejudice. It cannot be taught on any other basis, certainly not by keeping up the class or creed appeal.

But let no one make the mistake that tolerance can be achieved by preaching and teaching alone. It must be acted as well. No program of "do as I say but not as I do" can rear on the century-old foundations of prejudice and misunderstanding, the beautiful edifice of tolerance and brotherhood of mankind. Every government, local, city, State or nation, that curries favor with this or that creed, this or that race, not only insults the intelligence of the creed or race it favors but also grievously injuries it by fanning the flame of intolerance without. Every statesman or politician, no matter how influential or inconsequential, who curries favor with this or that creed or race makes the same blunder, inflicts the same injury, incites the same feeling.

The same is true of every institution, every public movement, every public or private cause that blunders into the folly of indirectly encouraging and pandering to the crass ignorance that secretly arrays race against race, creed against creed, class against class.

For many years communities, here and abroad, and doubtless Atlantic City included, have made the blunder, through political organizations or political leadership, of drawing class lines—first around one class and then around another. The harvest inevitably to be reaped from such unwise sowing, whether conscious or unconscious, is the whirlwind of intolerance—common enemy of all mankind. Yet how easily it might be avoided by giving consideration to all classes, including creeds, races and factions, on an equal basis! How much easier to deal with human intolerance by the fairness and broadmindedness that disarm hatred and educate to brotherly love, regardless of race, creed or color, than by a policy of thoughtless partisanship that only encourages by irritation the ignorance and narrow-mindedness of which intolerance is born!

In Atlantic City let us eliminate intolerance, so far as it is humanly possible, by adopting in all things the broad policy of equal consideration and just representation for all factions—whether factions of creed, race or color. Let us resolve on this as a future policy—"live and let live." And, in thus resolving, let us realize that we can do it without "making a mountain out of a molehill" and frightening ourselves to death.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

The White Man's Burden.

Here we break a precedent of a lifetime. We are going to print a part of one of our attempts at a speech. We do it because the problem to which that near-speech was addressed has grown more acute with the years that have intervened. That subject was the Georgia white man's responsibility for the condition of the negro.

About twenty years ago, when Comer M. Woodward was at the head of Sparks Collegiate Institute, and that institution was in its youth, a dinner was given in the dining-hall to the Laymen workers of South Georgia. The writer was asked to respond to the address of welcome. We had given some thought to the opening for constructive work by the Laymen of the Church toward a solution of the negro problem, and that was the subject we selected. It was not a very fortunate selection, considering time and place. To begin with, the dinner was served rather late. Then, it was set on the tables before the hungry crowd, which waited, still hungry, while all the speaking program was put through. We remember a rather bored and impatient audience, a Presiding Elder frankly yawning, young people chatting with less rather than more reserve—and, altogether, the talk did not make a hit. We never had the courage to make it again, but we wish we had. It is because we believe now the things we believed then that we are going to print some of the argument advanced, with the hope that somebody will read it. So far as possible, superfluities have been eliminated. If you don't care for it, turn to the sporting page:

Glorious the victories of the past, but great are the battles of the future. Prohibition and Primary Education lie behind you, before you is

The Negro Problem.

The discussion thereof is not popular before a mixed audience, but no subject is nearer the Southron's home or his heart. It is so close, and so strong is the need of the hour, that I have come to talk to you about it.

I say to you, despite any inclination to postpone the issue, that if this great question, the most complicated that ever faced a human race, is solved, it is the Christian Layman and the Evangelist that must work the solution out.

If it is not solved, one of two mighty races must go down into oblivion.

Do you believe it cannot be solved? I quote you Bishop Ward, presiding at the North Georgia Conference in 1906:

"If the Christian religion cannot save the Negro in America, neither can it save the Negro in Africa; and if it cannot save the colored man, wherever he may be located, why, then, my brethren it cannot save the white man."

Doubting Thomas, that would set a limit upon the power of the religion of Christ. If you say the race problem cannot be solved by the Christian worker, then are our millions of dollars and thousands of devoted lives given to missions thrown away, and our churches, that dot the countless hillsides and plains, are but whited sepulchres of a vain hope.

We do not agree with the fiery Tillman on one hand and silver-tongued Graves on the other. One is the surgeon who diagnoses your case as a malignant cancer and after telling you of its horrors and agony, concludes with the statement that if there is any remedy he knows none. The other would separate the Siamese twins with the surgeon's knife, to the end that one must surely die, the other suffer.

We believe that the religion of Jesus Christ can solve the negro problem and that only the Southern white man can put that solution into effect.

If the white man is, by race and otherwise, best qualified to rule, then is the governor responsible for the well-being of the governed.

If the negro is incapable of self-government, then is he the weaker race, and for his welfare will God hold us responsible.

If God, in His mighty wisdom, ordained that the white man should rule, then as surely as He requires more talents from he to whom He gave ten, just as surely will He, at the judgment bar, inquire of you and I the fate of the negro whom He created and over whom He gave us dominion.

This is a hard proposition, but it is as true as it is hard. We cannot assume to ourselves the power to govern without assuming also responsibility for the welfare of the governed. There is no more escaping it than the responsibility for the animals in our barns, the imbecile, the helpless and the poor of God.

By whom can this great problem be solved?

By the sons of the men who followed Lee.

To none do I yield one jot or tittle in admiration of the men who carried the Stars and Bars to Gettysburg's bloody field; who faced privation and death in the South's great cause, for of this I inherit and the heritage is greater than that left by Sparta to her heroes. But higher than my admiration for the courage that faced the cannon's mouth is that for the noble, true courage that bore up the battle-weary hero who limped, hungry and footsore, from a lost battle and a wrecked cause to a home devastated and a country in ashes, laid waste by the torch of the enemy; who laid aside the musket for the plow, the sword for the hoe, and out of a land of desolation, grief and ruin, brought this fair garden of peace and plenty. Truly, a noble heritage, worthy of the devotion of any man's life, of the very best that in him lies.

This fair land of ours was given to us in sacred trust by the heroes of '65. Are we of a different blood that we should shirk their trust or evade the responsibility for keeping it as it was given us?

Is the problem we face any more formidable than the ones they triumped over?

Then, you who march on the firing line, up and gird your armor on.

Your work is in the community, the village, the courtroom, the city, wherever men do gather. It is to mold, by precept and example, your fellow-man to a higher understanding of his moral obligation. Each of you is a missionary who must go out in as noble cause as any for which ever man donned the immortal armor.

True, missionary work at home is not always as attractive as in the foreign field—distance lends a halo even to service—but the need is greater.

Have we, the superior race, set before the inferior, the uneducated, the imitative one, the example of compliance with the law, of forbearance with ignorance, of pity for depravity? Have we Christian people given to the negro as our door the care and consideration, the solicitude for, and prayer for his welfare, that we have the cannibal in the South Sea Islands or on Africa's shore?

God help us if we have not.

Not for one instant would I be understood as not favoring, with every cent we can spare, the support of those noble men and women in the foreign mission field, but the church that gives the most to missions is strongest at home, and here at our door is the greatest mission field that ever a white man faced.

They live under the same government, the same laws, support the same institutions, as ourselves. We meet them on the streets, they are around our children, they are in the back-yards of our homes; their welfare is our own, yet when have our white preachers ever taught them or our white teachers instructed them?

I see you recoil in horror.

Yet is not the Georgia negro as clean as his naked cousin in Africa, or is he more repulsive than the palm-oiled cannibal of the South Seas?

Shall we go thousands of miles to find a duty and look over the foundling at our doorsteps?

No matter who put him there; nor who is to blame for his being here, the problem is before us, and as white men and Christians we cannot escape it if we would.

We wonder the negro does not progress, yet we leave him to be taught by the ignorant and vicious of his own race or by misguided so-called philanthropists who understand as little his needs as they do the conditions that surround him.

In olden times, the negro was taught at the "big house", and heard the gospel from the gallery of his master's church.

And in 1861 the men of the South marched to battle, and the negro at home guarded his wife and children.

There was no race problem, no lynching then.

But the negro of today is the outcrop of the neglect and contempt of the Southern white man, the misguided preaching of those of his own race and the ignorant efforts of the foreign meddler, to whom we have abandoned him, and who teaches him all that he should not know and little that he should know.

While for this condition of affairs the white man of the South cannot evade a share of the responsibility, yet he cannot be severely blamed. The terrible days of reconstruction, when the negro's ignorance and natural tendency to vice were taken advantage of by the carpet-bagger and politician—left their inevitable heart-burnings and prejudice, and for thirty years in the hands of the sons of the South did not lie the solution of the problem, for in the hands of the negro was the ballot. The problem was in part his own.

Little more than twenty years ago, the negro's vote was the politician's prize; he was sought after, cuddled and bribed then; not even the most patriotic dared breathe a suggestion of disfranchisement. But the white primary eliminated the black vote from the political pot-hunter's horizon, and now from every hilltop "disfranchisement" is megaphoned in thunder-tones.

With the negro disfranchised, was the negro problem settled? It was only relegated, with the responsibility of he who governs, to the shoulders of the white man.

Perhaps you say we have taken the bars away from him. Good. But he is still the go-between between the blind tiger and his customer, for the most complicated phase of this great question is that the vicious white man uses the negro for the dirty work he is ashamed to trust to one of his own color. Not only in the whiskey traffic, but in every vice he is a slave.

Before we can make the negro good, we must set him the example.

Some one, when you mention this on the streets, will say that as long as one crime continues, lynching will prevail.

Oh, miserable subterfuge. Out of each one hundred lynchings in the South last year, only eight were for the one crime that even the most rabid dare condone for community murder. For every eight that were executed, ninety-two were foully murdered, by the men who should, in their very pride of superiority, have set the example of law and order.

For the illegal taking of a human life is murder, be it an individual, or a community, or a State, and for this murder, as for the curse of Cain, must the individual, the community and the State suffer.

Your vaunted disfranchisement will not settle it. You can not disfranchise the educated negro, and with the same code that gave us the disfranchisement law came another that no corporation, cotton mill, saw mill, turpentine operator or planter, when incorporated under the laws of the State, can work the negro child under twelve years unless he has been sent to school four months each year. Disfranchisement but puts a prize, the ballot, on education, and the negro will see that he gets it. Too many now go to school while the children of our race are in the cotton fields.

Now, Christian Workers, before he gets it, while the power and responsibility of he who governs is yours, let us solve this question.

As sure as there is a God who reigns on high, it can be peaceably and amicably solved.

As sure as Christ bled for us, His religion can save the world. And of the world the negro is a part.

Teach these men of ignorance this race that is fast being steeped and smothered in vice.

Urge your own race to set them the example.

And as surely as you labor and pray, does God promise that labor and prayer shall be answered. As surely as the religion of Christ has redeemed the world, can it also solve the great problem of the South.

Race Problem — 1923
United States

SOCIALISM AND THE NEGRO.

The Colored people of the United States have reached the stage in their development where they are extensively propaganized for this idea and that. Various schemes of political, social and religious colportage are daily laid before them. In one sense this is a good augury. It seems to show that the Colored people are wanted. Time was when they were regarded as a negligible influence. Their only function was supposed to be at work—to serve. For what they thought, for what ideas surged through their brains, nobody in the dominent race cared. All they had to do was to labor and to wait.

This is now changed. We hear of this and that propaganda directed toward them. Large sums are expended on religious proseltytism among them. They are reckoned as a possible, a desirable, asset. Their northern movement, as a race, emphasizes this tendency. It brings them under the influence of the kind propagandists who have their headquarters in our great cities. Little by little, the Negroes move into the radius of all the great movements.

In the process, they come under the appeals of certain "causes" from which they have nothing but ill to expect. One of these is the socialistic propaganda. Among others the Young People's Socialistic League in New York has opened a "drive" among them. A special effort is being made to infuse with socialistic ideas the minds of their boys and girls in Harlem —possibly also in Boston. They are being told that they have absolutely nothing to hope for from the old political parties, whereas Socialism offers them every equality, every sort of advantage.

This claim is absolutely not true. Considering socialism as primarily an industrial movement, it is hostile to their interest. They are excluded from nearly all the labor organizations. If they form unions, they must form them of their own color. If we can imagine the socialists in political control in this country, it is perfectly evident that under such control the Colored race would not have as good a chance as it now has in the South and wherever in the North there is a demand for the labor of Colored men and women. They have much more to hope for from a systematic and well organized development of the private and corporate industries of the land than they have from the reversal of the present social and industrial order.

The nature of the Negro is kindly and helpful, and it is always through his sympathy with broad American principles of individual liberty that his success is attained. If he expects more from subversive movements, he is leaning on a broken reed. And if his present condition is in many respect unsatisfactory, he may assure himself that it is happiness itself in comparison with what it would be under a disturbance of existing arrangements. Nature and destiny never made a socialist of the Negro.

William J. Bryan Views On the Negro Question

Houston Texas

By William J. Bryan in the New York Times.

Late last month I spoke at a banquet of the Southern society. I was not on the printed program, but was called upon when the advertised list of speakers was completed. One of the speakers, in emphasizing the importance of that part of the declaration of independence which affirms that all men are created equal, criticised the limitations that have been placed upon suffrage in some of the Southern States. I referred to the subject at this dinner, as I have referred to it before during the last 25 years, in order to point out that these limitations are not based upon a repudiation of the declaration of independence, but rest upon a principle—the first law of nature—everywhere recognized, namely, the right of self-preservation, which includes the right to preserve civilization and progress made in the science of government.

Back in 1898 when we were discussing imperialism, a man from the South cautioned me against laying too much emphasis upon the declaration of independence, adding that in the States where the blacks menaced white supremacy it had been found necessary to ignore the doctrine that all men were created equal. I replied that limitations upon the exercise of suffrage by the black race ought not to be based upon a denial of the doctrine of equality as found in the declaration of independence, but upon the real foundation, which in no way contradicts or weakens the declaration of independence. I defended the doctrine of equality in the inalienable rights enumerated in the declaration of independence and explained to him that the problem which the whites of the South had to solve did not involve the question of equality before the law; that no one denied that the blacks were entitled to equal protection in their rights. The question is, which race shall control the government and make the laws under which both shall live? The more advanced race will always control as a matter of self-preservation not only for the benefit of the advanced race, but for the benefit of the backward race also.

In the States where restrictions are placed upon suffrage for the purpose of excluding enough blacks to preserve white supremacy, the blacks have the advantage of living under laws that the white man makes for himself as well as for the black man. The laws make no distinction in the matter of crime between whites and blacks.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that no limitations were placed upon suffrage and that the blacks, voting in masse for officials of their own color, took charge of the government and made laws for both blacks and whites; is there any white man who believes that the laws made under these circumstances would be better for both, or administered with more fairness than now?

What Other States Would Do.

At the Southern banquet, I enforced my argument by suggesting that Massachusetts would do exactly as Virginia and South Carolina had done if confronted by the same conditions. There is not a State in the Union in which the whites would permit black supremacy. This ought to be admitted without argument but it could be easily proved if proof were necessary. Republicans are constantly coming South and they at once adopt the Southern view on the race question, as soon as they have to meet the race problem as a practical question. The fact that the republican States of the North never send black men to the United States senate and house of representatives is conclusive proof either that the blacks are inferior or that race prejudice keeps them in the background. The ra... the home of Lincoln ... ed that race feeling is ... ...rong in the North as in the South when a condition arises that gives it expression.

It is no reflection upon the black race to say that it could not formulate laws and administer government as well as the white. It is only a few centuries since the ancestors of the colored people of the South were brought from Africa as slaves. They have made wonderful progress and they have made it because they have been associated with and helped by white people. Slavery among the whites was an improvement over independence in Africa. The very progress that the blacks have made, when —and only when—brought into contact with the whites, ought to be a sufficient argument in support of white supremacy—it ought to be sufficient to convince even the blacks themselves. The members of the white race have been studying the subject of government for thousands of years; why should they not be more proficient than the blacks?

There is no advantage to be gained by ignoring the facts. The republicans of the North are deceiving the blacks for political purposes when they pretend a greater affection for them than is found in the South. Some one described the situation very accurately when he said: "The people of the South like the negroes as individuals but dislike them as a race, while the people of the North like them as a race but dislike them as individuals."

The inconsistency of the Northern republicans is proved by their attitude toward the Filipinos. They insist on governing the Filipinos by laws made for the Filipinos, under which the white republicans would be unwilling to live. Under the colonial system, the Filipinos have much less protection than the colored people of the South now have, for, as I have said before, the colored people of the South live under the laws that the white people make for themselves as well as for the colored people.

Matter of Necessity.

To prove that restrictions upon black suffrage is based upon necessity and not upon prejudice, we have only to cite the fact that the restrictions are only imposed where, without these restrictions, the government would be in danger of passing under he control of the blacks. It is only in those Southern States where the blacks are most numerous that the whites have, as a mater of self-preservation, imposed restrictions. They may have been spurred on to this by a recollection of ... eir experience under carpet bag gover...ment ... ...en a few designing white me... used black suffrage to exploit helpless whites, as they would today if they could (only the use now made of colored delegates in republican national conventions.) But such an experience is not necessary to justify the discrimination made in a few States in the matter of suffrage. Any one who will look at the subject without prejudice will know that white supremacy promotes the highest welfare of both races.

A frank and candid recognition of conditions as they exist will promote harmony between the two races. Republican politicans who have played upon race prejudice and who, in order to obtain colored votes have advocated laws dealing with the race question in the South as they would not ...with it in the North under similar conditions, are the prime cause of ...e antagonism; next to these come ...ose leaders of the colored race who, instead of trying to help their own people, aggravate the situation by encouraging the blacks to put social and political equality above the cultivation of character.

Whether for better or for worse, the whites and the blacks are here and must live together, unless some other solution of the problem can be found. While they live together, they should exchange services and co-operate for the promotion of the common welfare. This is only possible upon the basis of friendship, and friendship is possible only on the basis of honesty and frank understanding.

Where the percentage of blacks is small compared with the total population there will be no restriction on franchise based upon color; neither will there be segregation in schools or upon the railroad trains. Whether the percentage of blacks is large, rules will be made to meet conditions as they exist.

I repeat, in conclusion, that my views upon the race question do not depend upon my present residence in the South; they were formed long before I ever thought of living in the South. They were expressed as occasion required and, so far as I know, do not differ from the views of other white men who have had occasion to express themselves on the fundamental principles involved, when those principles were applied to themselves and their own families.

REP. LANKFORD AGAIN TACKLES RACE QUESTION

Washington Tribune

Washington D. C.

Tribune and Negroes of Washington Draw Ire of Southerner

Amid the scenes of a dying Congress, when leaders on both sides of the House were busy trying to push through needed legislation and "Lame Ducks" were singing the "Swan Song," Representative William C. Lankford of the 11th District of Georgia, who recently came into prominence by attacking the Negro of Washington and The Tribune, halted the wheels of Congress just before the close, long enough to make another one of his typical attacks on what he termed the "awful Negroes of Washington."

The Georgian started out to talk on the reckless automobile driving, but before he was on the floor ten seconds, his real purpose was disclosed.

Part of the speech he delivered follows:

"I hope that the authorities of th city will do all that [illegible]

People visiting here go away saying; the city is beautiful in the extreme but there is such a disrgeard for law, such an absolute disregard for life by people using automobiles, such a desecration of the Sabbath, and the Negroes are something awful.

"Washington ought to be not only beautiful but decent. This city ought to be a model of law enforcement instead of a city awful. Time is too limited to speak fully on these matters now. I hope to do so later. There is a slight improvement in enforceing laws against the would-be murderers at steering wheels of automobiles. I hope the courts will some day go the limit in favor of innocent people against the speed maniacs. Let the people plead for law enforcemen and race segregation, and we may hope for a city beautiful and a city decent. I have pleaded and still plea for equal but separate accommodations for the races as being best fo both. I do not mean to nag at any one about this proposition, but I hon estly believe that with race segrega tion the two races can live here o better terms. The South is right a bout the race question. I have nev seen a white person from the Nort go South and get thoroughly famili with the situation there who did n become fully convinced that th South is absolutely right about th race question and the North is ab solutely wrong. William J. Bryan ithe latest noted convert on this sub ject. I have never known of a whit southerner who came North and de cided that the South was wrong abou segregation of the races; in fact the become more convinced than ever tha the North is wrong on the question o segregation. The northern negro i afraid that he will in some way admi the supremacy of the white race. truly believe in the supremacy of th white race. I believe the white rac gave us the greatest possible form c government. No other race cou have added to it. This government the white man was not helped wh the negro began voting. He will n make it better in the future. I wi to refer in this connection to one suggestion made by a colored paper recently.

"The Washington Tribune in its last issue mentioned my remarks of the 19th of last month and still opposes segregation of the races. This paper, though, is right about my belief. It says that I believe "that when this planet was created the Almighty personally turned it over to the whites."

"Here is what I said in Congress on January 18, 1922:

"He (the Almighty) took the dust of the earth and molded in into His own image, into the form of a man, and breathed into its nostrils His own creative, everlasting, immortal breath; and the image came forth a human being,a living soul, all dominating, all conquering, everlasting, eternal, immortal,a part of God Himself, a Caucasian,a white man; and God gave that first white man dominion over all things and told him to reach to the bottom of the sea and up to the highest skies and understand and know the mysteries of all time and space, and that first man, a white man, went forth to solve, understand, conquer, and know the universe in which he had been placed. And that first white man from that day to this has been the all-powerful all-controlling, all-dominating man of the world. He has conquered the depths of the sea; he has flown like a bird through the very gates of the skies; he has whispered around the world in the twilight of a new era; he has weighed the moon, the earth, and the sun; he is solving the knowing and bringing under his subjection and dominion all the mysteries of life, of space, and of all the universe of God, and as time goes by he is learning to think, understand, and know the thoughts of the Almgihty God of the skies.

"Commissioned by the Great Creator, he is the governing power of the world and is gradually shaping the nations of this earth into the highest and best forms of government, and is the ruler and the supreme power of all other races, whether the yellow, the red, or the black. He is the all-powerful, all-dominating man of the world. He always has been and always will be to the end of time.

"Forces of nature may oppose him, but he overcomes them. Other peoples races, and colors of humanity may resist him, but of no avail; he marches onward, conquering, and holding his God-given supremacy.

"White supremacy is not oppressive tyrannical supremacy, but is compassionate, God-like supremacy exercised for the good of our Nation, the happiness of the human race, and the civilization of the world. (Applause)."

The above remarks of Lankford are a good index to his intelligence. Born and educated in Georiga under the influence of a slave holding and klu klux ridden community, his lack of knowledge of the world's history and its earliest people is somewhat explained. His statement that "He (the Almighty) took the dust of the earth and molded it into His own image, into the form of a man and breathed into its nostrils His own creative, everlasting, immortal berath; and the image came forth a human being, a living soul, all dominating, all conquering, everlasting, eternal, immortal,a part of God Himself, a Caucasian,a white man;" is both amusing because of its humour, and pathetic because he (Lankford) actually believes such a ridiculous and preposterous thing.

In this connection, since Mr. Lankford is up on the Creative history of the world and knows so much about the Almighty's plans, we would like to ask the Georgian these questions:

If God created this white man out of the dust of the earth and gave him such broad powers over the earth, how did the black, brown, red and yellow men come into existence? Did this God who created the white man make them, and if so, out of what? As the black, brown, red and yellow people's physical composure is exactly like the white, did not God have a hand in their making? If this second question is true then why did the Almighty give the white man any more power than he gave the others? If the wise Georgian would clear up these points perhaps we could tolerate his arrogance a little more.

The truth of the matter is, facts mean nothing to Southerners of his type. They are so used to disregarding facts, especially when they pertain to Negroes, that it has become a second nature to them. This type of Southerners would defy the laws if they thought a Negro had anything to do with the making of them.

We would like to know Mr. Lankford's authority for his statement that the white man has received a commission from the Great Creator; we would also like to know his authority for the statement that God's creation was a white man (Caucasian).

Perhaps the Georgian has done a lot of research on this subpect and has discovered some authorities none of the great anthropologists have as yet seen.

The Aryan race is often cited in the world-wide propaganda employed by the Caucasians; we would like to know if Lankford or any Caucasian can point with historical or genealogical accuracy to a genuine Aryan?

Lankford's entire congressional record has been a series of speeches on the race problem. The 67th Congress was his first term so he had to make good with the voters back home. His complete record in the past Congress is as follows:

First Session

Introduced bill to donate captured cannons to certain cities in Georgia; a bill to increase pension of Wm. H. Mercer; a bill authorizing construction of toll bridge across St. Mary's river; a bill to further amend the War Finance Commission.

Second Session

Attended only five roll calls during session, according to the Index. Introduced bill to provide farm products for experiment and to establish sale directly from producer to consumer; a bill to create farmers finance corporation. Spoke on the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill; Muscle Shoals project.

Third Session

Offered amendment to joint resolution (H. J. 314) Tax exempt securities. Made remarks on color line at Harvard University; remarks on tax exempt securities; remarks on demise of Thomas E. Watson of Georgia (Memorial Sermon); remarks on British debt settlement; remarks on race question; (Attacked the Tribune and the Negroes of the North) remarks on race question; (again attacked The Tribune and Negroes of Washington).

Lankford's own record condemns him. The only thing he can constantly talk on is the so-called race question. However, his record is typical of most Southern Congressmen. They have been schooled so thoroughly in race prejudice until they have little knowledge of the work they are sent here to do. It is this type of Congressmen who are opposed to giving the citizens of the District of Columbia the ballot.

As it is this type of Southerners who make and enforce the laws in the South, then there is little wonder that the Negroes are leaving the South by the thousands.

LETTER TO EDITOR . .

Kansas City, Mo.,
February 4th, 1923.

Hon. Ben Davis, Editor
Atlanta Independent,
Atlanta, Ga.

My dear Mr. Davis:

"Simple Souls" sounds so soothing, so sympathetic, so paternal, and so Christlike, that the "sting," if any was intended, by the "Sage of Manhattan," was not felt by millions of dependable negroes who do not feel like "dancing" every time the "Sage" "whistles."

The "negro problem" is a great problem, one that will never be solved without the aid of the "Simple Souls." I am,

Yours very respectfully,
J. SILAS HARRIS,
President Negro National Educational Congress, 1611 Forest Ave.

A HALF TRUTH.

Atlanta Independent
Atlanta, Ga.
2-8-23

One thing that has been a most serious handicap to the progress of the southland, is its apparent unwillingness to acknowledge the truth as regards to a number of the phases of its life. In presenting itself to the outside, it has always clothed itself in its best apparel, which very often concealed some very soiled linen underneath. It has willingly nursed itself into believing that it was measuring up to the standard set by other sections in education, social and political advancement, statesmanship and in the equation of economic aggressiveness.

This make-believe policy has ever been applied to whatever arguments that have been issued affecting the negroes of the south. The southern white people have at odd times set up the proposition that they were the negro's best friends—that they treated him better than any other people would—that they were doing more toward his advancement than any other people would do, and in the time of need, they could be counted on better than could other people.

A typical case of make-believe was presented in last Sunday's Constitution through a treatment of the exodus in a news article written by Mr. James O. Holloman and commented on editorially. The news article presents only a half truth regarding the exodus, because it fails to give a fair estimate of the number of negros who left the state during the year 1922 along with only a part of the causes for their leaving.

The survey coming from the Constitution's representative and some eighty-nine counties, gives an approximate number of 15,000 persons having left those counties in the past year. The counties from which reports were received are situated in every district of the state, a report from which should give a fair idea of a movement that is statewide. However, we do not think that a fair estimate of the number leaving in the year 1922 was made.

Again, in all but four of the reports from the various 89 counties the boll weevil and short crops was given as the cause of the exodus. In three counties, fear of the K. K. K. and lawlessness was given as the reason, while in one, a lack of educational facilities was set up.

While the foregoing reasons are true, and the boll weevil stands out prominently as a cause, our investigation has disclosed the fact that mob violence is the greatest cause, coupled with a lack of equal protection under the law, oppression on the part of landlords, boll weevil conditions and a lack of educational facilities as well as a denial of the right of participation in governmental affairs.

Truly, entirely too much responsibility has been placed on the boll weevil. It may be that the representatives of the Constitution were conscientious in their reports, and it may be that they were unwilling to publish to the world the fact that citizens left their counties because of mob violence. If they investigated the cause through nergoes, the reason for their answers is obvious, for negroes have learned that it is not healthy for them to complain of the real conditions that they face in their communities.

We can get nowhere by concealing the facts, and the reasons for the exodus may as well be admitted now as hereafter. No evil was ever cured where the causes were ignored, and it will not be so in this case. We may as well look the facts in the face, admit them and make an effort to remove the cause or there shall be no let up in the exodus.

Every negro is born a farmer—he knows how to till the soil and get all out of a piece of land that can be gotten out of it. He is well aware of the fact that he can make a living on the farm despite the efforts of the boll weevil. All of this, of course, depends upon fair chances offered by reasonable landlords. If he cannot get this, he cannot produce. Further than that, the negro has gotten tired of just living and has reached the point that he desires for himself and his an equal protection under the law, adequate educational facilities and a right to participate in affairs governmental.

We would not have our argument construed as an encouragement of the exodus, nor for that matter, a discouragement. As we have said in these columns before, we believe that the exodus is a two-edged sword cutting both ways, and that the negro who leaves along with the white man whom he leaves here will both suffer alike—that the negro's leaving is destructive to his religious, fraternal and economic status, and that it is here where he should let down his bucket and solve his problems. At the same time, we recognize the right of an individual to select his domain wherever he wills—a right guaranteed him by the constitution of the United States.

But the fact that we are trying to impress upon the minds of the public is that we will never get anywhere by overlooking the facts which cause the people to leave. The only way to cure the evil, if it might be called an evil, is to remedy the matters of which the people complain, and we cannot do that if we ignore a part of them.

SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION—NOT LAWS—CURE FOR MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE EVIL

For a number of years there have been many efforts put forth by various elements and organizations of American citizens to promote cures for the marriage and divorce evil. Many and divers arguments have been propagated for the purpose of taking out of American life this disintegrating influence. Each effort has been made with more or less enthusiasm, the same being true of the recent resolution offered by Senator Capper, of Arkansas. This resolution primarily purposes to remedy, if not cure, the marriage and divorce evil; but the clause prohibiting intermarriage between white and colored people and between white and mongolians, seems to be the chief topic of discussion.

This clause prohibiting intermarriage of races of color with whites is manifestly an injustice and contrary to the Constitution of the United States. There should be no proscription or limitation of rights in American life because of color as the clause purposes. The right of individuals should not be abridged in the social, civic, moral or political economy of American life, and any such proposal is an infringement upon the constitutional rights of individuals, as is, or is supposed to be, encouched in the principles of American liberty. It is argued that the proposed clause offers absolutely no protection to Negro women, while it virtually grants license to white men to prey upon women other than their own, and is a most splendid encouragement to bastardy.

But, we did not begin this article to discuss any phase of the proposed legislation, but rather to discuss it in its entirety, and upon its assumption that uniform marriage and divorce laws is the cure for the evil complained of, and to argue that what is absolutely necessary as a cure is a readjustment of American social phenomena.

As we afore stated, there have been numerous efforts to remedy marriage and divorce evils, but it appears that practically all of these efforts have been tending toward legislating this matter out of the lives of the people. The fact that this evil is a serious menace to the wholesome life of the nation, admits of no argument. Figures compiled in 1905 declare that the United States leads in divorces, and this year the aggregate number of divorces in the United States was sixty-eight thousand as against forty thousand in all the rest of the world. This, in itself, is proof conclusive of the alarming state of mock marriages and legal divorces. In the same year in France, there was only one divorce to thirty marriages; in England, one divorce to four hundred marriages; in Switzerland, one divorce to twenty-two marriages, and a similar proportion in other countries. In the United States there has been a proportionate increase of divorces, three to one, to its population. It appears then, that the evil is one that needs serious consideration.

In 1906, the governors of forty states met in an effort to find a remedy for this evil, which failed as most of the efforts had done. The truth of the whole matter is that there have been practically as many arguments against as in favor of uniform marriage and divorce laws. It has been argued that marriage and divorce laws must of a necessity be administered by local officials, and should be under the jurisdiction of the same. It has further been declared that the evil is so personal a one that it should not be removed to the jurisdiction of the central government. It has also been declared that because of the heterogeneity of the American people, local adjustment of various evils is necessary to adequately administer justice to the various modes of thinking. It has been declared, too, that the marriage and divorce laws of the country are practically uniform, and the argument is based upon the following facts:

In thirty-four states marriages of the insane, lunatics, and those incapable of consent are prohibited. Fifteen of these states prohibit marriage of idiots; nine prohibit the marriage of an epileptic; eight imbecile and feeble minded; two habitual drunkards, and in the state of Oregon, ten days before the issuance of a marriage license, a licensed physician must take oath that the person is free from infectious and contagious venereal disease.

There have been those who have propagated the doctrine that "those whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." This has been argued against by those who set up the proposition, that only marriages that are perfectly harmonious are in the highest sense made by God. Rev. Wm. E. Barton, D. D., states the following: "I do not believe that the words of our Lord are to be regarded as legislation on this subject, or as constituting an eternal and inflexible edict to which every man must conform in the boldest and most literal sense or peril of his immortal soul." There have been those who bitterly attack migratory divorces, as well as a legal divorce in one state being illegal in another. All of which, and much more, has tended toward a futility of efforts to remedy this evil.

A careful study of the various efforts and arguments concerning marriage and divorce has led us to conclude that it will never be adjusted by legislation, but by a social reconstruction, such as will put an end to all the disintegrating influences affecting the home, and the moral, industrial, civic and political life of the people. It is true, however, that there must be certain laws permitting and limiting marriage, as well as permitting divorces. But the limitations, if not a positive cure of this evil, will be found in a social readjustment of the lives of the people. The moral tone of the people is at low ebb. It appears that certain influences have permitted the baser passion of sexual delight to run pell mell through the nation. Wild life characterizes city life where divorce is most prevalent. Like mindedness, the result of intelligent effort, is not considered, but has given way to personal appearance. Like ideals has lost its place in the nuptial equation. Poverty, crime and pauperism have lent their forces to breaking the bond of matrimony.

"AMERICANIZATION AND THE NEGRO."

By the Rev. D. M. Pleasants.

3-1-23
Southwestern Christian Advocate
New Orleans, Louisiana.

"O boys and girls, aren't you proud that you are American?" They were, and said so. A hint of tears lay behind the teacher's voice. The theme of the evining's lesson for this group of Epworthians was "The Outcasts of India." Manipulating her lesson material in brilliant fashion, and playing up adequately its human appeal—this teacher held her boys and girls to such thrilled attention, that, when developing a dramatic contrast, she exclaimed rather than asked, "Aren't you proud that you are Americans?" They gave reply almost savagely, "Yes! Yes! Yes!"

The pianist, with true appreciation of the psychology of the moment, turned unbidden to her instrument, and before even the opening bar of "America, the Beautiful" could be played, forty boys and girls were upstanding and singing with such voice and spirit as was well nigh inexplicable. It is a passing rare occasion, and one to compel remembering when youth in presence of adults and fellows forgets its stocism. The light of God was on their faces—veritably it was a theopany of Epworthians. One durst not breathe or move—in fear to dissipate its spell. If in the moment of that rapture we remembered not India's sorrow—but only America, beautiful America—may God forgive. It is so beautiful.

He who has the direction of young and developing lives to his charge must go prospecting far and continually farther adown the future. The magnificent expectancy of youth [illegible]ands it. For its sake we guilefully pretend Omniscence. Before its gaze, we strut and roar and nonchalantly boast Omnipotence. Racing before its swift, pursuing feet, we strain, here, at the portals of the Unknown—there, on the thresholds of the Impossible, to give this Youth disillusioned entry to the heritage of its hopes. Youth must be served. And better it is for a man never to have been born than to be an occassion of stumbling to one of these little ones. In the interest therefore of Humanity's uplift everywhere—it is imperative that the social heritage of the young Negro in America shall be unequivocally defined and guaranteed to him, as a perpetual possession forever.

That government of a dominant group, in which a weaker group by a sys[illegible] of social and industrial repression is kept "in its place" and is sternly punished for its every gesture of self assertion, may call itself—and as such be so regarded, a Democracy. But the nomenclature cannot make it different from, nor in any wise more virtuous than the respective social orders of Egypt and Hindustan, which have their basis in caste.

Nor can its "special pleaders", by any wizardy of words obscure the truth that a Democracy of caste is in its philosophy un-American—and in its operation subversive of the eternal principles of government which have been the peculiar glory of the American idea from its beginning. And that the conscience of the dominant race is not entirely easy because of its ruthless elimination of the Negro from the substance of American life, can be seen in the words of a paragraph that we take from the pen of a brilliant Southern writer, Mr. E. Gardner Murphy. The paragraph is as follows: "The American claims them, (these principles, and honors them as part of the traditions of his heritage. Conditions may obscure them, grave, unescapable difficulties may seem to compromise their reality and postpone their recognition, but our whole country, North and South, is steadily moving toward them rather than away from them. In their keeping is the future, for they are part of that moral and indefectable order which shall outwatch the blunders and tragedies of our generations." ("Shall the Fourteenth Amendment Be Enforced?" E. Gardner Murphy, North American Review, Vol. 180, p. 131). This Democracy must accept as the acid test of its genius the Americanization of the Negro. And the affixing of his status upon any other basis than one of Equality, will forever denote the failure of the American Idea. A Democracy based upon caste is infamous. A Democracy based upon special consideration to the Negro, insults that race. A Democracy based upon equality conserves the self-respect of all these groups concerned.

Conditions favorable for self betterment, opportunities for equality with other men—the right to be heard, freedom of thought and worship, the guaranty of life and liberty—are requisites fundamental to each man's life. These things are elementary in American traditions. And the people of America may well view with gravest anxiety the imposition of severe limtiatons, by will of the strong majority, upon even the least of its citizenry, lest by such action they establish a precedent that in the sure repetitions of history will be invoked against them to their dire peril.

Certan writers on Sociology have been quick to detect a marked tone of pessimism in the utterances and writings of Negro intellectuals generally. This is held to be proof positive of an "uncertainty and immaturity of our racial group ideals," and as an instance of the Negro's awareness of his own backwardness among the races. We believe this observation just. But not of the Negro only. What group today, racial or otherwise, professes any certainty or maturity as to itis group ideals? With what manner of consistency, if any, have the most advanced nations worked together for world peace? America, the admitted arbiter of international behavior, conscious that the world's salvation lay solely in the way of universal peace—repudiated with utmost finality—the League of Nations—a most momentous document—and crucified its author for no other reason than the sheer audacity of his far vision. The policy of doubtful expediency that so peculiarly characterizes the acts of the statesmen now at the head of the respective nations of the world but indicate a state of mind prevalent the world over—that is asking "What is best?" The Negro, pessimistic? Yes, and for righteous reasons. So long as the very reality of his citizenship is being constantly challenged,—nullified completely where he lives in largest numbers, and is but precariously maintained anywhere—is it to be expected that he sing the "Magnificat"? The treatment accorded the Negro in America in every period of its existence may be defended as democratic, but "O Americans, it cannot be calle[illegible]nd denied justice, we must complain.

The very presence of ten million Negroes in this country is in itself a strong presumption in favor of the idea that his equitable assimilation into the essence of American life is but a matter of eventuality. And it is certain that he laws of righteousness fully harmonize with such a presumption. It is conceded, however, that the largest factor to be considered in any such equitable assimilation must be the social worth of the Negro. Is his Americanization worth the pains of the process? If his worthiness be demonstrated, all such things as "ethnic differences", "racial antipathies" become as the chaff which the wind driveth away. A homogeneity of worth is the one essential implied in a true democracy.

The much vaunted ethnic solidarity of America's peoples is a delusion of hope. The attempted fusion of the races of Europe into some such solidarity was shown to be short of its achievement—when at the time of America's entrance into the World War—blood began calling to blood, and Bolshevism and hyphenated loyalty became a nuisance and menace to our national security. It yet remains to be disproved that the Negro is the most intensely American of all he American subjects in his loyalty to essentially All-American traditions. Truly the Negro is "proud to be an American!"

Mr. John Moffatt Macklin (Race Friction and Democracy, p. 180), a Northern writer with a Southern twist of mind, seems to voice the intentions of the white group as concerns the social heritage of the blacks in the future, when he says: "It seems hard that the Negro should be required to attain selfhood as best he can outside the higher cultural possibilities of the white group, and yet what other alternative would the social philosopher offer us? He certainly would not ask of the white group the supreme sacrifice of its ethnic purity, which is the bearer of its heritage, and, therefore the ultimate guarantee of the continuity and integrity of its peculair type of civilizaton."

In the statement, "He certainly would not ask of the white group the supreme sacrifice of its ethnic purity"—the learned gentlman begs the question. To guarantee the continuity and integrity of this peculiar type of civilization—namely, a white man democracy, what sacrifice has the white group not demanded of the Negro? In the catalogue of degradations which one has the Negro been spared? The "via Dolorsa" is unique among American highways in being classified as strictly a "Jim Crow" road.

The pont of immediate issue, however, is solely the success or failure of the American idea—as measured by its most difficult problem, the Americanization of the Negro. Whether or not the Ideal of Democracy in America is worth the sacrifice of an ethnic purity on the part of one or of all its groups must be decided by the group or groups themselves. In every such instance "the supreme sacrifice of ethnic purity" becomes the supreme test of ethnic patriotism. Noblesse Oblige, M'sieu.

In the broad sea of the commonwealth, the tiny streamlets of caste and color are lost. As a streamlet, singly flowing, the racial group [illegible] the unspeable Turk, and the unthinkable Bolshevik, we turn away from the revolting scene and hurry off with the Levite and the Priest.

THE REGRETTABLE IGNORANCE OF MANY NORTHERNERS ABOUT THE SOUTH.

Verbena, Ala., March 2, 1923.

Editor The Advertiser: 3/7/23

I read with much interest your comment editorially, also that quoted from the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, in your issue of February 28th, this is in keeping with my travels for the last twenty years. Montgomery Advertiser

In 1899 on the train from Madison, Wisconsin, to Minneapolis, Minn., again in 1911 on the train from San Francisco, Cal., to Portland, Oregon, I met a couple of middle-aged educated and in their way very intelligent ladies who both offered their acquaintance and who were both very delightful associates; each one (strange to say) expressed great admiration for the South and its people and remarked in the same words that I was the first Southern man they had ever seen to know him. In 1910 at the hotel in Quebec, Canada, in the hotel lobby of all together northeastern people they were discussing the usages and the conditions of the South, and one lady exclaimed, "They tell me they use cotton oil down there instead of lard." "I don't see how they can stand that awful stuff," showing their total ignorance of this valuable product of the South, she was the wife of the Governor of Vermont, the Governor himself being present, also a number of ministers, governors, judges and other high ups being in the crowd. I took the part of the South, of course, when they became very much interested in what [illegible] and especially on cotton seed products. In 1909 while on the California coast and in company with Captain Frank S. White and his family, we met a couple of teachers, teachers, mind you, well educated, from Reading. Penn. They, as usual, when we invited them South, expressed abhorrence or dread of the Chigesticks and reptiles of the South, and while I have known them and corresponded with them since I have never been able to induce either of them to come South of the Mason and Dixon line, only once during the world war they made a trip to Richmond, Va.

At Portland, Oregon, in 1911 I met an aged lady, Mrs. Eveleigh, and her daughter, of Montreal, Canada. We traveled together for ten days and they were very delightful and well educated people, but when I invited them to go further South they, as usual, referred to the reptiles, chigoes, ticks, mosquitoes and negroes; when I replied that they were misinformed and that I saw more mosquitoes in one week the year before in and within the vicinity of Halifax, than I had seen in all my life put together before, besides a colony of 15,000 negroes living in a town just across the bay from Halifax with the most backwoods, most outlandish, most filthy and ignorant negroes that my eyes have ever beheld.

Last summer I finished up the entire United States by triversing the State of Vermont. There was a band on the train, that had been down to Albany, N. Y., and were returning north. They found out I was from the South and one of them remarked, that he had always been informed that the Southern people would not let the negroes meet them in the road or on the sidewalks, would kick them off if they resented it, would shoot them and further that he had been informed that the Southern people talked like the negroes. When I remarked that his bunch might talk like the negroes but the white people of the South did not, and gave all his informants the lie and told him that the Southern whites and negroes were at peace and justice with each other, that the negro was naturally an emulator of his white friends and when a negro in the South became educated he emulated the whites.

I can only account for the charge that the Southern trains are usually late from the fact that the Southern railroad penetrates a large part of the country and hence might be the cause of the saying that the "Southern trains are late."

A Southern chamber of commerce as you suggest would be a great dispenser of knowledge as between the South and the North.

The average Northern person who is educated, when the conditions of the South for the last sixty years is explained to him, comments favorably and with consideration for the South. We should all cultivate a more kindly feeling for the North than we have because it is to our interest to do so from a social as well as a financial standpoint, again West of the Mississippi river you can hardly get any information from a paper concerning Alabama or any other middle South or Eastern State, yet any place in the West that you can find an Advertiser and that is nearly all over, you can read of incidents that took place right in the city where the paper is read. Thus I had a little tilt with the editor of the Arkansas Gazette a few years ago, when his only excuse for not publishing news of this country was the fact that it was regulated by the press association. Wherever I go on this continent and can lay hands on an Advertiser I feel like I am reading the greatest friend of the South.

Pardon this long and rambling letter.

Yours very truly,

F. A. GULLEDGE.

MINISTERS TELL WHY THE FOLKS LEAVE MEMPHIS

3-3-23

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 3.—A committee of ministers representing the Interdenominational Ministers' Alliance here filed a lengthy memorandum with the chairman of the welfare department of the Chamber of Commerce of Memphis last Tuesday morning. Chicago Whip

Among the most important things cited as to why colored men are leaving the South and Memphis in particular for other sections is police oppression. This is given as the principal cause of the migration, which is seriously affecting labor supply.

The officials of the Chamber of Commerce immediately took up the matter with the police department and city authorities. The ministers cited two recent killings on Scott Street as unwarranted. It is claimed that officers unlawfully search homes. Pointed out that on one occasion a man told the officers that they had no right to enter his home without a warrant. He is said to have told them that he would protect his home against invasion. The police paid no attention to his statement and forced their way into his house. One officer was killed and another wounded. Following this several homes were entered by the officers, evidently for the purpose of striking terror into the hearts and minds of the residents. Two other killings occurred that same night. These unfortunate outrages were followed by an exodus of several hundred families.

BROTHER DAVIS ANSWERS BROTHER STEWART.

Atlanta Independent

"Ben Davis, of the Atlanta Independent divides the Negro leaders into five distinct groups as follows: The Tuskegee group, meaning Moton, et al; the Monroe Trotter group, the Aristocratic group, including Emmett J. Scott, et al; the DuBois group and the Linc Johnson group."—Exchange.

Atlanta Ga. 2-15-23

It has been our contention ever since the passing of Frederick Douglass that there has been no single recognized race leader in this country. There have been many great men and many race leaders but there has been none of them that had the elements of leadership which has been recognized by this group of great men and leaders. Brother Davis has done us the service of indicating the different group leaders of the race and without admitting the correctness of his classification or the regularity of the assignment of the group leader, we have been casting a sheep's eye about, to see to what group some of those who are classified as race leaders belong. But there are others, because some of the most popular and most potential leaders of the race today are among the religious leaders and Brother Davis does not indicate that group or its leader. Then there is the fraternal group and its leaders and to determine the question of group and race leadership satisfactorily one must take cognizance of these groups. Now laying all levity aside it must be determined to which group Brother Davis belongs before the question of his judgment in this matter can be taken without a grain of allowance.—American Baptist.

Brother Davis desires to say for the benefit of Brother Stewart that he neither believes in or admits a race leadership; he does not believe that there is any place in the economy of race building for race leadership. He believes that the Negro, like the white man and other races, may have religious, commercial, economic and industrial leaders, but there is no place for race leaders.

In the automobile industry, Henry Ford is the leader; in finance. J. P. Morgan; in politics, Henry Cabot Lodge; in education, Booker T. Washington; in law, Chas. Evans Hughes; in literature, Kelly Miller; in church affairs, Chas. T. Walker; in oratory, Roscoe Conkling Simmons; in letters, W. E. B. DuBois; in politics, Henry Lincoln Johnson, and in journalism, Arthur Brisbane.

These men are group leaders, leaders in particular phases of the national life, but none of them are race leaders. And the man who poses as a leader of our race, is self-constituted, self-appointed and self-styled. There is no one man big enough to lead a race, nation or world along all the lines that are necessary to constitute a great and powerful race, nation or world.

HOW DO THEY FEEL?

When the bunch of men induced by Chandler Owen to sign the petition to lynch Garvey by advancing his case on the calendar of the district court in New York, read that the vexatious delays of his trial are over his protest and made on the motion of the government, they must feel ridiculous.

Our information is that Chandler Owens is in charge of the N. A. A. C. P. office, 2305 Seventh avenue, New York City, N. Y., and that the document sent out demanding the execution of Garvey without a hearing, is a part of the propaganda of this association. How will the managers of the Association feel when they find that their agents instead of trying to suppress lawlessness, are trying to increase it? Atlanta Independent

We quite agree with the Washington Tribune when it says, "Why all this clamor and uproar about Garvey? Why worry yourselves to death about his program of Back to Africa?" But the things that puzzle the public are why good, sane business men like Harry Pace, Jack Nail, Robert Abbott and George Harris would become the dupes of such radical fanatics as Chandler Owen. Bill Pickens and Rev. Bagnall. It matters not whether these men were duped by these radicals, or are part of the conspiracy to lynch Garvey, or shift the burden of proof from the government's shoulders to the accused's shoulders, does not lessen the responsibility fastened upon these gentlemen. Atlanta, Ga

In the language of Brother Vann of the Pittsburg Courier, it looks like a frame-up. The report so far discloses the fact that the delay in the trial of Garvey for using the mails for fraudulent purposes is on the motion of the government, and over his protest. 2-15-23

We join Brother Vann in asking the question, is the government the dupe of the radicals of the N. A. A. C. P., who seem to think that Garvey is in their way.

In American jurisprudence, a man is presumed to be innocent until the presumption of innocence advanced by the law is overcome with a preponderance of evidence and such a preponderance of evidence as to exclude every hypothesis from the minds of the jury except the guilt of the prisoner at the bar; and until the presumption of guilt is thusly overcome by preponderance of evidence and the jury is reasonably satisfied of the guilt of the accused, he stands innocent; but Brothers Pace, Nail, Abbott, Harris, Owen and Pickens and Bagnall would reverse this principle of law and evidence and shift the burden of proof to the shoulders of Garvey and write in lieu thereof, that the accused is presumed to be guilty until he overwhelms the hypothesis of his guilt, with positive and convincing proof of his innocence, but as we remarked in our last week's issue, we are unwilling to believe that sane business men like Pace, Harris, Abbott and Nail would be parties to so loathsome a crime, and that some strange "halo" of socialism must have overshadowed them.

In support of our position, we quote here a letter from Mr. Pace in reply to a letter we addressed to each of the gentlemen submitted as signers of the remarkable document, Mr. Pace being the only one up to date, who has answered our letter. These men did not think much of their business when they entered into such radicalism and bolshevism as the strange document propagates.

February 5, 1923.

Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of a seven page communication sent out from 2305 Seventh avenue, marked, NOT FOR RELEASE UNTIL FEBRUARY 1st.

It is a dangerous document. One fraught with much mischief and calculated to stir up more racial strife than any paper I have seen in years.

The article is unsigned but bears the earmark of the N. A. A. C. P., and the following named persons are given as signers of this article and this letter is to ask you whether you are in any way responsible for the article which seeks to have the Attorney General proceed against Garvey and his followers.

Harry H. Pace, Robert S. Abbott, John E. Nail, Julia P. Coleman, William Pickens, Chandler Owen, Robert W. Bagnall and George W. Harris.

In our opinion the article is libelous and we refuse to carry it because we do not believe that you men stand for it.

If you gentlemen are responsible for the article, will you be good enough to inform me?

Yours very cordially,
B. J. DAVIS, Editor.

February 7, 1923.

Dear Sir:

Replying to yours on the reverse side of this sheet, I beg to say the letter referred to was signed by me under an erroneous impression. Certainly I have no quarrel with Mr. Garvey as an individual and I am not in the business of propaganda.

So far as I know the document has nothing to do with the N. A. A. C. P., or the N. A. A. C. P., with it. The matter was brought to me in the course of a busy day by Mr. Chandler Owen, who was in my office on other business. Mr. Owen explained to me that the communication was in the nature of a nation-wide protest, to be signed by thousands of people everywhere, the chief characteristic being a protest against Garvey's alleged alliance with the Ku Klux Klan and the adoption by his organization of the violent methods of the Ku Klux, examples of which were cited. The document was to be gone over carefully by certain eminent lawyers who were named to me and all libelous matter stricken out.

The document had already been signed by at least 6 of the signers when it was presented to me. I did not sign it as a sponsor for its contents and had I known that it was not to have been handled as indicated to me, I would not have signed it at all.

Very truly yours,
HARRY H. PACE.

NEGROES NOT HARASSED.

Caruthersville Officials Say Disturbance Reports Exaggerated.

CARUTHERSVILLE, Mo., March 4.—Officials of Pemiscott County, commenting today on the announcement that the government would investigate reports that negroes were being harassed and warned to leave Southeast Missouri, asserted every complaint received had been investigated thoroughly, with the result that every disturbance had been found to be of a minor character and that the complaints had been exaggerated greatly.

The county officials admitted several hundred negroes had left Pemiscott County in recent months, after receiving threatening notes, but that hundreds of other negroes had come into the county to take the places of those who departed.

Negroes are in demand here, it was said, and 4,000 have been imported from the south in the last six months to work in the fields. The bankers and planters had an ordinance enacted imposing a license fee of $500 on labor agents in an effort to keep the agents away from here, so the negroes would not be induced to leave, it was said.

THE MOORFIELD STORYS, THE OVINGTONS AND THE JEWS.

Atlanta Indep-endent

The "Atlanta Independent" introduces its readers to the year 1923 by almost a whole page of pure rot, "denouncing" the N. A. A. C. P. and all its officers. It misrepresents the colored men and women of the organization, and even dares to insult the voluntary white workers. It roundly cusses DuBois, Johnson, White and the others, and we do not intend to waste much time on the abuse which the "Independent" heaps upon these colored men; they have been cussed before; they are used to it. During all the thirteen years in which they have been building up the first national power of the American Negro, they have been abused—and some of them before that time even. And the queer thing is, that the cussing and abuse have not done them an accursed bit of good. 2-15-23

It is surprising how many plain falsehoods are packed into this single page of the "Independent:"

1. That the colored men and women of the organization are controlled and bossed by some white people or other, and that "not a single colored man or woman has or has ever had any voice whatsoever" in its control.

2. That people like Mary White Ovington and Moorfield Storey are in the association because they have "color prejudice" and want to keep the Negro down! As if any white person on earth who had brains enough even to desire to keep the Negro down, would not have too much sense to help the N. A. A. C. P.

3. That some Jews and other white people are making "profits" out of the association.

We would rather believe that the "Independent" was duped by the fellow who sent them this article,

Race Problem - 1923.
United States.

IV

than to believe the article expresses the real views of that newspaper. The fellow who wrote the article is without influence in his own community, and the odd thing is, that no editor who knows him, would be willing to accept any kind of contribution from him.

We could believe that some enemy of the Negro race paid for that page in the Atlanta Independent in order to try to insult the few white friends whom the Negro can now count on, and so drive them away from the Negro's cause—if we did not know that almost any worth while enemy of the Negro would have more sense than to make his lies so plain and so ridiculously extreme that nobody would believe them. For example, take that first lie:

That Du Bois and other colored men are being "bossed" by somebody.

At least all of the intelligent colored people of the United States know that about all of the trouble Du Bois ever had in this world arose from the fact that he will not be "bossed" in any degree either by white groups or colored ones. And it is very poor skill in a liar to accuse a man of having the very "virtue" which nearly everybody else has been cussing him nearly all his life for NOT possessing: namely, the goodness to be "bossed and controlled." And it is much the same with the other colored men of the organization; some of them have left other and easier work because they would not be "owned and controlled."

But lie No. 2, is the limit, and suggests to us that perhaps after all, the hired liar meant to cheat those who may have hired him by overdoing the thing, so that nobody could believe it:

That Miss Ovington, for example, is actuated by "color prejudice" and a desire to hold the Negro down.

What a queer association for white woman to get into. wants to do any harm to gro race—what queer has written on the most queer speeches subject—and sent to President Harding she is always making. Think of it—she attacks the enemies of the Negro race more uncompromisingly than do the Negroes themselves, and certainly more boldly than the "Atlanta Independent" ever dared to do it. In the last ten years she has given more towards the advancement of the American Negro—without reward—than any other person who has lived in that time; invaluable services, without a cent of pay, with added contributions in cold cash And as for Moorfield Storey, another white person who must be very queer, if, as the "Independent" states, he means to "profit" by his connection with this association, has given services that could not have been bought; he has rescued the editor of the "Independent" from residential segregation, from "grandfather clauses," and while that paper was busy typing its scandalous little page, Moorfield Storey was busy trying to save its editor and all its readers from "peonage" by pleading the Arkansas cases before the supreme court without a cent of pay. When Storey rescued the "Atlanta Independent" staff from the awful damnation of residential segregation in Georgia, he did not receive from them or from anybody else, even a cent for his expenses from Boston to Washington and back. And, besides this inestimable indirect giving, MOORFIELD STOREY HAS GIVEN INTO THE TREASURY OF THE N. A. A. C. P. IN CASH, MORE THAN SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS. The association then, has cost Moorfield Storey more in cash and services than it has cost any other person in the world, and Mary White Ovington has donated more in unpurchasable and devoted services than any other mortal. Perhaps the benevolent liar accused them of making "profits," just in order to give us a good chance to tell how much they have been giving.

And lie No. 3 is about the nastiest of all. Why on earth should a Negro newspaper ever strike an attitude of hostility toward Jews? How can the Negro scorn the cooperation of the Jew? The only reason why a goodly number of leaders of the Jewish race can understand the Negro's struggle, is that experience, the only teacher, has made them know what race prejudice is. And one of the most creditable things in human nature is, that some Jews, wealthy and independent, have given the American Negro a lift by their services and their money through the N. A. A. C. P.

About the only thing that saves us from disastrous effects of a lying page like that in the "Independent" is, that most of these white people have worked so long and so intimately with colored men and women, that they now know, that although some colored folk, like some white folk, are venal, cheap-spirited, short-visioned and untruthful, still there are other kinds of Negroes. That is why the petty insult cannot shake their faith and loyalty nor break their co-operation.

It must be said, too, not as a statement of policy nor as a thing valuable in itself, but merely as a fact in contradiction of the falsehood of the "Independent," the colored element, not the white, controls the destiny of the N. A. A. C. P. The truth of the matter is, there are not nearly enough white people in it, and it is always a problem how to get more of them more interested. So far, only the most liberal-minded whites can endorse the association's program, and we know that no "race question" can ever be settled by one race alone. All the races concerned in any interracial matter must get together in some agreement before an abiding settlement can be reached.

But meanwhile, the N. A. A. C. P. and the just cause of the American Negro, will go forward, with or without "The Atlanta Independent."

"Stereotype."

Clement Wood, author and poet, addressed the Booklovers Club at the West 135th Branch library last Wednesday evening. His subject was "What the Negro can Give to Literature", this, he said, was at present chiefly an interpretation of himself to the white man.

"All literature" he said "is a crystallization of man's desire. It means I want that." There are two methods of expressing this desire, he said, by realism and romanticism. In the latter the author presented what he wished to bring about as being already accomplished, the good was triumphant and the handsome, dashing hero married the beautiful heroine. In the latter life was presented as it was, the mirror was held up to nature, so that all could see. It was in this vein, that he had written his book "Nigger," he said to whose title so many Negroes had objected.

"When I wrote that book" he said, " I never thought of the Negro readers at all. I wrote for the white people. I painted things as they are in an effort to show my race the great difficulties that beset Negroes when they tried to rise. The story is of an aspiring Negro family who leaves the black belt for the South, where they are living on the "dollar down, dollar a week for the rest of life," plan. The picture is an unpleasant one, but true, nevertheless.

North Still Thinks of Runaway Slaves.

"Why have a spineless succession of presidents and law-makers, North, South and West, permitted the laws giving equal rights to the Negro to be violated?" he asked. 'Why does'nt the North, the land of Garrison Sumner and Wendall Phillips rally to the side of the Negro now? It is because of the mental picture—the stereotype in the brain of the Northern whites regarding Negroes. Northerners still think of Negroes as runaway slaves. They are willing to give charity but not an opportunity to develop manhood. The South still has the black mammy type in mind and it is ready to lynch the black mammy's children when they depart from that stereotype.

"When a white man thinks of a Negro he has a stereotype in his brain that runs like this: black face, thick lips, poverty, lack of culture, vice, unrestrained passions of every kind. He thinks of Johnson, Siki, Battle not of Pushkin, Tanner, the Johnsons, McKay Fauset, and other Negroes of distinction. Now what is your job? To change it—to build up a different stereotype. It is a very very hard task but still Negroes will have to do it if they wish the whites to think differently."

He spoke of another kind of stereotype being built up in popular magazines as that by Roy Cohen, whose characters he said were "Jews in blackface. I have lived in the South all my life and have never seen any Negro that was like that."

Negro Leads in Contributions.

In speaking of the contributions of the respective races to American life he said that there were six things distinctively American, and that of these the Negro had given four, the Indian one, and the Caucasian, one. He gave many illustrations of peoples who had been forgotten simply because they had no literature, or had had their records destroyed. The Negro, he insisted, must make every effor to build up his own literature—a realistic literature.

Mr. Wood in a recent article in "The Nation" said things about the race problem that few others have dared or cared to say.

Clement Wood Urges Race to Change White Man's

Culture In The North And South

By Roland M. Harper, University, Alabama.

In recent years, since statistics have become popular, many newspaper and magazine writers have made comparisons between Northern and Southern States, which seem to show that the former are decidedly superior in wealth, education, etc. But most of these writers have merely skimmed the surface, and used State averages for all races combined; and if they would dig a little deeper and separate whites and negroes and city and country they would get some very different results. For example, if the officials who keep records of automobile licenses would divide the returns in this manner it would probably be found that the white population in Southern cities are not behind those in Northern cities in this respect.

Very few comparisons of Northern and Southern cities based on statistics that really mean anything seem to have been made. About three years ago a small wave of indignation swept over this section on account of a comparative study of 36 American cities, made by a professor of sociology in a far Western State, in which four Western cities led in most things, and four Southern cities brought up the rear.

His statistical criteria included several matters whose validity as measures of culture is questionable, such as cost of living, church membership, and per cent. of population married, and all these things were given equal weight; and worse still, whites and negroes were not separated.

Comparison of Cities.

I have long had the impression that people of the same race in cities of the same size and character rank about the same in all parts of the United States (and perhaps in other English-speaking countries), and also that Southern cities are heard of oftener than Northern ones of the same size, and have just as good newspapers; but I never attempted any statistical comparisons of cities until very recently. Some of the results are so striking that they deserve earlier and wider publicity than a scientific journal could give.

The last two United States censuses have given the percentage of illiteracy among various race, age and sex groups in each State, for rural and urban population separately, but in order to get the ratios for all whites of any age group it is necessary to add three pairs of figures, for native whites with native parents, native whites with foreign or mixed parents, and foreign whites, and then divide; and the difficulty of doing all that for every State has caused some very significant facts to escape attention. "Urban" population as defined by the last three or four censuses comprises all persons living in towns and cities with over 2,500 people, and "rural" the remainder; but if the limit was 1,000 or 5,000 it probably would not make much difference in the ratios discussed below.

In the following table I have arranged all the States in the Eastern half of the United States in order of urban white adult illiteracy in 1920, with the United States average in its proper place. (The Western States, which are omitted here to save space, generally rank higher than the Eastern ones in this respect, except Arizona, New Mexico and Texas, which have too many Mexicans.) I have used adult illiteracy rather than that for all persons over ten mainly in order to have smaller figures to add, but the use of a larger age group would not make much difference in the results.

The first column gives the percentage of "urban" population in each State, and the second the percentage of whites in the urban population. Both have been taken direct from the census reports, where they are carried out to one decimal place, but decimals are omitted here for the sake of simplicity. The third column is the most important one, giving the percentage of urban white adult illiteracy, carried out to two decimal places (one more than the census gives) in order to give the States their proper ranking.

The last column gives the percentage of urban white population taking the Literary Digest in 1920. A preliminary communication from me on this subject, extracted from a personal letter to one of the editors, and not intended for publication, appeared (without my name) in The Advertiser of January 23rd, and I have since extended and revised my calculations. I have used the circulation figures for the Literary Digest because I happened to have them, those for almost any other weekly or monthly with over a million subscribers might do as well. The detailed circulation figures available are for 1922, but I have reduced them to a 1920 basis (to be comparable with the population figures) on the assumption that the rate of increase in circulation between those two years in every community has been the same as in the whole United States.

Of course the apparent urban circulation of that or any other periodical is exaggerated somewhat, for many copies that go through city postoffices are bought by commuters and transients in the larger cities, or sent out on rural routes from the smaller cities, but this ought not to materially affect the comparison between different State sand cities. The assumption that all subscribers to the Digest are white also involves a small error, which, however, ought to be pretty evenly distributed.

It will be seen at once that most of the Southeastern States are above the United States average in urban white literacy, and most of the Northeastern States below; and the Literary Digest figures run generally in the same direction, though not so regularly. The lowest Southeastern State in literacy is just a trifle below the United States average, and the highest New England State a little above. The illiteracy percentages decreased a little in nearly every State between 1910 and 1920, but the relative rank of the States did not change much. Comparisons of this kind for earlier periods than 1910 are not feasible. It would be hard to reconcile these findings with the belief widely held in the North that Southerners must be lazy and inefficient on account of the "enervating" climate in which they live, and the supposed prevalence of malaria, hookworm, pellagra, etc.

The reader may now wonder what is the explanation of this state of affairs. It is to be found not in the schools, but in the factories. It is a startling coincidence that if the illiteracy figures in the third column should be multiplied by two they would in most cases approximate closely the percentages of the total population engaged in manufacturing. (The 1920 figures do not seem to be available yet, and it is hardly worth while to publish those for 1910 which I have used, though they may not differ much from the 1920 ones.) If the census would only separate urban and rural manufacturing and white and negro factory hands, and not include laundries, bakeries, newspaper plants, sawmills, etc., with real factories, the correlation could undoubtedly be made still closer.

The Foreign-Born Factor.

Modern manufacturing requires a great deal of unskilled and semi-skilled labor, which can be performed perfectly well by persons with little or no education, and as fast as the natives are educated above such labor by our efficient schools, ignorant foreigners from the less enlightened countries of Europe pour in to take their places, as I pointed out in a communication on illiteracy in Alabama, in The Advertiser of April 9, 1922. Fifty years or so ago, when there was much less manufacturing (and less public education), the demand for ignorant foreigners was very small, and most of our immigrants came from the more civilized countries of Northwestern Europe, and made very good citizens. Nowadays the strenuous efforts of Northern educators are making very little headway against the inexorable economic law of supply and demand as applied to labor, and that part of the country is filling up with undesirable foreigners at an alarming rate, in spite of recent attempts to restrict immigration.

It would take too long to discuss many individual cities, but a few comparisons between different groups of cities will be of interest. The ten largest cities in the United States (the first nine of which are in the Northeastern quarter of the country and the tenth in California) had 6% of their adults (95% of whom were white) in 1920 illiterate, about 1.05% of Literary Digest subscribers, and one person in 1740 listed in "Who's Who in America" of that year. The ten largest Southeastern cities had 7.2% of their adults (or 2.3% of their white adults) illiterate, 1.55% of the population (or 2.18% of the whites) taking the Digest, and one person in 2,535 (or about one in 1,800 whites) in Who's Who.

A dozen of the leading textile manufacturing cities in New England and New Jersey, with about 99% of their population white, had 11.1% of their adults illiterate, 0.65% of Literary Digest subscribers, and one person in 11,380 in Dhio's Who. Twenty cities of the same kind in the South, with about 25% of negroes, had 12.4% of the adults of all races (and of course a much smaller population of the whites) illiterate, 1.45% of Literary Digest subscribers, and one person in 7,620 (or about one in 6,000 whites) in Who's Who. In the last few months there have been many items in Southern papers about the migration of the cotton manufacturing industry from New England to the South, as if that was something new. But the movement has evidently been going on for some time, for the Northern textile centers just mentioned increased in population only 11% between 1910 and 1920, and the Southern ones 33.5%.

Quite a number of cultured and attractive Southern cities, such as Huntsville and Talladega, Ala., and several in Georgia and the Carolinias, have cotton factories, often placed just outside the city limits to avoid city taxes. But as the cities grow the factories outside are bound to be taken in sooner or later, and the statistical results are not very gratifying. A striking case is that of LaGrange, Georgia. In 1910 that was a typical Southern town, a trading point for the surrounding farming country, with 5,587 inhabitants, mostly white (where negroes are in the majority), with a few cotton factories on its outskirts. Some time between then and 1920 it must have annexed its factory suburbs, for the population by the last census was 17,038. Many of the citizens were doubtless very proud of the fact that their city had more than trebled in population in ten years; but there is a dark side to the picture. In 1910, 13.9% of all the adult males, white and colored, in LaGrange, 12.7% of all persons over 10, and 1.94% of the whites over 10, were returned as illiterate. By 1920 the illiteracy percentages for all races combined had increased a little, and that for whites over 10 had jumped to 7.67, nearly four times what it was in 1910. In the annexed territory alone the white illiteracy was about 10%, or nearly as much as in the Northern textile centers. (Only one of the 17,000 citizens of LaGrange is listed in the 1920 edition of Who's Who, and only 187 were taking the Literary Digest in 1922).

Montgomery and Birmingham.

Most cities, especially in the South, seem anxious to get new factories to locate with them, apparently for no better reason than to have an increasing population to brag about (for it has never been demonstrated that the average inhabitants of a large city are any happier or richer than those of a small one). But although we can not very well get along without factories, it is not necessary to have them right at our doors, and it would seem better to locate them as far as possible in settlements by themselves rather than to inflict them on cities already established for commercial and educational purposes. There are possibly some people in Montgomery who cast envious eyes at Birmingham because it is larger and growing faster; but Montgomery seems to have the advantage in culture. The white adult illiteracy in Montgomery is only 0.73%, as compared with Birmingham's 2.2%, and about 3% of the whites take the Literary

Race Problem – 1923
United States

Digest, as compared with Birmingham's 2.1%. In Who's Who for 1920 there were listed 37 residents of Montgomery. Excluding twelve State officials, who have to live there whether they like the city or not, and one negro bishop, leaves 24, or one to every 984 white inhabitants. Birmingham at the same time (including Ensley, which has a separate postoffice) had 63 Who's Who people, or one to 1,725 whites. That, however, is a pretty good showing itself, for it is nearly the same ratio as that for the ten largest cities in the United States.

There are various other interesting aspects of this question which can not be discussed here for lack of space, but must be left to the reader's imagination for the present. This communication may be summed up by saying that Southern cities have nothing to be ashamed of in comparison with Northern ones, except in mere numbers, but they would do well to weigh the advantages and disadvantages carefully before offering too many inducements to new manufacturing enterprises. It is sometimes a pretty good policy to let well enough alone, unless there is some decided advantage in making a change.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PUBLIC LEDGER

Richmond Planet, Richmond, Va.

We have just read editorial comment in the Philadelphia Public Ledger on Garveyism as expressed in a document addressed to the Attorney-General, by a set of men styled by the Public Ledger as a representative group of leading educators, business men and publicists of the Negro race.

Our Yankee contemporary, like our southern contemporaries, has fallen into the error of expressing its opinion before an investigation—arguing the question and convicting the accused without a hearing or investigating the character or animus of the accusers.

In this discussion, we wish to state that we neither hold a brief for Garvey's propaganda nor believe in the possibilities of his program—that our only object in this editorial discussion, is to defend the principles of American fair play—and beyond these fundamentals, we have no interest.

The Public Ledger asserts that Garveyism is a counterpart among the Negro population of America what the K. K. K. is among the white people, and bases its findings upon a letter addressed to the Attorney-General without investigating the character of the men behind the letter, or knowing their animus.

There were four sane business men who signed the article—H. H. Pace, John E. Nail, Robert S. Abbott and George W. Harris. Neither of these men had anything to do with the preparation of this article which was brought to them by Chandler Owens, a radical of the deepest dye and a Bolsheviki, who has contributed as much to race prejudice as Garvey. This letter was handed them for their signatures during their busiest hours and they read and signed it under such restrictions and caution as is expressed in Mr. Pace's communication, which we incorporate as a part of this article. Another signer is Mrs. Julia P. Coleman, who sells to her race a preparation to bleach their skins and straighten their hair.

Robert Bagnall is a radical who is usually engaged in straining the relations between the races, and a preacher who has left the pulpit to engage in radicalism. Wm Pickens is a Socialist and is committed to all kinds of isms—having recently announced that there is no hell or heaven. Chandler Owens is connected with the N. A. A. C. P., which is fermenting all of the charges against Garvey for no other reason than it believes that Garvey overshadows it in stirring up racial strife and embittering feelings between the races. This organization has done far more to poison the stream of cordiality existing between the races in the South than Garveyism is capable of doing.

If the chief editor of the Ledger will read Mr. Pace's letter, he will understand why the business men signed the communication.

We would like to ask the Ledger a few questions:

First—Is it advised that the letter addressed to the Attorney-General was issued by the N. A. A. C. P. and is a part of its propaganda?

Second—Is it advised of the character of the men who conduct the propaganda of this association?

Third—It is advised of the character, and we do not mean moral character, of Wm. Pickens, Chandler Owens, Robert Bagnall and the other men who conduct the N. A. A. C. P.?

Fourth—Is it advised of their propaganda—that it is the policy of this association to hold up the crimes and wrongs perpetrated against the Negro race by the white race and to obscure every virtue, every kindness and every deed of Christianity propagated or performed for the Negro by the white race?

Fifth—Is the Public Ledger advised that the propaganda of this association, fulminated by some of the men who signed the letter to the Attorney-General, has been so radical and revolutionary that in many communities of the South the whites have prevented the Negroes from meeting and propagating the publicity sent out by the association?

Sixth—Did the Ledger investigate the source from which the letter issued to find out whether or not it wasn't a condition of rivalry in radicalism and bolshevism which inspired the men to address the communication to the Attorney-General?

Knowing the men who signed the communication as we do and Garveyism as we have had the light to interpret it, we are of the opinion that the country would be better off and racial relations would be one hundred per cent better if neither of these movements existed. Both movements—one headed by Garvey and the other by DuBois, exploit the race for their living, and to do away with the propaganda that they teach, which is racial strife and hatred, neither bunch could make a living.

The signers of the letter to the Attorney-General, did not issue the document for the good of the race, or out of any spirit of loyalty to race or country, but merely as a vehicle to railroad Garveyism out of their way, even if it was necessary to legally lynch him. They called on the Government to proceed to try and convict Garvey without knowing whether the delay in his trial was on his motion or the Government.

The Ledger is too old and has too honorable a record of public service to join any bunch of men in trying the case of an individual already indicted, in the public forum before he has his day in court. It is a rule of evidence that evidences are to weigh in the trial of a cause according to the credibility of the witnesses.

We are opposed to both Garvey and his detractors when they are wrong and favor both when they are right. We are for the truth and have no patience with rival organizations like the N. A. A. C. P. and the U. N. I. A. when they are both engaged in the same work of destruction. Both of these organizations are propagating race hatred, and neither is in a position to arraign the other.

It is true that the bunch of Negroes you call educated, did graduate from Yale, Harvard and other standard universities and colleges, but it is equally true that these men, like "rolling stones," have gathered no moss since they left college, and have lived very largely by exploiting the people—the same class of people that you join in indicting Garvey for exploiting. Their chief stock in trade has been racial strife and race hatred. Neither of these men give anybody employment. They are hirelings themselves, in spite of all their education—they own no factories, banks, businesses or other industries—they are on payrolls from sources which express the poverty of the black race.

The communication addressed to the Attorney-General is merely the fulmination of one evil trying to put the other evil out of the way that it may have a clean field to make its living upon the dissension and strife among the masses.

The four business men who were induced to sign this article, as expressed in Mr. Pace's letter, were all duped and were sought to give the paper prestige among the people and weight to the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General will hardly give judicial cognizance to the letter.

Here is Mr. Pace's letter. 'As a matter of fairness, we ask that you give this letter space in your columns. We are enclosing you our editorial page of the Atlanta Independent that you may see our views of the document in question:

"February 7, 1923.

"Dear Sir:

"Replying to yours on reverse side of this sheet, I beg to say the letter referred to was signed by me under an erroneous impression. Certainly I have no quarrel with Mr. Garvey as an individual, and I am not in the business of propaganda.

"So far as I know, the document has nothing to do with the N. A. A. C. P. or the N. A. A. C. P. with it. The matter was brought to me in the course of a busy day by Mr. Chandler Owen who was in my office on other business. Mr. Owen explained to me that the communication was in the nature of a nation-wide protest, to be signed by thousands of people everywhere, the chief characteristic being a protest against Garvey's alleged alliance with the Ku Klux Klan and the adoption by his organizatioin of the violent methods of the Ku Klux, examples of which were cited. The document was to be gone over carefully by certain eminent lawyers, who were named to me and all libellous matter stricken out.

"The document had already been signed by at least six of the signers when it was presented to me. I did not sign it as a sponsor for its contents, and had I known that it was not to have been handled as indicated to me, I would not have signed it at all.

"Very truly yours,

"HARRY H. PACE."

BRYAN SAYS NORTH WOULD ACT AS SOUTH ON NEGRO QUESTION

Speaking before the Southern Society in Washington the other day, William Jennings Bryan made a brief statement of his views on the negro question. It attracted wide attention. Mr. Bryan has amplified these views in this special article for THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The New York Times
7/18/23.

By WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

LATE last month I spoke at a banquet of the Southern Society. I was not on the printed program, but was called upon when the advertised list of speakers was completed. One of the speakers, in emphasizing the importance of that part of the Declaration of Independence which affirms that all men are created equal, criticised the limitations that have been placed upon suffrage in some of the Southern States. I referred to the subject at this dinner, as I have referred to it before during the last twenty-five years, in order to point out that these limitations are not based upon a repudiation of the Declaration of Independence, but rest upon a principle—the first law of nature—everywhere recognized, namely, the right of self-preservation, which includes the right to preserve civilization and progress made in the science of government.

Back in 1898 when we were discussing imperialism a public man from the South cautioned me against laying too much emphasis upon the Declaration of Independence, adding that in the States where the blacks menaced white supremacy it had been found necessary to ignore the doctrine that all men were created equal. I replied that limitations upon the exercise of suffrage by the black race ought not to be based upon a denial of the doctrine of equality as found in the Declaration of Independence, but upon the real foundation, which in no way contradicts or weakens the Declaration of Independence. I defended the doctrine of equality in the inalienable rights enumerated in the Declaration of Independence and explained to him that the problem which the whites of the South had to solve did not involve the question of equality before the law; that no one denied that the blacks were entitled to equal protection in their rights. The question is, which race shall control the Government and make the laws under which both shall live? The more advanced race will always control as a matter of self-preservation not only for the benefit of the advanced race, but for the benefit of the backward race also.

In the States where restrictions are placed upon suffrage for the purpose of excluding enough blacks to preserve white supremacy, the blacks have the advantage of living under laws that the white man makes for himself as well as for the black man. The laws make no distinction in the matter of crime between whites and blacks.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that no limitations were placed upon suffrage and that the blacks, voting in masse for officials of their own color, took charge of the Government and made laws for both blacks and whites; is there any white man who believes that the laws made under these circumstances would be better for both, or administered with more fairness than now?

What Other States Would Do.

At the Southern banquet, I enforced my argument by suggesting that Massachusetts would do exactly as Virginia and South Carolina had done if confronted by the same conditions. There is not a State in the Union in which the whites would permit black supremacy. This ought to be admitted without argument but it could be easily proved if proof were necessary. Republicans are constantly coming South and they at once adopt the Southern view on the race question, as soon as they have to meet the race problem as a practical question. The fact that the Republican States of the North never send black men to the United States Senate and House of Representatives is conclusive proof either that the blacks are inferior or that race prejudice keeps them in the background. The race riots in Illinois, the home of Lincoln and Grant, showed that race feeling is just as strong in the North as in the South when a condition arises that gives it expression.

It is no reflection upon the black race to say that it could not formulate laws and administer government as well as the white. It is only a few centuries since the ancestors of the colored people of the South were brought from Africa as slaves. They have made wonderful progress and they have made it because they have been associated with and helped by white people. Slavery among the whites was an improvement over independence in Africa. The very progress that the blacks have made, when—and only when—brought into contact with the whites, ought to be a sufficient argument in support of white supremacy—it ought to be sufficient to convince even the blacks themselves. The members of the white race have been studying the subject of government for thousands of years; why should they not be more proficient than the blacks?

There is no advantage to be gained by ignoring the facts. The Republicans of the North are deceiving the blacks for political purposes when they pretend a greater affection for them than is found in the South. Some one described the situation very accurately when he said: "The people of the South like the negroes as individuals but dislike them as a race, while the people of the North like them as a race but dislike them as individuals."

The inconsistency of the Northern Republicans is proved by their attitude toward the Filipinos. They insist on governing the Filipinos by laws made for the Filipinos, under which the white Republicans would be unwilling to live. Under the Colonial system, the Filipinos have much less protection than the colored people of the South now have, for, as I have said before, the colored people of the South live under the laws that the white people make for themselves as well as for the colored people.

Matter of Necessity.

To prove that restrictions upon black suffrage is based upon necessity and not upon prejudice, we have only to cite the fact that the restrictions are only imposed where, without these restrictions, the Government would be in danger of passing under the control of the blacks. It is only in those Southern States where the blacks are most numerous that the whites have, as a matter of self-preservation, imposed restrictions. They may have been spurred on to this by a recollection of their experience under carpet bag Government when a few designing white men used black suffrage to exploit helpless whites, as they would today if they could (note the use now made of colored delegates in Republican national conventions). But such an experience is not necessary to justify the discrimination made in a few States in the matter of suffrage. Any one who will look at the subject without prejudice will know that white supremacy promotes the highest welfare of both races.

A frank and candid recognition of conditions as they exist will promote harmony between the two races. Republican politicians who have played upon race prejudice and who, in order to obtain colored votes have advocated laws dealing with the race question in the South as they would not deal with it in the North under similar conditions, are the prime cause of race antagonism; next to these come those leaders of the colored race who, instead of trying to help their own people, aggravate the situation by encouraging the blacks to put social and political equality above the cultivation of character.

Whether for better or for worse, the whites and the blacks are here and must live together, unless some other solution of the problem can be found. While they live together, they should exchange services and co-operate for the promotion of the common welfare. This is only possible upon the basis of friendship, and friendship is possible only on the basis of honesty and frank understanding.

Where the percentage of blacks is small compared with the total population there will be no restriction on franchise based upon color; neither will there be segregation in schools or upon the railroad trains. Whether the percentage of blacks is large, rules will be made to meet conditions as they exist.

I repeat, in conclusion, that my views upon the race question do not depend upon my present residence in the South; they were formed long before I ever thought of living in the South. They were expressed as occasion required and, so far as I know, do not differ from the views of other white men who have had occasion to express themselves on the fundamental principles involved, when those principles were applied to themselves and their own families.

JUDGE BENNERS ON "SLAVERY AND ITS RESULTS."

Montgomery Advertiser

We think it will be necessary for Judge Alfred H. Benners of Birmingham to take up his pen again. In his old age he comes modestly before the reading public with a brochure which marks him as a writer of distinctive charm. In writing this historical sketch, which he calls "Slavery and Its Result," Judge Benners performs a feat in condensation without injury to his thesis which we did not believe before that any writer on the same theme was capable of doing. 7-30-23

Judge Benners' essay is remarkably accurate in its historical features, and sound in its judgment. It is free from all semblance of bitterness, and is not controversial. It is a human interest essay, a retrospective view of the negro question before, during and following the War Between the States, and includes a satisfactory view of the negro today. It is written by a scholar and a gentleman, who is representative of the best in the old South, a lawyer and jurist of distinction, born and reared in the Black Belt of Alabama. He was a slave owner, and his people before him were slave owners. Close association with the negro in the different periods of his development in Alabama, and with the two classes of whites who were so distinct from each other before the war, but whose points of difference tend to disappear under post-slavery conditions, and acquainted with good literature, Judge Benners was well equipped for the pleasant work which he stopped to do.

It will interest Advertiser readers to follow Judge Benners' description of a Black Belt plantation in slavery times. He gives an intimate and graphic view of life on a well-regulated plantation, such as Arcola plantation was. He writes:

"My grandfather, Alfred Hatch, was a type of the 'old marster' of ante-bellum times. His Arcola plantation, of three thousand acres, was on the Warrior river six miles above Demopolis. On it was the handsome pillared mansion, in a grove on a bluff overlooking the river. Nearby were the barns, mills, ginhouse, overseer's house and the long rows of white-washed cabins, the homes of several hundred slaves. Their labor provided their food, the upkeep of the place, and several hundred bales of cotton every year, which brought wealth and luxury to the master and his family. A large bell by the overseer's house called the laborers to work at sunrise, and had them keep to their cabins after bedtime.

"A hospital building, called the 'sick house', was in charge of old Aunt Marthy Ann, skilled in the simple remedies of the fields and forest. There were open sheds in the fields where the hands gathered for their dinner or for shelter from rain. There was a roomy cook-house and bake-oven where their dinner was prepared. The dinner usually consisted of several vegetables, salt pork, and corn-bread baked in thick, round loves and cut into half-pound slices. At noon old Aunt Hester, with the cart and gray mule, carried out the tubs of warm food and made the round of the fields where the hands were waiting at the sheds. She issued to each laborer in his tin bucket a ladlefull of vegetables, a slice of pork and two slices of bread. One of the joys of my childhood was to ride in the cart with Adam, my negro boy, and eat dinner from the tubs, and gather plums and berries from the fence corners during the stops. Sheltered from the sun, the laborer lolled and slept during their noonday rest; a few of the livelier ones patted and danced Juba for my entertainment—simple joys, now only a distinct memory.

"The dairy, in charge of old Aunt Sophy, stood just inside of the side gate to the Big House. There each day she made the golden butter from the milk of twenty cows, and the buttermilk, fresh from the barrel-churn, was issued to the negro children in their buckets. Each boy and girl was clad in a long, white cotton shirt, fastened at the top with one big white button, and a split at the bottom a foot on each side, showing their twinkling black shanks as they capered. Seen from the side porch of the Big House, their long winding file looked like a flock of white-sea-gulls.

"'Old Marster' from the porch often watched them with pride in their healthy looks, thinking no doubt of their early entry into the trash-gang of the cotton pickers. He was the busiest worker on their place, and from the overseer to the small-est water-carrier, he was the driving power.

"Hospitality ruled supreme at the Big House, and kin, friends and strangers found constant welcome and lavish entertainment. At night Jim Pritchett with his fiddle, Mingo with his triangle, and Moses with his banjo, came up from the quarters and made music for the happy belles and beaux. They danced cotillions and the Lancers, winding up with the Virginia Reel. Sundry drams livened old Jim's fiddle, as the 'Forked Deer,' 'Arkansas Traveler,' and other old tunes of a like lilt and swing quickened their flying feet. Jim was a noted mimic, as well as fiddler, and usually wound up with an improvisation of his own, which he called the "Dying Coon,' in which his voice added to the witchery of his bow the shouts of the hunters, the baying of the dogs and the snarls and dying wail of the fighting coon.

"Misery and suffering were unknown among those Arcadian scenes; but the clouds of civil war were gathering; and when the tempest broke 'Old Marster' and his domain were swept into oblivion, even as Babylon and Carthage."

The chapter titles will suggest to the reader the nature of the general contents of the book which can be read in an hour or so: Slavery and Its Results, The Slave and His Treatment, The Slave Owners, Arcola, Another Story of Master and Slave, Race Caste, The Three Classes in the War, Development of Initiative by the Negro, Domestic Relations and Morals of the Negro, The Present and Probable Future Habit of the Negro, Liberia, Negroes in the Cities, Climatic Influences.

The brochure is published by the J. W. Burke Company, Macon, Georgia, and the price is 75 cents. It is attractively printed and bound.

As we said in the beginning, it will be necessary for Judge Benners to write some more. One who can produce literature that is out of the ordinary—such as this little book is—will not be permitted to hold sentinel over an idle pen.

Norfolk Journal & Guide

An advance copy of Opinion—Black and White published by the Opinion Publishing Company, Boston, Mass., came to the editor's desk this week. The publication is an attempt to convey to the two major racial groups in America the opinions of each on topics which are essentially of their mutual interest.

In this connection it is distinctly original and has assumed for itself the rendering of a mighty service, as there is no doubt that if white and black opinion could be equally diffused and disseminated among the two groups it would make for the happiness of both groups. Negro journalism loses much in not being able to get its message over among the other race in whose hands the power to right the wrongs against which we declaim rests. If Opinion should only partly succeed in carrying the voice of the Negro press over to the other side, it will serve mightily.

In the words of the publishers the purpose of Opinion "is to give to the public a condensed monthly review of black and white opinion on topics which are essentially of interest to the two groups. The idea being that, local or group opinions may not be lost; that such opinion may be given to the masses without bias, criticism or editorial comment." 9-29-23

In editorial presentation and craftmanship it is a creditable magazine. In it the race press is liberally quoted on topics of the day and upon the same topics white opinion is presented. Opinion—Black and White is interesting from cover to cover and pleasing to look at. The JOURNAL and GUIDE hopes for it an era of success.

American Racial Problems

AMERICA'S RACE HERITAGE. By Clinton Stoddard Burr. Illustrated. 337 pp. New York: The National Historical Society.

THE unprecedented growth of the United States, evolving out of European settlements planted on the Atlantic Coast three centuries ago, has not provoked among thinking Americans a sense of unmixed gratification. We are no longer self-satisfied and wholly confident of our future greatness. Moreover, that assertive, boastful type of American, the type which Dickens, Matthew Arnold and many other visitors deplored in the middle years of the nineteenth century, seems to have vanished overnight from our large cities, or at least become strangely taciturn. We are more interested nowadays in an objective examination of our institutions and national capabilities, unobscured by the flag-waving patriotism which is frequently enough simply an inverted manifestation of individual egotism. In "America's Race Heritage" the author has made a careful analysis of the racial stocks which have contributed to our growth. He denies that we are yet, broadly speaking, a mixed people, for the reason that nearly four-fifths of our population is still pure Nordic. The threat against our institutions and our culture comes from the remaining fraction, for whose presence we have to blame our unwise immigration laws and the cupidity of Europeans and Americans who fostered the African slave trade in bygone times.

For generations the negro problem has been discussed with all the passionate intensity of a great moral issue. Our bloodiest war was fought to settle this issue, but of course it was no more settled in 1863 than it is today. The negro is still the South's greatest problem, and we of the North are beginning to realize it is far from a local one. Race riots in Northern cities no longer surprise us. As the deep-rooted racial antipathy that exists between the Nordic and Negroid elements of our population is fortunately strong enough to prevent the interbreeding of blacks and whites and the gradual fusing of the two races (resulting in a mongrelized people), we must regretfully anticipate even more dissension as the blacks increase and force their white competitors from new fields.

Until the World War proved that America could, within a few months, transport over two millions of her population overseas, the often suggested solution of sending the negroes back to Africa was deemed by many too gigantic a task to be seriously considered. Although we now grant its feasibility, Mr. Burr believes for economic reasons it will never be attempted. However, he does foresee the likelihood of the segregation of the negro in large districts of the South which the white population will abandon to them. Already, he noted, there is a very definite movement in this direction, and in certain districts on the lower Mississippi there are now to be found large sections inhabited solely by negroes who are on excellent terms of cooperation with the whites of the surrounding areas.

After a careful and analytical study of the white population as given by census returns and immigration statistics, Mr. Burr arrives at the following enumeration of racial groups:

Nordic	80,984,319
Mediterranean (Iberian)	3,993,894
Alpine (Slav)	4,978,178
Assyroid (Semite)	3,391,498
Unknown	323,729
Total "white"	93,671,618

The author believes that what we call progress has always been the particular achievement of people of Nordic blood. Retrogression and chaos he holds invariably resulted when the Nordic blood was "mongrelized" by the infusion of fundamentally antagonistic racial mixtures.

In support of his thesis Mr. Burr quotes copiously from the books of Lothrop Stoddard, ("The Rising Tide of Color"), Edward A. Ross, Madison Grant and Seth K. Humphrey.

In the CENTURY MAGAZINE for May, Mary Johnston, the well-known novelist, depicts in a short story under the title, "Nemesis", the community effects of a lynching. The writer shows with her graphic pen the psychological and moral effects of a lynching upon the white men of a small Southern town who took part in it. The savage passions aroused by the burning of a Negro hurriedly jailed on suspicion of rape run riot for weeks following among the men of the town. One man turns out to hate everybody and everything and murders one of the others who has peculiar pains for which his physician finds no diagnosis or remedy; another becomes melancholy, locks himself in his own house for many days, shoots his dog, and finally in despair hangs himself. The whole story pictures the horrible aftermath of lawlessness when fellowship among the citizens of the community breaks down. Those who had lawlessly wreaked their hatred upon a helpless black victim are themselves consumed by the very inhuman passions which their action aroused.

THE LAND OF COTTON. By DOROTHY SCARBOROUGH. New York: The Macmillan Company. 1923.

Reviewed by HERSCHEL BRICKELL

A notable addition to books about the South, a number of which have appeared in recent years, is Miss Scarborough's novel. It is a story full of facts about the growing and marketing of cotton, about its insect pests, about floods and droughts, and all the many troubles of the cotton planter, remarkably accurate and enlightening in its details; but it is more than that, for it is a good story and a novel that has its moments of moving beauty. Its author has caught the idea of the mask of loveliness that covers the tragedy of the production of cotton under present conditions and has presented it effectively.

To round out her picture of conditions in the Brazos River cotton country immediately before, during, and after the World War, she has put some essentially human characters into her settings, characters very much alive and appealing. If her plot is slight, she has made good use of it, and the problems of the individual people she has created need little extraneous aid anyway. She knows her folk; her skill is equally in evidence in presenting the lives of cotton planters' families as in drawing "poor whites" and negroes. She has understanding and a brooding pity for them all, which, without any sentimentalization, stirs the reader. Her negroes are treated only in their relation to the whites; they are the usual happy-go-lucky plantation darkies, with few cares and many songs, the latter of which are here set down, some of them probably for the first time—folksongs that are sung in cotton fields from Texas to North Carolina.

Miss Scarborough's novel is done with a pleasing breaking away from the sophistication so characteristic of the present-day writers of our country; a younger intellectual would probably scorn its simple beauty, is lack of anything expressionistic, and its reticence about sex, which marks its characters as sane, ordinary human beings, and, curiously enough, leaves them interesting. Its style is rich in color; Miss Scarborough not only sees nature, but loves it, and writes about it accurately and feelingly. Altogether, her story is one hardly less well done, and interesting than it is informative, while for pure information there are few books extant that give so perfectly well-rounded presentations of "The Land of Cotton."

BOOK REVIEW

By FLOYD J. CALVIN

FINDING A WAY OUT—An Autobiography, by Robert Russa Moton, Principal of Tuskegee Institute. Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y. 296 pages. Price, $2.50.

* * * *

Dr. Morton stepped into the limelight proper when he succeeded Booker T. Washington as President of Tuskegee Institute. That was in 1915. He made his own record and enhanced his own popularity (?) during the four succeeding years. When he took over Tuskegee he was merely given a chance—considered the best Negro prospect who could successfully handle Booker T.'s job. He was taken on faith, because of his past constructive record at Hampton. But in 1919, at the close of the World War, when he had safely brought the Institute and himself through the greatest crisis in history, it was considered that he had proven his worth.

At this point Moton wrote his autobiography. And this was the most appropriate time. People wanted to know about him, white and colored, just as they had wanted to know about Washington at the height of his success. They wanted to know what was behind him, upon what were his achievements built. To quote Dr. Morton's own words, this is his background: 12-15-23

"I have tried to record the events that have given character and color to my own life, and at the same time to reflect the impressions made upon my mind by experiences that I could not always reconcile with what I had learned of American ideals and standards. In doing this I have also found the opportunity to acknowledge the kindly advice and help that have come to me from hundreds of friends among men and women of both races and sections, and of every walk in life.

"Whatever of labor and pains may have gone into this story I shall feel amply repaid if it encourages any member of my race to greater faith in himself, as well as in other selves, both white and black; and shall help him to make his life count for the very most in meeting and solving the great human problem which we in this country call the 'race problem.'

"And I shall be further repaid if it shall have some slight part in leading any youth of the white race to follow the example of other members of his own race of both North and South, and dedicate himself to the service of human welfare in securing justice and a fair opportunity for the humblest American citizen, whatever his race or color, to the end that the white man of the North, the white man of the South, and the Negro shall work harmoniously together in bringing forward that Peace on Earth which results when men have Good Will."

Here we have the Principal's life in perspective. Here we have his whole existence from his birth and boyhood in obscure Farmville, Va., to his leadership of the world's greatest school of its kind.

Stated in fewer words, Dr. Moton's life has revolved around three main issues: The Negro, the Northern white man, the Southern white man. His life-long job has been an effort at getting these unruly elements to co-operate and work harmoniously. His steadfast belief has been that no matter what happened, if, after all, these three elusive powers could be made to pull in the same direction, besides it other achievements would pale into insignificance. Nor has he ever doubted that the feat could be accomplished. With the application of his personal brand of "Good Will" he has climbed to where his remedy merits careful consideration.

There is almost a popular belief that Moton will not stand up for the rights of his race. But anyone reading "Finding a Way Out" can hardly reach such a conclusion. Through the whole book there is a spirit of aggressive honesty that at times seems it will carry the author into "radicalism." One feels that it is only his level head, poise, and his ability to look ahead for the best interests of the greatest number, that keeps his feet on the ground. "I used the opportunity to appeal to the cooler heads among them to do nothing for which they would afterwards be ashamed." This refers to an incident during his Hampton student days, but one sees clearly from the whole story that Moton has all his life "appealed to the cooler heads." His character is solid; the kind that invites confidence and trust.

Dr. Moton's "way out" has been through "Good Will." However, much we may differ from his personal method of prescribing and applying it, we must, in fairness, admit that it works—at least below the Mason and Dixon line.

Negro Tales

CANE. By JEAN TOOMER. New York: Boni & Liveright. 1923.

Reviewed by HERSCHEL BRICKELL.

THIS is Mr. Toomer's first book, although his short stories, sketches, and poems have been known for some time to readers of Broom, The Little Review, and others of the more radical magazines. Waldo Frank, in an enthusiastic preface, hails him as the authentic voice of the negro race, an artist who has escaped all inhibiting consciousness of persecution. The praise is not wholly unjustified; but allowance must be made for the fact that Mr. Frank's praise may be colored by the striking similarity of method of the two writers.

Mr. Toomer's prose is amorphous, staccato, full of repetitions of phrases and at times not at all clear. He has his moments of sweeping power, however, and rarely loses a sense of moving tragedy or pathos in his loosely strung together words. Poignancy might be heightened by more crystalline construction, but he does achieve striking effects, and his style and method are peculiarly suited to the subject—the negro on the plantations of Georgia and in the crowded tenements of Washington.

There is craftsmanship back of this nervous, restless writing; its appearance of formlessness is not wholly borne out, for when some of the better stories of "Cane" are finished one detects beneath the words a clearly defined pattern, although the patterns are not those of the conventional short story. It is only when this skill is lost, as in the story called "Box Seat," that the weaver's design slips away and a meaningless tangle of twisted skeins is left behind.

The longest story in the volume, which is made up of short stories, sketches, and poems, and by all odds the best of the lot, is "Kabnis," which is, in a measure, at least, autobiographical. Among Mr. Toomer's varied experiences was a session of teaching in a Georgia school, and "Kabnis" is a Northern negro caught up in the semi-barbaric, hot-blooded, loose life of his race in Georgia and tortured by it. It is an uncompromising picture of a soul in agony, done without thought of turning aside from its sufferings, singularly moving, and effective in its totality of impression.

The poetry in the volume is of little consequence; it is Mr. Toomer's unusual prose cut into metrical lengths, and only rises above the mediocre when it swings into the occasional minor beat of a field song. Both poetry and prose are grimly realistic in their impressionistic way; profanity is not ignored, and blood is blood. But it is of no highly civilized life that Mr. Toomer writes; somewhere beneath the veneer of civilization one catches the rhythmic beat of jungle tom-toms.

It is worthy of note that Mr. Toomer's treatment of his race is marked by a sophistication of manner and style that has been curiously lacking in other recent books about the South by white authors in which the negro played an important part. Such novels as "Black and White," by Shands, or Miss Scarborough's "In the Land of Cotton" shared a naïveté—a sort of pastoral simplicity and a completely conventional method. Stribling's "Birthright" was only a little less so, and Wood's "Nigger," the nearest approach in manner to "Cane," still held fairly close to accepted construction and style.

Of greater significance than this, however, is the fact that all these works have been honest attempts to make interesting and at the same time truthful books out of the South and its peculiar problems. White and black alike have at last awakened to the rich material for literature that lies at their doors and the coinage has begun. Mr. Toomer was born in Washington, but has spent much time among his race in the South. It is not too much to expect that the Southern-born negroes may soon begin to contribute their share to the present-day literature of their race.

HOLIDAY

HOLIDAY. By Waldo Frank. New York: Boni & Liveright.

IN a long passage of "Les Miserables," generally omitted in the truncated English translations, Victor Hugo, with one of his inimitable grand gestures, hands in his homage to the past, but on the sole condition that it consents to remain the past, and does not project its misconceptions and muddled thinking into an age that has outlived them.

N. Y. Times
12-16-23
Book Review

Using much the same line of argument, one might say, with reference to Waldo Frank's "Holiday," that it could be more indulgently regarded if a brief phrase on the last page dismissed the Freudian fever dream, of which it is the colorful record, to the limbo where it has all the evidence of belonging. In other words, it would not only have been pleasanter, but better art, if we had parted with a Virginia, who was watching her dusky lover disappear into the undergrowth of the subconscious, like the white rabbit of her fellow adventuress Alice, and wiggling her toes with a happy consciousness of volition recovered.

It need hardly be said that it is in no such crude and frank fashion that our symbolists conceive the dualism of dream and business. Their creations are the stuff that dreams are made of, and bad dreams at that. But once these have been imbued with flesh and blood, nerves and instincts, with everything but will, no ambient is too bleak and real if it will but secure the contrasts their creators are seeking. No bird, fluttering on the ground at the mercy of tooth or talon, is more hapless and exile than these invertebrates, shivering in the cold contact of actuality and homesick for the warm ooze from which they have been filched.

"Holiday," if the reviewer reads it aright, and has not come to grief over some esoteric totems where only the initiate can be trusted, is the story of Virginia Hade, a white woman in mature girlhood, who casts her eyes upon John Cloud, a personable young negro, and lures him to death at the hands of her race. The theme is not the new one that Mr. Frank, or Mr. Frank's admirers and critics, appear to think. The unexpurgated Arabian nights opens with it. It will be found by the curious in the tales of Scarron. The misogynists who wrote the early Italian "novelle" exploited its possibilities pretty thoroughly. It was even (but with what incomparable naïveté of treatment, the subject of an early and all but forgotten romance by Hugo. To avoid misconception, the prurient minded are advised that they will waste money in buying, and time in reading, "Bugle Largal."

Nazareth, a tidewater town in the remote South, is the theatre of Mr Frank's tragedy. Here the religion of the dominant race is represented by a windy tent gospeler, its pride by an autocratic and suspicious father, and its chivalry by youths who let a negro drown under their eyes on the levee. In sudden revolt against the aridity of its life, Virginia Hade wanders off to the woods where her sable affinity has gone before her and watches him swimming in the creek. What happens subsequently on this perilous and unpleasant ground is not quite clear—nor is the reviewer quite sure it is meant to be. There is a sort of Mithraic interlude. An exchange of knives takes place between white girl and colored man. Virginia plunges that of the negro, still wet with his blood, into her side and walks back to her own people, holding it above her head, as automatically as she has walked away. She is put to bed and cared for, while the hapless Cloud perishes in an orgy of sadistic hatred. If this outline of "Holiday" appears unfair to Mr. Frank, the reviewer pleads only that he is a man of quite average intelligence, that he has read the book attentively three times, and that of the friends whom he has consulted many of them also very friendly to Mr. Frank and his work, none has been able to assist to a clearer understanding.

Baffled in his objective search, if the reader turns to the subjective, the trail grows clearer and more sharply defined. No pursuit is more fascinating, for those whose goal is the intimate thought of writers whose style is obscure or involved, than to try to trace the symbols which they use most instinctively when invention tires or feeling runs intense. This is especially true of poetry, and "Holiday" is poetry often of a very high order.

No one can read "Holiday" even cursorily without noticing the frequent use of the word "white." "I am a white soul naked worn away and weary" * * * "Perhaps death is white." Gilbert Chesterton, in one of his early essays, has noted as a thing significant of modern thought the loss of the sense of whiteness as a positive thing—its apprehension as the mere absence of color, even as virtue has come to be regarded as the mere absence of vice. Whiteness, it will be noticed, is invariably used by Mr. Frank in this deprivative sense. As a symbol, it lies in the negative order of his thought.

Another recurrent symbol, somewhat harder to trace, for its forms are more varied, is that of dryness. "The town lies straggling on the rugose street, gray, like the shell of some archaic bug whence the black blood has oozed." * * * "Jaggedly brittle along the rugose road, Main Street fights night." * * * "I thrash about in the straw, dry, dry." The outstanding symbol, then, of Mr. Frank's distaste, his negative obsession, is something that is both white and dry, bleached and desiccate, colorless and brittle. A moment's thought will suggest that the emblem most closely answering both these requisites is bone. It is not a very extravagant use of logic to expect that his preferred positive symbol will be its antinomy in the same order of thought. In brief that it will be flesh and all that flesh suggests.

Nor shall we be disappointed. Through all the strident neologisms with which Mr. Frank elaborates his perverse prose-poem—the "saecades," "breakpelts," "aggluti-nates," "whimmerings," "rondures," "debiles," "larvals," "rugoses" and "vacillants," this symbol persists and beats the measure out like the throb of the voodoo drum.

The new writers, like the new painters, are a fairly arrived and jubilant group, but it is not certain that their victory, like all victories won against the world's sober judgment, is not more apparent than real. It has been gained, in French phrase, by "surprising the conscience" of those with whom the final estimate lies. The very vaunt of the new men that they are "new," that criticism guided by the canons they have put out of date fails to elucidate them, makes criticism hard, but not impossible. Any critic may hold them to a rigid account for their ultimate thought, even though he bring to his task no more formidable equipment than common sense and sense of proportion. He should have no difficulty in showing that the turbulence of their style is often the outward symptom of a disorder of which intelligence is not the source. It is not so much a question of psychoanalysing the new writers as of standing by while they psychoanalyse themselves.

THE NEGRO IN CHICAGO. A STUDY IN RACE RELATIONS AND A RACE RIOT. By the Chicago Commission on Race Relations. University of Chicago Press. 1922. $6.

Reviewed by ALLAN NEVINS

WHEN a city is the scene of a disgraceful race riot business men and officials are alike eager to hush it up and minimize its importance. After the East St. Louis riot of 1917, the most terrible that has ever occurred in America, with its toll of almost fifty known dead and probably many unknown, the Mayor—according to a Congressional committee—led in "an open, paid advertising campaign," supported by plenty of money, to vilify the Attorney General of Illinois and block prosecutions and convictions. Thanks to the courage of Gov. Lowden, the Chicago race riot of 1920 has been made the subject of the most thorough investigation ever given an occurrence of the kind. The City Administration, the police, and the press are all treated without gloves. This inquiry was supervised by thirteen leading citizens of Chicago, including white men like Julius Rosenwald and Victor F. Lawson, and negroes like Robert S. Abbott, the owner of the Chicago Defender. The comprehensiveness and scientific thoroughness of the report are to be credited to them and the large staff of social workers, economists, and investigators headed by Graham R. Taylor.

So far as immediate causes of the race riot go, the negroes were about as much to blame as the whites. On a hot Sunday afternoon in July, at about 4 o'clock, a negro of seventeen, swimming in Lake Michigan off the foot of Twenty-seventh Street, drifted down to a patch of water off Twenty-ninth Street, which whites were using. At that moment the passage of some negroes across the white section of the beach provoked a fracas between hoodlums of both colors. Stones were thrown at the negro boy in the water, he loosed his hold on a floating railway tie, and was drowned. The rumor spread that he had been hit by a stone, though this was not the fact, and negroes gathered in excited groups. They demanded of a policeman that he arrest one of the stone-throwers, and the officer instead finally arrested a negro. The colored men mobbed him and the riot had begun. Until nightfall most of the violence was committed by negroes, who shot one white, beat four, and stabbed five. Then white gangsters became active, and during the night no fewer than thirty-eight negroes were beaten, stabbed, or shot. Thereafter the blame rested almost wholly on white men and boys. The rioting reached its climax on Tuesday, when it was accompanied by arson, and continued till Friday, when the militia—the police having signally failed—stamped it out. It was almost wholly confined to the South Side, and was most intense in the so-called Black Belt (Twenty-second to Thirty-ninth Street) and the stockyards district.

But the immediate origins of the riot are of comparatively little interest. The materials for an explosion were piled ready for lighting, and several times previously a trifling incident had threatened a blaze. The commission appointed sub-committees on housing, industry, public opinion, crime, racial contacts, and racial clashes. One after the other these topics are discussed, not in relation merely to the riot, but to friction and social maladies which should be eliminated whether they are grave enough to cause rioting or not. The discussion shows conclusively that the people of Chicago as a whole, not merely the roughs and irresponsibles, are to be blamed for the riot.

The housing question rises as the chief single cause of racial ill-feeling. The negro population increased during the decade 1910-1920 from 44,000 to 110,000, this extraordinary growth, almost 150 per cent, resulting from the war-time migration of whole negro communities northward. No new large Chicago colonies were formed, but the old colonies expanded in a way that dwarfs the recent expansion of the Harlem settlement in New York City. Particularly in the Hyde Park, Woodlawn, and Kenwood districts of the South Side, anual offences are no more numerous than intense opposition to the negro advance sprang up among property owners. Mass meetings were held to protest, incendiary broadsides were printed, and in three years and eight months fifty-eight bomb explosions occurred on the premises of negroes—an average of one every twenty days. Two persons were killed and over $100,000 worth of property was destroyed, but only one indictment has been returned. The commission points out that the fear of property depreciation was exaggerated, and that the blocks into which the negroes moved were almost invariably on the down grade before the blacks came. Few if any white Chicagoans of means and influence were interested in attempting a proper solution of the housing problem, although the inflammation that it bred was plain.

As for the negro in industry, it is evident from the mass of testimony here adduced that he has made a creditable record and has felt but little friction with white workers. Where colored people are used to break strikes or lower wages ill-feeling results, but on the whole the wage-earners of the two races get on well. The chief difficulty in the industrial field is that the white labor unions harbor a prejudice against the negro and for the most part refuse to admit him to their locals. A certain tendency, though a weak one, among the negroes to form their own unions strengthens this conflict. Obviously the labor movement, for strictly selfish reasons, will be foolish unless it makes up its mind to erase the color line. A changed attitude on the part of the unions is much needed and labor leaders should recognize their duty to open a campaign for it.

Upon the press of Chicago the commission, which includes the publisher of the Daily News, is very severe. It showed ridiculous inaccuracy in reporting the riot, but that does not greatly matter. The principal count in the indictment brought against it is that for years it has exaggerated the amount of negro crime, has published much sensational matter upon racial clashes, the prostitution of the negro vote to the Thompson-Lundin machine, and the invasion of white residential areas by negroes, and has neglected to furnish news of praiseworthy negro activities. The negro press also has its faults, the chief being an exaggerated emphasis upon race and the too frequent publication of matter representing the negro as wronged beyond endurance. But it is the publishers and editors of the three leading white journals of Chicago who should feel most keenly the heavy share of the Chicago press in the responsibility for the wrong and outrage of that July week.

Some evidence is gathered here to show that the negroes are little if at all more criminal than whites and that their sex-those of other races. The commission, however, found no real means of determining how great a proportion of the city's crimes is committed by colored people. There is plenty of testimony that negro workmen, if given the opportunities their white comrades have, will show equal industry, efficiency, and thrift. Some of the figures for earnings by negroes are surprising. It appears from a study of this volume that prejudice and irritation between the two races have been only sporadic in Chicago and that in many parts of the city they would never be noticed. There has been little friction on the transit lines, where blacks and whites use the same seats. On many public playgrounds white children and colored children mingle freely and amicably. The commission is too sensible to hope that racial prejudice will disappear for generations, if ever, but it has good reason for believing that it can be kept within such bounds as to be almost harmless.

The recommendations brought forward by this body are addressed to the city officials, the police, the courts, and the State's attorney, which can prevent or punish violence; to the Board of Education, which may be held responsible for the poor educational facilities in negro districts; to the labor unions; to employers of colored labor; to the theatres, restaurants, and car companies, which should all protect the negro against discrimination; to the press; and to social, civic, and religious organizations, by which many bridges can be thrown across the division between the races. It is greatly to be regretted that the commission apparently passed out of existence with the issuance of this report

Memoir of a Southern Gentleman of Letters

A Review by

CHARLES WILLIS THOMPSON

THOUGH the South always boasted its literature and conceived that nothing but sectional prejudice kept historians and essayists from acknowledging its supremacy, the truth was that it never had any till the dawn of Thomas Nelson Page and Joel Chandler Harris, and of these Page alone was versatile enough and catholic enough to challenge the North and Europe. Harris was "the singer of one song," though he tried to sing others. Antedating them and possibly in some measure the cause of them came Sidney Lanier, deploring the way in which Southern neighbors beslavered each other with praise and calling on the South to acknowledge manfully the fact that in literature it was a talentless mutual admiration society. With this confession, urged the truly gifted Lanier, let the South humbly fall to work and learn how to produce something that might be called literature without any sectional prefix.

Whether Page knew of these manful adjurations and this shamed contempt on Lanier's part I do not know, but Lanier had hardly done with his bewailings when "Marse Chan" appeared with an electrical effect which has not yet begun to slacken. Harris's work was not at once recognized as literature in a generation accustomed to separate dialect stories from the mass. But the effect of "Marse Chan" and its successors was to obliterate the high-sounding novels which sought to transport Scott into Virginia and to make ridiculous the attempt to label poets'-corner stuff "literature" whenever it was written by some member of a fine old Southern family. I wonder, by the way, how many admirers of "Huckleberry Finn" realize that in the ludicrous description of the young woman who wrote mortuary verse for the local weekly, and of the general acknowledgment of her genius, he was satirizing the whole of Southern literature as it existed before Lanier; or, one might better say, before Page, for Lanier never succeeded in making himself heard very far, and did not put his own principles in effect as Page so abundantly did.

Today the result of "Marse Chan" is that the South is writing real literature, and, what is still more a matter of congratulation, that it is not prefixed with the word "Southern." Nobody inquires from what State or section a writer comes, but only whether the book is good. "Marse Chan," Southern as it was, had the characteristics of world literature, and it set the Southern writers who were to follow Page a mark to aim at. Page himself, as quoted in the memoir of him now under review, said of the Southern school which he overthrew:

> Carruthers, Simms, Kennedy, Cooke and the other Southern writers all picture the life of the South as reflected through the lenses of Scott and his imitators, such as James. They dressed their gentlemen in wigs and ruffles and short clothes, and their ladies in brocades and quilted stomachers, and flashing jewels; housed them in palaces and often moved them on stilts, with measured strut as automata strung on wires, and worked, however skillfully, from behind the scenes. They spoke book English, and ilved, if they lived at all, in slavish imitation of men of England, mirrored from the printed pages of generations gone—although it must be admitted that William Gilmore Simms today, in spite of his occasional Johnsonese, is often readable and even thrilling, as for instance in "Katherine Walton." Still, his plan of writing, like that of John Esten Cooke, was the very thing which drove Lanier to anguish and the thing which Page brushed forever.

Another great effect of "Marse Chan" and "Meh Lady" was to create real dialect; that is, to make dialect writers study the thing they were trying to imitate. The negro dialect which Page used was the result of his own observation and not in the least like the negro dialect which had been employed by his unobservant predecessors, who made the negro say "berry" for very, "sar" for sir. The change which Page brought about was universal and applies today to all dialects as well as that used by the Southern negro. Some writers, such as Bernard Shaw, have not a sufficiently good ear to reproduce dialect, but at least they make heroic attempts at it. Before Page's time dialect writers used to think they had done their work when they distorted the sound and spelling of a word in any arbitrary way that occurred to them. Even Dickens was an occasional offender, and Charles Reade a frequent one.

This memoir of Page by his brother follows, no doubt unconsciously, the precepts of Lanier and in a measure the style of its subject. It has the effect of being unconsciously the memoir of two Virginia gentlemen, Thomas Nelson and Rosewell Page, and this although its writer has effaced himself with the utmost care. His conscientiousness in this respect is utterly impotent to keep his admirable personality out of the mind of his reader; adds to the growth of the picture, in fact. The measured grace of his manner, the genial tolerance and kind humor of his matter, make a portrait of himself in spite of his determination to keep himself out of the book, and at the conclusion the reader is bound to feel that it would be no less a pleasure to see Rosewell Page enter the room than it would have been to see his more distinguished brother. Their characters have a perfectly evident similarity.

Unpretentious as this memoir is, it paints a picture, models a lifelike figure. It leaves us with a powerful impression of having known Thomas Nelson Page intimately. It explains "Marse Chan," and it is not mysterious how this modest young man —so modest that his classmates in college do not remember him—could walk into the Scribners' home with his epoch-making story, a flat contradition of all that had been known about Southern literature, dialect literature and many other kinds of literature, and fill them with such enthusiasm that they became on the spot his backers. He had been studying and reflecting on these subjects all his life, and, maugre all his modesty, knew he was right.

Nor did he ever fail, through his after life, to convince everybody with whom he came in contact that he was right, whatever might be the subject. Rosewell Page does not dwell on the charm he carried with him, but the reader sees it in the facts he narrates. He evidently had but to enter a room or shake hands to make a conquest. Yet he never became any more pointed or aggressive than he had been in college. Neither was he shy. Modest as he was, he was no such fool as to be unacqainted with his merits or to be afraid to proceed on the assumption that he had them. He charmed those he met, but he did not have to use many words to do it.

In everything he wrote, so he said, his object was to efface sectionalism and bring North and South together. He knew no sectionalism in his own friendships. Like most true Southerners, he numbered negroes in them. He charmed the King and Queen of Italy, to whom he was first presented at the King's country home. "We are farmers out here," said the democratic King, sizing up his guest, "and we do not dress this way all the time. Today I am dressed to meet the Ambassador from the United States." To which the Ambassador, sizing up the King, replied: "I'm a farmer myself in Virginia. I hope you do not think I dress this way all the time. I've only put these clothes on to meet the King of Italy." This was the beginning of a friendship not official, the story of which ends with a more than official parting, "when the Queen, with emotion, embraced the American lady whom she had come to know and love in the six years of her residence in Italy."

In the year of the Peace.

Your affectionate Brother
Thos Nelson Page

Meanwhile, at home in Hanover, another friend of Page's was following his career and analyzing the war in which he was one of the prominent figures with an anxiety and acuteness you would not expect from her; for she was an old negro woman and unlettered. Still, her analysis was an accurate if figurative one, and was made to Page himself when he came home from Italy on a visit and sat with her out on the back porch of Oakland, his home, discussing the world's affairs. As she looked at it, "Germany had got so big and heavy that it had got the world on a slant; and the rest of the world had to join in to push the Germans back, so that the earth could get level again." What was revealed to old Charlotte [illegible] Hanover was hidd[illegible] dent, suc[illegible] Mr. Keynes. But such, from Kings to old negresses, were the friends of Thomas Nelson Page.

Curious to the ignorant Northern mind to see the smileless respect which both Thomas Nelson Page and Rosewell Page pay to the Rev. John Jasper, the Richmond negro who preached a sermon to prove that "de sun do move." He was a client of Page's when the future author was practicing law, and this sermon was preached not once but many times. Rosewell Page describes it as "the sermon in which he argued for the Ptolemaic system," and calls Jasper "the great colored preacher from Richmond." He describes an occasion when "the wonderfully eloquent and powerful old man" came from Richmond to preach this sermon, whose title was "The Lord Is a Man of War," to an audience of a thousand or more flocking from all the neighboring counties. "He was," concludes Rosewell Page, "without doubt, one of the most eloquent of men." So one learns, not for the first time, not to laugh prematurely. The Ptolemaic system is out of date, but a tender smile, not a hee-haw, is the meed of an orator who could so command the respect and admiration of the two Pages, and evidently of that whole countryside, white and black.

With all this ancestry goes without saying, and the finest of bringing-up. In fact, what we are driving at in these few illustrations is that as one reads this memoir one sees how Page's stories came to be. He was reproached for their comparative plotlessness. That grew out of the fact that each of them was merely an expansion of some incident of his life, either his outer and physical life or his mental and spiritual life. After he had published "The Old Gentleman With the Black Stock" he was able to send a copy of it to the heroines of the story with a note recalling the occurrence on which it was based, and humorously suggesting that if they had stopped the carriage when the old gentleman approached, he, Page, might have married one or other of them. In other words, the story was so exactly true to the fact that Page could safely count on their recognition of the details. In some cases he used the real names of characters, as F. Hopkinson Smith did in that very inferior but still good story, "Colonel Carter of Cartersville."

So Page, gentleman, scholar and patriot, wrote his stories out of his own life, and that life is vividly unfolded by his brother in this most charming of memoirs. There is an effortless skill about its tracery which one does not find once in fifty memoirs. It deserves rank among Thomas Nelson Page's own books; for certainly it is written according to the school dreamed of by Lanier and brought into being by Page, Harris and their followers. It has all the charm, all the universality, all the simplicity, and all the command over the reader.

Miss Minerva On the Old Plantation, by Emma Speed Sampson. Reilly & Lee, Chicago. Pages 301; price $1.75.

William Green, the most delightful small boy ever set down in a book, is the host in this most delightfully funny story. This is the fourth story in the "Miss Minerva" series and is full up to the standard of its charming predecessors. With the Major as his ally Billy arranges for a visit to his old plantation home. Miss Minerva is won over by the "scarlet fever" ruse, and with the irresistible little daughter, Josephine, the ever present Willie Booth Lincoln, the faithful little black comrade, the sapient and ponderous Aunt Cindy—along with Jimmy Farner and Lina Hamilton and Frances Black—a party is formed that keeps one amused all the way along, and wondering what will happen next. The summer is literally filled with hilarious experiences and situations, in which the old acquaintances, Uncle Jimmy-Jawed Jupiter, Aunt Blue-Gum Tempy, Peruny Pearline, and their numerous progeny, have interesting parts. The deft chronicle of these busy-idle days on the Mississippi is one continued round of laughter that will bring endless happy hours to the vast army of readers who have enjoyed the earlier "Miss Minerva" stories.

DARK DAYS AND BLACK NIGHTS
By Octavus Roy Cohen. Dodd, Mead & Co.

THERE is no thought of disparagement in saying that Mr. Cohen's new book may be dismissed with the minimum of attention. Readers have come to expect from him stories of riotous and whimsical invention and rollicking humor. If a new book from his pen happened to be lacking in these qualities, it would be the occasion for surprise and for extended discussion. This book does not so fail.

Here again we have those familiar figures of the upper social strata of the Darktown of Birmingham, Alabama—Florian Slappey, the ornately attired Ethiopian Mr. Micawber, always waiting for something to turn up; Lawyer Evans Chew Acey Upshaw, Semore Mashby, Sis Callie Flukers, the various Sons and Daughters of the I Will Arise Society, and the patrons of Bud Peagler's Barbecue Lunch Room and Billiard Parlor.

In addition there are new characters, Mr. Faro Sneed and Mr. Percy Yeast of the clothes pressing firm of "Presto Change," Eli Gouch of "The B. V. Demon," Prof. Roscoe Griggers, "world's most greatest colored musician and orkestra leader," of Music Hath Harms and, of the fair sex, Miss Zinnia Sanders and Miss Gussie Muck, bitter contestants in the beauty contest arranged under the auspices of the Daily Epoch as narrated in "Focus Pokus."

Mr. Cohen maintains here his high standard of ingenuity in the matter of surprising climaxes.

THE REAL NEGRO

CANE. By Jean Toomer. Boni & Liveright.

"CANE" is a volume of short stories studded with poetry that is instantly identified with the "Little Review" and "Broom" schools of emotional expansion. It is a most unusual and colorful volume, too, notwithstanding its periodic lapses into a naive incoherency. It is a volume depicting what one is convinced are the real negroes of the South, negroes altogether removed from the Octavius Roy Cohen and Irvin Cobb sort of inadequate caricatures. Some of the stories possess a sweep of emotional power saturated with a moist lyric beauty that positively sings. The heavy, languorous beauty of the book as a whole stuns the intelligence entirely, lulls it into torpor and compels it to recognize the authenticity of the racy negroes depicted.

Here are the high-brown and black and half-cast colored folk of the cane fields, the gin hovel and the brothel realized with sure touch of artistry. The religious fervor of the negro that affords solace of a sort in lieu of his spiritual bankruptcy is present in every page of the book. Here one becomes acquainted with the old negro who tosses "religious fits" on the street corner of some old Georgia town while the morbidly curious population gathers about and applauds his ecstasy. Here is the hysteria and emotional pandemonium akin to it prevalent in the negro camp-meeting; and the superstitions of the negro and his fear of white exploitation and persecution are painted with all of the negro's hitherto inarticulate woe accentuated.

It can perhaps be safely said that the Southern negro, at least, has found an authentic lyric voice in Jean Toomer; a voice and a heart, likewise, that is synchronized with the aspirations, the hopes and fears of the genuine darky. There is nothing of the theatrical coon-strutting high-brown, none of the conventional dice-throwing, chicken-stealing nigger of musical comedy and burlesque in the pages of "Cane." Even the recent attempt of Broadway to capitalize the wealth of folk-lore and music latent in the negro spirit is here outdone with a bravado that smacks of audacity.

These negroes drawn by Mr. Toomer seem to breathe their native air, they seem to express themselves with a vigorous, earthy resonance of emotion that rationalizes our previous conceptions of that race gathered from bogus sources. The negro, heretofore, has been libeled rather than depicted accurately in American fiction, libeled because it was supposed that he was an eternally funny sort of fellow, always shooting craps and singing "blues" songs and wearing gaudy neckties with big diamonds in them and stealing chickens from any hen-coop he came across. He was never presented as a human being possessed of spirit and an identity. He was seldom ever presented to white eyes with any other sort of intelligence than that displayed by an idiot child with epilepsy.

Nevertheless, it has always been felt that there are negroes in America with genuine poetic feeling, intellect and discrimination approximating the standards of the more civilized whites. One has always known this and wondered, likewise, why they were never presented in our fiction. Seemingly until this book was written no one has had the courage or perhaps the inclination to seek out these real negroes and hold them up to view honestly.

It is patent that the author has yet a lot to learn about elucidating his sometimes rather strident reactions to the negro, for at moments his outbursts of emotion approach the inarticulately maudlin. Yet the negro under religious emotion does evolve himself into a sort of pathological entity, and perhaps this criticism is unjust. Nevertheless, the difficulty the author encounters is apparent, for to paint the emotional color vivacity of the negro requires a resource of sensibility whose ultimate dimensions often escape rather than are captured by the sure touch of artistry. The religious fervor pursuing word.

However, the author of "Cane" has created a distinct achievement wholly unlike anything of this sort done before. The book is, indeed, a spiritual chronicle of the negro that was expected long ago.

JOHN ARMSTRONG.

HOLIDAY

BONI & LIVERIGHT have just published a novel by Waldo Frank that every man and woman of you and my acquaintance ought to read. This publishing house has a way of taking unusual things and giving them to us without frills or apologies. We owe something to the perspicacity which made the publication of this novel possible. We will not attempt to call this notice a review. It is just a sincere recommendation of the novel for the attention of the readers of this column. Unfortunately we have not read any of the other novels written by Mr. Frank, so we are unable to give an opinion as to whether this particular one is better than anything else he has done or not.

"Holiday" we hardly know how to characterize, except to say that of all the books that have been written on this question of race it is the most startling because so true in its portrayal of those conditions which white men in the South know, fear, and refuse to admit the existence of and which the black man knows and shuts his eyes to in an effort to deny their existence.

Although there is a lynching there is no criminal black man involved. There is no false cant about saving a race or about race separation. There is just a strong black man who was a man before he was black and a woman who happened to be white who was denied by her men that freedom of movement or self-expression which is denied to all Southern white women and most white women everywhere. The sureness and deadly matter-of-factness with which Mr. Frank drags out to the light the basic difficulty between white men and black men and portrays some phases of it is startling and gripping. Whether as a progaganda it will do any good or not we do not know. As a masterly portrayal of Southern conditions and life it has no equal in our experience since "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with which it is only to be compared on the basis of truth and fairness. The story is grim, it is naked, it is fearful, and we believe it is true. White men who read it will find therein the answer to the conditions in the State St. cabarets. Black men will look at their women with clearer eyes and better understanding. You will not put this book down until you have finished it because many men who know the South and women, too, will be able to recognize in it the telling again of things which they know to be true and of tales which they could match again did not prudence dictate otherwise. As a literary work it is a finished performance. Try to read it as if you were not white or black, although that will be difficult, but try it just the same. Waldo Frank seems to have written it that way, as only an artist can do. "Holiday" will bear reading twice, and we think it will turn you upside down, but then what else do you go to the theater or the movies for but to be turned upside down and moved about inside?

United States

WATCH YOUR STEP, WACO!

Paraphrasing Dr. Coue's celebrated health maxim again, "Day by day, in every way, the Waco case is getting funnier and funnier."

When this widely-heralded murder was first committed several white and colored men were arrested, but the whites were released and the crime charged against th customary "Negro."

A few issues since, The Informer discussed, editorially, how such "funny things" and "peculiar crimes" are always being pulled off at "Barbecueville" and sounded a note of warning.

Now, with the girl identifying the usual "COLORED" man as her lover's murderer and her assailant, the Texas rangers, acting, it is reported, upon advice of the district attorney's office of McLennan County, placed the girl and her two brothers under arrest for the crime. ("Dere, now!") Houston Informer

With this act done and the prisoners transferred to other localities, a veritable storm arose and even the governor of the state joined in the protesting and disclaiming delegation.

It seems, by such actions, that there is a determined effort on the part of certain forces to make some innocent colored man atone for this crome, whether he committed it or not.

It is something like the rule in vogue at so many of the commissaries at certain large Dixie plantations and lumber camps.

Often it happens that, when a colored employe attempts to get a settlement of his account, he is charged for articles that he never purchased and for telephone rent, when he never used the 'phone. Houston, Texas. 1-20-23

When this colored man protests and declares that he bought no such articles nor used the telephone, this rejoinder often greets him from the "boss." "Well, John, it was here for you and if you didn't get it, it was your fault."

Thus speaking, the charge sticks and poor John has the same deducted from his small stipend and if he shows dissatisfaction or displeasure at the transaction he receives a six-shooter drubbing or is a victim of mob-law, the charge being that he "talked back to a white man."

The trend of events leads one to reason similarly regarding this Waco case, i. e., the crime should have been committed by a colored man and if one did not perform it, it was there for him to do it.

This really sounds silly and ludicrous, but doesn't it begin to look that way? ("Uh-huh!")

The person who said that "things are getitng in a 'heluva' shape in the South," did not miss the mark very far—looks like at this angle he hit the bull's eye.

The Informer does not believe in condoning crime, not even when perpetrated by a black man, but when public officials resort to undue methods and high-handed measures to prevent a thorough and impartial investigation of alleged crimes from all angles, they simply increase rather than diminish crimes, and also create additional disrespect and contempt for law and order, thereby becoming particeps criminis.

The scape-goat dispensation has long since passed, yet thousands of colored men, women and children have been lynched and punished in the South for crimes they not only had no part in committing, but were grossly ignorant of the same.

"Yeth thur," we reiterate our former declaration that "funny things happen at Waco (Barbecueville)," and they seem to be getting funnier and funnier, every day, in every way.

If those probing and investigating this crime have sufficient evidence to warrant additional arrests, why all this furore and opposition from judicial and executive sources?

Must such arrests be confined to certain persons or races despite their innocence?

If the South is in a devil of a fix (and every sane and sensible person must admit the truthfulness of this assertion), it is due to continually straining at a gnat and trying to swallow a camel.

Not only is our section disgraced and humiliated before the civilized world by such brutal, illegal lynchings, but even legalized lynchings are no uncommon happenings in "Bam."

Is there any wonder, then, that mob-law, gang rule and disrespect and contempt for constituted authority have secured such a firm grasp and tenacious hold upon so many self-styled "patriotic citizens," to say nothing of the rabble element and hoi polloi?

Those whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad, and the South seems to be afflicted with a malignant type of lawless hydrophobia, superinduced by chronic indigestion rendered acute by mob-law, injustices and inequalities.

If coming events cast their shadows before, then it will pay Waco, as well as other Southern communities, to watch her step. ("Doxology. We're all leaving now!")

NO SUCH THING AS RACE PROBLEM, WRITES THOMAS

By JESSE O. THOMAS

The social and economic situations and different experiences in human relationship suggest or create different terms or phraseology. Some of them grow out of scientific analysis; others of them come down to us through age-old traditions. If one took the time to scientifically inquire into the basis or justification of many of our modes of expressing with reference to specific situations, we would doubtless discover that many of our overworked, mouth-filling terms or phraseology would be misnomers.

Take the expression, "Negro problem"; I am not sure there is a Negro problem. I am not sure there is not a Negro problem. I doubt seriously if there is anybody in this country that is able to state with any degree of undisputed authenticity that there is or that there is not a Negro problem. That is to say, there may be somewhere along the lines of our human progress some conditions that are peculiarly racial that are shot through with racial instincts, impulses and idiosyncrasies. This may be true of all racial groups in a corresponding degree. But what America has learned to regard as a "Negro problem" has little or no racial significance. The fact that the Negro death rate is almost twice as high as the death rate of white people living in the same communities is referred to as a "Negro problem." The fact that a larger percentage of Negroes are ignorant than is correspondingly true of white people constitutes another "Negro problem." The lack of paved streets and adequate lights, water supply, sewage disposal facilities or what-not, become again a "Negro problem." When large numbers of foreigners are brought together in any American community who are without education and unable to speak the English language, they do not produce or create German, Irish, Italian, Polish, French, Jew, Russian, Greek or what-not problems. They simply make necessary a problem of Americanization, of education. The congested and overcrowded housing conditions and other evidences of lack of economic efficiency do not produce race or racial problems, simply problems in economic and social adjustment. And if any group, whether in America or elsewhere, becomes so impoverished that charitable aid is necessary because of starvation or hardship or otherwise, they are not racial problems of the group involved. When the American white man is ignorant and economically inefficient he does not produce a white race problem, but a problem in social and economic adjustment. In the city of Atlanta, out of the 14,000 Negro children that are enrolled in our public schools, less than 2,000 of them are on full time schedule. None of the Negro children are attending high schools provided for by public school funds of the city of Atlanta, as is true in many other cities throughout the South. This is not a "Negro problem"; it is simply a failure in the educational system to provide adequate educational facilities for Negro children and in the last analysis a problem in education. Negroes live in worse houses, more insanitary and more hazardous to health and well being, than the white people, taking it in mass by and large. But here again, this is not a race problem—a problem in economics. Because of the lack of education, lack of training, the lack of opportunity, the double economic standard, together with racial prejudice, the average Negro's earning capacity is very much lower than the average white man's earning capacity. But this is not a "Negro problem." It is a problem of education and training, of elimination of racial prejudice and proscription. The Negro does not vote for the officers who are to make and administer the laws that he is compelled to obey. But this is not a "Negro problem." It is a problem of enfranchisement or the result of disfranchisement, a matter of denying a group the right guaranteed by the Constitution.

What I would seriously like to see is the Negro given the same advantages and opportunities, the same opportunity for training and development, a chance to earn and spend his money in a manner that will mean the highest possible development to himself and his family, unrestricted, unmolested and undisturbed, and a chance to move about to serve and spend himself and his energies to the advancement of human progress without interference in so far as he remains in harmony with the laws governing other individuals; the same chance for education, the same chance for economic development, the same guarantee for protection of life and limb, and then see whether there still remains a problem peculiar to his racial group. In other words, let's take out the educational, economic, social and political problems and see if there still remains that which may be called a "Negro problem."

A GOOD deal of newspaper space has lately been filled in trying to determine whether President Lowel of Harvard is right or wrong in ruling that colored students may not live in his Freshman dormitories. The brethren who think that Dr. Lowell is wrong rise up to slam him. The brethren who think he is right are not so vocal, but probably not less firm in their opinions.

It is not really Dr. Lowell that is on trial in these matters; it is all of us who are on trial. Each of us puts to himself the question—what would I do about it? The only peculiarity of Dr. Lowell is that he has brought a very much discussed and difficult question out into the open and made it necessary to talk about it. It is the question how people of different races may best live in harmony in this very large and mixed-up country, whether by ignoring differences of race or by recognizing them and trying to provide enough separateness to prevent friction.

The solution of this question may be advanced if every observer will look inside of himself and try to recognize and understand his own inclinations. It seems practicable to have two or three negroes in those Freshman dormitories. But if the number increases very much, what then? Would it really be wise to require the negro scholars to live in the dormitories so long as you require the white scholars also to live there? Is it highly expedient to require any Freshmen to live in them? Those dormitories represent a great effort to nurse democracy and fellowship in Harvard College. Is it successful, or not?

These are really difficult questions. One may read in the paper that there are three million negroes in the South that would like to come North where they think they will have better protection and more security than where they are. If the infusion of negroes into Harvard College should be very much increased, this question of the Freshman dormitories would really become pressing. Dr. Lowell seems to want to get a decision on it before that happens. What he seems to want to do is to provide that it shall continue to be possible for negroes to be educated in Harvard College.

Perhaps the immediate problem may be solved by modifying the requirement of residence in the dormitories so that students who object to living with negroes may be excused. It is the requirement of residence that has made the immediate trouble, but the fundamental difficulty lies much deeper than that and involves the whole question of our duty to the negro.

COLORED WOMEN AND POLICE RAIDS.

The daily papers chronicled, in their Sunday edition, the news of the first raid engineered under the new superintendent of the police department, and while nearly two hundred men and women were apprehended in the dragnet spread by the department, not a solitary colored woman was found, captured or arrested in the wholesale raid. Houston Informer

Several women of other races were caught and haled before an attache of the corporation court, but for once not any race women were included in the number.

This little news item speaks volumes for the women of our race in this locality and The Informer would like to see this record maintained. Houston Texas

Denied many of the agencies for human uplift and social betterment provided for women of other races, it has been the rule rather than the exception to always nab a large number of colored women in these raids on vagrants.

Perhaps quite a number of our women have been Coued, in that "day by day, in every way, they are getting better and better."

If this is true, then it is a hopeful sign, indeed, and augurs good for the future of our race. 1—20—23

No race can rise above its women and the colored woman is subjected to more insults, temptations, trials and tribulations that test and try her very soul, than the womanhood of any other race in this country.

That the colored woman has stood and made good to the extent that she has is a feather in her hat and demonstrates the material out of which colored women are made.

Like other races, we have some bad female characters, but unlike other races the colored race is always judged and rated by its worst type rather than by its best element.

The salvation of the colored woman is not only a race problem, but a task and job for society, for in proportion as our women are good and given proper environments and protection, they are rendered and maintained better assets to society.

Let our colored women conduct themselves with becoming decorum, keep off the streets at nights without an escort and only frequent those places that are decent and not under police surveillance.

We have made a good start in this respect for 1923, according to the police blotter, and here's hoping that subsequent raids will net no appreciable number of colored women.

NEW YORK PROFESSOR THINKS NEGRO DISCONTENT GROWING

St. Louis Argus 1/12/23

(Preston News Service)

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 11.—At a meeting of the American History Professors' Association here Prof. Holland Thompson of the College of the City of New York, declared that he is convinced that discontent among Negroes in this country is increasing. He said changed conditions had given rise to more apparent hostility to Negroes as a race north of the Mason and Dixon line than south of it.

For years, he said, the Negro had been urged by certain members of his race, backed by white sympathizers, to demand all the rights of citizenship and to oppose every form of segregation and discrimination.

"This advice," he continued, "had more effect in the North during the World War than in the South, and Negro populations in Northern cities had more than doubled. Large numbers of Negroes came from the West Indies, and as these latter had not been accustomed to racial discrimination, their resentment influenced the native Negroes in the cities."

Professor Thompson described the increased circulation of newspapers for Negroes and the encouragement given by publications to the contentions that Negroes must resist oppression by force, if necessary. In politics, the speaker said, the Negro was beginning to vote as a Negro and not as a member of any political party. Race prejudice, he said, was increasing and not diminishing. In short, he declared, the Negro question has become a complex and national one.

Professor Thompson's subtle attack on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; his direct praise of the South; his reference to the Garvey movement; his stab at Negro newspapers; his accusation of Negro voters; his slap at broad-minded white people all go to show his place of nativity as well as indicate his secret organization affiliations, if we are to read between the lines.

Los Angeles, Calif—Dr. W. E. DuBois, speaking before a large audience at Trinity Auditorium last night branded as impractical Garvey's "Back to Africa" dream.

RACE ADJUSTMENTS

"The thing that I am emphasizing in my lectures," he said, "is the light the world war has thrown upon the economic divisions of mankind. We used to think and talk of races as physical races. Now we see them as economical races.

"White men," Dr. DuBois said, "were now attempting to organize their work and income in Europe so as to eliminate drudgery and provide an income. They are trying to use democratic methods in the distribution of that income.

"But they have no such ideas," he went on, "with regard to Asia and Africa. They are still thinking of the profit that can be taken out of those countries. There they will use drudgery and reduce income to the lowest terms and prevent democratic development.

"They will still think of superior and inferior races because profit lies in that relationship."

PERMANENT PEACE

Until this kind of thinking ceases, according to Dr. DuBois, there can never be permanent world peace.

"The settlement of the race question hinges on the distribution of income—using income in its broadest and most comprehensive meaning.

"Race prejudice in the last analysis is economic. It is always the races who are looked upon as sources of income for others rather than users of income for themselves who are from without impressed with a sense of inferiority."

It is the opinion of Dr. DuBois that justice alone can still the rising tide of protest which is welling up from millions of lips throughout the world, especially in those countries inhabited by the dark races of mankind, but at present under the forcible control of the whites.

Great Commoner Says White Supremacy Is a Matter of Great Necessity

Regardless of all the numerous political defeats that have overtaken William Jennings Bryan during the last quarter of a century, the old Democratic Veteran still retains a mighty warm place in the hearts and minds of the American people.

Whenever that man talks, he "says something"—and that fact puts him in a class alone, among the politicians in America. He is a champion of the south, with no tinge of antipathy against the north. He knows people, and reads them like an open book—and no matter where he is—north, south, east, or west—men and women sit straight up and pay attention, when William Jennings Bryan is the orator of the evening. San Antonio, Tex

Recently he gave an interview to the New York Times, upon the "Race Question," in the United States. Notwithstanding the fact, that the editor of the American Forum has written and printed this identical theory, announced by the Great Commoner hundreds of times during the last quarter of a century, I herewith reproduce it, in Mr. Bryan's own language, for it is more than interesting. The address was made before the Southern Society in Washington, and has attracted National attention.

—Editor American Forum.

Late last month I spoke at a banquet of the Southern Society. I was not on the printed program, but was called upon when the advertised list of speakers was completed. One of the speakers, in emphasizing the importance of that part of the Declaration of Independence which affirms that all men are created equal, criticised the limitations that have been placed upon suffrage in some of the Southern States. I referred to the subject at this dinner, as I have referred to it before during the last twenty-five years, in order to point out that these limitations are not based upon a repudiation of the Declaration of Independence, but rest upon a principle—the first law of nature—everywhere recognized, namely, the right of self-preservation, which includes the right to preserve civilization and progress made in the science of government.

Back in 1898 when we were discussing imperialism a public man from the South cautioned me against laying too much emphasis upon the Declaration of Independence, adding that in the States where the blacks menaced white supremacy it had been found necessary to ignore the doctrine that all men were created equal. I replied that limitations upon the exercise of suffrage by the black race ought not to be based upon a denial of the doctrine of equality as found in the Declaration of Independence, but upon the real foundation, which in no way contradicts or weakens the Declaration of Independence. I defended the doctrine of equality in the inalienable rights enumerated in the Declaration of Independence and explained to him that the problem which the whites of the south had to solve did not involve the question of equality before the law, that no one denied that the blacks were entitled to equal protection in their rights. The question is, which race shall control the government and make the laws under which both shall live? The more advanced race will always control as a matter of self-preservation not only for the benefit of the advanced race, but for the benefit of the backward race also.

In the States where restrictions are placed upon suffrage for the purpose of excluding enough blacks to preserve white supremacy, the blacks have the advantage of living under laws that the white man makes for himself as well as for the black man. The laws make no distinction in the matter of crime between whites and blacks.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that no limitations were placed upon suffrage and that the blacks, voting in masse for officials of their own color, took charge of the Government and made laws for both blacks and whites; is there any white man who believes that the laws made under these circumstances would be better for both, or administered with more fairness than now?

At the Southern banquet, I enforced my argument by suggesting that Massachusetts would do exactly as Virginia and South Carolina had done if confronted by the same conditions. There is not a State in the Union in which the whites would permit black supremacy. This ought to be admitted without argument but it could be easily proved if proof were necessary. Republicans are constantly coming South and they at once adopt the Southern view on the race question, as soon as they have to meet the race problem as a practical question. The fact that the Republican States of the North never send black men to the United States Senate and House of Representatives is conclusive proof either that the blacks are inferior or that race prejudice keeps them in the background. The race riots in Illinois, the home of Lincoln and Grant, showed that race feeling is just as strong in the North as in the South when a condition arises that gives it expression.

It is no reflection upon the black race to say that it could not formulate laws and administer, government as well as the white. It is only a few centuries since the ancestors of the colored people of the South were brought from Africa as slaves. They have made wonderful progress and they have made it because they have been associated with and helped by white people. Slavery among the whites was an improvement over independence in Africa. The very progress that the blacks have made, when—and only when—brought into contact with the whites, ought to be a sufficient argument in support of white supremacy—it ought to be sufficient to convince even the blacks themselves. The members of the white race have been studying the subject of government for thousands of years; why should they not be more proficient than the blacks?

There is no advantage to be gained by ignoring the facts. The Republicans of the North are deceiving the blacks for political purposes when they pretend a greater affection for them than is found in the South. Some one described the situation very accurately when he said: "The people of the South like the negroes as individuals but dislike them as a race, while the people of the North like them as a race but dislike them as individuals."

The inconsistency of the Northern Republicans is proved by their attitude toward the Filipinos. They insist on governing the Filipinos by laws made for the Filipinos, under which the white Republicans would be unwilling to live. Under the Colonial system, the Filipinos have much less protection than the colored people of the South now have, for, as I have said before, the colored people of the South live under the laws that the white people make for themselves as well as for the colored people.

MATTER OF NECESSITY

To prove that restrictions upon black suffrage is based upon necessity and not upon prejudice, we have only to cite the fact that the restrictions are only imposed where, without these restrictions, the Government would be in danger of passing under the control of the blacks. It is only in those Southern States where the blacks are most numerous that the whites have, as a matter of self-preservation, imposed restrictions. They may have been spurred on to this by a recollection of their experience under carpet bag Government when a few designing white men used black suffrage to exploit helpless whites, as they would today if they could (note the use now made of colored delegates in Republican national conventions). But such an experience is not necessary to justify the discrimination made in a few States in the matter of suffrage. Any one who will look at the subject without prejudice will know that white supremacy promotes the highest welfare of both races.

A frank and candid recognition of conditions as they exist will promote harmony between the two races. Republican politicians who have played upon race prejudice and who, in order to obtain colored votes have advocated laws dealing with the race question in the South as they would not deal with it in the North under similar conditions, are the prime cause of race antagonism; next to these come those leaders of the colored race who, instead of trying to help their own people, aggravate the situation by encouraging the blacks to put social and political equality above the cultivation of character.

Whether for better or for worse, the whites and the blacks are here and must live together, unless some other solution of the problem can be found. While they live together, they should exchange services

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN ON THE NEGRO

Christian Register
Philadelphia, Pa.
3-29-23

Many people concluded years ago that William Jennings Bryan was an opportunist whose ambitions led him to adopt many views of which he became the advocate solely because he thought they would advance his personal interests. They looked upon him purely as an ambitious and shrewd politician, ready to pounce upon any opinion on whose waves he hoped to ride into popularity—and perhaps into the ultimate goal of his ambition—the Presidency of the United States.

He came into popular favor so far as the Democratic Party was concerned in 1896 because of his advocacy of free silver. He was defeated that year for Presidency and "free silver" was buried so deep that it has never since become a serious issue in our national politics. Then came Bryan, after the Spanish-American War, and again as candidaate for the Presidency, with his anti-imperialism doctrine and his opposition to the annexation of the Phillipines. He asserted that the Phillipines should be independent. Again he was defeated. In later years he became an advocate of world peace and prohibition: but he let Wilson steal his peace thunder, and he could never bring his party to the place where it would risk him for the Presidency on the prohibition platform. In still more recent years he has taken upon himself the task of defending the Bible against evolution, in which he has displayed some fine qualities of oratory, but very little comprehension of modern scholarship.

Men have called him demagogue and hard names. We must confess we always believed in Mr. Bryan's sincerity, even when we did not agree with his judgment. But his latest pronouncement regarding the Race Problem in the South causes us to believe that those whose views of Mr. Bryan as a demagogue are correct, for never has a man appeared in more demagogue fashion than Bryan in his expressed view of the Negro. The reason is that Bryan has moved South. He is no longer a Nebraskan—having lost out there—but is now a Floridian. His bluster against evolution was intended to get the sympathy of the South, for that section is about the only place in the world where the Bryan position might have any popularity. But even the South did not respond. What little scholarship there is there pooh-poohed Bryan, and the general view was not to enthuse over a subject which is purely scientific and on whose truth or falsity the Christian religion is in no wise dependent.

So Mr. Bryan looks for another bait with which to catch the South, and drawing upon his experience with Vardaman and Ben. Tillman and Jeff Davis, Hoke Smith, Tom Watson, Heflin, and others, he seeks to rise on the eternal Negro question. He raises the bogey of "Negro domination." He puts race against race and says suppose all the Negroes voted one way and all the whites another and there were more Negroes than whites, what an awful thing would happen. He even further says that it is the white man's right to rule in order to preserve our civilization! Of course we do not believe Bryan believes himself, but he is seeking popularity. But Bryan won't get this popularity. Even the South is slowly awaking to the fact that it has been fooled on the Negro question by designing politicians, that they have been made to fear what has never existed—the possibility of Negro domination. The South is slowly waking up to the fact which the census has long plainly shown that there is now and never has been a chance for Negro domination so far as mere numbers are concerned. But even if there were more Negroes than whites (which there are not) when did ignorance and poverty dominate intelligence and wealth? The South is gradually seeing this. Even in the so-called carpet bag days there was no such thing as Negro domination. Of the large number of Congressmen representing the South, not one in ten were ever Negroes, even in carpet bag days, no state ever had a Negro governor; no state legislature was ever dominated by Negroes.

But in the days when Negroes were represented in legislatures there was not as much corruption as to-day when there are no Negroes. Mr. Bryan ought to know that the men responsible for corruption in the '70's were white men (see Lynch's "Facts of Reconstruction"). He certainly knows that during the second term of his erstwhile Democratic protege, Mr. Wilson, there was more stealing in three years by white men—educated white men, most of them sworn to protect the country—than by all the Negroes for all purposes since the landing at Jamestown in 1619. Mr. Bryan is a Floridian and he ought to know of the Florida convict scandals, from which even an ex-governor's name was not able to escape.

Mr. Bryan says he believes the Negro ought to have justice before the courts. If Bryan were not a politician, thoroughly familiar with the working of our governmental system, we might believe him sincere in this statement. But how can a man get justice in this country when his status is based upon fundamental injustice—depriving him of his right to vote—the fundamental right of every American citizen, white or black, rich or poor, man or woman. Now this same Bryan used to advocate that the Filipinos ought to have a right to run their own affairs (Wilson called it self-determination). Bryan thought it a great shame that this Government should so suppress the far-away Fillipino. But he thinks it is just—saving civilization—to oppress the Negro, and deprive him of his fundamental right, the Negro whose labor helped to build up the country and whose valor helped to save it, while the fathers and grandfathers of those to whom Bryan now caters were trying to destroy it.

Bryan is wrong. Bryan is insincere. And Bryan will not fool the South on his Negro position any more than he did on his stand against evolution. It is bad enough for South Carolina to have to tolerate a Ben Tillman, or Mississippi a Vardaman—they were natives of their states; but to have an immigrant come in and pose as a genuine Negro hater, as Bryan is trying to do, we believe is even more than the South can stand, as Mr. Bryan will probably find out when the next Democratic Convention meets in 1924.

United States

WHY NOT AN AMERICAN NEGRO RACE CONFERENCE?

Dallas Express (Texas)
1/13/23

A racial conference composed of representatives of every organization and agency which is working in the interest of our group has been proposed by Kelly Miller who bases his argument for its need upon the following circumstances:

"The times are out of joint. Racial portents are ominous. The rising tide of color threatens to engulf us. The problem is becoming more complex and perplexing. Unless the Negro's courage rises with danger the cause will be lost through timidity and cowardice. The welfare of the ten million Negroes in the United States is less well, safe guarded through self-directive leadership than that of any other group of similar size and like advantage in the world. There is the widest margin between what is and what ought to be. Loudsome boasting of our present attainments blinds us to the magnitude of things yet to be attained. This gap can be bridged only by wise guidance and direction. The incoming of the new year emphasizes our delinquency. Within the next half generation there is going to be a tremendous change in the scheme of race adjustment. Whether this is to be for the better or for the worse depends upon the initiative, the courage and the wisdom which the Negro displays. The present tendency is in the wrong direction. Forces and influences now at work if unchecked will fix him for good in a helpless and hopeless position. Instant action is demanded. Hesitancy is dangerous. Delay may prove fatal.

The time if fully ripe for a race conference to deliberate upon the serious phases of the problem, and as far as practicable, to formulate a platform of principles and a program of programs of procedure.

The Negro group has special and peculiar interests and relations infinitely more serious and vital than any other subordinate element into which our population is divided. The peculiar problems of the foreigner are temporary and limited to one generation. The Jew is isolated only in religious and semi-religious relations of his own making and preference. The Catholic differs from the Protestant only in the mode of worship.

The Negro alone is separated from the rest of the nation by the whole diameter of social difference which entails the regulation of all of the essential intimacies of life. This regime is imposed upon him. He didn't make and he cannot unmake it. Special and specific racial interest require as thoughtful and as wise deliberation as the Congress gives to the affairs of the Nation. And yet today we have no statesmanlike consideration. At present the various interests and activities at work in the field are absorbed in their own objectives and are wholly without efficient coordination or union of aim and purpose. The waste and friction are inexcusable.

The Negro can no longer look to the white man for intimate advice and direction. No one outside of a group can regulate the intimate procedure for the inside. The white philanthropists have done a good part. The people who must be helped forever are not worthy of being helped at all.

Lynching and lawlessness of which the Negro is the chief victim, the shift of population, congestion in cities and the acute situation resulting therefrom, the moral aloofness and religious indifference of the abducted classes, the downward moral tendency of the times in which our young people are being carried away, the necessity for cooperation in business and trade, the growing apathy of the white race and the need for concerted endeavor to stem the tire all unite in demanding the proposed conference at an early date. The situation calls loudly for the requisite race statesmanship."

There is no doubt but that this suggestion is most practical and timely. We need some means by which our efforts along all lines may be so coordinated that their resultant may be more productive of progress than is now the case.

The times demand unity of thought and unity of action. These can be had only as a more definite program of procedure than is now the case, is determined upon and followed. Such a program can be determined upon only as conference on the part of all concerned makes it possible.

The Express is heartily in accord with the idea. But how will such conference be called? So far we have not produced a leader in whom the confidence of the general public is so placed as to make a call by him equivalent to a command.

It is of the opinion however that the discussion widely of the proposal of Mr. Miller will make more apparent the imperative need of such a conference and it will eventually be held.

So far, we have proven ourselves cowardly—and inefficient in taking care of our own concerns. That we are now becoming more fully awakened to the gravity of the situation which confronts will be proven only by the co-ordination of our agencies of progress by the adoption of a common sense program such as the proposed conference would make possible of formation.

BELOW THE SURFACE.

(From Macon Telegraph.)

It is easier to theorize than look below the surface. Partial viewpoints are more popular than the whole. Opinions are more convenient than to search for the truth. In thinking, or pretending to think, men much prefer to do so in terms of their own prejudices. They are color-blind because they want to be. This is not always true, but nearly always. Independent

It is remarkable how far apart two attitudes of mind can be—for instance, the attitude of an accuser and the attitude of the accused. At one time, Americans were prone to regard the Japanese as vicious, and yet a closer examination than was made reveals the fact that Japanese as a whole who do not think viciously. 1/11/23

One lesson to be learned is that, before one intelligently criticises or even praises an individual, a race or a nation of people, it is necessary to first get and understand their attitude of mind. This brings us back to the sociological precept that primarily the question is not what a man does but why he does it. To understand the true cause of the World War so far as Germany was concerned, it is necessary to have an insight into the frame of mind of the German citizen, and as well, that of the German higher-up.

The South must, as the years go by, make more and more a study of the Negro, to be sure that whatever responsibility rests upon the White South in this regard will be fully and properly met. This does not mean that it is best for the South to act as father and mother—although some paternalism is due the colored race—but that it should always stand ready to do justice and to act as teacher and guide into the ways of life and inspiration that best suit the Negro.

In making a conscientious study, it is necessary to find out what the Southern colored man himself is thinking. And, really, in the work of ascertaining his thoughts, one finds no little interest.

It appears that the Atlanta Independent, edited and published by Negroes, presents a fair example of what many Negroes are thinking, although it may outdistance in some instances. In the current number of the paper is an article by Jesse O. Thomas that should be of interest to all students of the race subject, the essential part of which article is as follows:

"I am not sure there is a Negro problem. I am not sure there is not a Negro problem. I doubt seriously if there is anybody in this country that is able to state with any degree of undisputed authenticity that there is or there is not a Negro problem. That is to say, there may be somewhere along the lines of our human progress some conditions that are peculiarly racial that are shot through with racial instincts, impulses and idiosyncrasies. This may be true of racial groups in a corresponding degree. But what America has learned to regard as a "Negro problem" has little or no racial significance. The fact that the Negro death rate is almost twice as high as the death rate of the white people living in the same communities is referred to as a "Negro problem." The fact that a larger percentage of Negroes are ignorant than is correspondingly true of white people, constitutes another "Negro problem." The lack of paved streets and adequate lights, water supply, sewage disposal facilities or what not become, again, a "Negro problem." When large numbers of foreigners are brought together in any American community who are without education and unable to speak the English language, they do not produce or create German, Irish, Italian, Polack, French, Jew, Russian, Greek or what not problems. They simply make necessary a problem of Americanization, of education. The congested and over-crowded housing conditions and other evidences of lack of economic efficiency do not produce race or racial problems, simply problems in economic and social adjustment. And if any group, whether in America or elsewhere, becomes so impoverished that charitable aid is necessary because of starvation or hardship or otherwise, they are not racial problems of the group involved. When the American white man is ignorant, and economically inefficient, he does not produce a white race problem, but a problem in social and economic adjustment.

In the city of Atlanta, out of 14,000 Negro children that are enrolled in our public schools, less than 2,000 of them are on full time schedule. None of the Negro children are attending high schools provided for by public school funds of Atlanta, as is true in many other cities throughout the South. This is not a "Negro problem;" it is simply a failure in the educational system to provide adequate educational facilities for Negro children and in the last analysis, a problem in education. Negroes live in worse houses, more insanitary and more hazardous to health and well-being than the white people, taking it in mass by and large. But here again, this is not a race problem—a problem in economics. Because of the lack of education, lack of training, the lack of opportunity, the double economic standard together with racial prejudice, the average Negro's earning capacity is very much lower than the average white man's earning capacity. But this is not a "Negro problem." It is a problem of education and training.'

When a Southern Negro newspaper speaks out as frankly and clearly as this, it has won the right to a hearing. But this is not the end of the talent. The editor Benjamin Jefferson Davis—not a bad name, by the way—and Kelley Miller, of Howard University, also display a genius for speaking out in clear tones. Says Editor Davis:

"If the Negro would succeed in this world, he must look facts in the face. He must meet issues squarely; he must rise to the height and importance of the situation; he must face actual conditions. . . . Frontal attacks are unwise and will not pay in the end. The white man is opposed to our constructive progress most largely because of his belief in our capacity. If he believed us capable of developing the highest efficiency and independence, he would stand for our progress and uplift, as he does for the progress of every other integral factor entering into our cosmopolitan population. He is the fellow we have got to convince, and we cannot succeed in bringing him our way by frontal attacks, by radicalism, by criticism based upon racial antagonism; but we must undermine his prejudice by indirect attack. We must disarm him by meeting the objections and criticisms he brings against us, by developing the highest degree of independence—convince him that we are a contributing factor, that we are an asset to the community instead of a liability. . . . Stop deserting the section in which you were born and reared because of an outbreak of lawlessness; stay home, stand your ground, let your buckets down where you are and help to work out your salvation in the Southland, where in the fitness of things, the highest order of Negro character and Negro respectability and the greatest accumulation of Negro wealth and intelligence must be achieved."

Kelley Miller gives this observation: "Unless the Negro's courage rises with danger, his cause will be lost through timidity and cowardice. . . . The people who must be helped forever are not worth being helped at all." However, there is help that is necessary, and "self-expression on the part of the Negro will encourage our white friends to extend the necessary assistance. But they cannot be expected to carry the Negro on their shoulders any further. He henceforth must walk with his own legs. The white man can only furnish him with a crutch."

A journal with insight like this, published by the colored man, has indeed a large worthy mission before it, and if it places the emphasis on just such a program as these words from its contributors suggest, there will be cause for regret if its subscription list does not include the names of many who

THE SILENCE OF GOOSE CREEK

A child screamed in the night—a little girl eight years old—but no one stirred. Savannah Tribune 2-8-23

Instead, a man—a painted, disguised man—drew his gun and threatened her with death, if she did not cease.

A woman was lifted from her sick bed and carried forth into the darkness to be whipped like a dog.

There were strong men to wield the strap, to take the Spanish inquisition for a pattern, but there was not one to raise his voice for common decency, for the teaching of his father, for orConstituted authority had been flaunted, secrecy prevailed, men and women refused to talk, while the two victims lay mourning and suffering.

Is this white supremacy? Is this Gentile civilization? Is this Protestant justice? Is this Southern chivalry? Is this Anglo Saxon law?

And what scared the lips and paralyzed the arms of so many people?

What drove them to be deaf to the cries of a child?

What caused them to remain mute?

Nothing but the terror of masked violence. Nothing but fear of a disguised hand that might strike from behind. Nothing but an alarm that has spread, and spread, and spread, until people do not dare to move or speak, lest they expose themselves unaware.

And suppose the woman had offended, of which there is no proof, was there no law to make her answerable?

Is the machinery of our government so clogged with rust, so eaten and corrupted, that it can no longer function?

After 133 years of constitutional democracy, must we admit failure—admit that justice is only to be had thru masked violence?

After winning such glory on the open battle field, after living for more than a century with open courts, are we to acknowledge that the mob offers us our only salvation?

There are men to laugh at the grand jury, more's the pity, and to hope its efforts will prove futile.

There are men to ridicule Judge Robinson's charge.

There are men to applaud that brutish band, and to rejoice that its identity has been concealed.

There are men to become drunk with the thought of anonymous power, and to take delight in its exercise

There are men to prefer disguise, extro-legal violence to the slower processes of the law.

When the kiser threw down his gauntlet and all Europe was forced to defend itself, Lord Grey turned to us and cried. "You next."

We refused to believe it—refused for three long years—but it came to pass.

Who strikes at civilization, strikes at everybody and everything depends on it.

Who strikes at the law, strikes at everybody and everything that looks to the law for protection.

If the time has come when the law cannot protect the humblest citizen in his legitimate rights, can not grant him a fair hearing, can not guarantee him against arbitrary convictions and punishment, the time will sure come when the law can do these things for no citizen.

If the time has come when a mob can invade the poorest home, in defiance of our traditions, in contradiction of our fundamental rights, the time will come when the mob can go anywhere.

We are not dealing with an isolated proposition in this latest outrage, but with an illustration, with a symptom a warning.

The silence of Goose Creek is not significant because of what it shows how any and all communities may be terrorized, may be frightened, intimidated and made to serve the will of ruthless but organize groups.—The Houston Chronicle.

PEOPLE WE HAVE WITH US.

There is a tendency in more recent American fiction to depict the real life of the negro in this country. We have had much of stories [illegible] to prejudice and hatred. We have also had much, perhaps too much, of literary lollypop in which "Mammy" and "Marse" have figured, kindly and perhaps well meant, but falling far short of dealing with that tragic figure in our national life which the negro has been since emancipation. Lately, there are indications of better things. Somber and almost forbidding as it is, Clement Wood's novel, "Nigger," can claim a high place in literature because it raws, with many touches of real power, a picture of he life of a negro family, in the South and North, during years following emancipation; years crowded with vicissitudes, trials, hardships and oppressions. The picture is a gloomy but a true one. To minds which have been turned to a contemplation of this phase of our national life, his book cannot fail to carry conviction. To other minds it will bring reflection ripening to conviction. In the same class of fictional works, lately appearing, and marking the tendency toward a higher and more worthy literary treatment of the negro as a tragic or dramatic and not always a comic or sentimental figure, is "Black and White" by H. G. Shands, "Birthright" by T. S. Stribling, and a few others.

It is not too late. The poor we have always with us, and in the United States we have had the negro since war set him free, unprepared by training, to compete in the struggle for existence, and, tragic mistake, thrown into the political arena before his time, to intensify and fan into fiercer flame the race antagonism already existing. He has appeared to all reflective minds to be a victim not only of his own mistakes, which have been expected, but of the mistakes of others away by the intensity of their philanthropic to elevate, by the force of laws cutting against the grain of old and deep-seated prejudice in the dominant race, one asking only for justice in human relations.

Those who have assumed to understand the negro most have misunderstood him least. The family history set before us in "Nigger" is more tragic than that of the "Rougon-Macquart" family, although Zola, with his great powers of delineation, followed the fatalities pursuing members of that family through several generations. We have with us, and of us, a people deserving our consideration than some on whom we have lavished it abroad. The new literary dawn can hardly fail in giving us a clearer light to see them more as they are than as fantastic figures.

United States.

THE TEETH OF THE DRAGON.

Just a few days before Christmas a note appeared in a New York newspaper, which may be cited by the historian of the future as an index of the character of these times and an explanation of that future time. This obscure note, which may be a luminous commentary in the future read:

"He had served in the U. S. Navy for 10 years, but since the importer had received his citizenship rights the first time, the United States Supreme Court had rendered a decision making it illegal to serve naturalization papers to Japs and Chinese. Judge Davis refused the merchant's appeal."

This was a Japanese merchant. As a pledge to our "ex-service" men, he had received the first steps in citizenship papers from the United States, —for he had been in the Naval Service, not of Japan, but of the United States for 10 years. Yet among 1,500 applicants from many other parts of the world, some of which are not nearly so enlightened as Japan, he is denied American citizenship on a generalization, in spite of his personal character or individual merits and rights. It would have been all right if only he had been born in Russia, Turkey or Czecho-Slo-Vakia, or even in some illiterate and backward district of Poland, Greece or Roumania. But because the seed which produced him was planted in Nippon, and not in some fly-infected street of Naples, this man is accounted lower than the human being of nearly all the rest of the earth. Neither the "Divine" right of human kings, nor witchcraft, nor ghosts, nor the hell-doctrine is more curious or unreasonable than this brainless and cowardly judgement against a felow-human being.

And the queerest thing of all is, that most people float along feeling and imagining that there never is to be any consequences to this queer thing. But everything means something further, in the physical, mental and moral worlds,—and this devil's sowing cannot raise a crop of wheat any more than we can pluck figs from thistles. This evil and unjust seed will never fruit into love and goodness and justice. Any scheme which does recognize the rights of a man as an individual, is unjust and inhuman, and will some day be outlawed by a more reasonable mankind.

WILLIAM PICKENS.
New York City.

IS EX-DEAN PICKENS A JOKE?

We are puzzled as to whether to take ex-Dean Pickens seriously or not. We have watched him carefully from the time he took the prize at Yale in an oratorical contest until the present day, and if he has adopted any definite policy or vocation to follow through life, it escaped our observation. We have watched him in all the jobs he has held; none of which has he remained in long enough to establish himself permanently. But we have always had faith in the fellow and believed that some day he would find his place and make good. But we are about to despair.

A fortnight ago we published a communication from Editor D. E. Tobias, of the New York Independent. In this communication, Editor Tobias alleged the shortcomings of the N. A. A. C. P., of which Brother Pickens is one of the field secretaries. Among the charges brought against the Association are the following:

1. The Association is owned and controlled by white people;
2. The Association is commercial rather than racial;
3. That DuBois, Johnson and others are hirelings and obey the directions given by their white superiors;
4. Southern sentiment dominates the Association;
5. The Association exploits Negroes;
6. The publicity program of the Association is clipped from white dailies.

In this communication, Mr. Tobias took Messrs. DuBois and Johnson severely to task and charged the white management with insincerity. The Atlanta Independent published the letter as a news item as it does communications from various individuals; but Brother Pickens, who is a field secretary, and whose name was not mentioned in Tobias' article, seems to take it upon himself to answer for his superiors. His superiors have said nothing, so far as our information goes. They have not paid any attention to Mr. Tobias' article, but ex-Dean Pickens, who is a subordinate and assigned to the field, takes upon his shoulders the full responsibility of defending both his white and colored superiors. But the ex-Dean does not show the mental aptness necessary to differentiate between a news item in a newspaper and an editorial. He takes the Atlanta Independent severely to task without mentioning the author of the article at all. He deals in a lot of abuse and vituperation against The Atlanta Independent, which neither vouched for the truthfulness of nor took the responsibility for the item.

In the first place, we would not pay any attention to the mouthings of this underling if it were not for the fact that the public, to some extent, might be misled by reading the personal abuse in his article. The Independent would feel like discussing the matter with the Editor of the Crisis or the Secretary of the Association; but it will depart from its policy of not entering into an argument with a correspondent, in order that the people might know what manner of man ex-Dean Pickens is.

Many people have not measured the ex-Dean by his contribution to Negro life; he is sized up as a graduate from Yale and the people have covered all his shortcomings, including his migratory life, with the fact of his graduation from Yale University; thinking it impossible for a man who comes from Yale or Harvard to be anything except a real man.

Mr. Pickens lost sight of the charges brought against his Association by Mr. Tobias in his mad tirade against the Atlanta Independent. He never attempted to disprove a single fact set up by Mr. Tobias or refute the argument submitted in support of his charges. The ex-Dean contented himself to abuse The Atlanta Independent and to misstate the facts. Whether the charges made by Mr. Tobias are true or untrue, is a question for the executive officers of the Association to answer, if they think it necessary, and not for the chap in the field to mess up.

We would like to say for the information of the Dean that there is a vast difference between a news item or a communication to a newspaper, and the editorial policy of the paper; and that the paper is in no sense responsible for news items or communications signed or unsigned by others. We would like to further inform the ex-Dean that news items and individual communications do not in any way express the opinion of a real newspaper, and the newspaper in no sense accepts the views of its correspondents as expressions of its views or policies. The ex-Dean reminds us of the little fice that barks to let the big dogs know he is about and of the Negro who uses his mouth instead of his brains trying to let the white folks know that he is a good "nigger."

We respectfully cite the learned ex-Dean to Mr. Tobias, whom we think is able to handle him. Mr. Tobias made the charges and not The Atlanta Independent, and stated that he had the proof and was ready to submit it, and it is up to the ex-Dean to call his hand. Unless Brother Pickens has some proof above his temper and prejudices, we advise him to let the matter drop. If he has not learned, he will learn this cold fact, that abuse is not argument and the mere denial of a charge is not sufficient in law or reason to controvert that charge. To merely make a statement that Tobias or The Independent lied, does not make either a lie. When you call a man a lie, you ought to have the truth to set up against the lie. If you do not, you make yourself ridiculous and become the common liar that you called your opponent. But it ought to be beneath the dignity of a graduate of Yale and a student of Greece to condescend to the level of a blackguard to meet the argument of a gentleman and scholar. Whether Tobias is a success or failure has nothing to do with the truthfulness of the charges that ex-Dean Pickens merely denounces without setting up any proof to support his denial.

We are publishing in another column ex-Dean Pickens' article in full, just as we published Mr. Tobias', and in neither case do we accept responsibility or admit that either article expresses our views Following ex-Dean Pickens' line of argument, Mr. Tobias would be justified in holding The Atlanta Independent responsible for the ex-Dean's letter.

The ex-Dean may be an historian and may be advised on current events, but if he is, he seems to be in error about the things he recites in his letter against The Atlanta Independent. He alleges that Morefield Storey rescued the Editor of The Atlanta Independent and its staff from ridiculous segregation before the Supreme Court of the United States. The learned ex-Dean is in error. The segregation laws of Atlanta were declared unconstitutional and without force and effect by the Supreme Court of Georgia, the case having originated in the Superior Court of Fulton County. This was long before Morefield Story took the Louisville case up to the Supreme Court.

The ex-Dean says that Miss Mary White Ovington has defended the race as The Independent would not dare to do. We let the public decide whether The Independent has been recreant or outspoken and consistent in its defense of the race, and whether or not it has been as bold on the firing line as Miss Ovington or the ex-Dean. And to further decide whether we ever ran away from the field of danger and sought safety in northern climes as the ex-Dean did.

The ex-Dean will learn some day that the mere assertion that a man is a lie is no proof either in law or morals that he is a lie. The ex-Dean says that DuBois has been abused and cursed and all the trouble he has ever had was because he would not be bossed, and that others have given up easier work because they would not be owned and controlled. This naked assertion to the contrary by the ex-Dean in no sense disproves the charge of Tobias that the Association is owned and controlled by white people and that the Negroes are hirelings. When the ex-Dean made his assertion to the contrary, he should have submitted proof.

As to the ex-Dean or his Negro superiors leaving easier jobs because they would not be owned or controlled, let us see.

The ex-Dean was an under-professor at Talladega, Wiley University, and a high school in Baltimore. He stayed in neither of these places long, and the very nature of each of these positions suggested that he was an underling. And nobody ever heard of his leaving because the faculty wanted to control or boss him; but he left for other reasons that we call upon him to explain. And so far as our information goes, the only job he was ever boss of was his effort on the lecture platform, which he gave up to keep from starving.

As to DuBois and Johnson, neither of them have ever held any movements must establish social centers for the purpose of centralizing the ideas and usefulness of the groups that work among them, for the purpose of establishing more co-operation among those who constitute their working forces by making them better acquainted with one another, how much more essential it is that the church should exercise such wisdom?

In the later day church, social meetings would not only help those out of the church, it would help those in the church. Thousands of members who belong to our different church organizations do not even know one another; pass by one another in the streets and refuse to speak to one another because of their idea of social standing. They go to church and worship on Sundays, never exchange ideas and views or express the progress they are making in the work of the Lord, or affiliate enough even to know one another's names. How can such a church serve God and set the example of constraining others with such a social problem?

Rev. A. Clayton Powell, D. D., pastor Abyssinian Baptist church, New York City, in discussing the church's social work, remarks:

"The church must enlarge its religious activities if it is to retain the respect and support of intelligent men. Christianity is more than preaching, praying, singing and giving; it is all of these but a great deal more. The purpose of the Christianity of Jesus as revealed in the New Testament is to supply man's social as well as spiritual needs. The church is being called upon to give the world a Christianity of deeds as well as a Christianity of creeds. Very few people ask any more "What the church believes," but "What the church is doing for the amelioration of the condition of mankind." The majority of people care very little about church doctrines. They are looking for a translation of the spirit of Jesus Christ in every day life of his professed followers. The church will never draw and hold the masses by essays on faith, but by showing her faith by her works.

THE URGENT DEMAND FOR A RACE CONFERENCE.

The times are out of joint. Racial portents have ominous. The rising tide of color threatens to engulf us. The problem is becoming more complex and perplexing. Unless the Negro's courage rises with danger, the cause will be lost through timidity and cowardice. The welfare of the ten million Negroes in the United States is less well safe-guarded through self-directive leadership than that of any other group of similar size and like advantage in the world. There is the widest margin between what is and what ought to be. Loudsome boasting of our present attainments blinds us to the magnitude of things yet to be attained. The gap can be bridged only by wise guidance and direction. The incoming of the new year emphasizes our delinquency. Within the next half generation there is going to be a tremendous change in the scheme of race adjustment. Whether this is to be for the better or for worse depends upon the initiative, the courage and the wisdom which the Negro displays. The present tendency is in the wrong direction. Forces and influences now at work if unchecked will fix him for good in a helpless and hopeless position. Instant action is demanded. Hesitancy is dangerous. Delay may prove fatal.

The time is fully ripe for a race conference to deliberate upon the serious phases of the problem, and as far as practicable, to formulate a platform of principles and a program or programs of procedure. The Negro group has special and peculiar interests and relations infinitely more serious and vital than any other subordinate element into which our population is divided. The peculiar problems of the foreigner are temporary and limited to one generation. The Jew is isolated only in religious and semi-religious relations of his own making and preference. The Catholic differs from the Protestant only in the mode of worship.

The Negro alone is separated from the rest of the nation by the whole diameter of social difference which entails the regulation of all of the essential intimacies of life. This regime is imposed upon him. He didn't make and he cannot unmake it. Special and specific racial interests require as thoughtful and as wise deliberation as the congress gives to the affairs of the nation. And yet today we have no adequate or competent body to give our issues comprehensive and statesmanlike consideration. At present the various interests and activities at work in the field are absorbed in their own objectives and are wholly without efficient coordination or union of aim and purpose. The waste and friction are inexcusable.

The demand for a nation-wide conference is imperative. This conference should not be fostered by any one organization, but every type of agency or interest now at work should unite upon a call to consider "the state of the race." Political movements such as the N. A. A. C. P., the Equal Rights League, the Lincoln League, the Race Congress; religious bodies like the National Baptist Convention, the African Methodist Episcopal, the A. M. E. Z., and the C. M. E. churches, as well as those of smaller numbers; moral and social agencies such as the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A.; business and economic agencies like the Business League, the Urban League; educational associations, fraternal organizations, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Press Association, and all well established movements of wide ramification should be represented. The time has come for all to pull together. If we continue to pull apart, we will pull to pieces. The whole is greater than any of its parts. The members of the body can never co-operate properly unless they become consciously subordinated to the welfare of the body as a whole.

It may be just as well to anticipate the objection that several such abortive attempts have been made before. While no one of these efforts has been permanent each endeavor has left a residum of lasting good. The race today has more maturity and sound judgment than ever before. Many will recall the effort of Mr. Joel E. Spingarn at a race conference at his summer home. If an alien to the group saw the necessity of formulating a common program, surely we must heed the self call to conference.

The Negro can no longer look to the white man for intimate advice and direction. No one outside of a group can regulate the intimate procedure for the inside. The white philanthropists have done a good part. The people who must be helped forever are not worthy of being helped at all. Self-expression on part of the Negro will encourage our white friends to extend the necessary assistance. But they cannot be expected to carry him on their shoulders any further. The Negro henceforth must walk with his own legs. The white man can only furnish him a crutch.

Lynching and lawlessness, of which the Negro is the chief victim, the shift of population, congestion in cities and the acute situation resulting therefrom, the moral aloofness and religious indifference of the abducted classes, the downward moral tendency of the times in which our young people are being carried away, the necessity for co-operation in business and trade, the growing apathy of the white race and the need for concerted endeavor to stem the tide all unite in demanding the proposed conference at an early date. The situation calls loudly for the requisite race statesmanship. Will it be forthcoming?

Lo, I have made the suggestion and invite correspondence and suggestion.

All who are in favor, signify by saying "I."

AUTHOR GIVES INSIDE FACTS ON HIS NOVEL

Readers of this department have probably read the very excellent article by Clement Wood, the author of a most interesting novel with a very ugly name which was published in an earlier issue. Because we believe it is possible to get at the personality behind both the novel and the article by publishing part of a personal letter addressed to the editor of this department, we are taking the liberty, without consulting Mr. Wood, to give our readers a chance to get a closer view of the man Wood as well as of the writer.

We think no further comment will be necessary other than to refer readers to our review of the novel published a few weeks ago:

"Let me thank you indeed for your kind note, with its enclosure of th review of my 'Nigger.' I like the review very much. I would have written a different one, of course; but it is obviously a sincere statement of a viewpoint differing in some ways from my own, and none of us has a monopoly upon true vision.

"There is certainly no intrusion upon my privacy in your letter. To the contrary, my book is a part of me; and at least that part of me belongs to those it reaches. I am enclosing you an article of mine in last Sunday's Herald. I want you also to read my "Alabama" article in the Nation week after next; it is a partial treatment of miscegenation in Alabama.

"In none of these do I urge any solution to the problem, except this general one: Give now at once full political, economic and social justice; then let the human garden bring forth its own fruit. White and black are damned in the denial of these. I have further specific opinions of my own; in my own time I will bring these forth. The big job now—and I hope you can see this—is to let the facts be known. That is, social education in what's what today * * * Bring the trouble to the surface, and the very exposure must work toward a cure.

"That is why I think 'Nigger' was the right book for me to have written—now. I don't agree that it's unaware of the Negroes' happy moments, or of humor and lightness and love; only, for dramatic purposes, for compression to give greater force, these are given merely as backgrounds, for my white hell-hands of oppression. I want it depressing, utterly; to have dynamic social power, it could have been a smile-damn-you-smile Pollyanna book, an 'All's right with the Negro' book.

"The Negro reaction to the book is singularly unanimous in one thing: a regret that I have not shown the successful, cultured Negro. First, he's scarce in the South; second, I didn't know him. Will I write a book about him? You bet—as sure as I do know him enough.

"And write me again when you will. I appreciate it.

"Sincerely,
(Signed) "CLEMENT WOOD."

THE ATTITUDE OF THE SOUTHERN PRESS

Christian Recorder 12-20-23

We are printing in this issue an editorial from the Christian Advocate of Nashville, Tenn., official organ of the M. E. Church, in which it refers to one written in the Christian Recorder. We consider ourselves flattered that the Advocate should pay attention to what we write. We believe the editorial which we wrote merely stated the case mildly. We do not know, and would like for the Christian Advocate to inform us of any number of newspapers in the South that are giving more attention to trying to better conditions there than they are to trying to exaggerate bad conditions here. By the exaggerated advertisement which crime gets lynching so commonly found in Southern newspapers, conditions are made worse. If the space given to crime were put on constructive effort much could be done for good Every day in the South, Negro men and Negro women are maltreated, and have no redress of court or otherwise. While the newspapers say a great deal about the crimes Negroes commit they do a very uittle to prevent crime against Negroes. No newspaper of the South so far as we know has taken upon itself the task of trying to get largersecurity for Negroes. Sporadically many have done somethin; but while the editoroal page argues one thing the news columns loudly and in largest type proclaim the opposite policy.

Philadelphia Pa.

We do not know any newspaper in the South which has made a crusade against the degradation of Negro women in the South. Every Southern newspaper knows that in nearly every Southern State there is no law protecting a woman against the white man who degrades her, or giving any protection to the mulatto child which she may bear. In spite of all their pretensions against "social equality" no paper so far as we know has courage enough to start a crusade against the most apparent kind of social equality. With the laws and the papers in their hands the whites of the South would have little trouble in stopping this evil, if they had the courage; but no, they make a fuss about a Negro who wants to sleep in a Pullman. But we do not know, perhaps the Christian Advocate can inform us, of any newspaper which has taken seriously the question of the age of consent as applied to the colored people, and tried to protect young colored girls. If a Negro suggests that a white man and colored woman may legally marry and bear children, the papers brand him as a trouble maker; but if they, without marriage bear children, the papers say little or nothing.

We do not know, perhaps the Advocate can inform us, of any papers that have taken up in a serious way, the subject of better school provisions for the Negroes. The outstanding social curse of the white South, is that with all of its boasted Christianity, it still robs Negroes of a large portion of their funds and gives them to whites. The disparity in the distribution of school funds is in direct opposition to the principles of Christianity, but no newspapers, so far as we know, have taken up this subject, except in a feeble way.

We do not know any newspapers of the South which have taken up the question of an adequate wage for the Negro working man, notwithstanding the fact that the South almost went wild on industrial education that which would teach the Negro to work, but the result of work seen in wages seemed to concern them very little.

-We do not know a single newspaper not excluding the admirable Christian Advocate, that takes up the question of voting for Negroes. In this democracy, no people can depend upon any other to protect them unless they themselves vote. We believe that practically every newspaper will subscribe to that, but we do not know of one that will apply it to the Negroes. They will grant it is a good thing for the poor white or the farmer in the mountains to vote, for the white foreigner as soon as he is naturalized, to vote, but they will not grant that the Negro have the ballot. Some of them get hysterical about respect for law when it concerns the 18th Amendment, but the 14th and 15th Amendments do not concern them, and sixty years of disrespect for the South's flaunting of these integral parts of the Constitution, have not the rebuke of the newspapers, but at worst only their apology.

What me mean to state is, that the newspapers, the great publicity organs of the South, are not interested in the improving of Negroes' conditions so much as they are in exaggerating the bad conditions to which Negroes come; and if we take up the different discussions we will find by actual measurement of space that a great deal more space is given to the exaggeration of bad conditions in the North, and the reporting of crimes, etc., in the South, than are given to anything helpful or constructive in the South.

Of course we do not make the widespread charge that the church is responsible for this. The Christian Church in its purity is working against it; but just as the church was in the throes of the slavery power before the Civil War, it is now so largely innoculated with prejudice that the pure teaching of Christ on the subject of race relations has difficulty in being recognized. However, but for the church, only God knows what the conditions would be. Nevertheless that does not close our mind to the fact that the poorest expression of Christianity in our social life so far as the Negro is concerned, is found in the South. Most Negroes, like the editor of the Recorder, out of pride for their native Southland, do not like to admit it, but nearly every Negro who has lived a year in the North does admit it.

We are however, of the opinion that not much good will be done by fighting across the fence. What is needed is more of mutual understanding. Our white Christian friends must listen to and carefully weigh and consider honest and free expressions by Negroes. They must not consider the Negro who speaks the truth as he sees it a menace. They must exercise the kind of fairness toward the Negro which they ask the white employer to exercise toward the white working man. The must encourage honest expression. Naturally there may be many things wrong in the Negro point of view and many things wrong in the white point of view, as there are many things true in each point of view; but the only way by which they can be reconciled is an honest discussion of the facts and an honest intention to abide by the facts.

There are, we believe hundreds of thousands of white Christians in the South who believe that Negroes should vote, who are ashamed of the South because of the way the Negro has been robbed and exploited, whose hearts burn with indignation because of the treatment of the Negro women, who realize the wrong of robbing Negro children of the right of education, etc. We say thousands, indeed we believe millions, who see these things from a righteous point of view. The difficulty is that the great mass of white newspapers cater to an inflamed and prejudiced and un-Christian opinion, and a perverted thought on these matters, and silence these good thinking people. Upon the church and the religious press we must depend to lead the way in this fight for justice and fair play for the Negro, as we do in all matters of social advance in our country.

INCONSISTENCY AGAIN

The daily papers of Little Rock, Ark., publish the story of Miss Johanna Stewart, a young Negro woman, being fined for befriending three small motherless white children, which gives an insight into Southern inconsistency on the race question.

Miss Stewart went to Little Rock from Wyoming to visit her mother, taking with her three white children whose father, a railroad conductor employed her as nurse. The mother of the children died three years ago.

When the authorities of Little Rock learned that a Negro woman was housing white children they ordered her arrest, and she was fined $50, charged with contributory dependency. Later the fine was suspended, provided Miss Stewart, or "Johanna," as the daily papers refer to her, refrains from interfering with the children she was hired to look after.

According to the daily press, "'Johanna' told the Judge she expected to return to Wyoming and continue her work for the father of the children, and that she was desirous of taking them with her; that the children have been given into the custody of Mrs. W. P. McDermott, probation officer."

One paper concludes by saying: "The Stewart woman formerly lived in Little Rock and was familiar with the laws applicable to whites and blacks."

The same white people who object to Miss Johanna Stewart taking care of the three motherless children under her mother's roof are the same who indulge in a lot of sickening maudlin sentiment about "nursing at the breast of a black mammy." They are the same who employ Negro nurse girls, who sometimes see more of the children than the parents themselves, often eating and sleeping with them. A poll of nurses for children in Little Rock would undoubtedly reveal the fact that nine-tenths of them are Negroes.

If Miss Stewart was nursing the three orphans and living with them at the home of their father, no complaint would be made. But when she allows them to sleep and eat at the home of a Negro—then a great crime is committed and she is arrested and taken to court.

Leading white people of Arkansas are heading a movement for the holding of a conference, having as its object the checking of the migration wave; but all the conferences and importunities to the Negro to remain in the South will be of no avail just so long as such incongruous laws are enforced making it a crime for a person to give shelter and comfort to motherless, homeless children.

Such laws are a disgrace to humanitarism and Christianity, and those who make and enforce them are worse. As things now stand, a Negro is likely to find himself in jail for giving friendly aid on the street to a white woman, and in coming to the rescue of a white man in distress a Negro woman bares the risk of being put behind the bars for undue familiarity.

Former Judge of the New York State Court of Claims William D. Cunningham in an address delivered to the Cardinal Gibbons Council, Knights of Columbus, in the Erasmus High School, Brooklyn, N. Y., declared that if the Negro is a problem it is because the white race made him so. If he has gone wrong it is because his white brother did not give him the opportunity to learn the ways of right living. Judge Cunningham declared that 11,000,000 Negroes are denied the boon of Catholicism, and denounced the lethargy and self-complacency of the Catholic laity. Said he: "The Knights of Columbus must have a spirit which is large enough to carry them to the rescue of these black kin. I do not advocate social equality, but I do appeal to the Catholics to aid these eleven million souls to understand and accept the principles and ideals taught by the Catholic Church. The democracy and equality to which we can lead our black brothers are the only democracy and equality which exists."

APROPOS OF HERR MENCKEN'S VIEW.

Editor The Advertiser:

Apropos of your editorial of the 5th—"Mencken on the South."—Why especially resent Herr M's censures of the South when the burden of his denunciation is heaped upon the North, East and West, with whatsoever points of the compass lie between? He blames the South in vague generalities, largely discountable as "Prejudices." But his jeers and sneers at other sections are double-shotted specifications.

"The Southerner, at his worst, is never quite the sultry cad that the Yankee is." Thus Herr M. at the close of a long diatribe against Southern shortcomings. The present South, he assures us, is devoid of culture. But who wants what he elsewhere styles "the six-day sock and saleratus kultur of the cow and hog states." The 'cow and hog states" aforesaid lie North and West, not South; which somehow suggests that the only President who came from west of the Mississippi was Zachary Taylor of Louisiana.

"New England," proceeds the ingenius Mencken, "began its history as a slaughter-house of ideas, and it is today not easily distinguishable from a cold-storage plant," etc., etc.

"The pathetic buffoonery of Southern education" seems to sadden Herr Mencken, but education elsewhere in the Union stirs his ire, as follows:

"For example, consider Clayton Hamilton, M. A., vice-president of the National Institute of Arts and Letters. Here are the tests he proposes for dramatic critics:

"1. Have you ever stood bareheaded in the nave of Amiens?

"2. Haye you ever climbed to the Acropolis by moonlight?

"3. Have you ever walked with whispers into the hushed presence of the Frari Madonna of Bellini?"

"What," queries the disgusted Mencken, "could more brilliantly evoke an image of the eternal Miss Birch, blue veil flying and Baedeker in hand? The banality of it is really too exquisite to be borne."

Hear our candid friend again on this subject. He saith:

"Nearly all our professional historians are poor men holding college posts, and they are ten times more cruelly best by the ruling politic-plutocratic-social oligarchy than ever the Prussian professors were by the Hohenzollerns. Let them diverge in the slightest from what is the current official doctrine, and they are turned out of their chairs with a ceremony suitable for the expulsion of a drunken valet."

Wherefore, according to our nauseated critic:

"Even Lincoln is yet to be vividly got between the covers of a book. The Nicolay-Hay work is quite impossible. All the other standard lives of old Abe fail still worse. One hears in the Sunday schools that Abe was an austere and pious fellow. Imagine a man getting on in American politics, enchanting the boobery, sawing the horns off other politicians by the magic of virtue! Abe, in fact, must have been a fellow highly skilled at the great democratic art of gum-shoeing. His official portraits, both in prose and in daguerrotype, show him wearing the mien of a man about to be hanged; one never sees him smiling. Nevertheless, one hears that, until he emerged from Illinois, they always retired the non-combatants when he got a few gourds of corn abroad, and it is a matter of unescapable record that his career in the State Legislature was indistinguishable from that of a Tammany Nietsche."

The South has no painters, says Mencken. But what says he of a certain most famous Northern painter?

"Sargent should have been a designer of candy-box tops. His portrait of the four Johns Hopkins professors is probably the worst botch ever palmed off on a helpless committee of hay and feed dealers."

Neither has the South a single good monument, according to this outspoken arbiter elegantiarum. But he can hardly blame the South for General Grant's mausoleum—which looks, outside, like a truncated newel-post, an amorphous hydrant, or the stub of some misshapen tree gnawed down by beavers; and, inside, like a furtive imitation of Napoleon's tomb, though Grant's admirers insist that his chief glory was in differing from all such ruthless war-lords as the hero of Austerlitz and Jena. And Grant certainly won very few battles. But even friend Mencken will hardly deny that even Grant's tomb is by no means as ugly as the German battle monument at Leipzig. Or would he, despite his confident assertion that 'The American always secretly envies the Englishman, even when he professes to flout him. The Englishman never envies the American"—would he back this statement by denying that, after all, in a comparison between, say, Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, America has decidedly the better of the argument.

But what of Mencken's Northern readers? Do they approve his criticism of the new South? If so, "where do they get off?" For the new South is largely the work of their hands. Before 1861, the cry of the North was that the South must be rescued from the destroying clutch of the accursed slave-holding aristocrat, and consecrated to the benign rule of "plain people," such as Parson Brownlow, et al.; 'plain people," whom, said Lincoln, the Lord must have loved, else he would never have made so many—an argument which applies still better to influenza microbes, mosquitoes, thistles, and sundry other forms of life which vastly outnumber humanity.

Now this was done; and if it was not done right, our Northern friends have only themselves to blame. If "reconstruction" proved a failure, it was solely their fault, for it was all their doing. Unde illae lacrimae? Why should they or Mencken deplore results which they themselves strove to produce?

Race Problem—1923.
United States.

WHITE SUPREMACY MENACED, HARVARD EXPERT'S WARNING

RACE RIVALRY GROWING

Overpopulation Follows Western Science in Dark Lands

PEOPLES MUST FIND ROOM

Dr. McDougall Tells Institute of Politics That Civilization May Be Submerged.

MODERN science, with its successful warfare against disease and famine in heathen lands, and Western idealism, with its triumphs over infanticide, tribal warfare and other pagan population-reducing practices, have created a new problem for humanity; one of the gravest and most acute problems before the world today, and a standing menace to civilization, according to Professor William McDougall of Harvard University.

That problem, he explained at the Institute of Politics at Williamstown, Mass., is the problem of saving the white race from submergence in the darker races, whose swift increases in population have followed the application of Western science and ethics to their life.

Race wars against the Caucasians because of the overpopulation of such countries as Japan and India are not improbable, he said, and pointed out also the danger of the decay of Western civilization, including that of the United States, because of race suicide on the part of the highest classes and unchecked increase on the part of the least intelligent.

Professor McDougall's views aroused especial interest among the members of the institute on account of the emphasis placed by other speakers upon expanding populations as a cause of war. William S. Culbertson, Vice Chairman of the Tariff Commission, spoke of the adoption of imperialist programs in order that nations might reach out for raw materials to supply the needs of their growing populations. The need of Germany to find an outlet for her surplus population was given by Count Harry Kessler as one of the contributing causes of the World War. Japan's peculiar position as a small island kingdom with a large population that not only needs room to contain her people but also needs raw materials which she cannot produce herself was discussed at the institute round tables.

Dr. McDougall's opinions were regarded as highly important also because, in his books, which are widely quoted, he reaches pessimistic conclusions for the future of the United States and the rest of the Occidental world unless some remedy is applied to the malady of overpopulation.

Race Wars Foreseen.

The pressure of expanding population as a factor generating racial antipathy Professor McDougall called one of the most serious of international questions. In part he said:

"In modern times the Germans illustrate this factor par excellence. They have maintained the right to migrate, yet retain their racial and national identity in the country to which they have migrated. Their right to migrate is based on the same sentiments as another fast-increasing nation affirms—that is, the Japanese. This sentiment is that a vigorous, increasing people has the right to expand their territory.

"In India the great density of population keeps life on a very low level for the masses. The desire to migrate has here too arisen. In one place where it has occurred on a large scale, in British East Africa, unfortunate complications have arisen. There are residing side by side not only the natives and the British, but also the East Indians. There seems to be no possible solution for the many problems arising out of this situation.

"The pressure of increased population is no new phenomenon, but today it has become more acute and inclines to become still more acute in the future, because:

"(1) The transportation of persons over wide distances has become comparatively easy;

"(2) The applications of Western science, such as hygiene and sanitation, the control of diseases, the lessening of famines, and the enforcement of Western moral ideas, such as the prevention of child murder, abortion and tribal welfare, &c., have been widespread.

"These very innovations of the Western world largely diminished or abolished the crude and cruel ways in which nature and natural man have solved the population question for ages. Infanticide and abortion, pestilence, famine and war were the methods by which populations have been kept down in the past. By the abatement of these agencies, the population of India has increased from one hundred million about a century ago to more than three hundred million today. Likewise Europe had an almost stationary population from the time of Rome until the nineteenth century, when it increased rapidly—approximately threefold. Another such increase of population is highly improbable.

"Another cause for the dislike of great numbers of immigrants coming to a country is the fact of the relative different rates of representatives of different races. The recent immigrants to our country, say, since 1890, have been largely of Alpine stock. They have reproduced much more rapidly than the elder American stocks. The difference in reproduction rates between these stocks is a fundamental that arises in consequence of immigration, over and above its immediate effects."

Professor McDougall said that France had solved the problem of overpopulation within its own boundaries by birth control, but that this did not solve the problem for the rest of the world. On the contrary, it presented another danger—that a higher culture, keeping down its population through birth control, might be driven out by a people of lower national culture, whose increase in population had been permitted to continue unrestricted. Citing Gresham's law that a baser metal in circulation will always drive out the higher metal, Professor McDougall said that the same law holds in the relationships of national cultures, a population of lower culture tending to drive out the higher.

Modern science and industrialism in the last fifty years had interfered with the workings of the Malthusian law based on means of sustenance, he said. The develoment of synthetic foodstuffs and absorption of energy from the atmosphere might possibly present additional interference with its operation in the future. But this interference would be only temporary. Eventually the very increases in population caused by the use of synthetic foodstuffs would result in the triumph of the Malthusian law.

Race Competition Has Begun.

In his book, "The Group Mind," Professor McDougall points out that the population of Great Britain increased only from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 during the seventeenth century, but that it trebled itself in the nineteenth century, increasing from 13,000,000 to nearly 40,000,000. Citing the examples of the decline of Greece and Spain, he says the civilization, power and position of a people depend upon its intellectual aristocracy, and that national decline necessarily follows the failure to continue to produce such an aristocracy.

He says that civilized populations have multiplied everywhere in a way that has never occurred before. He points out that the world is becoming filled up and that the colored races are entering into economic competition with the white race. The development of humanitarian sentiment, the breakdown of class barriers, the perfecting of the social ladder, and the reforms in laws and institutions are stopping the repression by natural laws of the multiplication of the less fit. Also, he says, the influence of religion and custom has weakened that repression.

"The combined result of these three changes," he goes on, "is a strong tendency to reverse the operation by which nature has secured the evolution of the higher types of mind—namely, by breeding in the main from the higher types in each generation. We see a tendency for the population to be renewed in each generation preponderantly from the mentally inferior elements those whose outlook hardly extends beyond the immediate future and who have not learned how to demand for themselves and their children favored positions in the great game of life."

In his volume, "Is America Safe for Democracy?" Professor McDougall begins his foreword: "As I watch the American nation speeding gayly, with invincible optimism, down the road to destruction, I seem to be contemplating the greatest tragedy in the history of mankind. Other nations have declined and passed away; and their places have been filled, the torch of civilization has been caught up and carried forward by new nations emerging from the shadowlands of barbarism.

"But if the American nation should go down, whence may we expect a new birth of progress? Where shall we look for a virile stock fit to take up the tasks of world leadership? It may be that the yellow millions of the Far East contain the potency of an indefinite progress and stability. That is a vague and uncertain possibility. Whatever that potency may be, it behooves us, the bearers of Western civilization, to take most anxious thought that we may prevent, if possible, the decline and decay which have been the fate of all the civilized nations of Europe and of the Near and Middle East."

Professor McDougall thinks the position of the United States in the matter of birth control is "remarkably and uniquely disastrous. The educated classes, seem to cultivate and practice the principles of birth control more assiduously than any other class of persons of the civilized world, while, strange to say, they maintain laws which forbid the extension of the knowledge of such principles to the mass of the people."

He believes that the United States, with the possible exception of Japan, has the best chance of averting the decline of its national civilization of any country in the world, through the increasing knowledge of human nature and human society, and our belief in the value of science and its application to human life.

In an appendix entitled, "The New Plan," Professor McDougall offers the following remedy: "Our aim in general must be to favor increase of the birth rate among the intrinsically better part of the population, and its decrease among the inferior part. We have overwhelmingly strong grounds for believing that in this country (and in almost all the countries of western civilization) the birth-rate of the inferior half of the population is very considerably greater than that of the superior half: and this greater birth rate is only very partially compensated by a higher death rate. The problem of eugenics is to equalize the birth-rate of the two halves (while all efforts to reduce to a minimum the death-rate of both halves are continued), or, if possible, to reverse the prevailing tendency and to secure, in the superior half of the population, a higher birth rate than that of the inferior half.

"If the present state of affairs shall continue the civilization of America is doomed to rapid decay. If equilization of the birth rate of the two halves can be brought about the country may face the future with some hope of continued prosperity. If the present tendency can be reversed and the birth rate of the superior half be maintained as a higher rate than the inferior half, then even though the difference be but slight, the American people may face the future with a well-grounded hope that they are building up the greatest nation and the most glorious civilization that the world has ever seen, a nation capable of assuming the leadership of the world and securing the reign of justice, freedom and kindness throughout every land."

The bearing of the immigration problem on our future civilization is obvious, he adds, and he favors strict measures against the immigration of "all but those persons who are in every way well fitted to become good American citizens in the full sense of the words."

Professor McDougall proposes to keep down the birth rate in the inferior half of the population by birth control, and to increase the birth rate of the superior half by a system that would automatically increase the income of a family of "the selected classes" with the addition of each child. He says it would be possible to create a national fund to carry out his scheme and to finance it either by taxation or the beneficence of rich men, after the fashion of the Carnegie pension funds for selected university professors.

As to Race Jealousy.

Expansion of population was one of eight "intellectual factors" generating racial antipathy discussed by Professor McDougall at his round table conferences. The others were sex jealousy, the assertion or expression of a claim of superiority, associated with race pride; the claim of political ascendancy, differences of religious belief, economic rivalry or exploitation of situations leading to slavery, nationalism, and the desire to defend a national culture against disintegration.

The attitude of the Japanese toward white people showed, he said, how the demand for racial purity and the claim to racial superiority were closely linked. "The Japanese, who have a strong feeling of racial worth, achievement and capability, look askance upon the white wife coming to their island. Also in the United States the feeling of superiority of the whites makes him regard a person with even the smallest amount of colored blood as a colored person. In South America, by contrast, the person with any white blood is regarded as white.

"Race pride becomes potent when two contacting races, although possessing different cultures, possess equal or almost equal pride of race. When two contacting races differ greatly in their assertion of race pride there is little conflict. This is true in Borneo in the contact of the natives with British officers. The opposite situation exists in India in the contacts of the high-class Brahmans with the British. Also the relations of the Japanese and Western people illustrate the antipathy arising when races of equal pride touch one another."

Professor McDougall discussed the question of intermarriage between the races. He quoted the views of H. G. Wells, who believes in the essential equality of all races and in an eventual universal miscegenation, and of A. P. Schultz, who says that civilization demands racial purity and that all interbreeding is degenerative. His own ideas, Professor McDougall said, were that some excellent individuals might be produced by interbreeding and that the case for the inferiority of half-breeds to both very unlike races has not been established.

"But we have good experimental evidence," he continued, "that in respect of one of the most important hereditary qualities of mankind, intelligence or adaptability, races differ appreciably. There is evidence that in the progeny of races different in respect of this quality, the degree of the innate intelligence is correlated with the proportion of blood. On the other hand, crossings between similar races are probably productive of variability and on the whole are biologically beneficial. If this view is correct, it affords some ground for the maintenance of the color line in so far as it tends to prevent the crossing of widely unlike races. Yet the negro races should be assisted in every possible way in their efforts for further development and higher culture."

Maintaining Race Standards.

The desire to defend national culture from disintegration by the lowering of standards of life through the immigration of peoples of lower culture, Professor McDougall went on, was another cause of racial antipathy. "The United States is an example," he said. "The difficulty of assimilation has recently become recognized, and the dangers arising from large groups of people with unlike ideas and ideals have been realized. Undoubtedly one of the causes of the downfall of the Roman Empire was the destruction of native culture by the incursions of new cultures from all parts of the Empire."

Dr. McDougall pointed out that economic rivalry was an important factor in causing racial antipathy. If there had been no restriction on Oriental immigration in the last few decades, and if immigration from Europe had been unrestricted since 1913, he said, we probably should have 50,000,000 Orientals and 5,000,000 more southern and southeastern Europeans in the United States than we have.

"Their effect on wages and hence on the standard of living in America would be immense," he added. "Such a possibility is a question of ethics and international politics. Further migration or the continued introduction of machine industry into China and India must affect the standard of life in Europe and America unfavorably. The maintenance of an intelligent nationalism is necessary to prevent such a decline."

"ONE-HUNDRED-PERCENTISM" IN THE NORTH

Birmingham Reporter

By William Pickens

In the North, East and West, Mr. Colored Man, they are not coming after you (yet) with tar and feathers, or whip and rope. They are coming, first, in the way in which they can come and get away with it—after your job, after your child's seat in the unsegregated school, after your half-equal accommodations in public places, after your elective or appointive office of any kind. Once they get your status lowered in these ways, then the tar and feathers, the rope and the convenient limb will be not only probable but inevitable. It is only a degraded people that can be so treated, and the first move, therefore, will naturally and instinctively be to degrade you. 10-20-23

O, they will not think this all out. Some of them, most of them, have not got that much power of thought. Some few of them will even think and protest honestly that they do not intend any such thing. But this is the natural and instinctive procession of acts and events on the road to utter oppression. These things lead in one direction. The one oppression, if "got away with," becomes the reason and the inspiration for the next. In a way each step in oppression makes the next step necessary. Even those members of the oppressing group, who may be opposed to the first step, will become advocates of the second, because the first will have changed both the conditions and their psychology in the matter. Some of them who were opposed to school—segregation at all at first—will be in favor of high school and college segregation after the grammar schools are all fully segregated. The whites who are at present opposed to Jim Crow cars will be in favor of it, or tolerant to the idea, after every other public privilege has Jim Crow.

This "one hundred per cent" nuisance and Ku Klux menace is working underground at first, outside of Oklahoma, Texas, and others of its strongholds. It must have a period of "mining and sapping" in the more civilized parts of the country.

After this work is thoroughly done—and it won't be long, if it is not vigorously opposed and checked—the next step will be open defiance to the rights of "those who are alien" to the invisible power.

Here in an Indiana city, this breed of "Americanism" is raising sand because a German painter, who is now an American citizen, perhaps, has won the contract to paint a public building. They say: "Of course, the war is over, but——" and they proceed to show that it is NOT over. If they would starve the Teuton descendant, they would starve the descendants of Africa. As it is, the Germans whom the brown boys shot at in 1918, and happened to miss, can come over now and have much more freedom anywhere in Indiana than those brown boys can have.

Do not fool yourself, Mr. Colored Man; Ku Kluxism has you at the very bottom of its scheme of things. Ask them to take "white supremacy" off their list, and await their reply.

Charge Race Education Is One-Sided

Pittsburgh Courier

Industrialism and Professionalism Making Race Top-Heavy, Survey Shows. 12-8-23

(Special to The Pittsburgh Courier)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 6.—Beginning with the first week in December, the American Federation of Negro Students, the Youth Movement of the race, launches its first national campaign for a Bigger and Better Negro Business in America.

The recent study of the board of the movement, together with a report of the student conference at Howard University last spring, have shed important information as to the past, present and perhaps the future development of the race.

According to this report the race as a whole is being educated one-sided, and lacks a fundamental part found in all successful races. Says the Youth Movement: "At one extremity of the race is found professional education and upon the other extreme is found industrialism, which makes emphasis upon trades and agriculture."

This sweeping indictment of the educational policy of the race or the lack of one, comes as a result of a year of special study and follows close upon a survey which was made by the youth movement. Continues the movement: "An alarming majority of the students now in our schools and colleges are preparing to enter the professional world. The average youth in school or upon the street today when asked his plans for the future reveals the common notion of becoming a doctor or a dentist. 12-8-23

The great emphasis placed upon professions and industrial education during the last 30 years has caused the race to be relatively top-heavy with professional men and heavy-bottomed with semi-skilled and largely unskilled workers. This partly accounts for almost a total absence of business men and artisans, the source of strength of all great races. Virtually no emphasis nor stress has been exercised upon the youth of the race to enter the business field."

Today throughout the United States enterprises are springing up with a speed unequaled in any decade since emancipation. Not withstanding, avers the Youth Movement, there is a sad shortage of qualified persons to man the jobs.

In November questionnaires sent out to insurance companies, banks, fraternal societies and productive enterprises similar to the Madam Walker company, brought to light the fact that the greatest difficulty of Negro Business today is to secure competent workers. Each enterprise is compelled to expend its small resources in fitting employes for mere rudiments of the enterprise.

It was found that less than 10 per cent of our colleges make any kind of definite provision for business training. Compared with the professionally prepared it was found that on the average the previous time spent in preparation by the business man or woman from grocer to banker would not reach the eighth grade, while the time spent by the doctor, dentist or lawyer today averages 20 years—or about three times the preparation period of the average person in the business field.

The investigation of the youth movement revealed that several of the race's big businesses are forced to go to the other race.

In order to secure the services of certain trained business men not found in the race the prices paid for these services ranged from $1,800 upward and in many cases were for less than a year's work. This is an indisputable indication that if our youth prepare for the business world, employment is certain and at a fair price, plus the opportunity to grow with the business he works to develop.

In order to fill this gap in the race the youth movement has sent out the call to the youth of the race in our schools and colleges throughout the United States to help make a better and better Negro business in America. In the present day the youth movement makes clear to the public that its purpose is to encourage and stimulate preparation for the business world, but not to discourage professional nor industrial education, as these two are yet greatly needed in the race. Nevertheless, the attitude of the youth of the race toward professionalism as the vocation offering the greatest return for effort invested must be modified.

The curricula of our educational institutions must be changed so as to provide for the economic development of the present and coming generations.

The American Federation of Negro Students has begun the dissemination of literature into our schools, colleges, churches and other social agencies. Teachers, parents and preachers are urged to join the youth movement in this common effort. Beginning with the first week in December sermons, lectures and fireside talks designed to consider business as a calling, will be stressed throughout the country.

In another biting criticism, the charge is made that the Negro race is not free, that it lacks economic, social and political freedom.

The youth movement, starting nearly 15 months ago, held its first conference at Howard University during the spring of 1923. It was attended by delegates from Tennessee, Virginia, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia. Its corresponding secretary is George W. Doodman of Lincoln University, Pennsylvania.

SOLVING THE PROBLEM.

As long as there are negroes and whites in the same territory, or as long as there are orientals and occidentals, or as long as there are any races so divergent as these dwelling together there will be racial problems. The color problem is deep-seated in humanity, and always offers opportunity for friction. It is quite reasonable, however, to assume that where there is the necessity for living in the same locality there must be found a basis upon which the two races may dwell together in the greatest measure of harmony. It is not well for either race to be suspicious or fearful of the other. It is not well for either to act unjustly toward the other.

The south will always have a racial problem. There is no escape from this situation. When negroes were slaves the problem was simple enough. Under freedom the problem becomes complicated. There can be no social equality in the ordinary sense of the word. There must be at the same time the fullest opportunity for equality of opportunity within racial lines.

There is a distinct place in the economic life of the south for each of the races. That place makes allowance for full development on the part of each race, within the legitimately placed racial boundaries. There need not be riots and conflict and suspicion and injustice. If these things are to be avoided, however, the problem must be attacked in a spirit of good-will on both sides.

Since the late world war, in which the colored soldiers showed themselves courageous fighters, there has been a great deal of friction, growing directly out of the situation which was developed in war. Some of the returning negro soldiers expected rather more deference than they had a right to expect under all the circumstances. Some of the white people were willing to grant less consideration than the colored soldiers had a right to expect. The result was more strife, rather than less, than there was before the war.

As a direct result of the situation there has come about the organization of what is known as the Inter-racial Commission, which has set up committees in every southern state, and in eight hundred separate counties. The work which these committees have been able to accomplish in creating mutual understanding has become very valuable. They have not undertaken to use any authority, but have sought to find points of friction, and by consideration of every phase of the situation to propose plans of action which have in almost every case proven most acceptable.

The Inter-racial Commission includes some of the leading men and women of both races. They recognize the seriousness of the problem. They know that it cannot be solved by the imposition of injustice, or by the use of force. They know that the races must adjust themselves to each other. They know that for the safety of the white as well as the colored people, the best living conditions must be provided for all. They are aware that there must be industry and intelligence on both sides. As to the method of meeting this situation Robert B. Eleazer, educational director of the commission, says:

> The commission does not seek to put over a program of race relations. It does not say to any community: "This must you do with relation to the Negro." It insists upon one thing only: That in every community where race relations are an issue the best people should take the matter seriously in hand, with the determined purpose to seek a Christian solution of every problem as it arises, and to substitute good will and justice for the spirit of distrust and suspicion that is fraught with so great danger to both races. With a proposition so sound there can be no disagreement. With rare exceptions, therefore, the commission has no dificulty in securing the hearty cooperation of the best people in the community.

If the negro problem is ever solved it will be in some such way as this. It will not be by the cultivation of suspicion and hatred. It will be by adjustment on both sides to a situation that cannot be removed.

WASHINGTON D C PATHFINDER

Discuss Problems of Negro Race

The progress of the negro race in the last 60 years was lauded by speakers at the 25th annual convention of the Negro National Educational Congress held at Washington. Senator Spencer of Missouri said this record could be surpassed during the next half century by the unceasing application of patience, education and prayer. "Be patient when some states act unjustly with you," he warned, "for the time will come when the rights of American citizens, white or black, will be safeguarded by the entire nation. Remember Lincoln and practice patience, suffering injustice if necessary." Senator Fess of Ohio declared that there is no deeper or more sincere loyalty to America than that found in the negro race. "We don't find bolshevism among the negroes," he remarked; "we don't find anti-government movement among the negroes, nor do we find anything among them that is un-American. When I stop to realize the short time that the black men have been citizens and think of the progress they have made in that time, I know there is nothing in the world that can equal it." He rapped the Ku Klux Klan by contending that "any organization which denies the negro race what it wants for itself is un-American."

President Harding was unable to attend but sent a letter in which he said that the education of the negro is "precisely the right approach to the great problem." He wrote: "The same might be said of every other race or nation but it is particularly true of the colored people because they have been so little favored with educational opportunities and therefore have a great deficit in this regard to be made up." Letters were also read from the governors of Montana, Iowa, Illinois, Oklahoma, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Kansas.

Senator McCormick of Illinois, referring to the lynching question, declared that "once the Christian people in America are awakened to the evil that has been going on within their country, they will go far to put an end to it. Commenting on the employment of negroes in the U. S. treasury department, Harley Speelman, registrar of the treasury, said in employing so many he was only doing his duty and that he was highly pleased with their work.

The negro race should concentrate in some place where it can gain economic and political control, in the opinion of Rev. Henry Callis of the African M. E. church. He remarked that Virginia logically belongs to the negro and that the race should seek to control that state. He said if the negroes would talk less and work more, in 25 years Virginia would be in their hands. "No race can become great that has not got its feet in the soil," he continued. "Negroes should work the truck farms, prune the orchards, dredge for oysters and manufacture the products in that state. white people are waiting for some negro that has backbone enough to lead his people to political control. A few negroes with a few thousand dollars could start such a movement." He called attention to President Harding's Alabama speech in which the chief executive said: "I see no way for the black man but to fall in behind the white man until such time as he can control the legislators."

Any move to change the designation "negro" should be thwarted according to John Painter of Colorado. "I am proud of the name," he told the session; "we sprang from it, we are it and we can't get away from it, and the thing for us to do is not to change it but to work to make it mean the best in citizenship." As a result of a recent trip around the world in which he studied the conditions of the black and brown races, Rev. Charles Stewart of the African M. E. church told his hearers that no country in the world gives the negro better opportunities than the United States. He said that if the negroes build homes, become producers, seek education and elevation America will stand ready to recognize them as good citizens. Dr. Stewart declared that since Booker T. Washington there has been no man of whom it could be said "he represents the negroes." He warned against the negro dabbling in petty and cheap politics. "Politics of the right sort should be encouraged," he said, "but the grafting, vote-buying variety should be stamped out, and the sooner it is done the better off the race will be."

In discussing negro secret societies, Miss Maggie Walker, president of a negro bank at Richmond, declared such organizations are beneficial and there are not enough. However, Prof. J. E. Johnson of the Prentiss Normal and Industrial School, Prentiss, Miss., believes there are too many and that they put too much expense on the ... Sweet of Colorado sent a tele... the convention inviting negro ... from the South to work in his sta... session went on record as favo... 'identical education for white and bla... youths" and declared its faith in the U. S. congress.

J. Silas Harris, of Missouri, who was elected president of the congress, argued that the future does not hold out much hope for the race unless a better relationship is established between the whites and blacks. He said that the present relationship is precarious. A resolution of the convention concluded: "We unalterably declare our faith in God and the religion of Jesus Christ as the saving element of the race, of the nation and of humanity."

NEGRO PROBLEM, SOCIAL, NOT RACIAL, SPEAKER SAYS

The speaker at the meeting of the Rochester branch of the Association for the Advancement of the Colored People Sunday afternoon in Mt. Olivet Baptist church was Ralph B. Ingalsbe, who told his audience that their problem is not a racial one, but a social one, and that race equality and social equality are quite different things.

"The real problem is the question: What is the best thing to do, in the light of human conduct, in the face of existing conditions? We have go to admit that there is a physical and aesthetic prejudice among the whites to refuse negroes in places of business on equal terms of employment with white people, but I believe the time is coming when these prejudices will be wiped out. Your problem is not to combat these handicaps now but to prepare yourselves for the time when they shall exist no longer."

Mrs. R. S. Ball, president of Rochester branch, conducted a preliminary business meeting and then turned it over to Rev. James Kose, pastor of Mount Olivet church and a former president of the association, who introduced the speaker.

MUST TREAT HIM BETTER.

Jacksonville Times-Union.

Says the Montgomery Advertiser: "A negro can find his way to the kitchen of a southern home much easier than he can up Nawth. Up Nawth the negro may enter through the front but he must stop before reaching the kitchen." True enough, but it is a mistake to think all a negro wants is to find his way to the kitchen. With many a handout is not as important as fair treatment.

...NEGRO IS LOYAL TO WHITE

Colored Recreational Worker Declares There Has Been No Change In 60 Years.

"The American negro of today is just as loyal and friendly to the white Anglo-Saxon people, just as honest, just as true as they were sixty years ago," declared Seymour Carroll, recreational director of the American Red Cross at the U. S. Veterans' Hospital No. 26 last night at the Hospital Day exercises at the veterans hospital in response to an address delivered by Mrs. P. E. Scott, of Newberry, chairman of the hospital committee of the South Carolina State Federation of Women's Clubs, who paid a tribute to the negroes of South Carolina.

Continuing his address Carroll declared that were it not for the Christian friendliness of the far-seeing white people his race could not have made the splendid success that it has made in religion, education, commerce, industry and health. He paid a glowing tribute to the white women of the state for the co-operation that had been given the hospital, and what they had done for the colored patients at the hospital.

The colored Red Cross recreational building was well filled when the opening exercises started at 7 o'clock. Several musical selections were rendered by the students from Furman University and the Greenville Womans College. The invocation was delivered in keeping with the spirit of the day by the Rev. J. W. Taylor, D. D., pastor of the Wesley M. E. church of Greenville. In his welcome address Col. James E. Dedman, commanding officer of the hospital, thanked the colored visitors for the co-operation that had been given the hospital and gave them an official welcome to the hospital. Other talks were made by Margaret H. Bright, Supt. St. Luke Colored Hospital, and Hattie L. Duckett, of the city. The speaker of the evening was Dr. Matilda A. Evans, a negro woman of Columbia, who is president of the South Carolina State Colored Medical association, who pleaded with her audience for better health, better friendship, and a greater program of service to all mankind. Several selections of negro melodies were furnished from the student body of the Union high school.

From 5:30 to 6:30 the colored visitors were tendered an informal reception at the Red Cross club where refreshments were served. Large crowds of negroes attended the exercises yesterday afternoon and heard the address of Maj. William F. Robertson, commander Greenville post of the American Legion. Guides carried visitors through the hospital and they received a cordial welcome at the hospital along with other guests of the hospital.

FRIENDS ARE TOLD OF INTERESTS OF NEGRO

Yearly Meeting to End Sessions Here This Afternoon

PRAISES PINCHOT

By Arabella Carter

The interests of the colored race were presented at both morning and evening sessions of Friends' Yearly Meeting at Race Street yesterday.

At the open meeting for worship Anne Biddle Stirling, an earnest member of the committee on the interests of the colored people, presented at some length the problem of their influx from the south at the rate of 10,000 a month. She spoke of the unreasoning prejudice against the negro and the insistent effort to keep him "in his place," as some assert. She mentioned the effort of the negro to keep his blood pure; and said: "If the negro blood is not kept pure, it is not due to the negro, for 99 per cent of them would say 'amen' to President Harding's pronouncement regarding amalgamation of races." She declared the white race plays the part of the big mongrel dog in his treatment of the black race.

"They want recognition and justice and get the cold shoulder and contempt. This is an acid test of our religion to show how we treat the matter," she said, and urged attention be given.

Dr. Joseph Swain, former president of Swarthmore College, followed this by calling attention to the great problem of the races as he saw it in a recent visit to India, and told the story of a Brahman girl and her struggles to find God and peace. "India," he said, "will never be saved by Hindooism, but by Christianity preached by its own people."

Dr. O. Edward Janney spoke from the text, "Speak to my people, that they go forward," and said that lessons may be drawn from far countries, but our problems are here and now. "The Society of Friends has a mission in the world—a message of simple faith to be given, and we must be true to the vision. Peace is not a testimony, but a fundamental."

Anna Travilla Speakman spoke of Sojourner Truth and her boundless faith, which rebuked Frederick Douglas when depressed by saying, "God is not dead." She was one of four women members of this meeting who attended the international congress recently at The Hague, and she told the story of a French woman there who had supplanted the bitterness in her heart toward the Germans by love—had lost her old self and found the new, and ended by saying, "The healing of the nations must come thru love."

Daniel Batchellor, of Baltimore, told the old story of the foolish virgins in a new way. "These lamps signify the religion of services and ceremonies; some are elaborate and some plain and simple, but the question is, have they oil in them? If not, light cannot be given. We Friends bear plain, crude lamps; have we the oil which is the spirit of worship? If the flame is dying, let us seek the source of spiritual oil daily. The bridegroom is always on the way; are we meeting him with light, or are we of those who slumber, and, having no oil, lose the opportunity?"

Elizabeth F. Newlin, Caroline J. Worth, William MacWatters and Isaac Michener also spoke.

The business sessions were resumed in the afternoon separately, one feature being a visit to men's meeting by Charlotte C. Talcott, of Canada, accompanied by Elizabeth F. Newlin.

Women's meeting considered the report of the committee on philanthropic labor in its separate departments—temperance and anti-narcotics, social morality, defectives and delinquents. The first section has been most active in aiding enforcement by public addresses, posters and printed pamphlets for distribution and taking advertising space in papers for propaganda material. Attention had been given during the year to the evil of gambling, in the effort to eliminate the custom so frequently practiced of taking chances on articles in order to raise money for worthy causes—a practice deplored and condemned by many speakers.

Mabel D'Olier asked for a pronouncement on the matter of giving prizes to children as reward for exceptional work done; and the distinction was made between the reward for real intellectual effort and prizes for prowess in games was clearly drawn, the former being considered good, the latter might be permissible tho undesirable. Among those discussing this question, Hannah Clothier, Lucy Biddle Lewis, Anna J. F. Hallowell and Hannah Braddock were heard.

In regard to religious education in day schools, which is being carried on in sections, thru the efforts of Friends, the clerk said: "If we are to continue to rear Christian men and women, the children must have religious instruction. Our First-day schools cannot do it all in the time allotted. There is not much hope for the future without such procedure."

The educational committee report brought out the fact of the two schools now under joint committees from Arch and Race Street Friends, and the consideration of having the schools in another locality so joined. Edith Wilson Jackson urged women to show more interest in home schools. "Unless," she said, "our own schools are better than the public schools they have no reason for continuance." The consideration of the general conference report was deferred until this morning.

Dr. Jesse H. Holmes felt the duties of citizenship were fulfilled only by knowing what we do—without knowledge it is only form. The problems of life demand that we understand the viewpoint of both sides. Dr. O. E. Janney deplored the fact that Friends do not take more part in political service.

In discussing the temperance query the report of the philanthropic committee was also read and briefly reviewed by the chairman, William C. Coles. In this connection Dr. Nathan Thorne, of Moorestown, asked that a letter of commendation be prepared and sent by this body to President Harding, Governor Pinchot and Commissioner Haynes for their service in support of the Volstead act. This was referred to a joint committee of men and women to prepare.

William C. Biddle spoke hopefully of the many evidences of the coming together of branches of Friends, and cited the Woolman School, at Swarthmore; Friends' Union, at Pennsylvania State College; Friends' Summer School, at Haverford, held for the first time jointly this summer, and the first eastern conference, to be held at Westtown this year, under the charge of Young Friends of all branches. "Let us forget all differences," he said, "and go forward."

The last evening session was under care of the committee on interests of the colored race, and embraced an address on "Problems in the South and the South's Awakening," by W. T. B. Williams, who from his twenty years' experience in education declared a new day is dawning. A keener appreciation of the negro now is seen in the south. He paid tribute to the early work of Friends, which, he felt, had helped to bring about this condition. Jessie Fauset gave readings from her writings following the address.

UNIQUE PROPOSAL.

The Constitution
Atlanta Georgia
JUN 22 1923

The proposal has been made that a conference of all the leading American religious and racial groups be held in Kansas City.

The suggestion was originally made by The Outlook and it has already excited a great deal of interest throughout the country. The Kansas City Star and The Times of the same city have very enthusiastically grasped the proposition as both an opportunity and a test.

That something may come of such a unique and perhaps idealistic suggestion seems probable.

There is no mistaking the rising tide for a greater democracy in this country and for a deeper love for and a more respectful attitude toward the nation's fundamental law.

There is no mistaking the evidences of a passing of that intolerance which in a measure has reached the stage of bigotry in some quarters, and among some groups, in this country.

The value of such a conference as suggested, however, could only stand upon the opportunity such a commingling of different groups could have in exploding the myths and nightmares that afflict too many groups of people.

And in the fact that certain disturbing groups rely upon publicity to further their "isms," the thought is uppermost that the conference might prove a boomerang for its worthy-minded proponents.

Anything to refresh the true American spirit should be encouraged. But letting the bars down, through a dignified channel, for the personal exploitation of a bunch of radicals, or for some of the notoriety-seeking ultra-Puritans of the Plymouth Rock country to jibe the cavaliers because of an alleged "negro issue" might be putting weapons in the hands of character assassins.

The thought behind the proposal is good. It is more altruistic perhaps than practical. But if such a gathering is held, on the broad scope suggested, interests that live upon distrust and not upon trust, and thrive upon prejudice and not upon fact, will find an avenue for propaganda that they have coveted but not heretofore had. And there is the danger.

"Professed good intentions" do not mean anything with the self-constituted "leaders" of many of the radical racial and so-called religious sects in this country and the weapon such people most fear and despise is that of ignoring them in the dignified public prints. That which they seek most is recognition and publicity.

If such a thing is possible as getting together just those potential and worthwhile groups that should be linked in a stronger bond of cooperation, looking to strengthening the love of all our people for the tenets of America's constitution, and the ideals of popular government, then we are for it.

...D AUTHOR WRITES HISTORY OF KLAN.

New York, June 22.—J. A. Rogers, author of "From Superman to Man," "Where Nature Leads," and other literary works, has completed "The Ku Klux Spirit," a brief outline of the notorious Klan both past and present. Hubert Harrison noted lecturer, says the book is well worth reading by whites and blacks.

Race Problem — 1923
United States

Republic and are entitled to every right and privilege that any other citizen enjoys, be he black or white, gray or grizzled.

Dr. Du Bois, in his remarkable production in the Century Magazine, claims that very few of this class of citizens of color are embraced in the Garvey movement. If this is a fact, then we see no reason for this undue agitation over the remarkable leader from the West Indies. To charge that he is a nonentity and has few followers of native birth and then to level all of the machinery of the national government upon him and his organization is to believe the statement and to say that the organization controlled by him is making rapid headway in this country of ours.

Personally speaking, from what we have heard from the Hon. Marcus Garvey's own lips in an address delivered in this neighborhood, he is not stirring up race feeling among the white folks against the Negroes, he is stirring up bitter feeling between one wing of the black folks and the other. One set believes in allegiance and eternal residence in this country, their homeland; the other believes in setting up a Republic in Africa, where they will exercise all of the power and authority over their own people that the white folks exercise over all races in this country.

We believe in meeting Garvey's propaganda with the propaganda of reason and argument. When it comes to the use of force in a Republic that proclaims its doctrine of free speech and that government should exist with the consent of the Governed, we radically disagree. We repeat,—any one, who would stir up hatred and ill feeling between the black and the white races is the enemy of both. Down here, colored folks are making friends with the white folks and white folks with the colored folks. Life is too short for us to pursue any other course.

One thing more: we saw on last Sunday afternoon, an humble colored woman nearly ninety years of age interred in Woodland Cemetery in this City. A white funeral director handled her remains and white pall-bearers carried her remains to their last resting place. No propaganda of any one can break this bond of union in the Southland. But, as to the North, that is another question. We are speaking for the section in which we reside.

The following extract from Acts. Chapter V. explains itself

34. Then stood there up one in the Council a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of law, had a reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostle forth a little space.

35. And he said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching men.

36. For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be some body; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves who was slain; and all, as many as obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought.

37. After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of taxing, and drew away much people after him; he also perished; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

38. And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone; for if this counsel or work be of men, it will come to naught:

39. But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.

And to him they agreed.

Dr. Du Bois' plan of meeting propaganda with propaganda, Garveyism with Garveyism is all right and justifiable, but for the United States Government to interfere until it is plainly apparent that the Garvey movement is a treasonable one and in plain violation of the statutes would be to make a martyr of him and to give his cause a recognition and support to which his enemies declare it is not entitled.

GIRL IS ATTACKED.

Commercial-Appeal

GADSDEN, Ala., Jan. 22.—Miss Sallie Westbrook, a Gadsden girl, is reported in a critical condition at a local hospital today as a result of injuries alleged to have been inflicted when she was attacked by two negro girls last night. Miss Westbrook told authorities she was knocked down and then stamped by her assailants. Alice Lynn, 14, and Ethel Rush, 16, are held in prison awaiting outcome of the young woman's injuries.

It Seems to Me

By Heywood Broun

"I wish," writes Long John Silver, "that all veteran first-nighters might attend a play being staged in Sing Sing Prison and learn therefrom the art of being a spectator at a play. If some way might be contrived to send the regular theatre-goer to Ossining for a six months' stay, I am sure that the golden age of the theatre would begin shortly after. Until Sunday night, when I sat in the chapel there and watched 1,100 men demonstrate the art of the audience, I never realized the part that people out front play.

"Here were hundreds of men with their centres of apperception rasped to the quick by their sense of cloistration. Each was enjoined, as a member of the Mutual Welfare League, to keep the peace. Better than this, every spectator had a super-sense of the ironical values in life. The play was Channing Pollock's 'The Fool,' with the regular cast—a show with a lot of sermonizing and some first rate theatrical thrills.

"The curtain rose and the action started. Every man sat like a stone, getting the lay of the set, and for five minutes of the first act one might have been in an empty house at a rehearsal. Then things started popping among these men. I'm sure Pollock won't mind my saying that they got more out of the show than he put into it, at certain points.

"They never laughed at the wrong place and, curiously enough, there was no first flutter of discerning hand-smacks and then a swelling volume. Every man in the house got the right thing at the first second following its release. The applause began with the steady beat of summer rain upon a tent wall, and diminished as abruptly, with no ushers in the back of the theatre trying to make a record number of curtain calls for the star.

"I couldn't get the idea out of my head that I was at a war-time camp. Most of the men were young; they came in wearing flannel shirts and sweaters open at the neck, and they greeted one another about as soldiers do when through with a routine day's drill. There were lots of good faces there. I thought of Thoreau's counter question when Emerson asked him why he was in jail. 'Why are you not here?' some impish renegade kept nudging into my brain.

"I asked the prison keeper how many prisoners were permitted to attend the show. 'All,' he said, 'except the twenty-six who are condemned to die.'

"'But,' said I, 'you do not mean to imply that you and I are immortal?'

"The keeper said the thing was too gruesome. It seemed as though society was a bit ashamed of the condemned and, having struck them, wanted them out of sight for the rest of the time. The keeper told me of us we'd be surprised to know some of the terrible things some of those boys in the audience had been sent up for. I imagined the boys were equally surprised after they realized the gravity of their offenses.

"I wish these fellows could have more good shows of them. It seems to me, are in Sing Sing because they haven't been able to get their sense of dramatic values adjusted. Will some one howl if I say the condemned might see a show with no harm done? Nearly all of us in this generation have known nights when we thought the morrow was surely bringing death. I should have greatly liked to have seen 'Liliom,' for instance, the night before a certain attack. And any one who watches the Barrymore Hamlet closely could walk before a firing squad or sit in a hellish chair with far more equanimity for having seen it."

Of course, many of the inmates are in Sing Sing for grave offenses, and yet we believe that there must be some who have been jailed for crimes far more trivial than coughing in the theatre.

Somebody at one of Coué's recent lectures asked if autosuggestion would not be helpful in controlling the group of serious thinkers, and the little Frenchman replied that people who knew his system could easily quell the impulse to cough. It was at this point in the lecture that John Barrymore, sitting in the second row, gazed up in admiration at the little man from Nancy and bowed low to indicate that at last he had come in contact with one of the true benefactors of mankind.

We happen to be acquainted with the case of a New York woman miraculously cured by Coué. For many years she had been lame and now she walks about without effort. We do not know just what condition brought about the lameness and as a matter of fact our anecdote concerns something else. Having been cured of her major disability, she asked Coué to help her in another matter.

"I smoke to excess, possibly a hundred cigarets a day. Can't you break me of the habit by autosuggestion?" she asked.

"Very easily," answered Coué, "but why bother? It is a matter of no importance."

And try as she would she found it impossible to interest him in her desire to escape from nicotine. Later, in London, one of Coué's disciples undertook the task and was eminently successful. The woman of the hundred cigarets a day smokes no more. She cannot. One puff is enough to make her violently ill. Accordingly, we have decided to keep the habit. The cure sounds more terrifying.

"There's a better story about this man Matthews—not so well known, because it has never been told in the newspapers," writes Prescott Warren, "but one which has given much ironic satisfaction to those who know it. Matthews prepared at Andover (incidentally before the application blanks for admission to the school bore a date line 'Race.....') and played on the baseball team. In his next to last year a man named Barnwell of South Carolina (descendant of Senator Barnwell of the forties, was captain. Barnwell refused to eat at the training table with his team, though captain. Sentiment and the school permitted Matthews to eat there, but permitted Barnwell to eat apart.

"For the following season Matthews was elected captain and it is said that Barnwell voted for him. Barnwell went on to Yale and Matthews to Harvard. In the Harvard-Yale series of Matthew's freshman year and Barnwell's sophomore year, Matthews was the first man up in the first game and the first ball pitched he hit on the nose for a home run, and Barnwell, playing centre field, ran a couple of miles to retrieve it."

But it seems to us that Barnwell is the hero of this story. If a young man from South Carolina could change his point of view enough in a year to vote for a Negro for captain of the school team he must have won a great rational victory over an emotional tradition. That is just where Lowell is wrong. We do not believe that race prejudice would be heightened if men of different races lived under the same dormitory roof.

THE NEGRO FACES AMERICA

The Christian Index 11-11-23

Five years ago when the United States entered the world war on the side of the Allies, the black man in America answered the call of his country both by way of the selective draft and as a volunteer. The nation's very life was threatened by forces without and foes within. "Be loyal" was the doctrine preached in every school house and from every pulpit. "We know you have not had a fair deal, but after we win the war America will see to it that all the rights and privileges guaranteed by the Constitution will be yours." This was said by white men, North and South. The Negro went to France and became "fodder" for the guns. He barred the way to Paris, and Negroes died like flies in the Argonne and on other fields of blood. He carried the stars and stripes to victory, knowing that that flag had seen his fathers, mothers, brothers and little sisters shot down like dogs in the rotten boroughs of the North and South. Before the war had fairly started cowardly white men tried to discredit him with the brave Frenchmen, and immedaitely after the armistice plans were set in motion to "keep him in his place."

Soldiers returning home wearing the uniform, and decorations from the impartial French nation were beaten and shot for no other purpose than that they wore decorations and that tended to make a "nigger" feel big.

Four years have gone since the bugles rang out "cease firing" and it seems as if the nation has forgotten the dark day when she stretched out imploring hands to the sable sons of Africa, and reckons not that another day may come, when 12 million black men and women will either be a valued asset or a liability.

The Negro faces America in the year of grace 1923 and asks "What are you going to do about it?"

They say he is unfit for the ballot, forgetting that men who plotted the overthrow of the government and who coined money from the blood of soldiers who died in Flanders fields, vote and brag about it. They say that the Negro is not 100 per cent American, forgetting Ft. Pillow and Petersburg and Ft. Fisher in the Civil war. Yea, even forgetting Crispus Attucks, the Revolutionary hero. They forget San Juan Hill, and the red sands of Carrizal. They forget those "white crosses, row on row, in Fance, yea they forget that his hand has not been stained with the murder of a president or government or that he has ever tried to take a star out of old glory.

A hundred per cent American forsooth, who is he? Is he not the Indian whom the white Christian has robbed and murdered? "The Negro must stay in his place" says one hypocrite that parades under the livery of a priest of the lowly Nazarene. The Negro faces America and asks "What is my place?" During the war no white American in the Argonne or at Dead Man's Hill ever told a black man his place was in the rear, or ever suggested that his place was any where except the front rank.

The Negro feels that if he was good enough to draw a gun or bayonet on the enemies of his country in 1917 he is good enough to draw a cross mark on a ballot in 1923. If he was good enough to ride in a first class coach when going to the shambles of blood, he is good enough now to ride in the same manner.

The black man's "place" in America is the "place" any other American occupies, and to which his education, character or special fitness entitles him.

We hear much of "social equality" these days and white and black speakers tell the world that the Negro does not desire "social equality." That depends upon what is meant by the term. If the white man means by that "social intermingling," or the mongrel-izing the black race, or any approach by either side toward miscegnation the black man utters a hearty Amen. But if "social equality" means that the lowest white prostitute or the most vicious tough of the white race is better than the highest type of Negro womanhod and manhood then the black man hurls it back in the face of the world and brands it as an infamous lie.

The editor wants to see the races kept separate and distinct, we want no "social equality" that dishonors the black woman, or puts the white woman out of her race.

Lynching and burning Negroes is now a national pastime. The government refuses to interfere. In hundreds of towns in the South a black woman is unsafe on the streets at night. She can be insulted by a white tough and if her brother or husband resents it he is shot like a dog. A powerful organization, the Ku Klux Klan has practically outlawed him, and classes him on the same footing with the Jew and Catholic. The black man will accept that combination if forced to, and it will be a mighty nice thing to be linked up with the race of Moses, and Paul and Christ, and with a Church that has always preached and practiced the Fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man.

The Negro faces America with a record as good for loyalty and industry as any other group, with a recod for achievement since 1863 unparalleled by any group so situated in the history of the world.

The Negro Faces America!

A STUDY IN PIGMENTATION

Negro World

By IDA NACHMANOWITZ

(Dedicated to Prof. Herman M. Bernelot Moens, Famous Dutch Anthropologist)

New York

I gaze on yon horizon,
Reflecting, deep in thought,
On man and all the ages—
What have the ages wrought?
3-10/23
The radio, the telephone,
The steamship and the 'plane,
Electric light and telegraph
And artificial rain;

Machinery, canned music, too;
The sciences and arts—
All epoch-making miracles,
But miracles sans hearts.

The pyramids of Egypt,
The Sphinx of mystery;
And war and peace and valorous deeds,
Way back in history;

And Bible names, significant
Of prehistoric date;
But I wonder who in heaven or hell
Invented racial hate.

The paleface hates the Negro,
The Gentile hates the Jew;
The Catholic hates the Protestant,
Though differences are few.

And the Ku Klux Klan hates everyone
Who's not a hypocrite.
They kill and plunder, rob and rape,
And they're punished not a bit.

The black man and the foreigner,
The Catholic and the Jew,
Are all among the victims
Of the Ku Klux Klan's ado!

And Justice, blind and crippled,
With blinded eyes she weeps.
The dove of peace attempts to fly,
But, broken wingede, it creeps

Into a hole, to die away,
Away from Mammon's strife—
Behold what radiance from afar,
So dazzling, bright with life.

On yon horizon suddenly
Appears mysteriously—
An optical illusion,
Or a vision fair to see?

Is it, indeed, a wondrous dream,
Or bright reality—
An inter-racial city,
From prejudices free?

No Ku Klux Klan to torture,
No persecution grim—
Assimilation everywhere,
And suffering grows dim.

And racial hate shall vanish,
Forever, evermore,
And justice then will ope her eyes,
So blinded heretofore.

The dove of peace shall fly again
With a laurel to the skies,
And worldly strife shall end in peace
And brotherhood shall rise.

A universal brotherhood,
An educated race,
One God for all, and all for one,
'Gainst prejudiced disgrace.

So fear not, oh, ye tortured ones!
The time will come at last
When universal brotherhood
Bedims a hideous past.

And Negroes, Turks and Russians
And Malays and Chinese
And Christians, Jews, Mohammedans,
Will smoke the pipe of peace!

BRYAN ON THE NEGRO QUESTION.

Some weeks ago William Jennings Bryan made a speech in Washington at a dinner of the Southern Society. He spoke on the political policy practiced in the South regarding the Negro and the franchise, and he made the declaration that the South was handling this whole question in the wisest and in the only practical way.

In a recent issue of the New York "Times" Mr. Bryan, whose statements had been commented upon and criticised very widely throughout the northern part of the country, published a statement in which he amplified the views he had expressed at the dinner of the Southern Society. The article in the "Times," from every point of view, is unworthy of the reputation which Mr. Bryan has as a statesman and a man of brains.

Mr. Bryan begins by juggling terms and definitions in an attempt to cause that solid statement in the Declaration of Independence about all men being created equal to vanish into thin air. That statement in the Declaration of Independence has produced more sophistry, perhaps, than any equal number of words ever set down. Volumes have been written to place into the clear and unequivocal words of the Declaration of Independence meanings that were never intended. It ought to be a waste of time to point out that the mind or minds capable of conceiving the Declaration of Independence had sense enough to know that all men are not equal either physically, or intellectually, or even morally; and the Declaration of Independence clears up the whole question by stating specifically upon what grounds all men are equal.

Mr. Bryan dismisses the Declaration of Independence with a gesture that places it among matters purely academic and declares that the question in the South is, which race shall control the government and make the laws under which both shall live. In making such a statement arguing from it, Mr. Bryan does nothing more than set up a straw man. The question as to which race shall control the government is not the question, and probably never will be the question, in the South. Even if every Negro in the South were indiscriminately and in a wholesale manner given the right to vote and exercised the right, it would not be a question of which race would control the government. The Negroes are only one-third the population of the South and one-tenth the population of the United States, and with less wealth, less training, and less organization, how would the question of their controlling either the South or the nation ever arise?

Mr. Bryan continues further with a wholly specious argument. He says:

> "Suppose, for the sake of argument, that no limitations were placed upon suffrage and that the blacks, voting in masse for officials of their own color, took charge of the Government and made laws for both blacks and whites; is there any white man who believes that the laws made under these circumstances would be better for both, or administered with more fairness than now?"

But why suppose such a thing? There is not the slightest reason to believe that if Negroes were given the right to vote in the South the blacks would vote en masse for officials of their own color. Negroes in New York are given the unlimited right to vote and they vote not only for white as well as black candidates but vote very largely for Democratic as well as Republican candidates.

Such statements by Mr. Bryan merely beg the question and make it difficult to believe that he is sincere.

In the matter of equality of suffrage in the South, what is it that the Negro demands? Is he demanding that he be given the unlimited right to vote and that he be sustained in the exercise of that right, regardless of other considerations? Not at all. All that the Negro demands is that he be given the right as an American citizen to vote under the identical qualifications required of other citizens. He cares not how high those qualifications are made—whether they include the ability to read and write, or the possession of five hundred dollars, or a knowledge of the Einstein Theory—just so long as those requirements are impartially demanded of white men and black men.

Mr. Bryan's assumption that if the Negroes in the South voted the laws of the South would not be so good as they are and that this civilization would suffer, is one that is more than open to question. The policy which Mr. Bryan stands for, that is, for the so-called purity of the ballot in the South and the reservation of it to white men only, has been tried for the past forty years; and what are the results? Does the South stand above any other section in the country where all men who meet the qualifications are allowed to vote? Not at all. Of all the sections of the country the South stands at the bottom intellectually, morally, and politically. Intellectually it is a desert, morally and socially it bears the distinction of being the only part of the civilized, nay, even the uncivilized world, where a human being may be burned alive at the stake. Politically it is rotten, and that goes for white men as well as black, for not only are black men disfranchised but white men dare not express their honest political opinions or act in accordance with them.

Let Mr. Bryan meet the issue squarely. He says in his statement that he does not believe it is right for ignorant, unqualified black men to make laws for white men. Does he believe it is right for ignorant, unqualified white men to make laws for black men. Let him answer this question: Does he believe that the black man in the South who meets all of the requirements of citizenship should be denied the vote, and the white man who cannot measure up to such requirements be allowed the vote? We will then know just where Mr. Bryan stands. From the sophistries in his statement in the "Times" we cannot tell.

It is never a very nice thing to impugn any man's motives, but, interpreting Mr. Bryan's remarks on the subject of Negro suffrage in the light of his career as a politician, we are led to believe that he is simply issuing another "Bryan policy" which he hopes will attract votes that will give him the nomination for the presidency if not the office.

SIX NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS AGREE UPON A UNITED FRONT

Leading Civil Rights Bodies Responding To Invitation of Kelly Miller Find Common Ground Against Foes

SIGN AGREEMENT

Conference Stirred By Appeals Of Kelly-Miller, R. B. Moore, James Weldon Johnson, Bagnall, Shaw, Trotter, Briggs and Deep Sense of Duty to Race Effects Harmonious Agreement and Goes Into Permanent Organization.

(Cruader Service)

New York, March 24—History was enacted here today.

The preliminary United Front Conference called by Kelly Miller and the National Equal Rights League proved successful beyond the wildest hopes of its supporters. A new epoch—an epoch of unity and strength—was ushered in for the sorely oppressed Negro American as the six leading champions of his civil and manhood rights, through their duly appointed or elected representatives, signed a concordat this afternoon calling for "the closest co-operation and the most harmonious relationship" among organization which, no matter with what "differences, either of opinions or methods," are nevertheless "all striving for one great common goal."

Sessions lasted two days and the agreement signed was as follows:

We, the undersigned representatives as of the following organizations, The African Blood Brotherhood, The Friends of Negro Freedom, The International Uplift League, The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, The National Equal Rights League, The National Race Congress, assembled in conference in New York City, March 23-24, 1923

Knowing the strength of the forces opposed to justice and fair play for the Americans of African descent, realize that those forces must be met by the closest cooperation and the most harmonious relationship possible among all agencies working for the civil and citizenship rights of Negro Americans.

In order to secure the most effective action and the greatest results, we must guard against the slightest loss of energy from frictions and antagonisms. While each organization should reserve to itself it full autonomy and the use of its own best judgement as to the manner of carrying forward its aims and work we should not allow any differences, either of opinions or methods, to blind us to the fact that we are all striving for one great common goal.

We deplore as harmful and injurious to the best common interest any attitude which implies that loyalty to any one of these organization necessitates antagonism toward any of the others, or that membership in one in any way precludes membership and active interest in the others. It is, thereforetaoin.e Wicice ej

IT IS, THEREFORE, the sense of this Conference that we, the representatives of the above named organizations take active steps to bring about a closer relationship, both in action and in feeling; and

That in the undertakings of those various organizations the cordial support of all shall be given; and

That upon the great fundamental principles for which we all stand there shall be the greatest possible corrolation and concentration of all our forces, that we may present to the common enemy a united front and inspire in the whole race united action.

For the Conference:

The Conference voted for an all-ran gathering to be called before April 1924 at a place to be yet determined. All race organizations will be represented and a committee was given the task of drawing up the basis of representation agenda and working out a complete arrangements.

THE NEGRO, NORTH AND SOUTH

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So much is being written on the negro question by those who are poorly informed that the writer asks, in the interest of fair play, for space in which to reply to certain gratuitous statements contained in an article by Hon. William Jennings Bryan which appeared in THE TIMES of March 18. The caption "Bryan Says North Would Act South on Negro Question," fre epitomizes his argument. "At Southern banquet," said he, "I enf

Bryan's "Liberal" View of the Negro

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN, "liberal" and "progressive," presents his views regarding the Negro in the South through the Times. With the change of a few words his defense of "white supremacy" might have come from Calhoun or Toombs. "The colored people . . . live under the laws that the white people make for themselves as well as for the colored people." If Negroes made the laws would they "be better for both, or (be) administered with more fairness than now"? Republicans moving South act as white Democrats do toward the Negro in the South.

Bryan has offered a justification for class rule and exploitation that is adapted for any age where labor, white or black, has been sweated for the pleasure of a minority. His pretense that laws are made to serve the Negro as well as the white contradicts all the evidence we have of white class rule in the South. What of the debt servitude of Negroes? Is the almost universal penalty of lynching for Negroes assessed against whites? What of the practice of courts sending Negroes into the chain gang to build roads? What of Negroes serving on juries? What of the Negro's testimony against a white man in court?

What is more, this "white supremacy" which he glorifies is the rule of a white minority. Bryan must know that side by side with the Negro in the South there are tens of thousands of poor whites, who have been reduced to the same economic servitude that bears so heavily upon Negro workers. It is not white supremacy that prevails in the South. It is a class supremacy of a minority of white property owners, their lawyers and politicians of the stripe of William Jennings Bryan.

The old traditions of a white aristocracy still prevail in the South. The poor whites and the poor Negroes are regarded and are treated as mudsills of Southern society. If Republicans, as Bryan claims, who move South accept Bryan's views regarding "white supremacy" that merely means that fundamentally there is no difference between a Bryan Democrat and a Harding Republican.

One instinctively revolts against the sanctimonious "Christian" and "liberal" who offers this pious drivel in defense of a daily system of hell for millions of human beings. We prefer Simon Legree, who never added hypocrisy to his brutality.

ny argument by suggesting that Massachusetts would do exactly as Virginia and South Carolina had done if confronted by the same conditions."

The sincerity of this statement may fairly be questioned. Massachusetts has been confronted by similar conditions. Slavery existed here for a time but the Puritan spirit revolted and drove the curse from its shores. The same liberal spirit made it possible for the writer to be twice elected a member of the Massachusetts Legislature in the Back Bay section where there were more than ten white voters to one colored. Can Mr. Bryan point to a like tolerance anywhere in the South?

His declaration that "Republican States of the North never send black men to the United States Senate or House of Representatives," is lacking in poise. The population of Massachusetts is about four million, of which only fifty thousand are of the colored race. This disparity is greater in other Northern States and there is no special significance in the fact that colored men are not preferred for high office. That the discrimination is not confined to color is best attested by Mr. Bryan's own unsuccessful attempts. The Irishman has likewise been tabooed. He has seldom been preferred for high office, except where his numerical supremacy, rather than white, paved the way. Many minds agree that Tammany and other political groups that control large cities are far from ideal, but they have the votes and Mr. Bryan would hardly suggest their disfranchisement.

He asserts that "the race riots in Illinois, the home of Lincoln and Grant, show that race feeling is just as strong in the North as in the South when a condition arises to give it expression." There are probably more colored people in the city of Chicago than in Atlanta, but the riot of a few years ago, largely accentuated by hoodlums, merely clarified the situation and brought the races into more friendly relations. Colored men are among its leading citizens. They hold high elective office, State and municipal, and their right to participate in the Government which their taxes help maintain, is unquestioned. In Harlem, New York, there are more colored people than in Birmingham, Ala., but they vote, are elected and appointed to office and race relations remain most cordial in this Northern city.

People who believe that ours is a republican form of Government will be amazed at this further declaration from the famous Commoner: "In the States where restrictions are placed upon suffrage for the purpose of excluding enough blacks to preserve white supremacy the blacks have the advantage of living under laws the white man makes for himself as well as for the black man." Yes, just the same conditions as in the days of slavery when the white man made laws to govern himself and control his slaves. In 1900, at the city of Indianapolis, before the vision of a Southern Senatorship loomed, he said: "Once admit that some people are capable of self-government and that others are not, and that the capable people have a right to seize upon and govern the incapable, and you make force—brute force—the only foundation of government." Colored men have not sought to rule, but they were drafted, nearly half a million, to fight for democracy. They are taxed and the duties of citizenship are imposed like unto the rest, and no principle, not even self-preservation, can justly be urged in denying them the right to vote on the question of who shall govern and how their taxes shall be fixed.

Another assertion is that "the Republicans of the North are deceiving the blacks for political purposes when they pretend a greater affection for them than is found in the South." Well, what are the facts? The Republican Party under Lincoln liberated the slave, clothed him with all the protection the war amendments to the Constitution could give, and tried to advance him as a citizen.

But the new advocate of white supremacy and race proscription dodges the real issues. He enlarges upon the inferiority of the race, but carefully avoids the cause. With the emancipation of the slave forced upon her, after two and a half centuries of unrequited toil, the South refused to give the children of those slaves a common school training and, had it not been for the generous philanthropy of men and women who established and supported schools for them, their condition would have been appalling. Deny little children an education, shut them out from every helpful social influence and later, when they naturally take the downward path, hold them up to the world as inferior and depraved. * * *

Mr. Bryan will find little response to an appeal which would link Massachusetts with South Carolina on the treatment of the black man, whatever conditions might exist, and if he finds it expedient to preach white supremacy it ought not to be necessary to impugn the motives of the good men and women of the North, many of whom have given their lives and fortunes in an endeavor to help both races. He can render a far greater service to his country and mankind by leading those with whom he is now associated from the old paths of prejudice and hate into the light of a better day. WILLIAM L. REED.

THE CHANGING SOUTH.

(From the State, Columbia, S. C.)

"The Negro does not object to separation but he does object, and rightly so, to the degredation and inferority which segregation some times carries with it."

With this declaration of Dr. Moton, superintendent of Tuskegee Institute, we believe that white men, of the better sort, can and do, in principle, agree. No honest man wishes that the Negro shall receive for his dollar less than a white man receives for it and no decent man wishes a Negro subjected to injustice because he is a Negro.

Practically, separation occasionally deprives the exceptional Negro of conveniences and imposes hardships upon him. The maintenance of a hotel in Columbia for Negroes equal in equipment to the better hotels open to white people is not possible, and, now and then a Negro having the money to "put up" at the best of hotels may come to Columbia. Race separation cannot and will not ,on his occount, be suspended.

It should be, however, the wish and endeavor of white people to bring about better treatment of Negroes wherever and whenever it is practicable. The "day coach" on the railroads used by the Negro should be as clean and comfortable as that provided for whites and white public opinion should be exerted to that end.

Not ever reform can be accomplished in a day. The public schools for the Negroes can not be raised in a year to the desirable standard but in the South, in South Carolina, the body of white men who would have them mproved is steadily increasing. Con cern for the health of the Negro pop ulation is growing, too, and the numbers of those prepared to co-operate with Dr. Moton receive additions constantly.

Common sense and patience are required on the part of the Negroes. If it seems to them that their way is hard, they should not forget that the way of many "white folks" is hard and that not all discomforts and miseries are racial. There may be found in South Carolina communities of Negroes much better situated so far as living conditions count than some communities of white in other parts of the state. There are cities in which the schools for Negroes are as well supported as are the schools for whites in some of the country neighborhoods.

In separation, the Negro is entitled to what he earns. To Dr. Moton's formula there will be no objection raised and, as time passes, the disposition will be stronger in the South to treat the Negroes not only with justice but with generosity.

Race Problem— 1923.
United States.

A "SUPER-SENATE"

THE Sanhedrin proposed by Kelly Miller will be held during the week of November 5, 1923. "Co-operation is to be the key-word of the Conference which is to be a kind of "Super-Council" or "Super-Senate" of Negro organizations, according to the announcement made recently. The public will doubtless be interested in the big task this committee has cut out for itself. It may result in the creation of another Negro "leader" to add fuel to the fires of envious fury disturbing the peaceful progress of the race in America. This depends however, upon the way the work of this "Super-Council" is done and the real object of its creation.

Every leader is the product of a system or organization of some kind. His power depends upon the aim of his system and he is great or small proportionately. Negroes lack leadership most of all—leadership farsighted and statesmanlike enough to organize their misguided and warring organizations into something truly constructive in its conception of the needs of the race and the method to be followed in attaining them. Whether this "Super-Council" can make a success of the task remains to be seen.

In some respects the idea suggests a supreme opportunity to lay aside theory and use common sense in dealing with the facts of Negro existence in America. It might result in the choice of a leader who could become an accredited spokesman of the race. He could devote his thought and time to developing unity in purpose and sympathy among Negroes of this country.

Hitherto some of the various organizations have been content to do their own special work in the Negro world, without reference to what another was doing, except in a discreditable manner. What is really needed is organization that will promote the conscious co-operation of all Negroes who believe in the essential unity of the race, whether they be inside the ranks of intellectuals or whether they represent the humbler and less favored along educational lines. Nothing can be done by this "Super-Senate" or any other organization proceeding to find a solution of the problems of a self-conscious part of the Negro race in this country. No great and lasting good can be accomplished without considering Negroes and humanity as a whole.

ONE BIG AIM FOR AMERICAN NEGROES

THE convergence of all moral and material forces of the Negro towards one great object would doubtless interest the masses and become a source of strength in our struggle for survival in America. It is a condition which a leadership of vision should seek to develop among the 12,000,000 souls growing weary of the inequalities of their environment. Self-government, self-support and equal opportunities are things to which Negroes really aspire in this country. They have been governed unjustly so long and refused a part in their own government so persistently, that they are hungering for a chance to show the world their ability to govern themselves. It is the one big aim to which every American Negro should aspire. It can be done in America by the creation of a Negro State. This is an object to which Negro leaders should address themselves—the acquirement of sufficient land for a population of 2,000,000 or more of the race to create and govern a State, as an object lesson by Negroes in self-government.

TWO FRIENDLY CRITICISMS.

The Daily News recently has received two letters which interest it exceedingly. The writers have one thing in common—each is a friendly critic of the Daily News. In everything else they are about as widely separated as they well could be. One is a conservative southern woman in her sixties, the other a radical northern man in his thirties. Their attitudes on pretty nearly everything are diametrically opposed to each other; but they both land heavily on the Daily News, and as we think the matter over we are forced to the rueful confession that they are both partially right.

One, the southern woman, declares that she hears the Daily News accused of cynicism (we deny that) but for her own part contents herself with the statement, which cannot be denied, that "the tone of the paper is critical." The northern man, on the contrary, remarks "an overemphasis on the negro problem to the point where it amounts almost to an emotional fixation, so that there is a lack of sufficient emphasis on other problems. . . . Now it seems to me that the only way of achieving objectivity—or at least greater objectivity—on the negro problem is to force other problems upon the consciousness of the Southern community." This indictment, let us add in justice to ourselves, was not brought specifically against the Daily News, but against southern thinking in general.

We deem these criticisms worthy of attention and reply because both are constructive, and each has a reasonable basis. As to the first, we are perfectly sure that any investigator who would take the trouble to measure the editorial columns of the Daily News for any given month would find at least twice as much space given to praise as is given to blame. But it isn't all praise; and the reason it isn't is because we thoroughly agree with our second critic that one of the main difficulties facing the south today is its habit of reserving all its invective for the negro problem—not the negro, please note, but the negro problem—and sugar-coating all its other nauseus messes. The Daily News is profoundly, not to say passionately, convinced that the danger threatening the south today is not black supremacy, but the wrong sort of white supremacy.

We do not believe that there is the remotest danger that the blacks will ever again dominate the south politically. There may be temporary local disturbances occasionally, but in so far as the whole south is concerned the spectre of negro domination is laid forever.

But a different sort of problem has arisen to take its place. There is a false and mischievous notion abroad that race relations in the south are like a see-saw, so that if the negro begins to rise, the white man, now at the top, must inevitably begin to come down. The truth is the relation is similar to that of the members of an Alpine club, roped together to make a difficult ascent. As the member in front climbs, he is compelled to haul the other up with him; if he were foolish enough to undertake to thrust the other down, he would necessarily be jerked from his own footing. Both must go up, or both must come down; and the quickest and easiest method of ascent is for each to do his own climbing, always with due care not to throw any sudden strain upon the other.

It has been our habit in the south to act and talk as if there were no doubt that nothing but the negro holds us back. If that were true, it would not be worth discussing, for here the negro is, and here he will remain; but the Daily News does not believe for a moment that it is true. It can see innumerable things that would hold us back even if we were cut loose from the negro, and that, as it is, are holding back both white and negro. To the best of our ability we have outlined these things, and to that extent we acknowledge that the tone of the paper has been critical.

Yet we believe that in that course the Daily News has been representative of the most advanced and vigorous thought of the state. It isn't merely the Daily News whose tone is critical; North Carolina's tone is critical. The state is waking to the fact that many an accepted formula, many an ancient dogma, has either no foundation in fact, or no relation to present conditions. It is questioning principles and policies that heretofore it has always accepted as part of the established order of things. In fact, it is coming to the conclusion that the very existence of an established order of things is in itself pretty good evidence of dry rot. Look at the road program. Look at the program of social legislation. Above all, look at the educational program. The road program would never have been adopted if the state had not seen that its existing roads were rotten. The social program would not have been entered upon had not critics proved that the existing conditions were abominable. The educational program had no chance until the state had hammered into its consciousness the evils and dangers of ignorance. The evil had to be proved before it could be removed.

As to the charges of cynicism, they fall of their own weight. The cynic attacks nothing; and the Daily News has not yet been accused of supineness.

Dr. Du Bois Says He Was Misquoted

In answer to the report circulated from Philadelphia, Pa., that he had compromised on Jim Crow measures while addressing an audience there, Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois, editor of the Crisis Magazine, and prominent figure of the N. A. A. C. P., asserts that he was misquoted and writes the following letter to the Chicago Defender. These are the exact words, he says, that he spoke to the Philadelphia audience:

"All my life I have fought separation and segregation by race and color. And of all the sorts of segregation facing us, segregation in the public schools is the most dangerous and fatal thing because it inculcates race prejudice in the young. It is for this reason that the N. A. A. C. P. has always fought separate public schools wherever they appear.

"On the other hand we Negroes are all living more and more in a separate racial world; almost hourly, from the moment we rise until we sleep. We live in separate homes and neighborhoods; we patronize separate stores; we send our children often to separate schools; we attend separate churches; we work, in larger and larger numbers, for our own people and in separate industries; we bank in our own banks; subscribe to Colored papers; keep cars in our own garages; are attended by Colored physicians, and buried by Colored undertakers in Colored grave yards.

Leads to Hate

"We boast of this internal racial development and we have a right to boast of it; we have been forced into it by Race prejudice and without these institutions we could not exist today; but whither is all this leading? Logically, it is leading straight to complete racial segregation, to bitter group hatred and world-wide race war on a scale such as we have not yet witnessed.

"We must, therefore, face firmly this paradox of Race separation and Race organization and fight with care and thought. I am, for instance, myself a product of a Jim Crow school; my daughter is a student in one. Without Jim Crow schools we could not today educate our children in the United States. Does this mean that Jim Crow schools are right and should be spread? No, they are wrong, dangerous, menacing and they should be fought; but the way to fight them is not to fight the teachers in them. Do not fight Hill. Hill is not responsible for Cheyney. Cheyney was established 50 years before Hill was born. Hill is doing at Cheney just what I would do there—making it the best school possible.

"The real enemy is not Hill—it is not the excellent and efficient teachers in thousands of separate Negro schools throughout the land—it is the white men and women who foster Race prejudice and compel the establishment of separate schools. Fight them and fight them with the ballot. A generation ago New York and Philadelphia both had Jim Crow schools. New York Negroes fought them. They put White, Scottron and McCants Stewart on the school board and today there is not a Jim Crow school in the city and there are 200 Negro teachers in the public schools; Philadelphia did not keep up the fight. They accepted petty political jobs and janitorships and positions in Jim Crow schools for their daughters. Today, Philadelphia has 13 Negro schools and is threatened with a Colored high school. What does Philadelphia do? Instead of fighting the school board they attack the principal and teachers of a Colored school established in 1834, and now outside the bounds of Philadelphia, because two years ago this school was given a state appropriation and made a state normal school. Do they mean thus to acknowledge that no school with Colored teachers is fit to be a state normal school?

Wrong Tactics

"This is wrong tactics. Cheyney is a good school. It has done and is doing splendid work. The Negro Race, with its curtailed educational facilities cannot spare it. Either Cheyney must have state aid or gradually die. But, say the opponents of Hill and Cheyney, this school was made a normal school in order to furnish teachers for Jim Crow public schools; very well then, fight the Jim Crow public schools—make it impossible to establish more. Pennsylvania has at least 100,000 Negro voters. They can, if they will, make the Jim Crow public school system impossible in that state. But the way to do it is not to fight the school teachers who are giving their best to Colored children in schools established before these teachers were born."

FALLACIOUS LEADERSHIP.

Sutton E. Griggs, whom southern white people would call "a good Nigger," has a lengthy article in the Memphis Commercial Appeal (white) titled "Call of the Cities to the Negro Race." In his article Griggs seeks to point out that within 500 years or less there will be no Negro race if immigration continues. They will have all died out, he says, and, like the Cromagnon, Neanderthal and Piltdown races, they will be known in history only as a race that was.

Griggs, however, has the characteristic view of Southern Negroes whose opinions are formed by looking at things through glasses furnished them by their paler brethren. His article is given much prominence in that white paper because that white paper, like others, is not beginning to realize how much they "love" their "Niggers" until they find them preparing to leave for better climes.

Negroes who are contemplating leaving the South are not likely to be frightened to death at what Griggs says. They know his writings could never have been published in a white paper if they had not been in entire conformity with white southerners' views. They know that there are thousands of foreigners who come to America yearly, most of whom settle in the larger cities; they know that these foreigners grow and multiply and often become wealthy because they are not constantly harassed and molested as they go about their way to build a comfortable fortune and home.

The Negroes of the South know Sutton E. Griggs for what he is. They know he has for a long time considered himself the "spokesman" for southern Negroes. They know he still is obsessed with the idea that a slap on the back, a grin in the face and a five-cent cigar constitute genuineness of friendship. They know that this man, as a "spokesman" for Negroes is forever on the wrong scent and barking up the wrong tree.

"Stay in the South" he reasons, but he neglects to say what for. He would have you stay despite living conditions; stay, regardless of conditions affecting education; stay, despite the fact that his own city goes on a rampage often, sometimes twice yearly, and shows its southern hospitality to Negroes by cutting off their heads and dragging the bleeding body through the busiest streets, in broadest day time.

Let the Negroes come northward. But let them use discretion in doing so. They should not all seek Kansas City, Chicago, New York or Detroit, let them go to the smaller as well as the larger cities and prove themselves there, as they have done in the South, good, loyal and upright citizns, anxious for an education and for conditions which do not try their very soul.

SOCIAL EQUALITY AS PRIVILEGE

Man is of a social nature and, therefore, exists in societies. For the welfare and protection of societies, government is necessary. Civilized man realizes that there are three fundamentals absolutely necessary for the proper functioning of a democratic form of government namely, industrial equality, political equality, and equality before the law. And America because of her recognition of these principles has been and is rightly regarded as a great democracy, founded upon the proposition that "all men are created equal." When we say American, we make reference to the citizenship of America, fortunately America is composed of various elements or hyphenated groups, such as German-Americaen, Irish-American, Afro-American, etc. It is of this latter group we have to do.

Industrial equality, political equality and equality before the law are the inherent and manhood rights of every American citizen. Social equality, of which we hear so much, among civilized people is not a right Social equality is a privilige, which may or may not be enjoyed. It appears that a few writers and public speakers are very much at sea as to where a right end and a privilege begins. When we say industrial equality, we mean an equal opportunity in every avenue of industrial endeavor. For instance, side by side under the stars and stripes our boys the black and the white went over the top together and it is the Negro's right to insist that side by side they climb life's hill together with equal opportunity to earn a living for themselves and loved ones. A true democracy is a representative form of government. We are a part and parcel of American citizenship and as Americans we must live under and obey the laws of the land and we are, therefore, clearly within our rights when we insist on an equal voice in the law-making bodies of state and nation. Laws in the last analysis are mere rule sof action and are made to govern all the people and should function with equal exactness about the home of the black man as well as that of the white man. This brings us to social equality We have said that social equality is a privilege and not a right. However, the phrase social equality is a much misused and much abused term. If by social equality it is meant that one should have any seat paid for on a train or in a dining car, then, of course, we are for social equality. If it is meant that the colored man's money should go as far as the other fellow's in a theatre or moving picture house, we should, of course, insist on social equality. If by social equality, we have in mind equality of hospital, educational, institutional facilities and advantages, every Negro should insist on this right, on the other hand, if by social equality, it is meant that one must have social intercourse with a white,brown or yellow family and that such a family must have freedom of social intercourse with the other fellow's family, it is clear that we are advocating a privilege and not a right. We have said and restate that the whole question hinges very largely upon the definition of social equality. eating houses, theatres, moving picture shows, public parks, etc., are semi-public in their nature, whose license and privilege to do business is based upon the presumption that they will serve and accommodate the general public and the term general public is all inclusive. It follows, therefore that every American citizen should insist on his right to be properly served and accommodated in such places.

Summing up let us say, in all things affecting the industrial, political, and legal rights of an American citizen in all things dedicated to the pleasure, accommodation, welfare and convenience of the general public, our rights are concurrent, co-equal and co-existent with that of any other element of citizenship, but in all things purely social our rights end where the other fellow's begins and any encroachment by either race will be a privilege, but never a right.

THE CITY'S RACE PROBLEM

Editorial Post Dispatch, Aug. 8, 1923

The troubles incident to the effort to vaccinate the incoming Negroes and others from the South who had been exposed to smallpox emphasizes the need of the proposed interracial commission to handle problems incident to the Negro migration and the rapidly increasing Negro population in St. Louis.

These problems, in colony housing sanitation and the inevitable contacts and relations between the races will become more acute as the migration continues and the winter season approaches.

In the case of medical inspection and preventative work an interracial commission might easily have devised a plan of procedure which would have avoided friction and resentment. There ought of course, to be legal power enough in the Health Department to protect the community, but the exercise of legal power and force is not always the best way to accomplish results; frequently it is the worst way, leading to discord and violence, which require more force. Medical inspection, however, is only one of many important phases of the problem.

Since the races must live together in St. Louis in increasing numbers, a way of living which avoids misunderstanding, friction and conflict, and conditions that make for disease and pauperism, must be devised. These problems call for intelligent handling outside of legal phases and powers; they are social and economic.

Despite the good work of an interracial commission in Philadelphia there was a deadly and dangerous racial riot there. St. Louis should now begin the work of solving problems that may become menacing to health, peace and prosperity.

White Atlanta Does Not Know Black Atlanta

Atlanta Independent

4-5-23

The Negroes Know the White Folk, But the White Folk Do Not Know the Negro.

Some things the white man does not know about the Negro that he ought to learn:

1. His material progress.
2. His worth as a citizen.
3. His buying power.
4. The Negro in business.
5. His willingness to co-operate and to be of service to the community.
6. His real estate holdings.

As proof of the above assertion, we give a concrete example of the lack of information of our white neighbors.

A few days ago a white salesman strolled into the office of the Standard Life Insurance Company, a million dollar corporation organized, owned and controlled by Atlanta Negroes. This salesman approached the desk of one of the officers and remarked, after surveying the situation:

"Mr. ———, I must make a confession. I am a Georgia cracker, forty-three years of age, and have lived in Atlanta all of my life, but have had no intelligent conception of what black folk are capable of doing. It never occurred to me that Negroes were capable of owning and operating such an organization as you have here. I am surprised, for the reason that thousands of my race, just like myself, are in satisfied ignorance of the development and possibilities of our Negro Neighbors. The average one of us looks upon your race as a liability, when in fact, you are an asset—a growing asset, making a helpful contribution to Atlanta's greatness and prosperity. Your people are not getting a square deal from my people. We need to help you, encourage you and take the same interest in you that we take in any other group of people who settle among us. Our program ought to include the advancement and development of every group of people who enter into our cosmopolitan population. What we need is a better understanding."

This is a concrete evidence that the white folk know but little of the Negro at his door. He thinks of him alone in terms of social equality and political domination. When the Negro has neither in mind; wants neither and would not have either. What he wants is economic, industrial and commercial opportunities. He wants work to do. He wants a chance in the fields, in the shops and at all kinds of work that other men do. He wants every industrial door, skilled or unskilled, opened to him, and all other questions will adjust themselves.

B. J. DAVIS.

CASIONALLY THE TRUTH IS TOLD ABOUT THE NEGRO

Very seldom do we find our Southern white press complimenting the worthy and worthwhile acts of the Negro people, and when it is note it strikes a note within that group as nothing else does. When we say the white press, we mean as a general proposition, because there are those we might single out that are constantly publishing the virtues of the race.

Mr. Richard F. Johnston, a write on The Birmingham Age-Herald, a few days ago wrote of the work of the Negroes at the American Cast Iron Pipe Company, when they were planning to celebrate the ninth annual health week. Mr. Johnston outlined the program, giving in detail much of the activities to be had during this health exhibition. For this every colored citizen feels proud and is unusually happy over the fact that a white writer and daily newspaper would concern themselves in the worthwhile efforts of the race and speak in complimentary and persuasive manner as Mr. Johnston has spoken in this editorial. The counsel here given is directed, apparently, to an element of prejudiced and short-sighted white people, but the idea of educating the Negro might be emphasized in equally as strong terms to the Negro himself because there are many in this enlightened age who are not so interested in the training and education of their offspring.

The one big danger in the South is ignorance. Many people who are literally trained, versed in letters and science, are still ignorant, uncultured, without the tenderness of heart that makes for human happiness and such an individual is the most ignorant of all classes. He who is not trained to the extent that humanity's cause can find a way in and upon that heart is a dangerous animal and might explode at any place and on any occasion. It is the heart of the man that must be right if the head is to keep in the proper channel.

We give in part the article written by Mr. Johnson on the exercises at Acipco by the Negro people during the Health Week:

Birmingham Reporter

"It is just as important that the South train its Negroes for the part they are to perform as to train their whites for their part. It is just as important for the South that its Negroes take on self-respect and self-control as it is that the whites rise to higher planes of efficiency through superior equipment. The industry of the South to arrive at the ultimate of development must be harmonious in all its parts. That cannot be when any part is neglected. The chain is no stronger than its weakest link.

There are shops in the Birmingham district where the higher capacity average of the Negro workers automatically attracts attention. Investigation of the plant surroundings and the home conditions of the Negroes working there tell the tale.

The plant that cares for its Negro workers reaps two benefits. The one is the tendency of worthy Negroes to come there to work and the other is the tendency to stay there after locating and to further improve the workmanship in order to measure up to the esprit de corps that pride of performance is sure to create.

Mankind should never be afraid of intelligence. It is a mistaken notion that society is better off for having an element that is without ambition. Where there is no ambition there is no incentive to better workmanship. Wood is better chopped by a man who uses brain and muscle than by one who uses muscle only. Ditches are better dug by men who think than by those who simply shovel dirt.

More or less surprise and even a very agreeable astonishment is expressed by iron and steel operators and other industrial captains over the current efficiency of labor. That is because labor is in a mental attitude more wholesome than that of the war period. Business at large is congratulating itself that conservatism's voice is still heard over the roar of 100 per cent production. Men are sober. During the war they were drunk, blind, not thinking. They were poor at the job because they were not using the head.

A trained horse, a trained hunting dog, a trained elephant, a trained lion, a trained Negro, a trained white man—they are all the better for being trained to use their heads. Any human creature that does nto use its head is a clod or a menace. Don't be afraid of training humans. It pays with birds and beasts; why not with humans?"

The above expression by Mr. Johnston may be read with profit by many of us. It is a point of reasoning so seldom entered into by those in power and who only can get such results as are here advocated. We are altogether in sympathy with the expression and are giving further utterance that the thousands of our own people might read and know that all is not dark in Dixie and there are thousands of good people in every section of the South whose hearts are ready and whose interest is in humanity and they are counselling and advising about Negro humanity along with other races. Let us hope that such expressions will be furthered by other characters who are able to convince dominant forces that there is profit, there is gain and service in educating humanity, and that it is dangerous, it is discouraging, it is unseen war and destruction to trod along in the blind path of ignorance.

SIX ORGANIZATIONS MEET WITH KELLY MILLER AND ISSUE CALL FOR GREATEST RACE CONFERENCE IN HISTORY.

(Crusader Service).

New York, April 7.—In complete unanimity in the opinion, based upon actual experience in the field, that enmity toward Americans of African descent is on the increase rather than otherwise, the organi- March for an held 24.

detail call specifying time and place, agenda and representation will be issued later by the Committee of Arrangements which is for the present composed of Dean Miller, Wm. Monroe Trotter, James L. Neil, Jas. Weldon Johnson, Robert W. Bagnall, Dr. D. N. E. Campbell, Rev. Jernigan, Richard B. Moore, Otto c. Husiwould, with Dr. Shaw and Mr. Briggs as ex-officio members in their capacity of President and Secretary, respectively, of the Conference which, before its adjournment, voted to go into permanent being and elected another permanent officer, Mr. James Weldon Johnson, as treasurer.

It is proposed to have representation at the all-Race Conference from the following phases of Negro life; and will be apportioned by the Committee of Arrangements on the basis of an equal number of delegates from each section:

Religious Organizations,
Fraternal Organizations,
Civil Rights Organizations,
Social Organizations,
Educational Organizations,
Organized Press,
Labor Organizations,
Business Organizations, and Professional Organizations.

The task of working out an agonda, basis of representation and preparing a detailed Call will naturally take some time, and before the job is completed many experts in the various subjects to be dealt with have to be co-operated to the present Committee of Arrangements. In the meantime, however, the organizations composing the Conference and issuing the Call, express the hope that the Negro Press will give this call the widest circulation and that all Negro organizations and bodies will begin at once to move in the direction of the all-Race Conference. It is the hope of the Conference that parliamentary rules and the regular red tape will be suspended in this case and that immediate action will be taken on a question so vital and important to the well being of the Negro masses as the calling of this All-Race Conference with the view of realizing a solid front against the ever increasing onslaughts of the enemy. The Call follows:

The Call.

"The world today has come to a critical period of its existence. Our race likewise has reached a crucial situation. The promises of emelioration and of full citizenship so easily made during critical period of the Great World War have failed of fulfillment. In this time of readjustment there is growing a very menacing spirit of animosity against the race and a determination to thrust the Negro down into the most servile and degrading status and to maintain him there forever.

"Now while world readjustment is in progress and when every other oppressed group is exerting itself to the utmost to gain its rights and liberties, the Negro Race must bestir itself, must concentrate its best thought and energy to withstand and terrible onslaughts made against it and accure its due and rightful status; equal manhood rights and opportunities in every department of life. The Race must be stimulated to utilize all available opportunities for constructive endeavor and must be brought into harmonius working relationships with the white race.

"The need is urgent, hay, imperitive, then, for the assembling of a national all-Race Conference to consider the present position of the Race, and to devise ways and the hostile forces arrayed against it, to formulate a plan of defence and protection, to discover the forcesm agencies and organizations which may be utilized in that defence, to effect a United Front of the Race, and todevise ways and means for full and complete emancipation.

The attention of the Conference must be focussed upon the following:

Race Prejudice,
Legal Discriminations,
Economic Exploitation,
Racial Self-Respect,
Religious Awakening,
Moral and Social Betterment,
Co-operation Within the Race and Between the Races,
Political Action,
Industrial Betterment,
Such Evils as:
Lynching,
Ku Kluxism,
Segregation,
Disfranchisement,
Unequal Enforcement of Law,
Peonage.

A detailed Call specifying time and place will be issued later by the Committee of Arrangements. Every Negro organization should begin now to move in this direction and the attention and energy of the race centered upon the successful conduct of this Conference to the end that our Race should at last achieve that improvement of its status for which we all hope and strive.

Letters to Editor

IGNORANCE OF SOME NORTHERNERS ABOUT THE SOUTH.

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 24, 1923.

Editor The Advertiser:

During the past two years I have received nearly ten thousand letters from men in the North and West about Montgomery county and the South generally. From the ignorance displayed in a large number of these inquiries, I think the General Educational Board, together with the United States Department of Education, should employ a number of southern boys and girls as educational missionaries to brighten up the dark places in the ignorant North.

Only recently we have had letters wanting to know how much turpentine was in our drinking water; others want to know if the snakes and reptiles crawl through the streets in the day, as well as at night; then some ask if the negro is too dangerous to make life safe in the towns or on the farms, and one Ohio brother has recently inquired as to whether we had any schools located in Montgomery county.

Seriously, the average child in the South has more information about geography in five minutes than the average adult in the North seems to have acquired in a lifetime.

In seeking to bring Northern and Western farmers to Montgomery county we are not only offering the greatest climatic and agricultural advantages, but we seem to be offering them tremendous educational opportunities. Along this line I note that the State of Illinois is just now in a most chaotic condition about her educational program, and it is taking the combined efforts of her best men and women to keep the State from turning back to educational conditions little better than in her pioneer days.

I wonder if enough of our people really appreciate the splendid citizenship of native people and the educational opportunities enjoyed in Montgomery county.

Yours truly,

JESSE B. HEARIN,
Farm Section Chamber of Commerce

SOFT SOAPING THE SOUTH

ALTHOUGH A FEW WEEKS have elapsed since our president gave expression to sentiments relative to the South which are not in harmony with historical facts, the same are still being discussed and commented upon by the press throughout the country. It is an unfortunate fact that our president seldom if ever says anything or writes anything relative to the South that he does not put his foot in it.

In expressing his inability to accept the invitation to attend the reunion of the Confederate veterans the president made a brief quotation from the letter of invitation and then gave expression to his own views in the following words:

"I AM QUOTING these sentences because they have moved me to say that in my judgment the reconstruction of the South, by the people of the South in the face of tremendous discouragements following the war, set the finest example that could be urged upon a war-wasted world today. The men of Lee's and Johnson's armies went home to their tasks of reconstruction with hearts of courage and purpose of determination to overcome all obstacles."

THE ABOVE is not only unnecessary and unwise, but is out of harmony with the truth. In subserviently and sycophantically lauding his Southern friends the president not only gives them credit which they do not deserve or merit, but goes out of his way to distort American history for that purpose. In the first place, in using the term "the Southern people" he falls into the common error of including within that term only Southern white Democrats; all others are excluded. They are the salt of the earth and the cream of society.

IN THE NEXT PLACE, it is absolutely untrue that the reconstruction of the South was the work of "the Southern people." The only state governments that "the Southern people" had any hand in forming were those organized under what was known as the "Andrew Johnson plan of reconstruction." Several state governments were thus organized, the only condition being prescribed by the president being that they should ratify the Thirteenth and Fourteenth amendments to the Constitution. They ratified the Thirteenth, but contemptuously rejected the Fourteenth, and proceeded to enact a black code which was worse than that which existed in ante-bellum days.

THEY WENT THROUGH the form of electing senators and representatives in congress, but they were not admitted to the seats, and the state governments thus organized by "the Southern people" were rejected by the American people, as expressed through congress. Then followed what is known as the congressional plan of reconstruction, which was not only antagonized bitterly by President Johnson but also by "the Southern people." So general was this opposition that they adopted the policy called "masterly inactivity," which meant that "the Southern people" would take no part whatever in the formation of state governments under the reconstruction acts of congress, thus leaving that work to the Colored people and such of the whites as had the courage, manhood and independence to co-operate with them.

EVERY REBEL STATE that was readmitted to the Union was admitted under this plan. It was the states thus organized that ratified the Fourteenth and subsequently the Fifteenth amendments and made them a part of the federal Constitution, which never could have been done otherwise. This policy was rigidly enforced under President Grant's administration. It was not until the Republican party lost the North in 1874 that a change along these lines took place. Subsequent to this the remnant of Lee's and Johnson's armies were reorganized and armed for the purpose of intimidation, fraud and murder.

THESE METHODS have been somewhat modified by substituting nullification for force and violence—which is equivalent to substituting highway robbery for grand larceny. This is the work of "the Southern people." If Mr. Harding wanted to be perfectly accurate along these lines he should have consulted his personal friend Senator Underwood of Alabama, whose seat would be occupied by a man of different political views if the people of his state were allowed to give free and fair expression of their wishes at the ballot box, and the same carried into effect. Or he might have consulted another shining light in the senate in the person of Pat Harrison of Mississippi, who officially typifies methods that are indefensible in American politics.

THESE MEN could have and would have told him that "the Southern people" were and are not only bitterly opposed to the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments, but they insist even now that the supreme court of the United States should declare them null and void because they were incorporated into the federal Constitution contrary to and over the protests of "the Southern people."

Negro Gives Views

TO the Editor of The Telegraph: I want to put a bit of stress on a few words in an article of a few days past. A writer mentioned social equality. This is not what is in the minds of any thinking colored person. It is not social equality, we want, but it is justice in the courts, and law that gives us a right.

And, again, the colored people are not treated as if they are human beings. How are they treated in the North? That's the question being asked. Well, they are treated some better than they are here.

There will have to be more Christianity before the people of your race can see.

Here, our churches, schools and dwellings are burned and if we show any steps toward protecting our property we are lynched, our females as well as the males.

The younger set of your boys between the ages of 16 and 25 years old, are very dangerous to my people, when they are in bunches, while our boys are not allowed to stand around at any place on the street. Your boys will see one of my race coming on the sidewalk; they will start advancing towards them five or six deep, taking all space on the walk, then when the man reaches them, he has to walk in the street. Some Christianity, is it not? Then, there are some smaller who throw rocks at us or stand directly in one's path. We can't say anything if we do we are arrested and booked on disorderly conduct. But looking you can see their parent or some one to stop them but who says nothing, but laughs. Your people's dogs will bite us; we are not allowed to hit them.

The writer spoke of seeing an officer of the law striking a colored man. That, I have seen happen more than once, and the captive not doing anything whatever.

The colored man hates to leave the South, but the call of the North is tempting, and besides, there are better educational facilities, law that deals square and not the blood-thirsty white man.

And, too, there are some other things. Where I work, there is a white man who is the overseer. When he gets angry, he tells the men when he sends one home to "get and go North or South." This would discourage you if your people were migrating and a man told you that; you would feel like leaving too.

There was a colored man who was an overseer, but got the wages of the other laborers. Then he heard of the wages being paid to laborers in the North; he said he was going and he did.

Now they have a white man on the same job and not doing what the colored man was doing, because whereas the colored man helped work, the white man only stands around, although the white man draws four times as much as the colored. Is there any right in that?

The colored man needs to stay in the South, but there will have to be other steps taken to entice him to stay.

It is said when they reach the North they take cold and die. The same thing here, with the poor living quarters and too, he is killed if he speaks for his rights. Some white people say we have no rights. Well, why should you say we have and then say we haven't when we speak for them or concerning them Is that Christianity?

If a man of your race mistreats a man of mine, the man of my race can't say a word, for if he does he is slain by a mob before twelve hours passes. It's true and the answer is left to your people.

Will you white people try to do something to prevent this continued exodus?

Better treatment and some Christian thinking—surely this will stop it.

This fact is known as true by everyone, that if something keeps a man sick or tired and some one tells him a cure for it, he will surely try it. Then, why not tell us, the Negroes, our trouble so we can cure it? We have done all we knew.

If politics keeps us down, why not tell us? You all say a man has a right. Why is it his political right keeps him down, especially the Negro? Is it power the Negro has? I am sure that's not it because you keep him down from power. But comparatively speaking, the Negro is like unto the elephant in the circus, and you are the trainer.

The North is no place for the Negro. But he has taken up the spirit of migration and has found the North better in treatment than the South. Although the Negro is understood better in the South than in the North, for government he desires the North.

The foreigner had to learn the North when he was migrating into it. He left his country for a better government and higher wages. The North is where he found them. Although the Negro may die from different causes in the North, he seems to be satisfied.

Please look into this simply as a business matter.

A COLORED CITIZEN

Fail In Efforts To Agitate Race Trouble In Ohio

Pittsburgh Courier
9-1-23 Pa

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 30.—According to reports emanating from the police headquarters there is an element of whites in this city who have endeavored to make it a business to foment racial friction. They resort to divers methods. Sending in riot calls. Very often reports are received by the police that there is a big clash between the races in a certain section of the city, but when the police arrive on the scene there is absolutely no evidence of any trouble. Some have gone so far as to venture the opinion that the police will some day fail to respond to a riot call when there is actually a big clash in progress and the whites will have had a chance to have wreaked their vengeance of some defenseless group of Negroes and make secure their get-away before the arrival of any police.

During the past few weeks false reports have been received at the various police stations almost every day and night. The police are making a vigorous effort to apprehend the person or persons responsible for such alarms.

MAKING GOOD IN THE NORTH

The Freeman 8-25-23

Robert T. Small, writing in the Indianapolis News, sounds a pessimistic note about the future of the Southern Negro in the Northland. It is rather curious how these writers spread so much ink without giving the real reason why the Negro is leaving the Southland in such large numbers. While the average Negro is liable to read such articles as so much bunk, on the other hand, the laugh may progress into a wail of despair if the Negro does not determine how to fix his status in thee Northland, by making himself indispensable to northern industry and we might as well realize now that he cannot do this by indolence, half doing his work, making poor and indifferent time, the working Negro must not only get the above facts grounded into his very soul, but the leaders of the Race, that is, ministers, welfare workers, and others must preach efficiency from the housetops to the end that the Negroes do not make a fizzle of this, his one great chance. The Negro must face the fact that he is on trial, that he has many friends among the white Race, especially among the masters of large industries, who so far have not been influenced by the siren song of Negro haters. The Negro must keep faith with these men by being sober, industrious, and thoroly dependable.

Indianapolis

Many Negroes who come North will enjoy for the first time the right of suffrage. It would be most unfortunate if these new voters lend themselves to the paid and unscrupulous politicians of both races. As much as we condemn the attitude of the white south during reconstruction days, we must admit that the Negro verly largely contributed to his own undoing, during this period. That he was ignorant and unprepared for his new freedom, every sane man must admit. Given the same consideration, that would have been given other element of our citizenship under like conditions, the Negro would have made good in spite of this great handicap, but he was not given the same consideration then and he won't be given the same consideration now. Knowing this it is therefore imperative that honest and thoughtful leaders rise to the occasion and give the newcomer advice and encouragement to the end that they make good. We therefore, appeal to race leadership everywhere to cut out personal bickerings, cut out seeking individual credit to the end that they may shine as individuals, but get under the load, pull continuously and together. If this is done and done now we need not fear the future of the New Negro and the old Negro above the Mason-Dixon Line.

The "Muck a Mucks" of the "National Association Advancement of Colored people," and the "Universal Negro Improvement Association," and the offshoot of this latter organization, the "African Blood Brotherhood" have for quite a long time engaged in a merry growl over all trying to grow the same bone, and by ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, lay glad hands on the earned dollars from the pay rolls furnished our people by the American White man. They have succeeded in putting Marcus Garvey the President General of the Universal Negro Improvement Association in fetters and chains andhe is now in the Tombs—the great National prison. Garvey although in jail is writing some pretty hot stuff against the N. A. A. C.P. Among the things claimed by Garvey is the fact that, "Du Bois represents a group that hates the Negro blood in their veins, and has been working subtlely to build up a caste aristocracy that would socially divide the race into two groups: One the superior because of color caste, and the other the inferior"

He claims that in New York, Boston, Washington and Detroit and other cities that our business people actually drew the line and would only employ mulattoes. That they had a"Blue Vein" ..Society and "Colonial Club" and that the annual balls, other social functions only yellow people were invited or admitted.

We know nothing about whether Du Bois and his followers are color struck or not, but we know one or two things that point, as straws point, the desire of the greater part of our people to get away from their Negro blood. The multitude of "Hair Straighteners "and" face bleachers" enjoy a patrongage not enjoyed by any other business effort of the race.

We are very much interested in reading the matter sent to the Cotton Farmer by Garvey from the New York jail. "When rogues fall out, honest men get their dues".

We know on thing and that is the same element pursuing Garvey to his persecution and desired death is the same element that purrsued Booker Washington to the brink of his grave, and even now throw black ink on his monument. Booker creted pay rools, and was a constructive race builder, and the element opposing him so far as this paper knows have never done a thing but stand afar off and curse about economical conditions... Garvey at least was trying to have our race take a place as ship owners, even if he failed. Possibly he would not have failed had these fellows went on and worked in their line, and let Garvey work in his line. Garvey made the mistake in trying to placcate every high brow connected with him, by giving him a high salaried job. Garvey's ship line is not the first and only ship line that has gone into bankruptcy, and if Garvey actaully robbed the stock holders, he is not the only one to rob. There are others out of jail that have done the race more harm than Garvey.

DECADENCE OF SOUTHERN CIVILIZATION.

By Mrs. Mary B. Owen.

Washington Eagle

11-17-23

First, it must be frankly admitted that there has never been much that could be termed real civilization in the South. Any place that is dominated by ignorance, prejudice and misunderstanding can not attain any high degree of civilization. To this day the South allows the above diabolical trinity to take leading rank in all of its affairs; hence there is no way of escape from the darkness of superstition into the light of knowledge, because there is no actual desire for something better.

In the discussion of any topic pertaining to the South, one can not avoid the race question. There are two races that live in proximity to each other—the white (because it wishes to do so) —and the black (because it can not do otherwise.) There is no good reason why the races should not dwell peaceably together, but, because of a guilty conscience, the superior white race is ever frightened by the bogy of domination by the inferior black race. This fear (which has always been man's worst foe) keeis the white race so busy devising ways and means to hinder the progress of the colored people, that they do not have time to improve themselves physically, mentally nor morally.

We know that "righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." A nation that spends the major portion of its time preventing another from scaling the heights causes itself to retrograde, for we must rise together, or fall together. We should never strike a man who is down. It is mean. Then, too, he might get up again.

The South has become a professional humanity oppressor. It has lost all sight of moral law. No longer can it say, "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn," for it is so given to sadism, that beholding another's woe gives cause for excessive rejoicing. One comforting thing about the whole matter is the fact that a man or nation reaps what he or its sows. And, again, who digs a pit for his brother, falls into it himself.

Hypocrates can not mould a character of worth. The South makes open preachments against social equality, yet it practices more of it than any other section of the country. No one drives, coaxes, or shoves the whites on Negro society, still they push themselves into it without fear or favor, not even caring whether they are welcome or not. Some have been known to fight and die for the privilege of mixing with the Negroes. All this because every Southerner has his Negroes whom he loves, and without whom he could not exist. Were all of the colored people to leave the South, nearly all of the whites would follow to escape a life of dejection and misery.

The convict lease system and peonage have ever been a blot on the very name of civilization. The cruelties practiced by those who are entrusted to drive the unfortunates placed in their care, cause them to sink to the level of the brute creation, along with the creatures they control, for the way of the oppressor—like the way of the transgressor—is hard, and he can not escape the effect of his own acts.

'ANOTHER TRADUCER" THE THE CAPTION OF UTTERANCE

AFTERNOON PAPER DISLIKES ARTICLE APPEARING IN THE BALTIMORE (MD.) SUN

Under the caption of "Another Traducer," the Nashville Banner of Tuesday evening, July 3rd contained more than a column editorial based upon an article which The Banner claims was copyrighted, which appeared in The Baltimore Sun. The article referred to is said to have attracted no little attention throughout the United States, due to the fact, it is said, that it made a general attack upon the South and its treatment toward a class of its citizens.

The Baltimore Sun is regarded as a Southern Newspaper. The entire article which appeared in the Sun was not reproduced in The Banner; only excerpts from it. The Banner's editorial is copied in full without comment as follows:

ANOTHER TRADUCER

A writer in the Baltimore Evening Sun, H. L. Mencken, has traveled far ahead of all competition in the expression of contempt for the South. His malicious and thoroughly unveracious cirticism appeared in the form of a copyright contribution.

It is unpleasant to read, and especially to make answer to men of his character, and it is often distressing to be forced to do so without clogging the reply with expletives and unseemly words of deserved characterization.

"It is surprising that such a newspaper as the Sun admitted Mr. Mencken to its columns. The editor of the paper must have known that his perpetration was calumnious and dishonest. The Sun is therefore as much to blame, really, as is the writer of the article referred to.

"The South had a hard time of it for many years following the civil war. It confronted direst poverty, a prejudiced majority of the republic, and Negro race. There is in history no such instance of a people's fortitude the problem of a newly enfranchised and resurrection than the South gave. Its entire people set to work to win back a place in the republic, to overcome poverty, to dispel prejudice and to make the best of racial conditions. They toiled conscientiously and patriotically toward worthy ends. In ante-bellum days this was the rich section of the nation, due largely to slave holding. Since the war it has become a rich section once more, despite the emancipation of slaves, due to its citizens' efforts and to their climate and the richness of their soils and forests.

"Before the civil war the South contributed much to the statesmanship of the republic. Since the war it has given equally as many intellectual and forceful men to the public service.

"There are no such conditions as the writer depicts. True, there have been lynchings, which our best people, largely in the majority, deplore. But if in the South, no less so in other sections. Negro race riots have been chronicled in New York City, in Ohio, in Illinois, in Indiana and elsewhere, showing more fiendishness than those in the South, where Negroes, thickly populated, have committed crimes that have aroused to frenzy the superior race. There has never been in the South any incident approaching in barbarity the affair at Herrin, Ill.

"We quote from the Mencken article:

In the labor troubles which now afflict the South, paralizing production on the farms and even hampering industry in the towns, there appears to be, at least on the surface, a grim, sardonic retribution. For a generation past the red-blooded, Anglo-Saxon he-men of the region have been devoting themselves heroically to torturing and murdering their black fellow citizens, pursuing them with dogs, gelding them without anesthetics, stringing them up on trees and telegraph poles, and roasting them alive over slow fires. Now at last saved some share of the loot of the war, lay it u otpuoni Ietkuoa tiino war, lay it out upon tickets to the North, where the worst they have to fear is an occasional beating by the police. Every train crossing the Ohio and Potomac river bridges is black with them. They swarm like ants in the slums of the Northern cities, and thousands upon thousands are employed by the mines and steel mills of the Black Country.

"Worse, the Confederate enterpreneurs, urban and rural, are quite unable to find other slaves to take their places. High wages alone, it appears appear to attract labor, nor even free rations of yams and watermelons. What the modern serf demands, first of all, is security in his person and domicile, and this is precisely what the South cannot offer. Against every possibility of luring foreign labor into the region there stands the massive fact of the Ku Kulx Klan. The laborious wops have heard of it, the bohunks have heard of it, and so have all the other brachycephalous victims of the Nordic blood renaissance. These newcomers to the republic, as every student of 100 per cent literature is well aware, are but little removed in intellect from the hairy primates; nevertheless, they are still sagacious enough to keep out of the South. So the cotton fields become weed-grown.

the wild beasts of the hills come down to devour the corn, and mortgages begin to plaster the old plantation.

"The Ku Klux Klan has made headway in the section. So it has in New York, in nearly every other state in the union. In Oregon the order came near to electing a full state ticket.

The South is not in the industrial condition depicted. When the writer of the article says that because of Negroes leaving this section "our cotton fields have become weed-grown and the wild beasts of the hills have come down to devour the corn and mortgages begin to plaster the old plantation," he simply writes himself down as ignorant, mendacious and asinine.

"Naturally he takes a fling at the character of public men the South has put forward. He refers to Blease of South Carolina and Vardaman of Mississippi as representative of a bad type too prevalent. Without agreeing or disagreeing with him as to either of the two, it may be stated as a fact that while Blease served for a spell as Governor of his state, his own people have since kept him in retirement despite frequent attempts to come back. Mr. Vardaman was Governor of Mississhippi and afterwards Senator for a single term. He has since been twice defeated for re-election to the Senate.

"But what of other sections? Take Pennsylvania for instance. Mr. Mencken perhaps looks to it as the ideal state. Does he regard such statesmen as the Camerons, Penrose and Quay as more worth while to the republic than those he designates as demagogues? They represented corruption in its most malevolent form and with the power that was there were capable of real wrong. What of certain Senators today from such states as New Jersey, Iowa, Nebraska North Dakota, Illinois and elsewhere? Why is he silent regarding a state which has in Congress men like La Follette and Victor Berger?

"It may be true, doubtless is, that the South occasionally sends to Washington men better kept in retirement. They are the products of ephemeral conditions. They come to the front, survive for a while and disappear. It is so of every other section. The South today, though the standard of its public men may not be as high as it has been this section's wont to choose, yet ranks well up with other sections.

"The South had at the close of the civil war a tremendous Negro problem. It faced the same courageously and solved it to the satisfaction of the whites of the South and to a large majority of the Negroes themselves it can face the exodus of the Negroes fanciful and exaggerated, as a matter of fact, and will do so.

"The Negro has been well taken care of in this section. His best friend here or elsewhere, no matter in what direction and whither his wandering feet may bear him, is the Southern white. He has been treated with Christian consideration. He has been made a part of our institutions and protected as such. He has his churches, his schools, his places of labor and his opportunities for advancement. In Nashville, for instance there is a great Negro university, in which every white citizen takes a pride, There are many other educational institutions of note, all well patronized and rendering worthy service. Negro churches are plentiful. Every God-fearing man or woman of the race has the protection of our laws and the sympathy of our people. They have their Y. M. C. A., their the like. They own and enjoy their Y. W. C .A., their lodges, societies and operate their shops, ply their vocations, their own theaters, their own libraries, and operate their banks, plead in our courts and doctor their diseased.

"We could go further into this discussion provoked by the Baltimore Sun contributor, but perhaps not without provocation to loss of temper. It would not have been noticed at all but for the fact that there are so many ignorant men and women in other sections, who reading, may have been impressed.

"Sufficient to say in conclusion, Mr. Mencker, the author, is playing a contemptible as well as malicious part and the Baltimore Sun is as much to blame as he for having given space to his malignant output."

AMERICAN IDEALISM AND THE NEGRO.

According to the press over five thousand people recently joined in a pilgrimage to the home of Ex-president Wilson to fittingly honor the great war president. Ever since his breakdown and retirement certain newspapers have been trying to make a hero out of Ex-president Wilson. There was a time when the American Negro depended on the white press for his information. Not only did he depend upon it but swore by it. If the white press called a man great, why he was great. But not so today. The Negro reads his own papers, seeks other sources of information and then forms his own conclusion about the greatness or littleness of a man. And we know of no man on the stage of action today about whom the Negro has formed a more clean cut, unshakeable, opinion than that of Ex-president Wilson. And five thousand people, nor ten thousand pilgrims to his home Armistice Day will in any wise change or affect that opinion.

The Negro is willing to concede that the war president was and is a great scholar. He will also concede that he was a master weaver of beautiful and high sounding phrases, but that he possessed the qualities of true greatness the Negro will not admit. A really great man is bigger than his surroundings. Stands head and shoulders above the crowd. Not only talks right, but acts right. Christ was great and He evidenced that greatness in his attitude toward the weak and lowly, the poor, he unforunate, the outcast and the fallen. Lincoln was great and he evidenced that greatness by striking a fatal blow at the institution known as slavery. Roosevelt was great and he evidenced that greatness by refusing to close the doors of hope in the face of any man because of his color. Imagine, if you can, Woodrow Wilson in the case of the fallen woman of Bible history exclaiming, "Let him that is without guilt cast the first stone." The truth of the matter is that the attitude of Ex-president Wilson is the attitude of the average American white man in so far as the American Negro is concerned and a funny thing about it is that it matters not what injustice, however, open and brazen it may be that the American white man heaps upon the unoffending American Negro, such action does not in the least affect his social, political or even religious status with others of his race. Indeed he may rob, beat and burn the Negro and not lose his standing in his local community and is no less great in the estimation of his white world. Take for example certain sections of the Southland where a white man may openly live with a colored mistress and yet not be disqualified from holding the highest office in the gift of his state or otherwise elevated to a position of honor and trust. It is a curious fact that while white fathers will shrink with horror at the very thought of their daughters marrying a white man who is known to have murdered a white man and yet they will receive with open arms a prospective son-in-law who boasts of having been a party to the lynching of an innocent Negro. It appears that murder is not murder when the skin of the man happens to be colored.

What we are trying to point out is that a white man's acts toward the Negro as an individual or a group does not seem to weigh in the minds of other members of his group when summing up his worth. Therefore the shameful treatment of our colored boys on the field of battle during the late war, the strange silence of Ex-president Wilson when colored soldiers wearing the uniform of the United States Army were lynched after their return from maknig the world safe for democracy, the wholesale jim-crowing of Negroes in government buildings, the rape of Haiti and the making of a football out of poor little Liberia during the Wilson administration, does not make him any the less a hero in the eyes of a large number of white Americans.

THE NEGRO'S PETTY OPPRESSORS.

Whenever the real friends of the negroes try to get at the bottom of the causes which are inducing so many of them to go north in search of rainbow gold, the charge is brought forward that they do not get a square deal in business matters and more particularly when they are brought into contract with the law.

The chances are that they will not better their condition, even in these particulars, when they go North, but the proper thing for us to consider is whether the charges are true, and long observation will convince any man that in many cases they are only too true. Many of them are child-minded, and reach out after gewgaws for which they have no use and which they cannot afford. Others are making a praise-worthy effort to furnish and brighten their homes so that living conditions will be more attractive.

They are encouraged to buy various articles on long-time payments sold at an outrageous profit, and on the slightest delinquency their goods are taken from them. In some instances all the principles of law and procedure are flagrantly over-riden, while in other cases they are the victims of a class of grasping oppressors who perhaps track the letter of the law and yet set all equitable considerations at defiance.

The negroes, in their ignorance and simplicity, cannot understand the intricases of all these proceedings. They only know that every now and then some legal attachment is issued against them, their goods are taken away and their homes despoiled. The have to start in again on the "exortion" plan to try to accumulate something once more, but under great discouragement.

It would not be difficult to cite numbers of white men who have fattened on this kind of system.

If we turned to the criminal side of the code, it would be equally easy to show that negroes are frequently the victims of injustice, but, for the moment this aspect may be set to one side as constituting a chapter in itself.

The question begins to arise in its most acute form as to how long this kind of thing is to go on. We are absolutely certain that in spite of everything this is the best place for the negro, and that sooner or later, if he goes away, he will come back because his friends among the white people far exceed those who victimize him. But it would be far better if the shysters, the tipstaves and the extortionists in all their fifty-seven varieties waked up to the realty that this form of petty oppression is having a tremendous reaction and it is about time it came to an end.

The negro in Georgia must be given aid and every encouragement to accumulate property and thus acquire a stake in the community, instead of despoiling him at every turn by some petty process under color of law, and thus driving him to an alien environment which he hopes will be better because he feels it could not be worse.

GETTING ON WITH EACH OTHER

One thing is certain in this country: It is this, The best white Americans and Black Americans must come together and try if possible to understand each other.

It is not so much that the races are different ,the fact is that they are too much alike. People who are different get along easily. The Indian and the Whites get along well because they are opposite types. One group is ambitious and the other has no ambition and so on.

But take a black and a white American with the same brain power, their ambitions are the same. They both want to be President or bankers. If one starts something, the other imitates. They both love to into battle and are predacious. When a white man goes to bed he has to study hard to invent some way to keep a black man from taking his business, job or daughter. The black man has the same thing to do.

The white race talks of being haughty Anglo Saxons. The black race talks of being proud haughty domineering Ethiopians. The white race starts a war ,the black race want to general it. Two dominant races in the same country are like two women in the same hmse, they must either get along together or one leaves. The whites and blacks came to this country together. Some of us were dragged here, others migrated, but we are here and have got to stay. That means that we must both; whites and blacks get to know and to understand

Dubois, the Critic, Criticized

(St. Luke's Herald)

Doctor W. E. B. Dubois, editor of the Crisis, has been known heretofore as the Major Prophet of the Twentieth Century. He has said that the Problem of the Twentieth Century is the Problem of the Color Line.

In Philadelphia, a few weeks ago, at Cheyney, Doctor Dubois has been criticized as one guilty of the sin of digression and backsliding. In the August Crisis he states "more concisely and definitely" what he said at length at Cheyney.

In our humble judgment Doctor Dubois does not need anyone to come to his defense. He is fully capable of taking care of himself in every way in which he might need a defense.

There has been a disposition to discredit Doctor Dubois for some time in a certain division of the Negro Press. These younger men have decided to come in for a share of the conduct of the affairs of the Race in America. In our opinion this is a wholesome sign and a promise of better things in the future.

If Doctor Dubois had the least idea in mind to countenance the iniquitous system of the Jim-Crow he deserves all the lambasting that he has received at the hands of the irate editors of the Race. We need no sort of palliation with the wicked traffickers in the realms of prejudice and race hatred. If they are going to Jim-Crow us, let them do it, but never should we accept it as final nor as a blessing.

If we have prospered under the system of a false democracy, it has not been because of the system, but in spite of the hellishness of the things. This we should keep clearly in mind as leaders and molders of public sentiment for our struggling group in America.

We think that the patriotic editor of the Crisis had no such thing in mind as his critics have made believe that he meant. It is impossible, when one knows the man, to accuse him of a betrayal of his people and his high trust. It is simply a sign that Doctor Dubois must become more cosmopolitan in his ideas and dealings with his people. He is not so far out of range of the thinkers of his Race as he was at one time. Everybody is thinking some now. Caution, Doctor. Remember that the mighty have fallen. Come close to your common people.

SPIRIT OF SOUTH PORTRAYED BY BALTI. EDITOR

Perhaps one of the most striking articles ever written about the Negro and the South is the article which appeared in the "New York Age" last week by H. D. Menken.

Mr. Menchen is one of the best known writers in America. He is on the Editorial Staff of "The New York Nation" and the "Baltimore Sun." Mr Menchen may be regarded as the Bernard Shaw of America.

The Tribune reprints the article in full as follows:

THE SPIRIT OF THE SOUTH

By H. L. Menchen

Nearly the whole of Europe could be lost in that stupendous region of fat farms, shoddy cities and paralyzed cerebrums; one could throw in France, Germany and Italy and still have room for the British Isles.

And yet, for all its size and all its wealth and all the "progress" it babbles of, it is almost as stirile, artistically, intellectually, culturally, as the Sahara Desert. There are single acres in Europe that house more first-rate men than all the states south of the Potomac; there are probably more worthwhile men in some single square mile north of it in America.

If the whole of the late Confederacy were to be engulfed by a tidal wave tomorrow the effect upon the progress of civilized men in the world would be but little greater than that of a flood on the Yangtse-Kiang. It would be impossible in all history to match so completely a dry-up of civilization as we see in the South. It is, indeed, amazing to contemplate so vast a vacuity and emptiness.

What is needed down there, before the vexatious public problems of the region may be intelligently approached, is a survey of the population by competent ethnologists and anthropologists. The immigrants of the North have been studied at great length.

But the older stocks of the South, and particularly the dominant poor white trash, have never been investigated scientifically, and most of the current generalizations about them are probably wrong. For example, the generalization that they are purely Anglo-Saxon in blood. This I doubt very seriously.

The chief strain down there is Celtic rather than Saxon, particularly in the hill country. French blood, too, shows itself here and there, and so does Spanish, and so does German. The Germans entered from the northward by way of the limestone belt just east of the Alleghenies.

Again it is very likely that in some parts of the South many of the plebeian whites have considerable Negro blood. Inter-breeding under concubinage produced some very light half-breeds at an early day, and no doubt appreciable numbers of them went over into the white race by the simple process of changing their abode.

Not long ago I read a curious article by an intelligent Negro in which he stated that it is easy for a very light Negro to pass as white in the South on account of the fact that large numbers of Southerners accepted as white—have distinctly Negroid features.

Some of the worst blood of Western Europe flows in the veins of the Southern poor white, now poor no longer. The original strains, according to every honest historian were extremely corrupt.

Philip Alexander Bruce (a Virginian of the old gentry) says, in his "The Institution History of Virginia in the Seventeenth Century," that the first native-born generation was largely illegitimate. "One of the most common offenses against morality committed in the lower ranks of life in Virginia during the seventeenth century he says, "was bastardy."

"The mothers of these bastards," he continues, "were chiefly indentured servants, and had belonged to the lowest class in their native country." Fannie Kemble Butler, writing of the Georgia poor whites of a century later described them as "the most degraded race of human beings claiming an Anglo-Saxon origin that can be found on the face of the earth—filthy lazy, ignorant, brutal, proud, penniless savages."

The marks of their origin are still unpleasantly plentiful.

It is not by accident the Negroes of the South are making faster progress economically and culturally, than the masses of white. It is not by accident that the only visible aesthetic activity in the South is wholly in their hands. No Southern composer has ever written music so good as that of half a dozen mulatto composers who might be named.

Even in politics the Negro reveals a curious superiority.

Despite the fact that the race question has been the main political concern of the Southern whites for two generations, to the practical exclusion of everything else—they have contributed nothing to its discussion that has impressed the rest of the world so deeply and so favorably as three or four books by Southern Negroes."

THE CONSTITUTION NORTH AND SOUTH.

If the whites of the south are to live the way they want to live they must disregard the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the constitution. If they did not nullify them they would have an entirely different life and one they would not tolerate. Federal officials and federal troops made them stand for it during part of reconstruction, and consequences were barely endurable.

It is a momentous question and the north virtually tells the south to proceed in its own way, regardless of the constitution, to live as it wants to live, although it might not make a great deal of difference to the north if Georgia had a Negro governor and a Negro state judiciary and a Negro legislature.

The north does not impose its will upon the south and has not since the passions of Republican radicals wore themselves out in the seventies. The whole attitude of the country confesses that a mistake was made in the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

A mistake also was made in putting a rule of private conduct in the constitution. Some states which adopted the eighteenth amendment now regret it. They show their change of mood by their votes and by acts of their legislatures. Under the eighteenth amendment they do not live as they want to live, just as the whites of the southern states could not live as they want to live under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

The man in the north who wants a glass of beer finds that he is an enemy of the constitution and an anarchist. The man in the south who does not want a black man to vote, and sees that he does not, is untainted of disrespect for the constitution and has no contempt for American law.

This may be all right, but it leaves us a bit in the dark.

Race Problem—1923
United States

Many Negro Papers are Now Finding Way Into the Mails

The American Forum 2-17-23
San Antonio, Texas

From Texas (100 Per Cent American)

Negro papers are springing up all over the United States today, "preaching" and teaching social equality. Some of these papers go so far as to make claim that the negro race is even superior to the white race. One publication of this character is "The Crisis," published by a negro by the name of Du Bois, on Fifth avenue, New York.

It will be remembered, no doubt, that this negro, Du Bois, was in a great measure, responsible for the race riots in Oklahoma, and no doubt, had the good "pore white trash" of Tulsa got their hands on the person of this negro, there would have been a strange black face in heaven or some other place, in a very few minutes time.

Another such paper reaches our desk. It is "The Messenger," published at 2305 Seventh Avenue, New York, and like, "The Crisis," this dirty negro sheet goes a length to belittle the white people of the South, and more especially the good white folks living in Arkansas.

Just read what the black jackass has to say regarding the white people of the South:

"Out of the mass of observation and experience I have attempted to reach some conclusions, to wit:

"On the surface the black people of Dixie seem happy enough, but underneath a peaceful REVOLUTION is slowly but surely making headway. Times are surely growing worse. There is a reason. Progress means change. When the change among the negroes is for the better the Southern whites can't stand it. Theoretically they want the negro to go to school, become educated, acquire property. But with that comes something else. A man of education and property is a man of standing. HE SHOULD BE CONSULTED ON IMPORTANT QUESTIONS. HE SHOULD BE RESPECTED. He shouldn't have to suffer petty indignities.

"But where is the Southerner who won't tell you: Education is all right, but a nigger is a nigger just the same. The theory and practice are different. They produce a paradox. One side must give way—must concede. The negro knows nothing else but concede—but he is getting damn tired of conceding ALL the time."

There will always be some poor Southern whites. They are the proudest people in the world. You can't insist that they treat you as a human being. The do so if they want to—but it is optional with them. The better element may sympathize with you, but you are still helpless. "A chain is no stronger than its weakest link." Basically, the most prosperous Southern Negro is at the mercy of the most ignoble Southern white. There is no law when it comes to a showdown between white and black.

All negroes know this. Some live 40 years and never have a single instance of trouble. But the brutal fact stares them in the face—if it ever comes to a showdown. "Would you put a nigger before a white man?" (That "nigger" may be Major Moton or he may be any obscure Southern peon.) Where is the Southerner who wouldn't qual? They may all regret it afterwards—but for the moment: "White Supremacy" with capital letters. And those whites who would bravely stand out against it—"they are 'nigger' lovers—shoot 'em like dogs!"

This is the actual situation. It is not true in every case, but it may be true in any case. And every negro knows that any case might be his own.

Underneath the revel and merry-making is a nervous tremor. Always be careful. The mob is a possibility for any negro. Each fine house and each automobile may be in ashes next week this time. Or they may be here indefinitely.

We wish to reply, particularly to the last paragraph in this negro's tirade against the Southern whites, in which he comes out holding for negro supremacy by force of brutal passion. He stresses "Each fine house and each automobile may be in ashes next week this time, or they may be here indefinitely."

What does this negro paper mean when it publishes such matter as above? Simply that the negro educators of the North and East, working in conjunction with the Roman Catholic Church, is on the verge of getting the Southern negro in more trouble than the race will be able to overcome in a thousand years. Negro Catholic churches are being established all over our fair Southland today, and are being presided over by white priests, who teach them, by precept and example, that the negro is the white man's equal—morally, socially and otherwise.

We have [illegible]on that the negro in the South [illegible]ing taught social equality, and are being urged to prepare themselves for a struggle to gain this end, and that at no far distant time.

And yet, in the face of all this evidence we hear Protestants defending the Pope and his agents, and opposing an organization (the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan) which is sworn to protect our womanhood against the enroachments of this black demon, and who will see to it that the white race is kept supreme.

The clouds are growing blacker and blacker every day; more "learned" Northern Negroes are being sent into our Southland each day, with the purpose of putting this social equality stuff into the heads of the Southern Negroes, with the result that more of our white women are feeling the weight of the negro's dirty hands each succeeding day.

The testing time is coming, Mr. White Man, and when it does come will you be banded with the all-American Protestant citizens, who are standing in the path of entry of the Pope and his black following?

This negro paper goes on to say:

"There is a great pretense in Arkansas, as in all the South, that white women are greatly in need of protection against negro men, but it is the world over that sex-imposition is by the strong against the weak. It never has yet been that the colored woman was half as safe in the proximit yof white men as is the white woman in the midst of colored men in the South.

"Such is the character of the Arkansas of the present, one of the strongholds of the Ku Klux Klan and the home of the Ancient Concatenated Order of Hoo Hoo. If in the first year of the 19th century the primeval gulf had rolled again up the valley of the Mississippi and covered the rich black plains to the original water line, nothing would be missing in the world today except Bowie knives, unmeasured misery and an unaccountable number of horrible homicides."

In the face of this, the halfbaked white Protestant says we are really too hard on political Rome and the negro. Just read the papers and note the many crimes now being committed on our white women by the black brutes.

and a [illegible] small Jewish contingent is this [illegible]stionable combination, that has und[illegible]taken to grab the reins of this gove[illegible]nment, bulldoze, and frighten the 100 [illegible]er cent native born Americans into submission — and simply transform this white man's country into a Roman colony.

Never, in this history of the world, has such a bold, brazen, preposterous, and ridiculous attack been made upon a sovereign people—and it seems to peeve, and enrage this ill-matched combination of alien extraction, because the native Americans refuse to raise the white flag, and beg for quarter on bended knees.

The most of the bombardment has been carried on through a subsidized, and venal press, and is still on the job—spewing out a stench of damnable lies and hell-brewed slanders, upon the best, and most worthy of our nation.

Strange to say, these unholy, false, and villainous attacks have produced precisely the opposite effect—anticipated by these miserable, graceless liars, employed by the enemies of this country.

This fact is more than proven, when we realize that from every state in the Union, the real patriotic American white men are joining the new order just as fast as they can be admitted—and today, more than two million men are in line—and this will continue, until this entire Union will be completely permeated and surrounded by a solid phalanx of determined men, ready, and more than ready, to put an eternal silence upon the slanderous tongues that are now so blithely wagging—and that will settle it.

Just what hopes the opposition to the Klan can possibly have, to win this war (for it has about developed into a war) would puzzle a Solomon, to even guess.

The class, and character of the men, joining the Klan, simply precludes the possibility of them ever giving up the fight—and the chances are it will be a fight — for American patience, though very elastic—can be stretched too far for safety.

What puzzles, mystifies, and even amuses the writer, is to attempt to understand, how on earth the element seeking the destruction of the Klan in America—or seriously retarding its progress—can even entertain a hope to be successful.

They have lots of money, but they are deplorably weak, contrasted with the natives, that will certainly oppose them.

Money, cannot buy a 100 per cent American—and the miserable class of little Benedict Arnolds that can be bought are not worth a nickel a head.

They'll take your money—write the Klan up in the papers—but that's all. No decent man believes them—so what is the use?

I'll tell you precisely how it will end.

The men at the head of this anti-

American movement are going to keep up the fight (with dirty dollars) just as long as possible.

The time will come however, for an old-time house-cleaning, and it will be cleaned—from garret to cellar — and the miserable, traitors who are already known to be the bell-wethers in this nation-wide conspiracy, are going to leave the open, hit the brush, and stay there.

This will come to pass, just as sure as God reigns in Heaven—and from that time on, America—and the patriotic people who made it what it is—will go forward in her progressive march toward higher and better things.

The bell-wethers in this nation-wide conspiracy to attain control of this government are now confronted with the astonishing fact that the Israelitish forces they counted upon to aid them, are anything but a unit—in taking part in this unnecessary and damnable conspiracy to fight 100 per cent Protestant Americans.

America has been the only country on earth where a respectable Jew could live and prosper in absolute safety, and not be envied, hounded and harrassed by disreputable natives.

Remember—once for all—that his most inveterate enemy will never assert that the Jew is a fool.

Also remember, that the greatest mathematical expert in the Jewish nation will have a difficult job trying to figure out the benefit to be derived to his countrymen—in case they desert the friendship of the easy-going, free-hearted Protestant white Americans—and line up with the Big Italian Boss—with headquarters at Rome. Can you imagine such a combination?

Keep all these facts constantly in your mind.

Just sit steady—don't rock the boat—and a safe landing is assured.

Americans have never been conquered—so don't worry about traitors and Italy.

Declares South's Method Is Only Solution For The Vexing Race Question

Washington Tribune
Washington, D. C.
2-24-23

Assumes New Role in Latest Attempt to Win Favor of the South

HEARERS GREATLY SURPRISED

Is Willing to Become 'Evangelist' and Preach This Southern Doctrine

With a voice almost as clear and with spirits as bouyant as in the summer of 1896, when " 16 to 1" was the cry from coast to coast, William Jennings Bryan, erstwhile Democratic candidate for president, an opponent of the Darwinian theory, with one single sweep, told the world that the South is absolutely justified in discriminating and lynching Negroes. While the recently Southernized Northerner did not use exactly the above words, his meaning was unmistakable. Bryan's statement was such a shock that even the Southern Society before whom the Commoner was speaking had to gasp.

The new exponent of racial segregation was a guest of the Southern Society at their annual banquet at the Hotel Willard last Tuesday night. He came late on the program as an impromtu speaker Although all the speakers were practically Southerners, Bryan was the only one who in any way discussing the race question.

Bryan stated that he "finds that the Southland is confronted by a condition and not a political theory, and that there is no remedy for it except the undisputed dominance of the superior civilization. Northerners who hold other views simply don't know. If Massachusetts faced the issues the South faces, she would do exactly what the Virginians do to meet them." Bryan further argued that "The Jeffersonian doctrine about all men being created free and equal could not be littrally interpreted or enforced where there is a manifest inferiority as between one racial civilization and another. Amid such conditions the superior civilization would and must be the ascendant factor."

Bryan declared that he had watched the South's laws at work for a decade and that they had convinced him that no other system was possible He declared the South's method is immeasurably preferable to the theoristic doctrines of Massachusetts or the experiment of Illinois.

Though delivered before a Southern audience, Bryan admonished his hearers that his remarks were primarily intended for Northern consumpion, and gave the impression that he may become an evangelist in propagating it North, East and West.

William Jennings Bryan became a national figure in the Democratic presidential convention of 1896 and since then has held the spot light because of his various activities. He holds the record in running for president, having been an active or potential candidate since 1896. At times he has championed the cause of the Filipinos, and the prohibitionists, recently he began an assault on the Darwinian theory.

His native state was Nebraska until a few years ago when under the guise of "seeking his health," he migrated to sunny Florida Since making his abode in Florida, Bryan has evidently been undergoing the gradual change that all Northerners must go through if they would be in favor in the South. Evidently Brvan has been thoroughly assimilated and is now ready to go before the world wearing the glasses of race hatred and white supremacy

In playing h[illegible] new role the Commoner evidently has his eyes centered on the Democratic presidential nomination in 1924 and figured that the opportunity of speaking before the Southern Society would be a good one to win the Southerners to his banner by championing their pet cause and hobby. In other words he hopes to ride the Democratic nomination on the broken necks and scarred backs of Negroes. Like omst Northerners who migrate South, Bryan believes that by simply "hollering" Negro and White Supremacy, the Ku Klux Klan and the white South generally will just flock into his camp and naturally bring him along with them, the nomination. It is essential for Bryan to try now to win the support of a skeptical South because Oscar W. Underwood of Birmingham, Ala., now U S. Senator, is being groomed by some Southerners as the Demo-as Underwood is Southern born and bred, and thoroughly rabid to boot, bred, and thoroughly rabit to boot, naturally Bryan must prove to the South that he is even a better or worse, Southerner than Underwood himself.

Bryan finds himself drowning in a political sea; and like most drowning men he is grabbing for the proverbial straw, and that straw is the Negro issue. Unless he can win his party's nomination next year, his chances for ever being a figure again is forever gone, as his advanced age will forever eliminate him. His purpose in moving South was considered by many, at that time, as being a political move. This contention was practically proven in 1920 when Bryan made an attempt to run for the U. S. Senate

The restrictions of life in the more backward sections of the south account for much of the Negro exodus to the north. It is said that the son of Booker T. Washington can never live in the state of Alabama again because he espoused the cause of a colored man who suffered an injustice. The racial consciousness of the Negroes is being made manifest in their missionary work. as may be seen from the fact that all of the Negro missionary work in the island of Haiti is being carried on by workers sent out by the Negro Baptist church of America. It is interesting to note that 65 per cent of Negro Christians in America are Baptists.

Race Problem—1923

United States

As Race Conference

the Messenger

In the January issue of The Crisis, Dr. DuBois, perplexed and vexed over the defeat of the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill, says anent the subject of a third party:

Our duty is clear. And in order to systematize and concentrate our votes, we must, early in 1924, assemble in a National Political Congress—a congress duly representative of every locality, to decide on methods, ways and means.

Rather belated but still a splendid suggestion, providing such a congress is truly representative not only of every locality but also of every shade of Negro political opinion, Republican, Democratic, Socialist, Non-Partisan or what not. New York

Practically at the same time, Prof. Kelly Miller issued a call in the Negro press for a Race Congress which will deal not alone with the Negroes' political problems, but, as he puts it, with the "State of the Race." Prof. Miller proceeds to name certain Negro organizations that should be included in such a call. It is significant that he scrupulously excludes the radical or left wing school of Negro thought. We don't charge that it is deliberate. It might have been an oversight; but something must be seriously the matter with one's optics today when he fails to see the rising tide of radicalism among Negroes—as expressed by a definite and well-defined group. We make these observations because we are too cognizant of the unrepresentative character of Negro conferences and congresses. Of course it is not peculiar to the Negro. The Versailles Peace Conference was one-sided. That is why it failed. It excluded Russia and Germany. Specifically speaking, the Pan-African Congress and the Garvey Congresses were failures because the impression prevailed that they were self-glorification stunts of their authors. We, however, register our approval of the congress or conference idea. We must confer if we would understand each other, and we must understand each other if we would move forward. May we remind our readers that, in the midst of the industrial and financial panic, when the commercial highways were strewn with wrecks of Negro businesses and Negro workers were tramping the streets as a part of the army of the unemployed, THE MESSENGER, seeing the dreadful and serious plight of the race, advised the calling of an economic conference to formulate policies that would enable the group to weather the storm without great injury. But few of our leaders think basically, and hence the call fell upon deaf ears. Thus we shuffled on distressingly unwitting of our way, still suffering on account of the lack of collective economic action.

PRINCEFIELD MASS EVE'G

Negro Question

Wi[ll the ne]gro question ever be settled? It persist[s, cr]opping up every now and then. It appears [in] educational institutions. It is made the [foo]tball of politics. The Ku Klux Klan employs it as one of the chief planks in its platform. Here we are, living in one country, a black race and a white one, refusing to amalgamate. And the black race is increasing. In the eyes of alarmists it is a constantly growing menace. What shall be done about it?

Well there are those who believe that the Negro question is settling itself about as rapidly as so big a question can hope to be settled.

A hundred years ago the ancestors of many of these American Negroes were living as savages in the jungles of Africa. In a single century, during part of which they were given no opportunities, they are expected to have attained to a plane of civilization reached by their white brothers after thousands of years of struggle. If they have not fully accomplished that feat is it to be wondered at? The wonder is that they have achieved so much.

Sixty years ago a former editor of The Union spent a year as civil overseer of territory occupied by Federal troops in Beaufort County, South Carolina. He found there hundreds of ignorant and helpless Negroes whose masters, in the stress of war, had been obliged to desert them. He found them incapable of self-support, like children that had to be cared for. They did not know how to plant crops, how to build houses, how to make clothes. They were eager to learn. They wanted the white man's religion, which they strangely mixed with savage rites. They wanted to be married like white people. They wanted to be taught the fundamentals of life in the land of which they suddenly found themselves to be free citizens.

There were at that time in the South, as well as in the North, Negroes who had reached a higher degree of civilization than that, but the great mass of them were totally undeveloped. What has become of those people, so unexpectedly thrown upon their own recourses, so unprepared for the boon of freedom? "The Pathfinder" is authority for the following significant statistics:

"According to a recent report, in the last sixty years Negroes in this country have acquired 22,000,000 acres of land, 600,000 homes and 45,000 churches. They operate 78 banks and 100 insurance companies, besides 70,000 other business enterprises, with a capital of $150,000,000. Owing to the large number of schools and colleges for colored children, illiteracy has been reduced to less than 27 per cent."

Well, there you are! There's your Negro problem! Of course, they have had some help from us, but they should be able to count on that also for the future. This is what six decades have brought them, and they started with most of these figures represented by zero, except that illiteracy was nearly 100 per cent.

Before we despair, why not give the American Negro another sixty years and see what comes of it?

Coolidge At Tuskegee

2-28-23

(The Boston Guardian).

American News. New York

As Vice-President Coolidge stood up at Tuskegee reciting the achievements of the Colored people in war and peace, as he made the dedicatory speech at the new "Negro veterans' hospital," he should have felt ashamed that he was the Vice-President of a country which has done so much to segregate and degrade the group of American citizens for which the "Jim Crow" hospital was built. The fact that it cost $2,000,000, serves to emphasize the other fact that it is a costly monument to the Nation's shame.

The Colored people having as Mr. Coolidge says, performed the duties of citizenship in peace, and given their lives in war, they should be treated exactly the same as every other element in the mixed population of the United States. No one has suggested a segregated hospital for Jewish veterans or those of other races. The only way now that the people of the United States can prove that the Tuskegee hospital is not a segregated affair, built for the purpose of separating the Colored people from their fellow citizens, and for the express purpose of having all of the other elements despise them, is to construct separated hospitals for Jews Hawaiians, English, Filipinos, French, Germans Malays, Polish, Chinese, Russians, Japanese, Spanish and the one hundred and one other races and nationalities which make up our cosmopolitan population.

It is not strange that Robert R. Moton, principal of Tuskegee, was enthusiastic because it enhances his prestige among the enemies of the Colored people in the United States. His statement that the hospital "is the greatest achievement of our government for the Colored race in America since emancipation," is a joke. It shows that he has not read history; that he has no conception of democracy; that he is a man wholly without vision; that he is satisfied with segregation. He did not speak as a man who felt he had within himself the power of American citizenship. No, Principal Moton, the hospital is NOT an "achievement" but another curse which caste has placed upon thet Colored citizens of this caste-cursed country.

NEW ORLEANS LA ITEM
FEBRUARY 14, 1923

THE writer recalls w[ell] arly the threadbare fictions of "The Ne[gro] Menace" and "White Supremacy," and all the re[st] of the twaddle in which the reverend blood-and-thunderer defended his first performances against sensible criticism. But when all was said, the fact was clear:

He had successfully capitalized a prejudice. He had made money by playing to hatred and the baser passions of the unreasoning side of man.

There was no more negro menace then than there is today. There is no more today than there was then. No manifestation in the negro life of the nation, or any part of it, either then or now, requires red fire and masks, for the protection of the white race or any other legitimate object.

WAY TO BUILD A RACE.

Milwaukee Leader

It is contended by many earnest students of racial conditions in this country that the Negro, like the female character in Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "jest growed." The need for a real constructive program in building up racial solidarity is therefore insisted upon as a vital necessity. Pressure from without has contributed largely to this result where the forces of prejudice and discrimination have driven the members of the race to combine in order to serve their special interests in business and other relations of life. The lack of this outside pressure in other communities has retarded certain business developments because of the facilities already existing which served the same purposes.

The building up of a race is not to be accomplished in a day or a year, especially when the race concerned is strongly imbued with individualistic tendencies. The Negro race in America is fundamentally an American product, root, stem and branch. Its original ancestors undoubtedly came from Africa, but little of the habits and traditions that they brought with them has survived. In the three centuries since they landed on American soil their descendants have been absorbing the spirit and the letter of American civilization as built up and created by the different European races that settled this country. The various qualities contributed by these various strains have been acquired by those of African extraction, modified or accentuated by the surviving traits handed down from the period be[fore] immigration. But primarily the [Negro] is an American, because no other [coun]try can take the place that Ame[rica] has played in his racial development.

It follows then that all plans for social and industrial development must be along the lines of American progress. This has been apparent in the strides already made in religious welfare and fraternal organizations, insurance and financial institutions, educational progress and individual and cooperative business enterprises. The need for further development along all these lines is pressing, but there is also need for keeping this development moving in legitimate channels and safeguarded from exploitation by unscrupulous promoters. Too many individuals make a practice of preying on the community on the plea of helping to start race business. The honest promoter of any business enterprise should first acquire the requisite experience to conduct the business he plans. He should start with his own capital and demonstrate the possibilities of success. Then if additional funds are needed for expansion, he can appeal for more capital with a showing that will prove his good faith and inspire confidence in his enterprise. The possibility of establishing small retail business has not been tested to the extent that it deserves. Department stores and other concerns doing business on a large scale involve a large overhead expense to run them successfully. The smaller retailer can keep down this item and give special service to each customer.

Cooperative enterprises to be successful demand trained management and united support by the interests for which they are established. They have proved useful when formed by farmers for the purpose of getting their supplies at wholesale prices and disposing of their crops in bulk without the intervention of a middle man. Lodges and societies should prove a potent factor as business builders, if the support of their members could be enlisted along legitimate lines. The same degree of unanimity shown by them in the purchase of regalias and uniforms might be diverted into regular business channels without involving any extra expense or responsibility

A feature that detracts from the upbuilding of the race in some respects is the holding of too many conventions in various parts of the country. Serious minded critics are inclined to pronounce many of these gatherings a waste of money and energy. The amounts paid to the railroads, hotel and hall proprietors, together with the time and effort expended by the officers and delegates, would serve to put many a struggling race enterprise on its feet. The number of conventions might be reduced to advantage.

After all is said and done, we have to come to the conclusion that there is no new way to build up a race in business or otherwise. The practice of thrift and industry, as advocated by that famous American, Benjamin Franklin, remains the only safe and certain road to economic independence. Taking these principles as the cornerstone, the race may confidently expect to make for itself a permanent place in the American business world.

THE BLACK MAN'S PHILOSOPHY

THE black man's attitude of mind, which is really his philosophy of life, affects every phase and aspect of his career. There have been since the dawn of history two dominant and distinct attitudes of mind, namely, the fatalistic and the progressive. The debates between the Calvinistic believers in predestination and the believers in free will and the debates between the believers in determination from natural causes and the believers in the freedom of the mind in willing are expressions of these two attitudes. Negro World

Some men believe that things will happen because Fate, Providence or God so decreed it, and that nothing that they will do will materially change the course of events. The Hindoos have been the classic champions of this view. Other men believe that man can himself determine the course of events. The Romans, Anglo-Saxons and Japanese were and are classic champions of this view. 3-3-23-New York

When we closely observe the attitude of mind of men and women of color we find that they, too, are divided into the fatalistic and progressive camps. Some are affected by a fatalistic pessimism, which causes them to believe that they can never surmount the wall of race prejudice and caste proscription which hems them in. Others believe that just as black men in Ethiopia and brown men in Egypt centuries ago aid the foundations of the world's civilization, just as Rome waxed mighty in ancient times and England, France, America and Japan in modern times because of the spirit that animated them, so, too, black men in the present can overcome a hostile environment and make themselves felt as factors in civilization. And the fate and destiny of black folks will depend upon whether they adopt the fatalistic or progressive attitude of mind and philosophy of life.

If the black man will substitute the "possumist" for the "pessimistic" philosophy of life, the "I can" for the "I can't" philosophy, there is no limit to his possibilities.

RACES DWELLING TOGETHER

Some claim that two different races can never dwell together in peace and harmony in the same country. We don't know about the future, but they have been doing it in the past. Different races dwelt together in ancient Rome—Romans, Greeks, Gauls, Egyptians, Africans and Jews. Different races dwelt together in Alexandria, Egypt, nineteen hundred years ago—Romans, Greeks, Egyptians, Jews and Negroes. Different races dwelt together in Tarsus in Paul's day—Romans, Greeks and Jews. The two million inhabitants of Palestine at present are divided among Arabs, Greeks and Jews, with the Jews in the minority. Of course, one race was the ruling race, the dominant race. It has ever been so and it ever will be so. The race with brains, character, physical stamina, industrial efficiency, commercial capability and wealth was on top in ancient Rome, Tarsus and Alexandria. It is on top today. And it will be on top a thousand years from now. The strong mentally, morally, physically, industrially and commercially have always ruled the weak. And it largely depends upon what the Negro is intellectually, morally, physically, industrially and commercially, what he says and what he does, as to whether he will be near the top or near the bottom of the heap. The care of physicians and nurses has much to do with the recovery of a patient. But the most important thing is the vitality of the patient. Physicians and nurses cannot take the place of nature. The most that they can do is to assist nature. So it is with the black man, whether he functions in America or Africa, the determining factor in his own evolution will be his own personality, conduct, character, ability, deeds and achievements.

THE BLACK MAN'S PROGRAM

The Negro's attitude toward Western civilization has been discussed pro and con. Some say that he ought to imitate the Caucasian and others say that he ought to remain a Negro. What ought he to do? A little history will clear the atmosphere. New York is a city beside which Rome, Athens, Babylon, Nineveh, Alexandria, Thebes, Corinth and Ephesus, in the heyday of their glory, were but villages. If Pericles, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar and Napoleon were to return to earth and see how chasms have been bridged, mountains tunneled, the air conquered and the forces of steam, gas, gasoline and electricity harnessed to serve man, they would open their eyes wide with amazement. And yet the ancestors of the men who have done these things were wandering as barbarians and semi-savages in the forests of Britain, Germany and France two thousand years ago. What wrought the change and transformation?

These barbarians for fifteen hundred years learned all that Rome, Israel, Egypt, Arabia and Greece could teach. Then for four hundred years they made contributions to that knowledge. And then for one hundred years they applied that scientific, mathematical, political and commercial knowledge to practical problems. The result is we have our steam-heated, electric-lighted elevator apartments, our cable cars, electric cars, elevated cars, subway, underground tubes, our Flatiron and Woolworth buildings, our locomotives, steamships, aeroplanes, vitascopes, graphophones, telephones, telegraph and wireless telegraphy.

Japan followed the same course. Marquis Ito sent Japanese students to American, English, French and German universities to learn all that Western civilization could teach. The result is that Japan is a force to be reckoned with. China and India paid little attention to what the rest of the world was doing, remained rooted to the past, circling in ancient eddies. The result is as follows: India is now dominated by England and China by Japan.

The African and his descendant in the Western hemisphere should absorb and assimilate Western civilization in all of its phases and aspects. At the same time he should not lose his own individuality and his own soul. His optimism, geniality, religious faith and innate artistic musical and oratorical gifts should not be submerged by his acquired culture. This is the path to glory that great men and races have trod in the past and are now treading today.

Race Problem—1923.
United States.

CLEMENT WOOD ABUSES THE HOME FOLKS.

Montgomery Advertiser
1-8-23

What is it that makes a well born man turn inferior? What is it that makes a renegade of one trained to patriotism? What is it in a man that degrades his gifts and makes him vicious? We leave the answers to the biologists and the psychologists.

But these questions raise up to capture one's interest in speculative themes whenever there is occasion to consider the eccentricities of a man like Clement Wood, formerly of Alabama, but now a resident of New York where he breathes the exhilirating air of Greenwich Village, and writes pieces, including novels, for the magazine and book press. Mr. Wood is a son of the Alabama Black Belt, and the member of a respected family who gave him every educational advantage which an aspiring mind could crave. He spent the latter years of his life in Alabama in Birmingham where he achieved some notoriety because of his radical and irrational views on many questions. Finally the heavy miasma of backward Alabama suffocated this gallant young free spirit, and he gave us his dust fresh from flying heels. Next we hear of him in New York where he has achieved some success in the literary field, having published a number of poems, essays and at least one novel, all of which have enhanced his growing reputation as a writer. Mr. Wood is a young man of gifts. He employs these gifts to advance his radical theories of society and government; which certainly is his privilege. We need some radical writers and leaders to keep the rest of us alert and stimulated.

But scruples should accompany gifts. Vicious psychological tendencies mar the brightest gifts. A decent regard for truth, even in radical writers, is desirable. Even a lively respect for facts, much less the greater thing called truth, is to be admired in men. What a pity it is that yearning, famished spirits such as Wood and others like him, can not see this!

In the current issue of a certain weekly critical review, edited by a millionaire prophet of the proletariat, who is none too scrupulous about what he prints, Mr. Wood publishes a curiously vitriolic attack upon his home State, and the people who live in it—that is, he attacks everybody except the colored section of the population. His heart goes out to that element, his gall goes out to the whites. Inferentially, he supports amalgamation of the races, and specifically arraigns his home people for social immorality. His bitter pen does not spare even white women. Altogether, we Alabamians are the lowest-down group of people in America, and the most backward.

In his opening picture of how Alabama was settled, Mr. Wood tells us, among other things, that "English traders of Carolina bored into the valley of the Alabama river in 1687, and radiated and settled throughout the four-square richness of the State. They found almost infinite variety; Florence perched upon the palisaded bluegrass plateau, Dothan drowsing in the sluggish shadows of palmettoes, Livingston crowning the fertile western muck of the Black Belt, Opelika baked in the sandy eastern lowland," etc.

Dothan, which is only about 35 years old, will be surprised to learn that it was in the land of the living when the English swarmed into the State; and it will be interested to learn for the first time that it drowses among palmettoes. Dothan doesn't drowse at all, but if it did, it would drowse in the shadow of the moaning pine trees, not palmettoes.

Here is the kind of Mutt Alabama is, according to Mr. Wood, our most distinguished white runaway slave:

Alabama is the center of the sisterhood of Southern States; Montgomery was therefore the first capital of the Confederacy. Topographically, these are the most fertile States in the Union; if we are still to judge a tree by its fruit, mentally, spiritually, they are the most sterile. What is true of Alabama is largely true of Georgia and Mississippi, of Tennessee, the Carolinas, Florida, northern Louisiana, and Arkansas. It is perhaps more true of Alabama than of any of these. Here is a static sterility; observing the stubborn midievalism that possesses her merely; one may well credit a surviving saurian in Patagonia. For years there was one Darwinian—in Alabama argot, "atheist"—on the faculty of the State University; the fact, in spite of the professor's popularity, was a whispered scandal. Darwin to many Alabamians is Lenin and Landrau in one, assuming that they have heard of either or both. The State is saturated with a provincialism that prefers the Demopolis Gazette to the New York World, and the Capitol at Montgomery to Notre Dame. This may be due to shrewd common sense; as a hoe is worth more to a field hand than a Stradivarius could be. * * *

Alabama has the largest production of pig iron among the States, and the third highest per centage of illiteracy. She is fourth among the States in the production of cotton, and one of the heartiest encoura labor.

The great misf t that there are mulatt n Alabama; it is that Alabama, the State itself, is the offspring of two races, united so furtively and blunderingly that she is immeasurably the loser by her joint parentage. The mental and spiritual sterility of the land has been catalogued with devastating impertinence by H. L. Mencken and stated by others.

And much more like the foregoing. The evidence of the backwardness of any American State is easily catalogued, and is frequently done by the notoriety seekers, the penny-a-liners and the educated fools. Abusing the American people is the favorite pastime of one school of writers. In recent times there have been a dozen or so of novels by Americans who used this vehicle to carry forth their bitter contempt for the people and civilization that produced them. What is here said of Alabama by Mr. Wood has been said of the whole American people; and it has been said of almost every one of the other States.

The masses of the people are not highly cultivated scholars in America, for reasons which we haven't time to go into here. This condition infuriates the Greenwich Village jackass. It makes no difference that the masses of the people of no country in the world, in this or any other age, are not and were not characterized by noble scholarship and refinement of esthetic taste. But it is evidence of inferiority in the American people to be less than widely experienced dilletantes. It makes no difference that the masses of the people in America make artists of every kind and writers and thinkers of every kind the most prosperous intellectuals that the world ever saw, doing this by the simple process of buying their wares with an eagerness which at least bespeaks the pride and ambition of the people. The average man in America is a dollar-making, tobacco-eating dog from the viewpoint of our superficial, unconscionable imitators of Bernard Shaw, and he was made to be kicked about by educated boors and ruffians.

A sidelight on the point of view of these people is flashed by Lothrop Stoddard, who writing recently in the Saturday Evening Post, says:

"Somewhere in Greenwich Village a group of New York radical intellectuals were discussing America. They were a mixed lot. A few were of the older American stocks; others were obviously of south and east European extraction.

"The subject of discussion, as already stated, was America. And America was having a rough time of it. Almost everything, it seemed, was wrong. The question then arose why matters were in such bad shape. At length one of the group gave an answer wholly satisfying to his companions. Passing his fingers through his long black hair he asserted oracularly: 'The chief trouble with America is the Americans.'"

That remark, comments Mr. Stoddard, "typifies a growing body of thought and feeling that is very much in evidence in radical circles today. Broadly speaking, this is a new development, and one well worth watching. Of course America has for years been under a hot fire of criticism. Our radicals have long been convinced that we are in a bad way. Only a little while ago, three and thirty doughty critics convened in Knockers' Club assembled and published their proceedings in a fat volume entitled Civilization in the United States, their verdict being akin to that of the yokel who, viewing his first giraffe, stated, 'there ain't no such animile.' Indeed, the chairman of the Knockers' Club so despairs of the republic that he has removed himself bodily from our midst, going to live in voluntary exile in Paris, in order to be able spiritually to breathe.'"

Our Mr. Wood fled only from Alabama to Greenwich Village to get a whiff of fresh (spiritual) air. The bigger ones like him are fleeing from New York to Paris. Where the white runaway slaves go when fleeing from the miasma of Paris—there must be miasma there, too; certainly there is in London, if England's writers can be believed—we don't pretend to know. Maybe they set sail for Mars.

So, if Alabamians who read what their Mr. Wood has said about them with such scornful vehemence, suffer themselves to be distressed they will have their grief for their pains: such distress is so much futile emotion. Other writers are saying the same thing of other States, and many of them are saying it of all the States at once.

These skimmers of the surface miss the big show in progress in America. The unparalleled energy of this young nation means nothing to them. This energy is sweeping us all forward. Those cities with the most wealth are of course buying the greater portiton of mental comforts and stimuli. We here in the South had nearly all our wealth destroyed a half century ago, and it has been hard to get going again. But we have recovered. We are making amazing progress. The greatest progress in the nation should occur here in the South in the next generation, because money is coming our way rapidly now, and we are buying what the mind craves.

As for Alabama, of course Mr. Wood misrepresents it. No State has had a more progressive spirit in regard to education in recent years; no State has striven harder to bring its educational system alongside the best. And Alabama has succeeded. Alabama is not a State of "sterility." Every family in the State that has the money is buying all the education its yuong will take, some of them going as far as Oxford to finish, and hundreds of them going every year to the first educational institutions in America.

Our people are striving hard to fashion a new splendor for posterity. Nor are they more provincial than any other people. The Demopolis Gazette—beg pardon, Editor Cornish, we mean the Demopolis Times—is an excellent weekly, but it does not claim to be the favorite newspaper of the State. There are many enterprising daily papers in Alabama, and thousands of our people are subscribers to the leading dailies of the nation which they buy for supplementary reading. Every periodical in America of general interest is sold in quantities in Alabama. So with new books.

And our people do not spend their time hating and baiting niggers. Relations between the races in Alabama are comparatively pleasant. Both races are progressing; the best of both races are peacemakers and are trying to work out all difficulties. Our people, white and black, worry a good deal less about the "race problem" than our outside magazine writers.

The success which Alabamians have attained in literature, journalism, engineering, banking and other vocations, in and out of Alabama speaks well for the character and quality of our people. Mr. Wood knows this, if he knows anything. But with all its achievements as a State and with all its golden promise for the future, Alabama can not understand a puzzling problem like Clement Wood; it can not understand how any Alabama-bred man can slander his own people before an alien and none too friendly audience for the sake of the dollars and applause which his baneful and futile efforts may earn among the morons and throw-backs of Greenwich Village.

ABOLISHING POLICE BRUTALITY.

The statement accredited to the new superintendent of police Tom Goodson, that brutality in police circles must go and that under his administration courtesy must prevail and that all people must be treated civilly by the police officers, would indicate that Houston has secured a head of the police department at last that has put his official disapproval (and that publicly) upon brutality and employment of force by peace officers upon those under arrest or who go to the police station on business.

If the new chief will back up his declaration with action and see that neither "higher ups" nor civil service "red tape" interferes with the rigid and strict enforcement of his edict abolishing brutality in police circles, he will do much to elevate and place on a modern, humane and civilized basis the local police department. Houston Informer Few people, especially the leading white citizens (many of the colored know, for they have been victims of many cruelties and brutalities at the hands of police officers that were uncalled for and unwarranted) have the least idea or conception of the darkage and barbarous methods employed by the Houston police department, particularly in their dealings with colored prisoners and others of the race who frequent the station from time to time on other matters. Houston, Texas.

If Chief Goodson included all the citizens of Houston in this ban on brutality, then The Informer wishes to commend him and wish him success and Godspeed in the undertaking, but we fear that his pathway will be strewn with many thorns and thistles when the colored brother becomes involved. 1-20-23.

Too many peace officers have a mistaken conception of the duties of their office and instead of protecting prisoners and imparting necessary information to citizens, they proceed to use the "billie" or six-shooter upon the prisoner or citizen.

It is customary to assault, intimidate and otherwise browbeat our leading colored citizens when visiting the local police station on business, and, unless colored men doff their hats before entering the station, they are the recipients of a six-shooter beating, a wallop from several husky officers and even the desk sergeant has struck one colored man with a bunch of keys, who simply went to the station to get out his cows that had been impounded.

Leading colored men going there to make bond for those under arrest have been cursed, bulldozed and put to all kinds of inconvenience and even threats made against them by peace officers, whose taxes these abused and maltreated colored citizens make possible the pay of these so-called peace officers.

The Informer has on more than one occasion called attention to the need of a reorganized and modernized police department, but such suggestions, coming as they did from this paper, were always considered "radical" in certain circles.

The Informer, in this connection, would like to see sufficient colored patrolmen added to the force to give the beats in at least Third, Fourth and Fifth Wards to race officers on all shifts, while at least two colored plain clothes officers should also be placed on duty.

Several other Texas cities, with far less colored population than Houston, have seen the wisdom and expediency of placing colored officers on the force, and these men have proven a credit to the police systems of these cities, and reduced friction between the races to a minimum.

Chief Goodson should receive the support and endorsement of every citizen interested in the peace and progress of this municipality in his efforts to reorganize, modernize, humanize and civilize the local police department.

COLUMBIA HEAD DISCUSSES THE NEGRO QUESTION

Ind; 2-3-23.
The Freeman

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 27 — There is no likelihood that the Eighteenth amendment ever can be enforced, "no matter at what expenditure of money or of effort," Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Clumbia University, said in an address here at the annual midwinter meeting of the Ohio State Bar Association.

He linked the prohibition amendment with the Fifteenth addition to the Constitution of the United States, which was proclaimed in 1870, and granted the Negro suffrage, as "two important and law-made influences which now are making, and seem likely long to make for lawlessness in American life." The subject of his address was "Law and Lawlessness."

He asserted that "methods of Czarist Russia, and of the Spanish inquisition" are being used to enforce one provision of law and said there are a "dozen verboten signs in the United States to every one that Russia can show."

Part of Organic Law.

"In form and in fact," he said, "and judged by all the usual tests and standards, these two amendments are part of the organic law, and with all the rights and authority which attach thereto. Nevertheless, they are not obeyed by large numbers of highly intelligent and morally sensitive people and there is no likelihood that they can be enforced, no matter at what expenditure of money or of effort, or at what cost or infringement or of neglect of other equally valid provisions of the same Constitution."

After pointing out "the Negro votes in those States where he voted when the Fifteenth amendment was passed," the speaker asserted every attempt to enforce the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments has been denounced as a force bill. "Oddly enough," he continued, "it has been denounced by those very Senators and Representatives who will go to any length to enforce the provisions of the Eighteenth amendment.

"The practical question is not whether the colored man should vote in the Southern States, but whether the American people frankly will face the problem presented by the nullification throughout a large part of the land of a most important provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Revolt Nation Wide.

"The situation with regard to the Eighteenth amendment is even worse, because the revolt against it is not confined to men and women of intelligence and moral sensitiveness in one section alone, but is nation-wide. It will not do to attempt to silence these persons by abuse or by catch phrases and formulas.

"These men and women dissent entirely from the grounds upon which the case for the Eighteenth amendment was rested; and they regard its provisions and those of the statutes based upon it as forcible, an immoral and tyrannical invasion of their private life and personal conduct.

"No one who is familiar with the practical workings of our political system would expect either the Fifteenth or the Eighteenth amendments to be repealed within measurable time. So far as one can see, therefore, we are shut up to the alternative of their attempted enforcement by soldiers and police and special agents and detectives and spies, or to their abrogation over a great part of the land by local initiative and common consent. Either alternative is humiliatng and degrading."

Barrow Honored by Staff Of State Agricultural College

Alexander R. Lawton Tells University Alumni Association of Negro Problems.

Athens, Ga., June 19.—(Special.)—Chancellor David C. Barrow was signally honored by the staff of the State College of Agriculture at the alumni luncheon held in Hardman hall, which was also dedicated this afternoon. Dr. A. M. Soule, president of the agricultural college, on behalf of the more than one hundred and fifty members of the staff, presented the chancellor with one of the handsomest loving cups with a scroll ever seen here.

On the cup is engraved "To Chancellor David C. Barrow, for 25 years a teacher, scholar, leader." On the scroll is engraved the names of those of the college staff contributing to the cup fund. The presentation came almost as a total surprise, but few in the crowd of one thousand in attendance knowing that an honor was to be conferred on the chancellor.

In accepting the cup the chancellor praised the work that is being done by the agricultural college, praised its growth, praised its head, Dr. Soule, and with touching gratitude thanked the donors of the cup.

Largest Luncheon.

This luncheon of the alumni was the largest ever enjoyed and many women, either graduates or wives and friends of graduates, were in attendance. The newly elected president, Alexander Lawton, of Savannah, presided. He is a member of the class of '77.

Other new officers are Davis Freeman, also of Savannah, who was named first vice president; H. H. Gordon, Jr., Athens, second vice president; Frank D. Foley, Columbus, third vice president; Dr. Sylvanus Morris, Athens, secretary; W. O. Payne, Athens, treasurer, and Dr. Benjamin Yow, Lavonia, and Wallace Miller, Columbus, tied for one of the places on the board of managers. The tie will be settled later by a meeting of the alumni this afternoon.

Dr. Soule gave an illustrated lecture, using living models, of education and progress of the state, and Chancellor Barrow spoke on the "University."

Major J. J. Connor, chairman of the board of trustees of the agricultural college, presented to the board of trustees of the university the building, a handsome brick-veneer structure just completed. He spoke of the wonderful growth of the agricultural college during its sixteen years of modern existence and praised the president and faculty of the institution.

On behalf of the trustees the building was accepted by Judge Peter W. Meldrim, of Savannah, class of 1868.

Miss Lois P. Dowdle, of the agricultural faculty, spoke on the "Woman of Power," and Professor S. H. Starr had as his subject "The Man of Vision." The reunioning classes all had speakers to respond to toasts and the luncheon closed the exercises of Alumni day with the dancé following Tuesday night.

Walker to Co-operate.

"I will co-operate 100 per cent personally and officially in the development of the university," Clifford Walker, governor-elect, declared at the meeting.

"I need only say," he continued, "that among all the worthy institutions of the state the old mother university has the first place in my heart as evidenced by an unbroken record of personal attendance at commencement for thirty-two years."

The governor-elect was in Athens Tuesday attending the Alumni day exercises.

In an address that was outspoken and plain in the treatment of a condition just now of peculiar acuteness in Georgia, Alexander R. Lawton, of Savannah, at the annual meeting of the Alumni Association of the University of Georgia here today, spoke on the subject of "The Negro in the South and Elsewhere."

Colonel Lawton told of intensive study of the problem and of information which he has gathered from many sources, in the north and south, at home and abroad.

The speaker emphasied that the superiority of the white race carries with it a proportionate obligation. In touching on the report of the investigation of the Chicago race commissioin, which followed the race riots in that city, Colonel Lawton selected, as practical only, three of the 59 recommendations made by the commission.

The speaker brought out the contrast between "race instinct" and "race prejudice," and voiced a warning against the danger of theory and lack of fundamental data in dealing with the race problem.

Leaders Should Take Thought.

"In this day of perplexing world problems, I speak of one nearer us—the relations between the dominating white race and the dominated negro," Colonel Lawton said. "I bring it to you because it demands the attention of those who should be and are the leaders of enlightened public opinion. I speak plainly and critically; you owe to your state, to the white man and the black man your best thought and leadership that this problem may carry with it the minimum of friction, injustice and evil."

He disclaimed any intention of violating the proprieties by even remotely touching upon politics, and declared that his race instinct forever makes impossible the suggestion of amalgamatioin. He spoke of "race prejudice" and drew the contrast between the qualities implied in the two terms. He waived the question of the responsibility for the existence of the problem, and said:

"But it is the responsibility of the white race only, and the white race has the higher duty. We are in the ascendency, and no solution or amelioration can progress except on our initiative. While we need the sympathetic co-operation of the negro, we can make some progress without him; he can make none without us. Moreover, the white race has always claimed racial superiority. Who makes this claim must never forget that superiority carries proportionate obligation."

Largely a Southern Problem.

He cited the census figures indicating the percentage and the distribution of negro population; less than 10 per cent of the population of the United States being negro, and nearly 48 per cent of the population in Georgia negro, and declared that "we can expect neither the disapparance nor the diminution of the numbers to a negligible figure." He said that four-fifths of the negroes are in the south; that race instinct and probably race prejudice seems strongest in the English speaking peoples, the southern white people being mostly of British stock. "These facts alone sufficiently explain," he said, "the more conspicuous manifestation of race instinct in the south," though "race istinct may not be justly classed as either sectional or historical," but that "it will manifest itself on reasonable provocation wherever numbers are sufficient to bring frequent contact or economic pressure."

He spoke of the laws which have endeavored to deal, positively or negatively, with the race question, and then reviewed at length the report of the Chicago race commission following the Chicago riot. He regretted that the report did not indicate the treatment of negroes by whites of British stock. He reviewed the fifty-nine recommendations of the commission, selecting seven, selecting three seemed practical: Providing as good schools and teachers for the negroes as for whites; placing inspectors with authority on street car lines patronized by many negroes, and the appointment of a permanent committee on race relations to continue to study and recommend.

Recognize Race Instinct.

"No individual, no commission, no organization, can progress in the improvement of race relations that discards facts for theory," he asserted, "and does not recognize these fundamental data:

"Race instinct, frequently exaggerated by race prejudice, does exist in the white man, is particularly strong in British stock, and will manifest itself on slight provocation wherever the percentage of negroes is not so negligible as to make contact infrequent.

"It is stimulated by economic pressure, such as competition for jobs, or depreciation of values in residential districts.

"It makes absolutely impossible (at least with British stock) intermarriage, social intercourse, mingling in recreations, assemblies, places of amusement, hotels, restaurants and, where negroes are numerous, in railway cars, stations and schools. It is even impossible in churches. It is as powerful against fear of scriptural punishment in the life to come as against the fear of statutory punishment in the life of today!

"It may not make impossible if we all did our duty, but it makes difficult equality of privilege and opportunity for the negro in his struggle for life, liberty and happiness, in which are included the right to better himself and his family.

Unfairness to Negro.

"It is not race pride or race instinct, but race prjudice augmented by want of character, that brings the negro injustice as between man and man. If I yielded to a natural reluctance to admit distasteful truths, I could not conceal from you the tendency far too frequent with far too many individuals to deal unfairly in business transactions with the negro because he is helpless. It is manifested in some shopkeepers (particularly those who give credit) and with some farmers in their dealings with negro tenants. It is to an appreciable degree more dififcult for a negro than a white man to obtain justice in some of our courts, whether on the civil or the criminal side. I do not believe that our judges are subject to this criticism.

"It is not race instinct but race prejudice augmented by more reprehensible traits that brings to the negro discourteous rudeness, contemptuous insult and corporal ill treatment. The white man's claim of superiority may be readily refuted by the manner in which he asserts it. Insulting another or wounding his feelings is always to be condemned, but never more so than when it comes from a superior to an inferior A negro dare not insult a white man. Fear restrains him. A more commendable spirit should restrain the white man from daring to insult or maltreat the negro. Let him 'dare do all that may become a man'—remembering that 'who dares do more is none.'"

Lynching Is Not Sectional.

He then spoke of the migration of the negro and pointed out that frequently the negro is not accorded fair treatment by some white men in business, and sometimes does not get justice in the courts. He arraigned lynch law in a powerful, effective manner, but declared that "lynching is not a sectional crime." He pointed the way to opose the Dyer bill's passage and conforcement is to "arouse an enlightened public sentiment which will compel such universal and impartial and fearless administration of the law and protection of the individual as to make federal intervention clearly unnecessary and inexcusable."

Colonel Lawton pointed out the falsity of the opinion that negroes cannot and do not achieve worthy places as students, scholars, writers, busin ss men and orators. He then drew the picture of the negro today:

"Do you realize what a hard fate it is to be a negro? Put yourself in his place and imagine that through no fault of yours, but merely because your skin is black, you are expected to go through life doing your share as a man, a citizen, for yourself, your family, your community, your state and your country, with handicaps and restrictions such as these: You are barred from holding any office and may not serve as a juror. You may not be a clerk. You may work as a porter or waiter on a sleeping car, but never as a conductor or a steward. You may work with white men as a skilled laborer, but never as a foreman. You may work at trades and vocations but, however well you may work, you have no hope of promotion. You are altogether barred from many trades and crafts. You are barred from the principal labor unions. You may be a locomotive fireman, but never an engineer. Whatever your ability to pay, whatever your dress, your habits, or demeanor, you may never use the best facilities provided for public entertainment. These and many other handicaps must be your lot and the lot of your children and your children's children, from the cradle to the grave. Imagine yourself so situated, would you be content to accept it without question? Would you never dream of changing it? Would you cheerfully agree with those who believe that it must ever be?"

Commends Race Commissioners.

He then called attention to the one way in which in Georgia the problem is seriously, earnestly being studied, through the offices of the "commission on interracial co-operation"—as in fourteen other states of the union. He cited the head of the Georgia organizations, Dr. M. Ashby Jones, as a guarantee of the safety of "our most sacred traditions." He told of the work this commission is doing in each Georgia county except where the negro is not present in numbers. The suppport and the co-operation of all thinking citizens he solicited as the one way open to study the question in Georgia and go as far as possible in its solution. He took occasion to speak of some of the obstacles to this sane manner of going about the business of effecting co-operation and understanding and sympathetic work of the races, scoring the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and its organ, "The Crisis," with some other leaders of the negro press whose influence makes co-operation more difficult. He scored "The Chicago Defender" as another conspicuous exception to the rule of preaching good-will and co-operation as voiced by many of the sane and earnest negroes. He scored as another obstacle the office-seeker who panders to base instincts of race prejudice to further his own ends. He paid his respects, too, to the K. K. K., which, denying hospitality to the negro, "presents a serious obstacle to those who" are trying to bring about better relations between the problems introduced by the segregation question, the speaker concluded:

White Men Must Decide.

"The white man is and will continue to be in the ascendency, and the races can co-operate only on terms which the white man will accept. I hope that having the greater power he will be just and liberal: but he will never regard it as just to risk even slightly the perpetual purity of the white race, and liberality will never induce him to abandon his insistence on segregation, but that degree and kind which recognizes race instinct and which race instinct demands.

"I have spoken freely, not hesitating to point to our own shortcomings, but trying to avoid criticism which is merely destructive. I have noted the marked progress of the negro in less than two generations. This and his earlier progress (even with the handicap of slavery) from untutored savagery and paganism indicate capacity for further advance, and give encouragement of successs—yes, substantial success, if we awake to full realization that we must be up and doing. The task is difficult, but not hopeless, and it is our task.

"I know that deep down in your hearts you have an affection for thenegro. Remember his remarkable record during the civil war. During those four years of trial there was not even one instance of faithlessness by the slaves left to care for the helpless women and children on the plantation. And John Brown called for them in vain. It is a record of which any race should be proud, and I am sure that you are proud of it for them.

Negro Deserves Sympathy.

"We know that we are in the ascendency and that his fate is largely in our hands. We know that as compared with ourselves he is helpless and that he deserves not our criticism, but our sympathetic interest; not our antagonism, but our help and our encouragement. I appeal to each of you for active aid in urging upon your community and your state fair and impartial consideration of this harassing problem; for study of it in the light of tradition; for encouragement and participation in the work of the inter-racial commission; and for a firm determination as men and women on whom higher duty rests that no unfair advantage shall be taken of our power, and that the negro shall always receive that justice and fair treatment which is his due, and which we cannot withhold if we wish to retain our self-respect."

B. F. BOWLES MAKES PLEA FOR JUSTICE

Negro Delegate To The Constitutional Convention Calls Upon Associates To Move The Old State Forward.

CONTRASTS 75 YEARS AGO WITH CONDITIONS TODAY

Says Segregation Is A By-Product Of Slavery And Has No Place In An Up-to-Date Constitution.

During the recent consideration of a section of the State Constitution which provides separate schools for those of African descent, Mr. B. F. Bowles, delegate from the 12th District, made a strong speech in which he urged the convention to strike out that section.

And while the convention did not vote according to Mr. Bowles' wishes yet in his address, he made a profound impression upon his hearers.

It is said by some of those who heard Mr. Bowles that he used eloquence, logic, reason and appeal in his arguments, but as the old saying, "the cards were stacked against him."

When the report of the Committee on Education was read, Mr. Bowles spoke as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to Section 2.

The Chairman: Mr. Bowles offers the following amendment to Section 2, which the secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend Report of the Committee on Education, File 11, Section 2, by striking out the section.

The Chairman: That may be entertained, I think, only after the friends of the section have perfected it by amendment. Are there any amendments to Section 2? If there are no amendments to Section 2, the motion to strike out the section will be entertained. Mr. Bowles recognized:

Mr. Bowles: Mr. Chairman, I wish to reward, as far as I am able the members of the convention for their courtesy in deferring the consideration of this matter by extreme brevity.

When the makers of the national constitution were in session they were confronted with a peculiar difficulty. They had only recently written a document declaring that all men are born free and equal. That was in the Declaration of Independence. Possibly they did not mean it but by force of circumstances they practically had to say it, and in the making of the constitution they had to confirm it. Now, trying to be consistent, trying to be delicate with the condition of slavery—it was a condition; it was not yet an institution but it later became such—with the condition of slavery existing all the way from Vermont to Georgia, they dodged the issue in the constitution and did not mention it. The nearest they got to it was by saying, "all other persons." It seems to me that the same problem comes into this convention and with even more force. We are proceeding today upon the theory of a common citizenship and the theory of a common humanity, which theories are effectively denied by the introduction of any class legislation founded upon race or any such consideration. It is a fact, I think, that race segregation is a monument to slavery, is a by-product of slavery and is of the essence of slavery. I mean to say this: that insofar as any limitations are put upon an individual who is theoretically a citizen, by virtue of or on account of his race or color or anything of that sort, to that extent he is a slave. It cannot be denied; that fact confronts us. Now, I know that in making the state constitution of 1875 there was a condition that was different; the smoke of the Civil War could still be smelled; the shadow of slavery virtually was still over the land. The quesetion is, have we made no progress since that time in matters of liberality? Such a presumption would be a reflection, I think on Missouri. Do we intend to make no progress in the next fifty years or so? That would be even a greater reflection on Missouri. Now here is the proposition. I know sentiment in Missouri. I am not visionary. If the question of separate schools were up to be voted on the white people of the state would vote almost unanimously for separate schools; the Colored people of the state would vote almost unanimously for separate schools. I know the facts; but there is a large element even in Missouri, who do not believe that this thing should be incorporated in our fundamental law. We have sometimes questioned what can safely be left to the Legislature. There seems to be just a little feeling between the Constitutional Convention and the Legislature; but there is one thing that I think can safely be left and that is the question of separate schools for a long time to come. Why not leave it to the Legislature and use just a little of that consideration and courtesy and delicacy and consistency that was used by the fathers of the Republic?

The Chairman: The question is upon the Bowles motion to strike out Section 2. Are you ready for the question?

The vote was taken and the amendment of Mr. Bowles was lost.

Sociology

WHEN BLACK MEETS WHITE. By John Louis Hill. Chicago: The Argyle Publishers. $1.50.

Our American race problem is compounded of many minor problems—economic, cultural, civic, and others—of which the outstanding and most urgent is perhaps the problem of mutual interpretation. A race problem is always definable as the sum of the relations existing between two or more races in a state of friction; and a little sagacity would suggest that any interpretation presupposes a mastery of at least two languages. To one who surveys mankind with a philosophic eye it must seem strange that most efforts to solve our race problem in America are limited to the compounding of prescriptions from ingredients supplied exclusively by one side. Especially is this true of that section of our country in which most of the negroes dwell. There, we are told, they know to a "t" just what is the negro's "place" and the most efficient method of keeping him effectively in it. Yet the continued existence of lynching bees, race riots, and northward migrations make it increasingly clear that the logic involved in the classic Southern process is hopelessly at fault.

But the day dawns even in Dixie, and there rises every year, clearer and more encouragingly, the voice of that better South which is working towards a renaissance of interracial good will which seeks to establish itself upon a broader and better basis. Mr. Hill's book is one of the minor heralds of this new day. It is a veritable evangel of fair play for the negro in the interest of the nation, South as well as North. The author is himself a Southern white man who insists that if the white men of his section believe themselves in any way superior to their black fellow citizens, they should not [illegible] upon the reality of that belief by giving them a handicap of fifty yards in a hundred-yard dash.

The fifteen chapters of his book make an interesting combination of sound knowledge, hard common sense, and a sympathetic understanding of the history, psychology, limitations, and virtues of the Southern white man, the Southern negro, and the American people. He speaks the language of candor in a most winning way, and while he makes no mighty contribution to the theory of the race problem, he brings to its consideration a spirit of genuine helpfulness and much sweetness and light.

Potential [illegible]ty of Races

To the Editor of The N[illegible]

Sir: Professor Hartley [illegible]s review of Dr. Alexander A. Goldenweiser's book "E[illegible]ization" must be challenged for the sake of a clear unde[illegible]ing of what modern anthropology is striving for.

A large part of the re[illegible] relates to the use of the term "civilization" as applied to [illegible]imitive tribes, a usage which has good precedents. Many pr[illegible]r it to the term "culture" because they wish to avoid the connotation of "individual refinement." The essential object of the book, to present concisely, by means of characteristic examples, the problems of anthropology, has not appealed to your reviewer. Nevertheless, we do believe that we can obtain a fuller appreciation of the problems of social change by the study of a few selected cultures as a whole than by an accumulation of disconnected facts, which has for many years been characteristic of anthropological work.

Anthropologists will particularly object to the lack of understanding on the part of your reviewer of the meaning of individual differences as against differences of social groups. In regard to the fundamental question of the "potential equality" of races, most anthropologists are agreed that this concept is the foundation of their science. It has formed the basis of comparative anthropology ever since the early studies of Bastian and Tyler. If we deny the "potential equality" of races at the present time, we should have to accept the opinion of the ancient Egyptians who might with equal justification have denied the "potential equality" of the ancestors of all the European nations. Your reviewer commits the common logical error of assuming that if individuals are different, the racial groups to which they belong must also be different.

Race Problem - 1923
United States, — Book Reviews,

CLEMENT WOOD'S ARTICLE.

Readers of The Age undoubtedly perused last week with a great deal of interest the article by Clement Wood reproduced from the New York "Herald." 1-6-23

Never has there appeared in any metropolitan newspaper a more frank or more fearless statement on the Negro problem than was given in Mr. Wood's article, "The Problem of James Crow: 'Jim' Grown Up." New York Age N. Y.

In three columns Mr. Wood discussed the whole problem, from illiteracy to amalgamation. As the readers of The Age had the opportunity to see the article or can refer to it, there is no need to quote it here.

Mr. Wood's article appeared in the New York "Herald" of Sunday, December 17. On the following Sunday, Mr. H. L. Pangborn in an article entitled "Racial Purity," made reply to Mr. Wood through the same newspaper. Mr. Panghorn's reply is aside from the point and in some respects amusing. He is particularly irritated at Mr. Wood's suggestion of the possibility of an amalgamated South. Near the opening of his article he says, "I for one cannot look forward to a chocolate-colored human race with equanimity. I hope for a better world than that could be, for my children's children. I think there are still many Americans old fashioned enough to believe in the value—and possibility—of racial purity."

And yet, after arguing through three columns, Mr .Panghorn from an opposite direction, arrives at the same point as Mr. Wood, that is, the possibility of an amalgamated South. Indeed, Mr. Panghorn's suggestion for avoiding such an end is segregation, and the segregation which Mr. Panghorn has in mind is complete and absolute segregation. Let Mr. Panghorn himself define what he means:

> "By segregation I do not mean 'Jim Crow' cars, a colored 'Ghetto' as a part of a dominantly white community, or any thing of that sort. As Mr. Wood says, 'the social bond is rather close, to promise success for that plan.' Segregation must be far more complete than that. And it must be voluntary. Such a result is, plainly, difficult of attainment but it is thinkable. For it might be attained by setting aside certain areas in the South (Alabama, for instance), areas large enough to hold all the black race."

This sort of segregation is one of the amusing things in Mr. Panghorn's article. Granted that the scheme of placing all the Negroes in the country in one or more states, say for instance, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, a difficulty which Mr. Panghorn has not reckoned with would be that of keeping the white people out. The United States army would not be adequate for the job.

A curious commentary on these two articles is the fact that Mr. Wood is a Southerner, a native of Alabama, the son and the grandson of slaveholders. On the other hand Mr. Panghorn is the son of an Abolitionist.

Mr. Wood is a well known poet and novelist. He is the author of a novel entitled "Nigger"—We hope our readers will not allow the title to prejudice them against the book. We expect to say something about this book in these columns within a few weeks.

Our readers may thank us for letting them know that an article by Mr. Wood on his native state, Alabama, will be published in "The Nation" of January 10 as one of a series of articles on the States now appearing in that magazine. Mr. Wood's article in "The Nation" will be even plainer spoken than his article in the "Herald."

Negro's Part In History

THE NEGRO IN OUR HISTORY. By Carter Godwin Woodson, Ph. D. The Associated Publishers, Inc.: Washington, D. C.

HERE at last is a history of the American negro in succinct and readable form, suitable as a text-book for high school or college and for the general reader who wishes to acquaint himself with the ways in which the presence of the negro population has influenced the march of great events in the United States. It hasn't the range and sweep of Benjamin Brawley's "Social History of the American Negro," but its compressed materials and the fine illustrations, which its great rival lacks, make it a more handy work of reference.

Dr. Woodson is the editor of the "Journal of Negro History," the only learned periodical published by American negroes. He has assumed the rôle of professional historian of the negro and he brings to that task considerable erudition and remarkable industry. "The Education of the Negro Prior to 1861," "A Century of Negro Migration" and "The History of the Negro Church" have already appeared as products of his learning and industry, and the present volume clinches his claim to consideration. It is unfortunate that Dr. Woodson's style is cramped and slovenly in all these volumes, but the interest of his subject matter in the volume now before us is so compelling that it enables us to overlook this primal defect.

The various forms of American slavery are clearly exhibited: the first soul-grinding phase which changed to a mild patriarchal form as the South became saturated, changing again to intensified exploitation as Crompton's "mule" and Whitney's cotton-gin made cotton king and dictated the extension of slavery with its consequent political conflict which gradually estranged the two great sections of the country from each other and led to the Civil War. Freedom and reconstruction and the rise of the freedmen to their present status are graphically treated, and a wealth of materials is presented which will open the eyes of many American readers whose knowledge of the history of their darker fellow citizens rests mainly on a mass of myths.

"THE COLOR QUESTION IN THE TWO AMERICAS"

New York Age
(By Dr. Bernardo Ruiz Suárez)

This is the latest contribution to the study of problems affecting our race. A comparison is made of the conditions in which the colored race lives in Central and South America on the one hand and in the United States on the other hand. 1-13-23

The price of this book is $1, but we are making a special price to new subscribers of The New York Age, giving the book and one year's subscription to The New York Age for $2.30, within the United States, and $3.40, foreign countries. All orders must be addressed to The New York Age, 230 West 15th street, New York City.

"THE BLACK BORDER: Gullah Stories of the Caroline Coast."
By Ambrose Gonzales.
1-3-23

There are book reviewers, and I understand their name is many, who read what "the jacket" of the new story has to tell of the inside, and then after a cursory glance at the first and last chapters, give their learned opinion of the author and his work. I have never been guilty of this method, thinking that if a book was worth talkink about it was worth reading, but I must plead guilty at not having finished "The Black Border." Hours and hours of patient effort with the dialect has left me still with pages yet to conquer. So I will start by quoting the opinion of John Bennett in the Literary Review of the Evening Post. "Devoid of maudlin sentimentality, but touched with comprehending pity, marked by a caustic, humorous, but somehow affective irony, the tolerant humor of one who has known the Negro from birth, disembling nothing, and without malice, he has drawn them as they are, with Hogarthian fidelity, George Morland's eye and a Teniers-like truth of detail." This is only a little of Mr. Bennett's praise. It spills over into two columns.. But he has a sentence that explains it all: "To one who has heard these anecdotes from Mr. Gonzales' lips—"

Here is the reason for the reviewer's enthusiasm. He has heard these stories told by one who know how to speak American-Gullah. But to try to read the transcription that Mr. Gonzales gives us, is like trying to read a foreign language that one has never heard spoken. The thing is impossible. And it does seem a little hard to have to decipher, by means of an elaborate glossary, a corruption of English. Now if it were really Gullah!

The Black Border is a collection of forty-three stories, bits of happenings in that section of the country along the coast between Georgetown and Beaufor. Here the Gullah Negro lives; and here the writer retails his quite simple happenings. Many of the stories relate to the past. Thev start, to take the sory of Barney as an example, with an account in Mr. Gonzales' own charming English, of the countryside, the Negro cabins with their poorly fenced little gardens and the bull, Barney, that is allowed to roam over the country though known to be dangerous. He walks over fences and eats up the garden-truck, while the black man vainly, at a long distance, peppers his side with small shot. At length Barney disturbs a religious outdoor meeting and the Negroes rush in terror. One colored girl in a new hoop skirt, but without shoes or stockings, tears past a young man, who describes her later as follows: (And here the author drops into dialect and makes his Hogarth-Morland-Teniers-picture all the more true and less improper) 'E pass me duh paat', en' 'e binnuh trabble so swif' uh yent ruckuhnize um 'zackly, but 'e stan' sukkuh two blacksnake duh 'tratch out een one bu'd-cage."

There isn't as much old Massa and Missus as usual in these stories, and there is more rough fun. One feels that Gonzales is something of a Gullah himself. His own writing is sufficiently artistic to place him out of the path o fthe automobile that drops the commercial story at every door-post, into a pleasant, untouched country, rich in swamp and lazy streams, where the cranes fly overhead and the alligators move sluggishly through the mud. The book, by the way, has a great alligator stry. It should be of value as a record, and also as a store-house for those who wish to recite Negro stories. But the stories must be told by one who knows dialect, "this strange blend of African tribal sounds and intonations," to quote again from Bennett, "with a scant vocabulary of peasant, archaic English." And the audience must not be squamish.

London, Dec. 19.—The archeological treasures of the recently discovered tomb of King Tutenkhamun in the Valley of the Kings were described today by the American Egyptologist, James H. Breasted, in a telegram to the Cairo correspondent of the times from Luxor.

"I spent an hour in Tutenkhamun's tomb this afternoon," Dr. Breasted said in his dispatch. "The impression is overwhelming. The dispatches but feebly suggested the marvelous reality.

"The ante chamber of Pharaoh tomb is filled with magnificent equiment which only the wealth a splendor of the impreial age of Egy of the fourteenth century befo Christ could have wrought or conceived, and with everything standing as placed there when the tomb was last closed in antiquity. Two facts are evident: First, it is clear that the place is a Pharaoh's tomb and no mere cache. Behind the remaining unopened sealed doorway we must expect to find the burial chamber, where the Pharaoh still lies in royal magnificence.

"Second, we have here a royal burial very little disturbed, in spite of the hurried plundering it suffered at the hands of the ancient tomb robbers.

"In mere quantity of furniture found it far surpasses all precedent. In quality it is an astonishing revelation o fthe beauty and refinement of Egyptian art at the culmination of its development in the imperial age, quite surpassing anything I ever imagined."

COLLIER'S WEEKLY DEMANDS FEDERAL ANTI-LYNCHING LAW

The Freeman
Indianapolis, Ind.
2-24-23

NEW YORK, Feb. 16 — Collier's National Weekly (416 West 13th St., New York), demands enactment of a Federal law to prevent lynching. In the issue of Feb. 17th, according to a reprint sent out by the press service of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The editorial in full is as follows:

"The Nation Must Punish Lynchers.

"When the miners tried for the murder at Herrin were acquitted the other day, their lawyer commented that the mine guards had terrorized the community and the strikers rose in righteous wrath. He gave the blanket excuse that is given for every mob that kills. Murder under any name, done for any excuse, is the same. Murder is murder, regardless of who the murderers are and of who their victims are. This means mobs as much as individuals.

"A mob at Harrison ,Ark., kills a railroad striker. That is murder, though the killers think themselves public-spirited vigilantes. A mob in Louisiana tortures two men in a cotton press and kills them. That is murder, though the murderers wear silly regalia and call themselves high-spirited patriots and Heaven knows what else.

"Our commonest type of mob murder is called lynching. But Harrison, Mer Rouge, Herrin, the burnings of Negroes at the stake, are all off the same piece. Call them murders and done with it.

"It is almost a foregone conclusion that members of a murdering mob in a small community will be acquitted as were the Herrin miners. The defendants have much local sympathy. A jury that would convict can scarcely be had. A local prosecutor who will do his duty whole-heartedly must be one of singular courage and integrity.

"If we hope to stop mob murders and punish the murderers, we shall have to act as a Nation. There will have to be a Federal law, so drawn as to cover mob murders of all types, and to provide that cases resulting shall be for Federal prosecution in Federal courts."

"Africa and the Discovery of America" Volume II.

By Leo Wiener. Published by Innes & Company, Philadelphia, Pa. Price $5.00 postpaid.

2-16-23

This is the second part of a work to be completed in three volumes. Its thesis is a new one; that Negroes from Africa visited America before Columbus and left their mark here. This second volume concerns itself with evidences in America of African civilization as seen in the introduction of cotton, tobacco and shell money.

I wish that I might be able clearly to present Prof. Wiener's argument, but this is impossible because this very learned scholar cannot present it clearly himself. His book is for experts who can disentangle salient facts from a mass of evidence, a mass that shows a learning prodigious in its scope. Leo Wiener is professor of Slavic languages at Harvard University; and in his first volume, he related his discovery of African influence in America. While working on a comparative grammar of American languages, he came upon a number of words that study told him were corruptions or adaptations of woods used by the Negroes in Africa especially by the Mandingoes. In this second volume he tells especially of material signs of African influence. There can be little doubt that in some things African influence was exerted before Columbus. Probably the Mandingoes first reached America in the middle of the fifteenth century, with the Portuguese explorers. The Mandingoes were a sturdy tribe, and if we look on the map we can see that the trip from Western Africa to Northern South America was not an impossible one, though it must have required immense courage to take it in a canoe. I remember seeing in Norway an open boat, like a large dory, in which the Norseman is reputed to have made his early discovery of North America. At least the African came over milder waters.

That they did come Professor Wiener does not doubt. He shows us, among other things, two pictures, one of an African, another of an Indian, stockade. There is indeed an extraordinary similarity between the two. One is reminded of the interesting chapters in Brawley's, "Social History of the Negro" concerning the close association of Negro and Indian in this country. Wiener has a great deal to say about tobacco, relating the story of nicotine from very ancient days to the sixteenth century. It was brought by the Arabs to the Negroes and they in turn brought it to the Indians, "possibly a century before America's so-called discovery." At first tobacco was used only by the priests in their rites. In the wampum with which the Indians first traded with the Americans, we again see an African origin. And lest the African become too puffed up with pride at this precedence we would note that Prof. Wiener finds that he got his civilization from the Arabs, those marvelous folk who have been consistently maligned by the Christians through the centuries to today.

I have spoken of the learning evinced in this book. I counted in the word index references to 12 European and 9 Asiatic languages, to 13 American and 33 African dialects, and then stopped, not through, only tired. One of my friends who is a historian tells me, that it is dangerous to base historical research on seeming similarity of language and that Wiener is looked upon as somewhat hasty in so doing. He answers this criticism in his preface where he speaks of archaeologists who "insist upon denying all but the archaeological evidence and shower upon an objective investigator a veritable deluge of abuse." We are sympathetic with the "objective investigator and trust that the Mandingoes did bring good things to this continent, when they came here of their own free will. When the evidence is more complete it will be an interesting story for colored children, that of these brave black sailors who dared to cross the Atlantic and who caried thither coton and tobacco that their descendants, later unwillingly dragged here, were to plow and reap.

Race Cooperation

In making out a program for the All-Race Conference the selection of a key word was of utmost importance. The committee deliberated at great length make sure that no mistake was made. It was at once seen that it would be needless to parallel the programs of our usual conventions and organizations.

The anecdote of Abraham Lincoln was brought into play. When the great war president consented to meet representatives of the Confederacy as to some compromise basis of ending the war, Mr. Lincoln insisted on only one word. He said to the Southern representatives: "If you let me write Union at the top of the page, you may write anything you please underneath."

The committee decided to write race cooperation at the head of the program, and felt that this was of far greater importance than anything that could possibly be appended below, that caption. It was in this wise that the key-word of the conference came to be adopted.

Cooperation is absolutely essential to race salvation. If we were united to aim and objective, we could ask whatever we would and it would be granted unto us. There is neither the power nor disposition in our civilization to deprive eleven million American citizens of their just deserts if they demand them with one united voice.

But as long as we proceed by divided counsel, our numbers but add to our weakness. Divide and conquer is a motto as old as human oppression. The overlord always seeks to dominate the underman by keeping him divided.

To quote from myself: "the white man hopes to keep us under by keeping us asunder." He has played this game successfully from time immemorial. Will he be permitted to play it to the end? The salvation or damnation of the race depends upon the answer. If the intelligentia of the race cannot devise a statesmanship which will lead the race to unity of aim and purpose in things essential to racial welfare, then our higher education is a failure and leads to no desired end.

The Dyer Bill Revived

The Negro has to all intents and purposes forgotten the Dyer Bill. On the other hand Mr. Dyer its author, is touring the country calling the attention of the nation to the imperative demand for this moral measure.

If there is any clearly differentiated method of the white man as compared with the Negro it is to be found in his spirit of indomitable determination and persistence.

Now is the time of all times for the Negro to focus upon whatever legislative relief the race may hope to gain from the next Congress. After the issues have been set, and the platform has been written it is too late to inject special demands or to expect favorable consideration of our special grievances. The whole race should busy itself with the formulation of some plan of national check and control of lawlessness.

The next Congress will only devote itself to these measures which the demanded by the people. The Presidential election will be impending. The Administration will be over anxious about its stewardship to the American people. If the Negro expects any legislative advantage, he should formulate it now, I suggest that our civil rights organizations proceed at once to have a suitable measure drawn and presented at the opening of the next Congress. Whatever influence it can command should be brought to bear upon the political organization bidding for his suffrage.

The American Bar Association should be asked to formulate a measure enabling the Federal Government to deal with lawlessness. This legal body could and doubtless would be able and willing to frame such a measure that would stand the test of constitutional objections. We should not sleep upon our rights and privileges, and as usual, wake only when it is too late. Let us rather imitate Mr. Dyer and take time by the forelock.

The Negro in New England

I was in Boston last week. Boston is New England, and New England is Boston so far as the Negro is concerned. After delivering my set address on the Negro Sanhedrin I was invited to meet with a delightful group that was giving a reception to the graduates and students of Harvard, Boston University, the New England Conservatory of Music and other regional institutions.

Hon. William H. Lewis, ex-Assistant Attorney General was the orator of the occasion. His address was up to his usual high standard of eloquence, wit and wisdom. By the way, Mr. Lewis is recognized as being one of the great lawyers of New England. He has found ample room in his profession, on top.

It was an inspiration to witness these thirty or forty young men and women gathered from all parts of the country seeking the forms of knowledge and culture of the highest scholastic type. I could not but advise them that their special attainments would find useful expression mainly in service to their own group, but would become comparatively impotent and barren unless quickened by the human motive and winged with missionary zeal and enthusiasm.

The situation of the New England Negro is a study and a puzzle. The old traditional spirit of philanthropy is dying with the years. The abolitionist freed the slaves, and are dead. Their descendants maintain a decent and distant respect for the deeds and devotion of their ancestors. They have little interest in the Negro in New England in the year of our Lord nineteen twenty-three. The forms of traditional equality still survive. Harvard was forced to the right decision out of deference to its traditions rather than the dictates of contemporary attitude and feeling.

Trotter and the Equal Rights League are fighting manfully for the maintainance of the old foundations. Foreigners are flooding New England with moral indifference.

On the whole the race is losing rather than gaining in the sphere of racial rights and recognition. The numbers are increasing slowly. There are scarcely enough Negroes to sustain a highly functioning life of their own, while there is a lessening disposition on part of the whites to have them amalgamate with the general life of the community. There are no Negroes in business who measure up to Lee and Lewis of a generation ago.

The ordinary working man is scarcely more than holding his own. The professional men are doing well. There is shown a fine spirit of social service on part of a number of noble women and worthy men. Associated business enterprise is making a commendable beginning. The race problem, however, is as evident in Boston as it is in Baltimore. It merely takes on different modes of manifestation.

The Negro is brought face to face with himself and his problems in all places and sections of the country. The Negro in New England, like the Negro in Mississippi, must keep constantly on the alert to keep from losing out. The Negro problem is one with only local variations and the Negro must understand and deal with it as such

The Tuskegee Hospital

It appears that the Medical Department of the Army has delayed President Harding's decision for a colored personnel. The claim is advanced that the colored race has not as yet had the opportunity to produce experts in hospital treatment in tuberculosis and nervous diseases. Several of our best qualified exerts are unwilling to leave their present berths for the field in the far South.

The proposition has been put up to President Harding to specify a time when the colored personnel will be installed, and to name well qualified candidates for special assignment and place them under a course of training in government hospitals to meet whatever lack of expertness may now obtain. In this way a full colored staff can be qualified in a few months.

Possession is nine points of the law. It will be much more difficult to replace a white staff once installed than to install a colored staff from the beginning. The Negro came out of the World War with a bad case of grievance against the American people. If the Tuskegee Hospital is taken from them and given to the manipulation of the whites it would merely serve as the climax of their disappointment.

Self-Reliance

The Negro should not always be wanting something the white man has, but should have something the white man wants.

EDITOR RANDOLPH FLAYS DU BOIS' JIM CROW PLEA

SEGREGATION POISON WOULD DESTROY THE RACE

Editor of The Messenger, Randolph, delivered what was considered the most comprehensive and logical address on the separate school question, ever heard in this city, last Sunday afternoon at Gibson's Dunbar Theatre. The address was frequently punctuated with enthusiastic applause and at the close, Editor Randolph was tendered an ovation.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the "Sons of Negro Freedom" and Rev. Wm. Lloyd Imes presided. "Dr. DuBois," said the speaker, "says we are moving toward a Colored world. The object of great movements of today is to remove the question of color at all. But granting for the sake of argument that we are moving toward a Colored world, is it logical or sensible for us to accelerate our motion toward that world of proscription, discrimination and race hate? We might just as well conclude to commit suicide, because we are on the road to death. We are not moving toward a Colored world. We are moving toward a world where justice will reign; where men are thinking in terms of humanity, of a new day, of a new democracy.

Segregation Destroys Negro Initiative

Wealth accumulated shows Negro business initiative. Under Segregation this would all be destroyed. Take Tulsa for an example. If we had had Negro homes in the White sections of Tulsa these homes would never have been destroyed. Voluntary segregation may be the development of iniative. We would have Negro banks, business enterprises, Negro barber shops, restaurants, etc. The poison of segregation will go through the life of the Negro and destroy him. Education is merely a means to an end. Education means happiness. The teacher is to mobilize and adapt the forces of nature to secure happiness to the pupil. Now a condition to happiness is freedom and freedom is the ability to act in accord with one's desire. Segregation limits an individual to obtain what he desires—happiness. We oppose segregation because it opposes the end of life—happiness.

Race Prejudice Born in the Schools

Race prejudice is transmitted, educated into the mind of the child. It is not born in him. It is not inherited. It is transmitted through various social agencies. The child's mind is plastic—that is why segregation begins in the school. The Negro child cannot convince the white child that he is his equal except through contact. The segregationists maintain that the Negro teacher is a greater inspiration than white teachers. The inspiration the Negro child gets in a school where he competes with the white child is a greater inspiration than that he obtains from Colored teachers. I am opposed to separating Negro pupils from White pupils and Negro teachers from White teachers. The Negro teacher has the task of educating the White teacher, an opportunity that will never come unless they have contact. The Northern Negro boy underrates the Southern Negro boy because he believes he is educated at a better school and if the White child gets it into his mind that Colored schols are inferior, he will reason that the Negro is inferior.

Negro Teachers Favor Segregation Because They Want Jobs

Why do some Negro teachers favor Segregation? Because they want jobs. But jobs will not come with segregation. Segregation will limit the school term, lower salaries, and provide fewer jobs. If Negro carpenters could only work on Negro buildings, they would get fewer jobs than in case they could work on all buildings. Suppose we had separate money. The money passing from a White man's hand would depreciate in a Negro's hand. The world is getting away from Segregtion. You accomplish more through education and agitation than you do by standing still."

Rev. Logan raised the collection and after a few pointed remarks by Rev. Tindley, the meeting adjourned

Negro Editor Says Whites of South Are Truest Friends To His People

The forty-sixth commencement exercises of the State Normal school in Montgomery closed Wednesday, when more than a hundred negro boys and girls received certificates and diplomas from the several departments. The enrollment this year was the largest of any during the forty-six years of its existence and they come from every section of Alabama and quite a few from other southern states. The enrollment is 760.

The exercises began Sunday at 3:30 p. m. when Rev. T. J. Bellinger, of Cuthbert, Ga., delivered the commencement sermon. Among the features of the day were the music by the student body and the oration by Rev. Bellinger

The commencement address was delivered Wednesday by Oscar W. Adams editor of The Birmingham Reporter. He made a well balanced address using for his subject "The Negro and American Citizenship". The speaker received complimentary words from President G. W. Trenholm when introducing him to the student body, the faculty and the several hundred persons who gathered for the closing scene.

Adams said in part:

"If I carry out my purpose today it will be to develop the thought of manhood and citizenship, based on the American plan. I have selected to use in connection with this thought. the negro and American citizenship. In this utterance today we hope to be free from foolish flattery of our race history. We have had quite enough of that, while the things that make for elevation and genuine progress along the line and principle of race growth have been too often relegated to the background.

Citizenship is Highway.

"American citizenship is a great highway, when we come to enjoy it fully and respect it as it is, it must be after much struggle, toil and sacrifice. The American negro is a part of this citizenship and it is with him as to how he will function in its affars. I am reminded here of a question asked, is life worth living? It was answered with the expression that it depends on the liver. The question of the future progress and the place of the negro in the American plan depends almost entirely on the negro himself. His destiny is in his hands. This is said in the light of history and philosophy. Life is what we make it. A race or a nation is what it makes itself. It is never an accident that people become what they are Certain distinct laws, rules, customs and principles when adopted and followed, fix the mould of races. It is equally true of individual men and women.

"I hear it often said that the negro will not be recognized in the South no matter how genuine a man he may be. I am ready to face the world as I am to face this audience today and flatly deny such assertion that upstanding negroes are not respected by upstanding white people. No one can be reared in the South and study conditions about him while seeking to ascend the scale of excellence without recognizing the fallacy of that accusation. Certainly we are going to be opposed by some, but we are supported by a large number that give us strength and encouragement, fortitude and protection.

No Race Prejudice.

"I lamentably deplore much that is taking place in the injustice and oppression visited upon my race, but I thank God that I take no share in race prejudice. To me a man is a man, whatever be his color or his garb. Many a heart of gold beats beneath the rough clothes of a man and princes live often in shanties and cabins. It is character that makes the man and woman. If at heart one is right, he is all right. When men get right life becomes right, the world becomes right all things are right. We are just as bad as the white race when we make a wholesale condemnation of that race as when they make a wholesale condemnation of our race. There are good white people and we know it. There are good black people and the white folk know it. These groups must put their hearts and their heads together to save and civilize the unruly ones of both races. Ignorance is our greatest curse. It is the one continuous drawback in our American life.

"I have faith in the South. I have faith in the negro of the South, and have faith in the white race of the South. I believe when both races are properly educated that the disadvantages, injustices and ungodly practices will be removed. I am persuaded to the expression that whatever misunderstanding evists, it is because of the ignorance on the part of both races, and where the negro is at fault it is almost entirely because of his ignorance. It is foolish on the part of any of us to think for a moment that we can have a peaceful and happy progressive state or section with a half ignorant group and a half intelligent group.

"None are safe. All must be educated. The blacks are unsafe in a community of ignorant whites and the whites are unsafe in a community of ignorant blacks To carry out what seems to be written in our fundamental laws, we must consider all the laws as laws and each of them having specific and direct meanings for the protection of humanity. The early adjustment of all of our condition, I believe can best be handled through an honest, brave and christian race relationship committee."

tiveness. The American people have a mania for big things. We do not distinguish clearly between bigness and largeness. So organizations mean little to us unless they are big. They must swing the crowd, they must bulk big in outward noise and demonstration. Not infrequently we have these social, civic and notoriously religious organizations, which cover everything and touch nothing.

We need more efficient and smaller organizations, which will tackle a few simple things and perform them well. In every block a few people without much organization, perhaps with a mutual understanding, could perform miracles in the matters of beautification, sanitation, health, law enforcement and community welfare in general. The largest and best things have been wrought by a few people doing well a few things.

"ARE NEGROES OVER-ORGANIZED?"

Are the Negroes over-organized? The question is pertinent. To form new organizations seems to be our only solution for the problems which crowd upon us. Now, organization is essential to life. There seems to be no other way to protect and propagate it. Life, however, should be directed through those channels which oftentimes are ready and most adapted to serve it. At all events, there is nothing in organization just for organization sake.

Certain it is, that many of our organizations are up in the air, so far as obtaining results are concerned. They do not function. It is a case of the King of France with forty thousand men marching up the hill and then marching back again, rather than an intelligent, aggressive and sustained campaign until the objective has been reached. Perhaps the kind of organizations which we as a people delight in are much to blame for their ineffec-

EDITOR RANDOLPH FLAYS DU BOIS' JIM CROW PLEA

SEGREGATION POISON WOULD DESTROY THE RACE

Editor of The Messenger, Randolph, delivered what was considered the most comprehensive and logical address on the separate school question, ever heard in this city, last Sunday afternoon at Gibson's Dunbar Theatre. The address was frequently punctuated with enthusiastic applause and at the close, Editor Randolph was tendered an ovation.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the "Sons of Negro Freedom" and Rev. Wm. Lloyd Imes presided. "Dr. DuBois," said the speaker, "says we are moving toward a Colored world. The object of great movements of today is to remove the question of color at all. But granting for the sake of argument that we are moving toward a Colored world, is it logical or sensible for us to accelerate our motion toward that world of proscription, discrimination and race hate? We might just as well conclude to commit suicide, because we are on the road to death. We are not moving toward a Colored world. We are moving toward a world where justice will reign; where men are thinking in terms of humanity, of a new day, of a new democracy.

Segregation Destroys Negro Initiative

Wealth accumulated shows Negro business initiative. Under Segregation this would all be destroyed. Take Tulsa for an example. If we had had Negro homes in the White sections of Tulsa these homes would never have been destroyed. Voluntary segregation may be the development of iniative. We would have Negro banks, business enterprises, Negro barber shops, restaurants, etc. The poison of segregation will go through the life of the Negro and destroy him. Education is merely a means to an end. Education means happiness. The teacher is to mobilize and adapt the forces of nature to secure happiness to the pupil. Now a condition to happiness is freedom and freedom is the ability to act in accord with one's desire. Segregation limits an individual to obtain what he desires—happiness. We oppose segregation because it opposes the end of life—happiness.

Race Prejudice Born in the Schools

Race prejudice is transmitted, educated into the mind of the child. It is not born in him. It is not inherited. It is transmitted through various social agencies. The child's mind is plastic—that is why segregation begins in the school. The Negro child cannot convince the white child that he is his equal except through contact. The segregationists maintain that the Negro teacher is a greater inspiration than white teachers. The inspiration the Negro child gets in a school where he competes with the white child is a greater inspiration than that he obtains from Colored teachers. I am opposed to separating Negro pupils from White pupils and Negro teachers from White teachers. The Negro teacher has the task of educating the White teacher, an opportunity that will never come unless they have contact. The Northern Negro boy underrates the Southern Negro boy because he believes he is educated at a better school and if the White child gets it into his mind that Colored schols are inferior, he will reason that the Negro is inferior.

Negro Teachers Favor Segregation Because They Want Jobs

Why do some Negro teachers favor Segregation? Because they want jobs. But jobs will not come with segregation. Segregation will limit the school term, lower salaries, and provide fewer jobs. If Negro carpenters could only work on Negro buildings, they would get fewer jobs than in case they could work on all buildings. Suppose we had separate money. The money passing from a White man's hand would depreciate in a Negro's hand. The world is getting away from Segregation. You accomplish through education and agitation than you do by standing still."

Rev. Logan raised the collection and after a few pointed remarks by Rev. Tindley, the meeting adjourned

Negro Editor Says Whites of South Are Truest Friends To His People

The forty-sixth commencement exercises of the State Normal school in Montgomery, Alabama, when more than a hundred Negro boys and girls received several certificates and diplomas from several departments. The enrollment this year was the largest of any during the forty-six years of its existence and they come from every section of Alabama and quite a few from other southern states. The enrollment is 760.

The exercises began Sunday at 3:30 p. m. when Rev. T. J. Bellinger, of Cuthbert, Ga., delivered the commencement sermon. Among the features of the day were the music by the student body and the oration by Rev. Bellinger

The commencement address was delivered Wednesday by Oscar W. Adams editor of The Birmingham Reporter. He made a well balanced address using for his subject "The Negro and American Citizenship". The speaker received compliments from President G. W. Trenholm when introducing him to the student body, the faculty and the several hundred persons who gathered for the closing scene.

Adams said in part:

"If I carry out my purpose today it will be to develop the thought of manhood and citizenship, based on the American plan. I have selected to use in connection with this thought. THE NEGRO AND THE SOUTH

Hon. Richard H. Edmonds, Editor of The Manufacturers' Record, Baltimore, takes issue with Mr. N. L. Willet, of The Augusta Chronicle, by writing an open letter to our Augusta contemporary, The Chronicle.

It appears that Mr. Willet charged The Baltimore Journal with delivering an occasional lecture to the south on Negro wages and conditions. Mr. Edmonds takes Mr. Willet to task for a lack of frankness, and denies that he either lectures to the south on the Negro question or invites the Negro to Baltimore.

Mr. Edmonds says: "Now, my friend, Mr. Willet, instead of saying 'Baltimore Journal,' might just as well have said The Manufacturers' Record, and, instead of saying that we were trying to invite the Negro to Baltimore, he might have stated the exact facts. We were not inviting the Negro to Baltimore. We were trying to say that the south must meet the conditions which exist in Baltimore and elsewhere for the comfortable housing of Negroes, if it is going to keep the Negroes in the south. Baltimore has over 100,000 Negroes, but there is not one Negro house in the city that has not a bathroom, for there is a law in Baltimore, in operation for twenty or twenty-five years or more, which forbids the building of any dwelling in the city, however humble it may be, without a bathroom and sanitary facilities. In mentioning this fact and citing as one indication of how Baltimore is seeking to educate the Negro here, that it is building a Negro high school at a cost of $1,250,000, I was simply trying to indicate some of the ways which the south must carry on its campaign to retain the better class of its Negroes."

We quite agree with Mr. Edmonds, and Mr. Edmonds is an authority on economic conditions in America, and, as much as we are opposed to the wholesale migration of our people, we cannot escape the conclusion that if the south retains the better class of its Negroes it must resort to the Baltimore plan (and Baltimore is in the south) of giving him better housing conditions and better educational facilities.

In our own city, the educational facilities for the Negro is not one-fifth in adequateness as the facilities for the whites. We have no facilities for the education of our people furnished by the public schools above the eighth grade, and the outlook now for the next year is that our children will not get beyond the ninth grade, for, in the Junior-Senior High school now being built both the facilities and room will only take care or three classes in the Junior High—the seventh, eighth and ninth grades. Whereas, the whites have not only all the grades, the kindergarden and technical schools, but they have every industry known to modern education—commercial high schools, preparing the white boys and girls for every vocation. The whites have the grades, kindergarten, the Tech High, Commercial High and Junior and Senior High schools.

As to housing conditions—the shacks and huts surrounded by surface closets in which Negroes live are eye-sores and a disgrace to our civilization. We have no idea that the City Council or the Sanitary Department knows the conditions surrounding the homes of thousands of Negroes. It would be well for Atlanta to adopt the Baltimore idea and pass a law prohibiting the building of any house for people to live in in Atlanta without bathrooms and modern sanitary connections. We are publishing in another column of this issue Mr. Edmonds' letter, for the moral and prophecy it carries.

The Negro, like other people, likes attractive, comfortable and sanitary quarters to live in, with educational facilities for the improvement of his children, and in the place where he can find these comforts and opportunities he will make his permanent home. Why Negroes in Atlanta do not die, because of sanitary and housing conditions, like cattle when a plague devours them is a question in our mind that puzzles us beyond comprehension. A boy cannot rise above his home, and the house in which he lives, and the environment with which it is surrounded, including comfort, sanitation and ventilation, is a part of the home. The colored man does not seek alms, but opportunity.

It would be well for the south to investigate the causes of migration by looking officially into the educational facilities provided for Negroes, the housing conditions that he is compelled to accept and live in and the wages he receives. It is about as Mr. Edmonds says, the white man accepts low wages himself in order that the Negro may not receive a wage above a living level. Writing and speaking is not going to solve this problem. It must have heroic treatment. It will take performance, not talk. Migration will end when we are provided,

First, with better housing conditions in both the cities and rural districts; and in the cities, build no house without a bathroom and sanitary and ventilating facilities or connections.

Second, with adequate and ample facilities for the practical and helpful education of our children. Give them every facility and opportunity for education, morally, physically and intellectually, afforded white children.

Third, with living wages—wages large enough to afford us a living and to save a dollar, with a view of purchasing a home and having a little savings account for a rainy day.

Fourth, with confidence in the white man's willingness to give us a square deal, by enforcing the law alike against white and black violators.

Fifth, let us feel that the law is for our protection and not our punishment; that we may rest in our homes at night, whether in the city or country, without fear of bodily harm or the destruction of our little churches, school houses and lodge rooms. Let us feel that we are at home and amply protected by the strong hand of the law from all outlaws or violators of the law, white or black.

N. A. A. C. P. FIELD SECRETARY SAYS HOWARD PROFESSOR HAS BRAINS BUT LACKS COURAGE

Applies Lash to "Sanhedrin" Advocate—Unmercifully Criticises Attitude of "Keeping to the Middle"

(By Willam Pickens)

NEW YORK, April 27.—We often talk together, Kelly Miller and I—and I like to talk with him, for he does not "straddle" so much in conversation as he does in public utterance and in print. We talked together yesterday, privately, after he had just made a speech to an audience, chiefly white, and had told them that "the white race is the trustee of civilization"—a statement which would justify every arrogance of the white race. If the white race is the trustee of civilization, then Vardaman and John Sharp Williams, and all that breed are right. If the white race, as a race, are trustees of the thing, then all other races should be governed by them—Negroes and Indians should be disfranchised, and the trustees should have sole voice in the administration of the estate. All others are the WARDS of civilization, if the whites, as whites, are trustees.

Miller Dodges the Truth

Now, Miller knows better than that; he knows that this would be the TRUE STATEMENT of the case: That the intelligent and civilized people of ALL RACES are the trustees of civilization, and not by any divine appointment, but by virtue of their advantages—and that the intelligent and the strong should administer civilization for the good of themselves and of the ignorant and the weak.—This statement of the matter would take in Negroes, Japanese, Indians and all competent individuals among all races as EQUALS in the ruling of this world.

"Sandhedrin" Man Is Tricky

But why did Miller put the matter up to the white race? Simply because "the line of least resistance," a phrase of which he is very fond, was to be found in flattering and fooling that white audience into a feeling that at least here is one sensible, educated black man who knows that white folks should have privileges by the virtue of being white.—That is a regular little Miller trick, and although he is a friend of ours, he shall not get away with it. His plan is to bark with the hounds while running along with the hare and so keep the peace for Miller with everybody. He quotes Disraeli, who, as a politician, fooled people, to prove that it is a high and noble thing to fool people—not to let people know what you really think.

Miller Makes Nasty Insinuations to Be Funny

We noticed several little nasty insinuations which Prof. Kelly Miller has brought out in his weekly and weakly Middlings recently, and we would not mention them but for the fact that he mentioned them yesterday and tried to apologize for them. Evidently, his conscience does not run with his weekly editorials. "Oh," said he, "I just wrote that in fun, just to be humorous." That is to say, he did not mean it—but how is the general public to know that he does not mean it, when he pretends, for example, that he is so acquainted with the English language that he thought that our second article on "Intelligent Christianity," in the April Messenger, was at all contradictory to our first article on "Thing Nobody Believes," in the February Messenger? We wish to record for Miller's sake (all other people can read it in the articles) that we know no reason for changing a single crossing of a t in either one of our articles. But our friend is a mathematican and not an English teached, and perhaps that accounts for his misinterpretations of the plainest of plain words.

Howard Dean Has Brains But No Courage

The man has brains. His great misfortune is lack of courage. Even in the days of contention, the very foolish contention, between the advocates of higher and the advocates of "industrial" education, the professor, the teacher of higher mathematics, tried to satisfy both these foolish factionalisms. They tell a joke on him which is more than a joke as an index to his character: It seems that the colored people were having a banquet in Washington, and both the "college" and the "industrial" factionalist were present, when some one rushed into the room and announced: "Prof. Kelly Miller has just had twins born in his family, and he has named one of them Booker T. Washington and the other one W. E. B. DuBois!"

"Sandhedrin" A Supreme Straddle

Whether this be true of the professor's children or not, it is certainly true of his thoughts—they always come in TWINS, one for each side, though the sides are diametrically opposed to each other. Some times we wonder if his proposal of a "Sandhedrin," as he calls it, is not merely the supreme straddling effort of his career—an effort to stand steady (on only two legs) in a dozen different factions at once. We believe in an all-race conference, and shall endeavor to point out its possibilities, and its difficulties, in a subsequent editorial—but for the present we are merely analyzing the straddling psychology of Prof. Kelly Miller.

Miller Deals In Half-Truths and is Insincere

When he pretends in public print that he (perhaps maybe, and probably) disagrees somewhat and in some way not made clear with some of our honest statements about the religion which concerns all of us—and then tells us in private that he is just "kidding," so we speak, he displays an intellectual dishonesty for which nobody should thank him. He gets into the fooling business, like some of the preachers, who disagreed violently with what I said, when they spoke in public, and then told me in private that they agreed with me. One preacher who announced that he was going to preach more than a dozen sermons on me told me, of his own accord and in private conversation: "Oh, you are right! In fact, I have long ago stopped preaching the foolish things you mention. All sensible people agree with you—but it just took somebody with guts enough to say what you said." Another said: "All the best theological schools are teaching what you say, but then, you see, you said it so plainly that the people can understand it—while the progressive preacher says the same things in words and phrases that the people cannot understand." Another: "We are glad you said it—we cannot afford to say it." And an old and honorable minister of the A. M. E. Church, who raised a fine family of boys and girls, who lives in Colorado Springs, and who would perhaps be perfectly willing for us to call his name, said: "The worst curse of the American Negro has been the fear of the white man's hell. No people could ever be oppressed and bullied as the Negro is oppressed and bullied, except a people who have (not the fear of God in their hearts but) the fear of hell in their psychology."

"Sandhedrin" Man Needs A Fool Killer

So has Professor Kelly Miller been trying to fool the preachers and fool us at the same time. He will not fool either one of us, is our prediction. If he believes in the things in which we say no intelligent person today believes, let him say so, not in generalities, but let him take them up ad seriatum and assert his belief in each separate item. He has a right to do so. Let him copy after Kelly Miller, Junior, and say what he means in the shortest words, without the slightest effort to dodge or straddle.

Howard Man is Hypocritical "Knocker" of Doubtful Honesty

Is it not a queer thing for Miller to pretend to be "surprised," that some of us write some things which are printed in other papers besides the Crisis—as if the rest of us were any more bound to be limited to the Crisis than is Prof. Miller? Even the editor of the Crisis writes articles for other publications. We notice that our friend does not limit his straddlings to the publications of Howard University, or even to those of Washington, D. C., but spreads them around among several publications.

The best part of good religion, the best part of good citizenship, and the best part of good journalism is HONESTY. The plain and honestly expressed truth will in the end do most good for the church, the state, and for public education.

But, no sir, you are not going to get Prof. Miller between the Devil and the deep sea, and if you do, he will straddle out by running on the "line of least resistance" right up and down the shore line, dodging both his majesty and the waves.

Miller's "Little Game" Can't Work

But it is not easy to get away with that little game always. People will find you out. It is hard to stay "on the fence," and when a fellow tries to sit on two chairs at once, he is most likely to hit the floor between them. And we wonder if Prof. Miller ever heard of that philosophical donkey who starved to death midway between two ricks of fine hay—simply because the donkey could not CHOOSE—could not make up his mind WHICH stack he should go and eat—FIRST.

We believe in the good intentions of Prof. Miller, but we fear lest his vacillations and Disraeli-isms may mislead those who may not know that it is the law of his nature to straddle, to show himself "safe and sane" at all costs even if he must acknowledge by a slight camouflage and right in the face of Egypt and India that civilization belongs to the white race. We have learned much from his and we shall learn more but we are not going to adopt his dodging ways because it is not our nature to dodge. We are going to give a boost and a lift to that generation to which Kelly Miller, junior, belongs.—Wm. Pickens, New York, N. Y.

The "Black Cabinet"

This term was applied to the highest ranking Negro officials in Washington who banded themselves together as advisors to the President upon all matters affecting the Negro race.

Although made the butt of ridicule and coarse ribaldry, nevertheless, the black cabinet is calculated to render valuable racial service. The President seeks advice from persons in high official station who are committed to the fortune of the Administration. It is but natural that he will turn to his highest ranking Negro appointees for special advice touching the class with which they are naturally supposed to be most familiar. They have the easiest access to the ruling powers, and if they be men of probity and race loyalty, the public interest of the group might well be intrusted in their hands.

If on the other hand, our Negro officials be merely self-seeking politicians, willing to trade and barter upon the rights of their people, then their disservice might result in incalculable damage. The "Black Cabinet" has a worthy role to play, if it will only play it worthily.

The Political Boss

In politics the power behind the throne is often more effective than the power on the throne. The real political boss rarely holds office. The very fact of official restraint weakens his manipulatory control.

The boss of Tammany Hall never takes office. The Negro is poor, and must make his livelihood directly from his political activities. Rarely indeed can he direct the forces from an independent basis. He must look for favors to the big white boss to whom he is but a second lieutenant. Alas, too often this is the burden of his appeal to his white lord and master:

Nothing but gaff have I to give;
Nothing but gaff shall I receive.

Theodore Roosevelt, with his keen political sagacity selected Booker T. Washington, as the political referee and spokesman of the race or in plainer terms, the Negro's political boss. He was above the necessity of office. His standing before the world did not rest upon a political foundation. His genius and his accomplishments lay entirely in a different field. And yet he was the single, solitary member of the race who could have been thus utilized to the general good of the cause.

The Negro group must have a political spokesman. If the ranking Negro officials do not command the appreciation and approval of the race, then the Administration feels forced to select some individual upon whose advice and council it can rely.

This inevitably leads to unfortunate factional animosities, unless forsooth, the referee possesses transcending talents, like Booker T. Washington, when the appointed officials are glad to submit to his superior position in the general scheme. Shall the "Black Cabinet" or the political referee dictate the Negro's political welfare under the new Administration? We shall have o wait and see.

Political Leadership, North and South?

Hitherto all of our national political leaders have come from the South. The mass of the people are there. While the actual franchise has no practical effect upon the election, yet the Negro politician in the South exercises a larger measure of control over party machinery, and thus becomes a controlling factor in his State or locality.

The Negro, as often as not, heads the delegation from the Southern states to the national convention. Henry Lincoln Johnson is national committeeman from Georgia, and stands out conspicuously as a trustee of the Republican party. No Northern Negro can hope for like leadership in his organization. He can never lead the orchestra but is permitted to play only the second or third fiddle.

Those who aspire to national leadership of the race might reasonably enough be required to show credentials of local control. The crafty white politician is very anxious to eliminate the Negro from controlling place in any political organization. This is the declared policy and purpose of the lily whites.

In Georgia and Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, the Negro is still a primary factor in such Republican politics as prevails in those states. Everywhere else he is only a secondary factor.

There is no immediate prospect that the Republican party will function in the far Southern states except as office-monger and as quadrennial factor in national conventions.

There is no good reason why the Negro should not hold on to the form of power that rests wholly upon the political aspiration of the black population. From his point of advantage, the voteless Negro of the South still has the upper hand of his voting brother in the North for national leadership of the race.

Losing Out In The Civil Service

When Theodore Roosevelt was Civil Service Commissioner, the Negro had a fair show for clerical appointment on the basis of tested merit. But laterly the Civil Service is so manipulated that the black man is all but excluded.

I entered the government service as result of civil service examination in the good old Rooseveltian days. But now the applicant is required to submit his photograph, and is left at the mercy of the head of the bureau to which he is certified. By such insidious means the race is being excluded from the government. I want to call attention of the N. A. A. C. P, the Equal Rights League the Race Congress and other political and civil rights race organizations to look seriously into this matter.

First let them quietly investigate and determine the facts. Let them study the insidious methods and devious devices which this free government of ours adopts to eliminate its own loyal citizens from their proper participation in the civil service. Let them bring this whole question to the attention of Congress and of the country. Let them begin his investigation without too much noise and flare of trumpets. It will not be necessary to call on the Federal troops to enforce this right.

The several civil rights oganizations have recently issued a concordat of their purpose to work in harmony. Let them begin on this worthy task. Let no one hasten to get in the limelight ahead of the rest.

I call on the N. A. A. C. P. the leader of the group, to begin at once I call upon the Race Front Conference organized for just such purpose to arouse the constituent organizations to the importance of this task. Unless this newly formed union of organizations shall shortly show some constructive results of united action its efficiency and usefulness will be seriously questioned. Leadership in this movement should be conferred upon James Weldon Johnson. Lo, I have told you.

The New Administration

The Negro race is anxiously waiting and watching for some clear announcement of racial policy by the Coolidge administration. The politicians are asking who shall stand at the right and who at the left hand of the Administration for the distribution of Negro patronage.

For the past forty years candidates for the Presidency have appeased the gullible Negro with flattering pre-election promises whose unfulfilment bore bitter fruit. Extravagant expectations and fulsome laudation have been quickly followed by wild denunciation and abuse. This has been the undeviating experience from Harrison to Harding. The lure of campaign promises have deceived the Negro for ten quadrenniums.

The cunning politician might well rely upon the eternal gullibility of the Negro voter. But Mr. Coolidge enters upon his office without commitment. He presents to the public a carte blanche, with only the word "conscience" written at the top. This is our hope and expectation.

There should be presented to the President through the "black cabinet," the political boss, or the civil rights organizations, or some other influential agency, the practicable things which the Negro expects his administration to do. This should be done with common understanding, so that one delegation should not discredit or discount the other by conflicting claims and presentations.

The Negro is in a better strategic position under Coolidge than he has been for a long time, if he will only use the opportunity wisely.

TWO PROMINENT WHITE EDITORS THINK SLAVERY WOULD UNQUESTIONABLY RESCUE NEGROES FROM THEIR CURRENT TROUBLES

On the Other Hand, a Negro Writer Believes That Negroes Should be Taught to Measure Up to Meriting the Concessions Made Them by Other People

IF THE "CONCESSION" OF SLAVERY WAS MADE, WOULD NEW NEGROES MEASURE UP TO IT?

By AMY JACQUES-GARVEY

I have heard of many solutions to what is commonly called the race problems, but the most malicious one, as coming from white men, is the re-enslaving of Negroes in America.

About a year ago my husband (Marcus Garvey), in a public address, warned his hearers that if the Negro race did not make plans for its future existence, the day was not far distant when the white man would make efforts to re-enslave Negroes. Some of the "professional critics" laughed at him, and said it was hot air talk; no white man would even dare to think that way in this present civilization, this highly developed period. But here are two white thinkers, Messrs. Menken and Nathan, the retiring editor of the Smart Set Magazine, advocating the re-enslaving of the Negro, as a relief from the ills he now suffers as a citizen. Negro World

The Smart Set is called the aristocrat among magazines, therefore, it is well for all of us to know the kind of propaganda that is being disseminated among the class of white people who read this monthly aristocrat. The following appears in the December issue under the caption "The Crime of January 1, 1863": 12-15-23

"The present parlous condition of the late Confederate States, with the native blackamoors emigrating to the rolling mills, illicit distilleries and jazz-palaces of the North by the hundred thousand, will probably give some pause to the surviving proponents of the old doctrine that chattel slavery was economically sound. Was it, indeed! Then try to imagine Georgia under chattel slavery, getting into the appalling economic condition that it labors under today. One of the leading bankers of the State is authority for the estimate that the departure of field-hands will cost its cotton growers $20,000,000 this year. Certainly they never suffered any such staggering loss under slavery. The slave may have been an indifferent workman, but he at least did some work. New York

The truth is that the plan of remedying the acknowledged evils of slavery by abolishing it altogether was as extravagant and imprudent as the plan of cutting off a man's head to cure his headache. As a matter of historical fact, it was not adopted with any such nonsensical intention; it was adopted simply as a device for harassing and punishing the confederates. Unluckily, it set a precedent which still harasses and punishes all of us. . . .

If, as was widely held at the time, chattel slavery was full of defects, then the obvious remedy was to search them out and remove them. Most of them had been detected and cured nearly 1,500 years before by the Romans of the empire—for example, the custom which allowed a slave-owner to separate a slave family. A few simple reforms of that sort, most of which would have been supported by the overwhelming majority of Southerners, and the slaves would have ceased to fret under the bondage. As everyone knows the complete freedom that was so suddenly thrust upon them demoralized them almost unanimously, and brought upon them a host of woes. Before ten years had come and gone, the white Southerners, in self-defense, had to take their liberty away from them again by extra legal devices—this setting another evil precedent. In most parts of rural Georgia today the black field-hands is almost as much a slave as his grandfather was on December 31, 1862. He is not permitted to exercise any of the common rights of citizenship, he is deprived of equality before the law by being denied a trial by his peers, and now the alarmed cotton-growers are even trying to take away from him his right to free movement. The only right that remains to him is the right to acquire and hold property. This right was enjoyed by all slaves under the Roman Empire; many of them grew far richer than any Southern Aframerican is today. In addition these Roman slaves got honest justice in the courts, and many of them were permitted to travel. The free Aframerican is thus worse off than they were. More important still, his vain efforts to obtain his theoretical rights have caused him to be disliked intensely; the Roman slave was popular; and often rose to positions of public eminence. . . . These blackamoors shiver when they hear the word SLAVERY, though the thing itself would unquestionably rescue them from most of their current troubles. They'd rather be "Free" chained to an upright rail with a pyre of fat pine-knots burning under them, than "slaves" in a comfortable cabin, with plenty of hog-meat in the smoke house and no tax bills to pay."

This statement is brutally frank, but any one who knows anything about H. L. Mencken knows that he is one of the keenest minds of America, and one of the most outspoken of his group.

Here are these two editors, Messrs. Mencken and Nathan, stating in plain language that the abolition of slavery was an extravagant and imprudent act, and that the defects of slavery should have been remedied rather than have the institution abolished, and, finally, that if Negroes were re-enslaved it would rescue them from their present troubles.

Perhaps these white men do not know that there are leaders in the Negro race today who are not paid by white folks to do their bidding, but leaders who are supported by the race to think and act for the race, and to the interest of the race, and that these leaders are determined to so work and plan that Negroes will not become so economically bankrupt that they will have to submit to enslavement in order to exist.

The idea is now to squeeze the Negroes out of jobs and fill those jobs with white immigrants from Europe. The Negro, after a few years, will find starvation staring him in the face; then slavery, in a modified form (modified to suit present-day civilization), will be offered to him as a relief for his condition. He will either have to accept this offer or starve and die. This is one of the plans of the thinking white people to deal with the Negro, and sometimes an outspoken member of the white race spills the beans and shows us in what direction the wind is blowing.

These white men are figuring without their host, they are thinking and planning for the Negro of fifty years ago; not for the Negro of 1914-1918 and of today. The Negro of fifty years ago might have been satisfied with a cabin and plenty of hog-meat, but this New Negro wants everything that the civilized, progressive white man wants. The New Negro wants nice homes, and the means to protect them. He wants the biggest industrial and political jobs in a nation. And since this New Negro knows that the white man has only such luxuries as a cabin and hog meat to offer him, he is planning and working toward establishing a government and a nation of his own, where he can satisfy his needs and ambitions as a MAN. If any reenslavement is to be done, it won't be done to this progressive, forward-looking New Negro.

Unfortunately a few of our writers are wickedly blind, and in the face of the attitude of the white man toward the race, they tell us of a better future, and sit with folded hands waiting for the day to dawn.

I came across a Negro newspaper published in a mid-western city in which a Negro writer states:

"The white man has made many concessions that it was thought he would not make. What is needed is to teach the Negro to measure up to meriting the concessions he demands.

"What concessions in the name of God, could the white man make the Negro that he did not merit?. Can you imagine a Negro writing such nonsense? Are we in America a set of uncivilized barbarians? Or are we as civilized and Christianized as the white man in his western hemisphere? I hate to think that the weakling who would write such puny rot is a member of this noble race of ours, and that he contaminates others with such apologetical statements. I would like to know that the writers of the race, in fact, that all Negro men are MEN. Men that we women can feel proud of; men that can protect us and plan for us; not men that we have to apologize for, not men that suffer from curvature of the spine and shaking knees. In other words, "Murse, boss good niggers." Please, Lord, straighten out their back bones, and strengther their shaking knees, so that they all be real men.

DEFENDS DR. DUBOIS

Editor Chicago Defender: Of course every subscriber feels it his prerogative to make suggestions as to the policy of the paper, so I want to ask a question: Are you sure you know DuBois as to his spirit and fighting ability? Twice you have criticized him, to me, unjustly. I refer to the Lincoln paternity and to the segregated schools. In both, words were taken out of the context and without the spirit of the man. Chicago Defender 6-25-23

I have read his books, heard him lecture, sat next to him at dinner, introduced him to a parlor audience of thinking people, so that I feel I do know his ability and his spiritual as well as his intellectual power. He has a certain sarcastic bitterness which I like to attribute to his French ancestry and environment instead of to his Negro blood, but he has the vision and the personality to carry his fight for interracial justice into high places.

It seems to me that a tremendous power like the Defender's would be better applied to co-operation with such a force than to portraying his faults.

As a postscript may I say that much seeming neglect of the Negro organizations, such as a failure to include delegations to the memorial services of the president, comes not from intent, but from pitiful ignorance of the position the Negro American is now fitted to occupy. I am neither condoning nor apologizing for this ignorance, but simply stating a fact. I have visited with intelligent people this summer who really do not sense the change that has come; they think in thoughts of childhood when illiteracy and helplessness were real. In other words, the powers that arrange do not decide against recognizing the Race; they simply do not think of it, and if attention is called to it they even then do not sense things as they are, but as they think they are.

Of course the whites are going to get a jolt some time. I hope not sudden but gradual, as those of us who do come in touch with the Negro as he is and not was, know the outcome.

White Men Are Responsible For White Mongrels

THE NEGRO IS NOT TO BLAME

WATCH THE MAN WHO DODGES THE QUESTION OF WHITE SUPREMACY.

A lot of people, very much interested in the exodus of negroes from the South to the North, are unneccessarily disturbed, fearing lest these colored 'possum hunters will become entranced with the prospect of obtaining "Social Equality," in Yankee land, and decide never to return to the land where the sweet potatoes grow.

No altruistic sentiment enters into this anxiety for the return of the colored troops from the North. Practically all negroes in the South are city, and town dwellers nowadays never venturing very fat from the bright lights, and the celestial harmony of the nerve-wrecking jazz, except in the pleasant Fall weather, to visit the cotton fields, pick up some easy money, and then burn the wind back to town, with a "Git For Home Bruno" speed.

A limited contingent of the colored troops hold down more or less good jobs in the towns and cities, but the vast horde of the modern-day mulatto males, never average three months of actual labor during the year.

Millions of the lordly loafers spend their entire time in polishing pavements, and flashing their sun-set socks and Turkey-Red neckties, to an appreciative public. If the "bones" are running lucky, easy money jingles in the pockets of their tailor-made lavender trousers—but in case of necessity, each big lazy buck always has a trusty friend "in the white man's back-yard," that never fails him.

This is merely the repetition of a truism, or statement, which the writer has printed a thousand times, to wit:

The white man, who has a negro woman for cook, always feeds from two, to more niggers." The white man who doubts this, should consult an alienist immediately—for he certainly needs scientific attention, and quick action.

Referriing again to the element of white men who are uneasy over the migration of Southern negroes to the North, there is still enough left, to carry on all the farm work needed. The cities and towns are full of 'em yet—but it is that particular element of crap-shooters, who never work in the country—except an occasional visit to the plantation and farms in the Fall of the year—when the cotton fields are white as snow, and you can shoot a 7 or 11 by moonlight, and no fee-hunting Cop will gather you in, and force you to divide your honest winnings.

If enough negroes leave the South, the big farmers are going to be "up against it," for a year, at least. But the negroes will come back—and that is the bad feature of those sporadic, and senseless migrations of the mulatto breed. If they would only stay North, conditions would adjust themselves in the South, sooner or later, for there are plenty whites "pattering around" in towns and cities (living from hand to mouth, and often missing the mouth) who would finally go back to the country, if they did not have to come in direct contact and competition with the mulattoes. In addition to scenting the atmosphere for miles around, the negro farm hands work for lower wages than a decent white laborer can live on.

In the long run, white labor is the cheapest, but the big farmers either don't think so, or they prefer the nigger—whom they can "cuss out, and not hurt his feelings.

All the miserable propanganda and lies, recently carried in the dirty columns of subsidized periodicals in America about the negro being scared airless, "on account of the Ku Klux Klan," has had nothing to do with the Northern drift of this mongrel migration. The niggers occupy the same position in the South, as they did, before the Klan was reorganized. So long as he attended to his own business, and kept his black lecherous fingers from the throats of American White Women, no decent white man would ever molest him—least of all, members of the Ku Klux Klan—for they were gunning for much larger game than a pee-nigger.

The mulattoes may have been a trifle excited at first, but they know now—as they knew then—that the genuine, 100 per cent Protestant White man, was the best friend, a law-abiding, real negro ever had, or ever will have, in the South.

A certain class of the foreign element in America, have literally ruined the black race in this country, by transforming it into a miserable, mess of motly mongrels—neither man nor beast—that taken en mass, are not to be trusted—as was the old-time ex-slave.

No decent white man will deny this statement—then why should I not print the truth about it?

Beware of the alleged white, who dodges the question of White Supremacy.

If in doubt,, step to the lee side of him, and see if you don't detect an African aroma—"which fadeth not away."

Remember the proposition, that I have been printing for over 40 years of newspaper life:—

First—that the old-time, full-blooded African slave (or ex-slave) was a valuable, and trust-worthy asset to the South, that the Southern people loved, and trusted, and he never failed them.

Second—That the debauching of the 100 per cent, ever-ready, African women, by God-cursed lecherous alleged white men, was the crime of the age—and Southern people are not responsible for this unpardonable Sin.

I stick to the above proposition, for I know they are true —and pity, more than condemnation, springs up in my heart, when I view the wreck; which the lust of the alleged white man has left strewn in his wake.

The negro is not to blame.

"HAT THE SOUTH OWES TO ITS NEGRO NEIGHBOR.

(Portion of an address by DR. J. W. PERRY, Home Mission Secretary, M. E. Church, South, before the Social Service Conference of Southern Methodists at Lake Junaluska.

Today we celebrate the 147th an niversary of the birth of that docu ment which a great Englishman has called the noblest uninspired utter ance that ever sprang from the brain of man. In its first paragraph it assumes as an axiomatic truth that all men are born equal. To stop with that is to misunderstand the meaning of the paragraph. Soap box orators and corner loafers are often heard prating the untruth of the statement. They say men are not born equal; and they are not, for they are not equal physically at birth, not equal mentally; not equal in social rank. None of which the declaration proclaims. In the discussion of such questions as that before us today is it not true that we of the South are too prone to raise the bugaboo of social equality. As an old mountaineer of my native county when looking at a giraffe in John Robinson's circus declared, "The haint no sich animule." Social equality is a bugaboo of politicians and demagogues. It does not exist and no revolution is in prospect to usher it into being. Let us bury it and forget it, and let social matters take their course under the direction of an all wise Providence.

The declaration proceeds to define what is meant by equality of birth. That all men have certain inalienable rights, such as life, liberty, and the pursuit for happiness. These are rights of which no man can be justly deprived without due process of law.

Right to Life. Every man has the right to live. He did not bring himself into the world nor is he responsible for the flag under which his life begins, nor for the race or class to which he belongs. He has a right to live and the duty of a Christian society is to protect him in that right. If the priests and Levites had policed the road to Jerico the work of the Good Samaritan would not have been needed. It could have been traveled in safety. The fact that a road existed which was notoriously unsafe for a peaceable citizen to travel was a repoach to the social order of Palestine.

A very black spot rests upon the character and honor of our country in that citizens are too often deprived of life without legal process. The nonChristian world questions our religious faith and integrity as a people because of this. When a scholarly and cultured Hindoo gentleman some time ago was asked by an American for his opinion of the value of our Christian Missions, replied that he did not think a nation whose citizens lynched so many black men had any religion to export. Our Missionaries in every land meet the same criticism. "Why do you not stop the fearful crime of lynching and such violence at home before you come preaching a gospel of righteousness to us." To our credit, be it said that the number of victims has been growing smaller each year and that some Southern states have practically eliminated it. We owe it to ourselves and to the race which has served us for generations to end the evil in every state. It is the only way to secure justice and insure just punishment for every crime. Crime does not end crime, it begets it by making it popular. When the mob has sway no man is safe in his life or his home. There can be no law or enforcement of law. The good men and women of the Negro race look up to us with pleading eyes and voices, as so many have looked to me within the last year and plead pathetically, "Can you not do something to take from our people this awful horror," declaring themselves ready to help bring to justice those of their race guilty of crime. Do we not owe them the duty of the strong to the weak, of the more privileged to the less privileged?

Right to Liberty

The Christian South is under obligation to provide for the liberty of every man. No one desires to see involuntary slavery introduced into the country again. Our declaration of rights made it impossible for this nation to continue half slave and half free, just as the sermon on the Mount with its golden rule and the epistle of Paul to Philemon renders it impossible for such servitude to survive in a Christian social order. If peonage be practiced in a few other countries, it must not be in the Christian South, thank God! Wherever it dares to lift its head today in all our South it is made to feel the strong arm of the law. And yet has our Negro neighbor been accorded in every place the liberty of economic justice? I speak not of industries closed to him because of social restrictions but of his opportunities to buy and sell in an open market. We have grown in grace but are we not still suffering some pains of growth? Has the man of color everywhere the assurance that he can sell the produce of his toil, especially where organization controls the marts of trade? I have heard of a Negro who could not market his berries because he could not be a member of the Berry Growers Association. Just the other day I heard of some Negroes who were grossly ill treated in the matter to titles to property they had purchased in a city of the southwest. Surely a Christian people can find a way to guarantee this freedom to our neighbors.

The Pursuit of Happiness. Every man of whatever race deserves the best chance the nation can provide to make of himself the best and most useful neighbor and man he can make. Will not this require that we give more attention to helping our neighbor develop his home life? Slavery was not conducive to home life. The Negro brought no tradition of home life from Africa. In the days of slavery too often the Negro home was broken and he was taught to regard too lightly the vows of marriage. Do we not owe him Christian sympathy and help in the effort to make his home an institution which will contribute to the development of the best traits of character? Is it right to charge him high rent for poor quarters and leave his quarters in filth and darkness? To use his labor for our enrichment and put him to live in a miserable shack which no art could make attractive?

If he is to make the best man possible he must have the blessing of a pure and holy religion. He is naturally religious. The race does not produce sceptics and infidels. We can learn from these neighbors as we try to help them. Their religious work is carried on under great handicaps. But their loyalty and devotion to their churches is inspiring, and their liberality puts us to shame. In 1860 the Southern Methodist Church had 247 of its white preachers appointed to work among the slaves. Now we are helping to support only 110 colored preachers and that has not been done for many years. We must establish more contacts with them in their religious life. We can help them in training schools, institutes and so know them better and give them the chance to know us. Do we not need this as well as they?

The struggle of the Negro race for education, which they must have, if religion is to be anything more than superstition, is a story of one of the most heroic struggles in the history of our nation. Have we toted fair with them? Have we not neglected their school houses? Or failed to build them? Have we not given them too meager a share of the public school fund? Kentucky and Missouri are the only states to show a disposition to treat every child alike. Louisiana spends $25.37 for each white child and $3.49 only for each colored. Even North Carolina, which is leading the whole South in its program for Negro education spends $15.37 for every white child and $5.83 for each colored child or nearly three to one. Is that up to the Christian standard of a square deal? Is it wise or right to compel those who want to prepare themselves for the best service in teaching or other forms of service to go to the northern schools for that preparation? But where else could they go? Even the best schools, schools of highest grade for them in the South have not been builded by Southern people and are not conducted always with southern ideals. Should not the South, the Southern Methodist Church, build for them and in cooperation with them a school in the South where under the best traditions of the South, and with the ideals of the South, surrounded by the balmy atmosphere of the South a Negro may be able to prepare himself for any special service to which he devotes his life, and be a trained workman who needs not be ashamed?

The world looks on us today and expects us to lead in the way to right race relationships. The days of criticism are passing, for our problem has become a world problem and God has put us in the place of leadership. May we prove true to Him in this day of our opportunity.

NOV 18 1923

The propoganda that is being disciminated broad cast over Georgia against the negro the Jew and the Catholics is as full of meat and prejudice as an egg shell is full of meat. It is as foreign to the spirit of Christianity as the devil could wish. The Jew was, and is God's chosen people. The constitution guarantees to everybody, the right to worship according to the dictates of conscience. The Catholics believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ and trust in Him for salvation. Bishop Haygood said: "The negro is our brother in black."

MANUFACTURERS RECORD
December 20, 1923.

THE SOUTH AND THE NEGRO.

COLLIER'S WEEKLY recently contained an article by Mr. W. O. Saunders giving his reason as to why so many negroes have been moving to the North. Mr. Saunders opens his article with the following statement: "I am a Southern white man, born and raised in an old-fashioned Southern country town where the population was about half black and half white. I have lived nearly all my life in the South and close to colored people. When I was a child I loved my "ole black mammy" and played with negro children without prejudice. But I grew up to dislike negroes generally, just as almost everybody in the South does, for no particular reason at all except that "a nigger is a nigger." I came to manhood with a Southerner's dislike and contempt for black folks."

The MANUFACTURERS RECORD knows no language that would fitly answer these statements. There are, indeed, a certain class of people in the South, as those known by the negroes of old times as "poor white trash," who hate the negro. They will hobnob with him and drink with him, at times, and place themselves on a social par with him, although the negro is really far above that class, and then they will as occasion offers fight the negro, or sometimes shoot him. But these people no more represent the real people or the real sentiment of the South than the vilest black criminal represents the real negro element of the South.

The true Southern people appreciate the negro, and are doing their best to benefit him financially, morally and spiritually. They do not hate the negro, they do not regard him as a "nigger." They regard him as a fellow being doing his appointed work and they do not hold the race responsible for the criminals in it any more than the decent whites of the South should be held responsible for the criminality of its criminal classes, or for the effort to misrepresent the relations of the better class of the Southern whites and the better class of the negro.

Collier's Weekly introduces the article by Mr. Saunders with the editorial statement: "A Southern white man, reared with a Southerner's aversion to the black man." Now the Southern white man has no aversion to the black man per se. The aversion of the average Northern man to the negro is far and away greater than that of the Southern man. The Southerner understands the negro. He appreciates him, he knows his failings, he knows his good qualities, he knows that the race as a whole is a child race, in mental development, and must to a large extent be treated as children. But he knows that inherently the negro race has great possibilities for work and for spiritual and moral advancement, whereas, the average Northern man knows so little of the negro that he misunderstands him, mistreats him and hates him if in close contact.

A minister from the North accepted a call, some years ago, to a Baltimore church. He said to the writer one day that he never sat in a hotel dining room and was served by a negro waiter that he did not shiver every time a negro came near him. He had an aversion to the whole negro race whenever one of them approached him. No Southern man ever feels that way. A Colorado man, after a visit to the South, stopped at Baltimore and said: "I cannot possibly imagine how you people in the South can ever be satisfied with the negro's presence there."

Both of these men, and they are typical of the majority of the Northern and Western people, neither understand nor appreciate the negro. The South understands the negroes and appreciates them.

But the writer of the Collier's Weekly article shows that he is not of that class of Southern people who do appreciate the negro and who are, to the utmost of their ability, striving to advance him morally and spiritually. They have no such aversion to negroes as Mr. Saunders admits that he has and the very fact that he makes his admission shows that he is wholly unfitted to discuss the question as it relates to the South and to the North.

Mr. D. L. Bingham, vice president of the Bank of Indianola, Miss., writes the MANUFACTURERS RECORD calling attention to the article in Collier's, and referring to the misinformation it contains, says:

"But when the writer qualifies as an expert and makes the statement 'I grew up to dislike negroes generally, just as almost everybody in the South does,' too much is enough, and I can only pray: Good Lord, deliver us from such friends!"

Race Problem. — 1923
United States

AT THE FORK OF THE ROAD

NEGROES are at the fork of the road in America. Three paths stretch out before them. One leads ultimately to racial destruction by vulgar miscegnation, with the South as the incubator. Industrial strangulation is at the end of the other, through warfare between organized capital and union labor with its door shut in the face of the Negro. A third road leads to racial preservation and economic advancement, with industry as the instrument and incentive to achievement in America.

Three groups of the race are contending with each other at the fork of the road, trying to choose the route Negroes should follow in their march of progress. Three groups of whites are at the back of each Negro party. The fighting Negro factions are obeying a law essential to their own self-preservation—the eternal law which in its operation makes the death of one thing necessary that another may live. So these three groups of Negroes are fighting each other at the fork of the road for "the best place in the sun."

The Onlookers

Twelve million souls are involved in the warfare of the three contending groups, while all stand at the fork of the road. There is a mass of ignorance and incompetence anxious to learn, to know and do. This mass of sodden ignorance has been miserably abused and misused by some whites. It is being wretchedly neglected, abused and misused by a class of Negroes. Yet they all constitute the onlookers as well as principals in the struggle of the three parties at the fork of the road. While this factional fight for "the best place in the sun" continues, every Negro of the 12,000,000 capable of thinking should begin to do so, and choose the path he thinks best to follow as he looks ahead from the fork of the road. If this is done, it will help end the nonsense of the three contending groups of Negroes. Perhaps then they will give way to common sense and reason, and permit the race to get itself on the road to permanent progress and stay there until the end. Negroes cannot move forward with the world, with their heads in the clouds and feet dangling above the earth.

The Group Carrying The Cross

PASSING no blows and exchanging no bitter words when pelted by the other two contending Negro groups at the fork of the road, there is a third group of constructive people of the race. Their creed is Service. Preparation is their cry. Production is their slogan. Business is their watchword. Contribution is their actuating motive. They are the cross-bearers of Negro leadership. They constitute the individuals whom the other two groups damn if they do and damn if they don't. Every Negro outside of this group considers himself a committee of one not to commend what is achieved, but rather to damn what is accomplished under most difficult and discouraging circumstances, be it ever so good and worthy of commendation. These cross-bearers are bearing the burden of work being done for the elevation of the Negro mass in America. They are clearing the road, educating the people, training them in fine arts of better living, better work and better citizenship. They are establishing, operating and supporting Negro business. Encouraged and supported by sympathetic whites, these cross-bearers get little sympathy and no material support from the acrimonious critics who damn them if they do and damn them if they don't. But they go ahead just the same and the mass of the race is following their leadership, whatever may be said by others to the contrary, notwithstanding.

The United States "A White Man's Country"

GOD made the world for men—not white, black, red or brown men alone, unless the Bible lies. America is a free country, and the United States is a man's country. It is not "a white man's country." Only crack-brained Negroes and dirty, mean, crazy white people entertain such a belief. "Po' white trash" believing that the United States is a white man's country does not make it so. Such white people are more homeless and brainless than wharf rats. They haven't as much good American blood in their filthy bodies as the cock-roaches infesting their dirty kitchens. They are not to be blamed for the ignorance of their thinking, but pitied for their stupidity. They are generally foremost in cursing the members of their race whose competence and thrift have provided the country with a ruling capitalist class. Entertaining the belief that this is "a white man's country," is the bone of contention between ignorant poor whites and Negroes. It confuses the problem of race with that of economics in a way to keep poor whites and blacks fighting each other, while the rich white man has an everyday vacation because of the use he makes of his brain and money. Capital should not be damned half as much for its competent organization as labor should be censured for its incompetent and ignorant organization. The present organization and spirit of organized labor is the nestor of the doctrine that this is "a white man's country." May God pity organized labor wearing the mask of a brute and demanding human treatment, while all the time doing its best to strangle every Negro needing the same kind of treatment. And may God help organized capital, whenever and as long as it shows a disposition to open the doors of opportunity to all men without regard to color, previous condition or servitude. Then may God help and pity the Negro in America today whose spirit is enslaved, whose will, whose mind and body are so utterly and pathetically dependent upon the white man, that he dare not move to defend his life, protect his family or support himself without appealing to "white supremacy" on bended knees.

Simple Justice

A few weeks ago authorities from North Carolina caused the arrest of a man named John Rowland in Battle Creek where he had fled from a condition of peonage in a southern state. Through the timely work of the Battle Creek branch o fthe N. A. A. C. P. it was shown that the charge on which he was arrested was a false one and after being appealed to, the governor of Michigan refused extradition papers and Rowland was released. Later he was rearrested in Grand Rapids by authorities from North Carolina. Hasty efforts were made by Grand Rapids citizens to again secure his release, it being virtually acknowledged by the agent from North Carolina that the new charge on which Rowland was rearrested was also a trumpted-up one. He decided to return, however, on the assurance that by so doing he would not be held more than a week or two and that while he was charged with bootlegging he was really wanted as a witness against parties "higher up." Michigan State News

It was generally felt by those familiar with the circumstances that he had made a very serious mistake by agreeing to accompany the agent back to the southern state and that he was returning to persecution if not lynching.

It is with genuine joy that we learn that Rowland is back in Grand Rapids. That every promise made him by the agent from North Carolina was kept; that he was only held as a witness against parties "higher up"; that his life was well protected while he was held and that he was returned at the expense of those who were interested in getting his testimony. 7-28-23

We are genuinely glad—first, because we believe that he is innocent of criminal acts and that Governor Groesbeck was justified in refusing to return him when it was known beforehand thatthe charge on which he was arrested in Battle Creek was false. Secondly, because it is a definite instance where the protection due an Ethican citizen of a southern state was rigidly applied. The means taken to get Rowland back south as a witness were irregular and, we believe, illegal, but the promises made him by an agent of the state were definite and convincing—and were kept to the letter. Grand Rapids, Mich.

This one instance of honesty against the thousands of disonesty is hardly sufficient to change our opinion of southern justice to Ethican citizens. We still feel that an Ethican is safer in the north than in the south and is foolish to agree to return on the promise of "protection." We do believe, however, that if southern authorities will furnish even this degree of protection for her dark skinned citizens she will have gone far toward solving the so-called "race problem," "Negro exodus," etc.

Recollections More or Less Trifling

N Y C POST
JULY 27, 1923

By Chester T. Crowell

I have written a number of articles on Southern negroes for the Evening Post, all more or less serious, but it is negro humor, uncontaminated by vaudeville, that I like best.

In nearly every large group of Southern negro laborers there will be one who takes pride in being the bully—and the others seem to take pride in it, also, even if it does cost bruised countenances.

There was such a group and such a bully working on a cotton loading platform in Texas. Only one negro had not yet felt the heavy hand of the big "bad niggah." He was a little fellow about five feet two inches tall, with the architectural lines of a gumdrop, very black, and goggle eyed like a perch. He hadn't been considered worth bothering with. Any one could lick him. But one day at the noon hour it suddenly occurred to the fighter that he had one more bit of conquering to do, no matter how trifling.

The little negro had attracted attention to himself by rising while the others were still seated eating their lunch. The big negro rose and fixed him with an evil and threatening eye. The little negro stood still, hypnotized and terrorized. Very slowly and impressively the black giant approached his victim while the latter perspired even more freely. When only one foot of space separated them the big negro lifted his left foot—all eighteen inches of it—and placed it heavily on the little fellow's equally large foot. Then he lifted his right foot and planted it on the little fellow's left foot. The little fellow looked around appealingly.

"You little wart," roared the giant. "Don't be trying to staht nuthin wid me. Take yo feet out from undah mine. What you trying to do? Get smaht?"

The little fellow promptly sat down and laboriously followed instructions, grinning his appreciation at getting off so lightly.

When the draft age was raised from thirty-one to forty-one years during the war the constable of a small Texas village where there were many negroes pinned on his largest badge and set out to do his duty.

Seated on a barrel at the railway station was a negro in overalls reading the Dallas News and waiting for some farmer to hire him. It was plainly to be observed that he was slowly spelling out the dispatch about the new draft age.

"How old are you?" demanded the constable, levelling a threatening index finger at the negro's nose. One upward glance gave warning of the badge and the farmhand adopted his most conciliatory tone, a weak falsetto.

"I don't jes' rightly 'member how old I is, boss," he said, "but I'll average a little mite over forty-one." Anyway, it worked.

Two Southern boys from a State that had been dry for years before national prohibition were on their way home after the demobilization and whiled away the tedious hours of a hot day on the train by telling me about France.

Neither of them had ever seen a saloon or touched a drop of any intoxicating beverage before he went to France.

"They got a drink over there they call cognac," said Tom. "They spell it c-o-g-n-a-c, but they pronounce it cognac. Me and Will, here, we tried some. They just give you about a thimbleful for a drink. We drank five of them. Gosh, it sure made our eyes beautiful, but for a few minutes we couldn't see good."

Residents of Eastern cities may find it difficult to understand the amazement of a Main Streeter, accustomed to a single track railroad meandering off over the rolling prairie, when he adventures between New York and Washington, for instance, accompanied all the way by three spare tracks. Not long ago I sat next such a citizen bound for Washington. The locomotive of our train broke down and left us standing somewhere in the vicinity of Baltimore. Suddenly there was a roar and a brilliantly lighted express train shot past us through the dark, going north. Some ten seconds later there was another roar and another express train went by like a rocket on the other side, going south.

"Here it comes back already," remarked my neighbor, his eyes and mouth wide open with wonder.

Secreted in a pretty little dell between two rocky hills in the oil fields of central west Texas there used to be a wayside eating house which served the truck drivers who carried freight to the oil field camps. An aged native of the neighborhood spent most of his time on the front steps of this pine board establishment whittling, chewing tobacco, and scrutinizing each truck driver, truck, and its contents.

One truck particularly interested and puzzled him. It was always loaded with large steel barrels. One day as the driver hurried to his meal the old man plucked his sleeve and asked:

"What you got in them barrels, mister?"

"Nitroglycerine."

Nitroglycerine! Good Lord, that's explosive, ain't it?"

"Yep."

"Dangerous, ain't it?"

"Yep."

"Ever have any explosions?"

"Nope. Never expect to have but one."

Before prohibition one of the pleasant adjuncts of the University of Texas was a German beer garden, famous for good food and enormous earthenware beer mugs, with very lifelike representations of green frogs in the bottom of them.

One day a young man who looked much more prosperous than the general run of students entered and inquired for the proprietor. Expecting an order for a large dinner party, the proprietor hastened forward, wiping his hands on his apron and smiling like a full moon. He was almost illiterate outside of the kitchen, but there he held all the degrees there are.

"I would like to interest you in a set of Shakespeare," said the prosperous looking stranger.

"No, no, no," groaned the disappointed proprietor. "Shakesbeer. I couldn't do it. Here ve sell Lemp's beer from Saint Looie."

THE COLOR LINE AMONG NEGROES

Slavery, with its practices of miscegenation, has divided the race into many color groups, resulting in the negro's social life taking on as many forms as there are color groups in the race. The "near whites" intermarry with "near whites;" the "high yellows," "high browns" and "sealskin blacks" likewise choose their mates among those of the same tint as themselves. No group finds congenial society in another, thereby destroying mutual confidence and racial solidarity, regardless of the unwritten law which decrees that 99 percent of white blood and 1 percent of negro blood in the veins of a person in this country makes that person a negro. The two most influential welfare organizations of the race are at variance with each other because of the color issue. One accuses the other of being too white, while the other retorts that the first is too black. One advocates a program of social equality, aided by philanthropic help while the other puts forward social isolation and self-help as solutions of the race problem. The incessant warfare waged by these schools of thought inevitably retards progress. To those unacquainted with the intricacies of negro life such a color issue appears to be the height of folly, but when a careful analysis of the problem is made it will be found that each group has some justification for its point of view.

Race Problem—1923.
United States.

Souls of Black Folk

The Christian Century
Chicago Ill.
November 8 1923

A GOOD many years ago Dr. Burghardt DuBois wrote "The Souls of Black Folk." It stirred the emotions of educational colored youth as nothing had ever done. It was a cry of anguish from a wounded soul. By this work the hearts of a multitude of humane white folk were tuned into sympathy with the feelings of their less fortunate fellow beings.

Dr. DuBois is now past fifty years of age. He is one of America's leading authors and one of the most dynamic minds in our national life. The Negro question is foremost among the social issues that confront the citizenship of this land. We may attempt to minimize its importance, but if we do so it is only because we fear to face it. The influence of this man of letters with thousands of the leaders of his race is most poignant and soul-stirring, and the appeal he makes to their feelings and to their sense of justice kindles burning fires in their consciousness.

There are now published in America more than five hundred Negro journals. A survey of a large number of them, both editorial and news pages, convinces one that the leading motif is that of a keen feeling of race injustice. The news pages contain many "leaders" on incidents of race mistreatment over the country. It is to the shame of both the nation and the white race that there is such a plethora of this sort of material.

The Reaction to "White Superiority"

There is a tone of bitterness in the editorial comment of these Negro journals upon the assumption of superiority by the white man. Sometimes it is unrelieved by a recognition of the colored man's shortcomings or an appeal to his better nature, but usually there is a core of vicariousness in it and a manifestation of Booker T. Washington's benign and far-seeing spirit. Here is a fair sample, taken from the Freeman, of Indianapolis:

"He (i. e., the white man) boasts much of his courts and law, his jury system, the right of trial by men of his peers, and yet mob rule is an established institution in this country. They not only lynch colored men but they lynch white men in America with impunity. While the white man fights it out, we suggest that the Negro dedicate himself to the task of proving his worth to the world. To do this, he needs a new race consciousness, a new birth, a higher conception of American citizenship; and too, he needs a new medium of expression. In plain words, the Negro needs to advertise his virtues rather than his vices; he should tell his story where it will be heard."

William Pickens is one of the cultured intellects of the Negro race. His life story would stir the heart of any unprejudiced American, so much is it like that of the most honored of our white leaders in their climb from poverty to education and success. He protests the attempt in certain northern states to prevent Negro youth from entrance to high schools and junior colleges. Many editorials of like temper are appearing in various journals and these bring to the front a vital problem in the migration of Negroes from the south to the north. Mr. Pickens' protest is representative. He tells, in the Public Journal of Philadelphia, of the segregation of pupils until their completion of the grammar grades and their admission to some one high school in the city. "He is painfully tolerated in the high school, and many things are set so as to make it so uncomfortable that he either won't come, or will soon leave." Mr. Pickens tells how the colored citizens of Coffeyville, Kans., were induced to vote for a bond issue for a junior high school and then their children were refused admission. He says: "The nasty phase of this war is that it is a war of grown-up white men against little colored children. Great, grown, whiskered, gray and grizzly white men fighting against little brown children, denying their right to even the half deal which they were being already given. If you know of any more cowardly action than that, describe it."

The "Jim Crow" or "White Man's" Negro

In an appeal to members of his race to support their own institutions and business enterprises, the editor of the Atlanta Independent says of the "Jim Crow" Negroes: "They get about in their own circles and talk about how much more wealth they possess, what schools and colleges they attended, their social aspirations and attainments, and there is no end to their hifaluten theories, and no pedestal of greatness too high for them to perch upon: still they are found trotting up and down a dirty alley to a jim crow theater to witness a show by white folk where, very often, the comedian holds up their race as the butt of his humor—and all this they enjoy as much as do the white folks downstairs."

Professor Kelly Miller, one of the best educated of Negro leaders, sets forth the problem with rare good sense without losing sight of its bearing on the race's aspiration. He calls the subservient type "the white man's Negro," and says:

"The white man's Negro as a type is the product of the institution of slavery and he is more to be pitied than blamed. Where resistance is risky, the temptation to yield is great. The seeming servility which the Negro displays in the presence of the white man is often more spurious than genuine. He feigns a submission which he does not feel, and makes believe what he does not believe as part of his protective philosophy. The white man is easily flattered and fooled by the appeal to his racial vanity. Concede his racial superiority, and he will readily grant the submissive Negro any subordinate request. The Negro knows this and plays upon his vanity as his trump card.

"Over against this type of white man's Negro there is developing a type of defiant, discourteous, contentious, bumptious Negro who resents and resists the white man merely because he is white. These are found among the city toughs, and are quick with gun or razor to avenge any offense, real or fancied, which the white man commits against the Negro race.

"We also find his counterpart in the educated class. A certain brand of intellectual fire-brands are quick to denounce the white race without the least restraint of caution or courtesy. With chip on shoulder, they are eager to fly into fury at the slightest affront or insinuation. They are keeping hat on head when it should be in hand, in order to display their 'manhood.' Both extremes are equally dangerous to the best welfare of the race. Neither submission nor defiance is calculated to secure the desired results.

"The salvation of the race depends upon the type of Negro who is intelligent, courageous and manly, who is courteous, considerate and sensible, but who will not, in any mood, compromise the manhood rights of his race by servile submission, nor sacrifice them by rash, intemperate impetuosity of passion which would curse the white god and die."

Liberty, Justice and the Ku Klux Klan

Quite universally the migration of the southern Negroes to the north is analyzed as the expression of "a desire for liberty and justice." It is acknowledged that the matter of wages has a bearing, but generally denied that the economic motive is weightiest. "Prices of labor have always been better in the north than in the south. But, all facts considered, it is not dollars and cents that is taking the southern Negro from his old landmark." The Chicago Defender reasons thus:

"The only effective remedy for the evils complained of is for the business and property-owning white people of the south, regardless of party differences, to repudiate the office-seeking, political demagogues among them and accord to all the citizens of their respective states the rights and privileges to which they are entitled under the laws of the land, including the right to vote and be voted for, and to make them feel safe and secure in the enjoyment of the same, and amply protect all citizens through the courts and by popular sentiment in their private and property rights.

"The present situation gives the southern white man an opportunity to save his section from financial disaster. The experiment of supplanting colored by white labor, whether foreign or domestic, has been tried in the past and lamentably failed. It has been unmistakably demonstrated that the black man is the only one who can stand the rigors of the cotton and corn fields of the south for any great length of time."

Of course the Ku Klux Klan is a dragon to Negro fears and sensibilities everywhere. Nothing could be better calculated to feed the fires of race hate than the klan's attitude toward the race when it is coming into a sense of self-pride and rearing a leadership to protest its wrongs and plead its rights. Many journals reprint the New York World's comment on the proposal to buy Valparaiso university, suggesting that, "As usual in the most modern institutions instruction in theory and technical detail may be combined. Reasons for Anglo-Saxon supremacy will fall in the former classification; the melting temperature of tar as a medium for affixing feathers to the latter. Students will no doubt improve their grasp of practical details by 'laboratory work' in actual lynching parties under experienced leaders."

The Kansas City Sun puts the bitterest of the protests against the klan in vivid language. While it is representative of much comment, it is much more radical than most of it. A white woman shot into a group of white-hooded figures who came to intimidate her from giving testimony in a case where klansmen were interested. The Sun commends her in this language:

"They call themselves brave, Mrs. Benjamin, but you know and we know the kind of bravery that seeks to intimidate women. You know, even as we, that they are not brave men but sneaking, vile things whose venomous fangs are drawn to strike the helpless, defenseless and powerless in humanity's fold. They creep through the dark and unfrequented spots, like the monster beasts of primitive ages, and strike their victim when his attention is turned elsewhere.

"Such, Mrs. Benjamin, are the things you flouted. These wretches are of the same ilk as those who took your Lord and mine and led him away under a cruel and heavy cross, under a crown of pressing thorns, with a body bloody everywhere from merciless lashes."

COL. LAWTON DISCUSSES THE RACE PROBLEM

Before Georgia Alumni

ASKS IF WHITES REALIZE THE HARD LOT WHICH FACES THE NEGRO

Athens, Ga., June 19th.—Before the alumni association of the University of Georgia, Colonel Alexander R. Lawton, of Savannah, delivered here to-day a most interesting address on the race problem, his subject being "The Negro in the South and Elsewhere." His address in entirety is as follows:

"In this day of perplexing problems I speak of one nearer to us—the relations between the dominating white race and the dominated Negro. I bring it to you because it demands the attention of those who should be and are leaders of enlightened public opinion.

"Reluctantly, but without hesitation, as one who shares your traditions, your environment, your pride of race and your responsibility, I speak plainly and critically, for I believe that you owe to your State, to the white man and to the black man, your best thought and leadership to the end that this problem may carry with it the minimum of friction, injustice and evil.

"Do not be alarmed. I shall not violate the proprieties by even remotely touching on politics; and my own race instinct makes impossibleany suggestion which may even in the distant future permit amalgamation. Amalgamation would produce results far worse than any evils attributable to the segregation which we deem necessary. It is for some good reason that God has given us this race instinct. Where it has been lacking, as in Cuba and Porto Rico, the result is gradual creation of a mongrel race unable to keep up in the progress of civilization until taken under the protective wing of a country where race instinct still controls.

"I doubt not complete accord of race instinct between us beyond the Negro question. Conceding full credit for the part which non-English speaking immigrants have played in the development of America, it is far short of their numerical proportions and the dominating influence has been and is the stock which founded the colonies, attained independence, created and developed the Constitution. I cannot contemplate with equanimity any amalgamation of this high grade stock with that which I believe to be inferior, accompanied as I fear by gradual departure from the traditions of living and of government which we inherited. My race instinct bids me keep the original stock pure, and the outlook for the future distresses me.

"The terms race pride and race instinct do not primarily carry imputation of discreditable characteristics; but, not etymologically but in common speech, the term race prejudice does, and when I use it it will be with intention of conveying that meaning.

"It is useless to discuss responsibility for the existence of the problem. All the original states are responsible for the presence of the Negro and we have the problem in larger degree because we were slower in learning that slavery was an economic error, and freely bought of our neighbors the chattels they wished to sell. As authority I cite Lincoln's second inaugural in which he holds both 'North and South responsible for the Scriptural 'offense' and the 'woe' which it brought.

"But it is the responsibility of the white race only, and the white race has the higher duty. We are in the ascendency and no solution or amelioration can progress except on our initiative. While we need the sympathetic co-operation of the Negro, we can make some progress without him: he can make none without us. Moreover, the white race has always claimed racial superiority. Who makes this claim must never forget that superiority carries proportionate obligation.

"In 1920 the Negroes in the United States (10,463,131) were but 9.9 per cent. of the total population. In Georgia (1,206,365) they were 41.7 per cent, and in Mississippi and South Carolina more than half. They are our off set to the foreign born white population in other sections. In the United States the native white inhabitants of native parentage are but 55.3 per cent of the total population. In Georgia more than 99 per cent. of the whites are native born and of native parentage. While we have two counties, Towns and Dawson, with 100 per cent. native whites born of native parents (probably all of the pure old stock), we have two, Burke and Lee with over 80 per cent. Negro, and sixty counties in which the Negroes are in the majority.

"We can expect neither the disappearance of the Negro nor diminution to negligible numbers. Some advocate deportation. Waiving its undesirability, the enormous expenditure required would make it impracticable. And where would we send them, and what would we do to keep them from destruction by starvation and disease? And think of the heartless cruelties of it! The per centage of their increase is diminishing, but they are still increasing. Modern sanitary science is accomplishing much to diminish the death rate, and this good work is progressing in the South. The percentage of increase will probably grow.

"Approximately four-fifths of the 10,463,131 Negroes in the United States reside in the southern states, and one-fourth of the population of these states are Negroes. Race instinct and probably race prejudice seem to be strongest in the English speakign people, and substantially all Southern whites are of this British stock. Within the life time of many of us the black man was our slave and was recognized both by statutory and by unofficial law as inferior. These facts alone sufficiently explain the more conspicuous manifestation of race instinct in the South. You may not justly class race instinct as either sectional or historical. At least by those of British blood and environment it will manifest itself on reasonable provocation wherever numbers are sufficient to bring frequent contact or economic pressure.

"Many non-Southern states have civil rights laws under which segregation or exclusion of the Negro is made a criminal offense. He may not lawfully be denied the right of free access to and service in hotels, restaurants, theatres and other places of amusement. You have frequently been to the larger cities, and perhaps the small towns, in other sections. How often have you found yourself in the same hotel, the same restaurant, the same place of amusement as the Negro? The statutory law enacts non-discrimination, but what Judge Sibley so aptly called 'unofficial law' enacts otherwise. Almost the only exception is their public schools, where the combination of statutory civil rights law and statutory compulsory education makes it impossible for the unofficial law to be wholly effective, despite its force as shown in the Illinois school litigation of which I shall speak.

The Chicago Report

"I take some facts from the report of the Chicago Race Commission, not only because it represents thorough research, but because its authors have no bias in our favor.

"The Chicago race riot of 1919 brought the appointment by the Governor of Illinois of a commission of six white men and six Negroes, all residents of Chicago, to investigate the causes, report the facts and recommend the remedy. Iis report is a comprehensive volume of approximately seven hundred pages containing much personal testimony, answers to questionnaries by selected representatives of both races, and fifty-nine numbered recommendations. It includes accounts of the race riots in Springfield, Ill., and East St. Louis, Ill.

"Springfield was the home of Abraham Lincoln. Its Negro population in 1910 was 4.7 per cent. of a population of 60,000. The riot of August, 1908, arose from a mob seeking a Negro charged (but wrongfully charged) with 'the statutory crime.' He was spirited away and the mob took its revenge on the race, lynching with brutal accompaniments a highly respectable Negro barber and an old Negro whom they found sleeping in his own yard, who had for thirty years peacefully lived there with a white wife. They mutilated his dead body. There were no charges against the barber, and miscegenation was apparently the old man's offense. The casualties were: killed six, injured seventy-nine, and many houses burned. This riot can be attributed to nothing but race prejudice, which is at least as strong in Springfield, Illinois, as in the counties in Georgia with 80 per cent. Negro population.

"East St. Louis had 11.1 per cent. Negroes. Its riots of May 28 and July 2, 1917, had origin in economic pressure arising from labor questions and the employment of Negroes in the places of white men, and its sequence in barbarities which can be explained only by race prejudice. Torturing burning, murder, lynching were rampant. Women and children were not spared. They burned 312 buildings. A large force of militia was called to duty. There were thirty-nine Negroes and eight whites known to have been killed in the rioting. Many Negroes were birds of passage, and estimates of the number of Negroes killed ran as high as three hundred.

"The Chicago race riot of July 27 to August 2, 1919, started when a Negro boy bathing off that section of a lake front beach which was by custom assigned to Negroes, either purposely or otherwise swam into the white section. When in deep water he was stoned and he was drowned; whether or not as the direct result of his stoning is uncertain. Much excitement brought unrestricted riot for several days, with armed bands of both races motoring through the streets and firing into houses and several deliberate individual lynchings. Order was finally restored by the State militia after many days. The casualties include thirty-nine deaths and over five hundred injuries. The indictments were Negroes seventeen, whites four; convictions, Negroes three, whites two.

"The drowning incident was but the spark that set off the mine. Chicago's Negro population had more than doubled as the result of the migration of Negroes, but was only 4 per cent. Many Negroes had taken jobs formerly filled or then desired by white men. There had been great excitement over invasion of white residential districts, and fifty-eight Negro houses were bombed. There had been frequent trouble in public recreation grounds, bathing beaches, schools, restaurants and places of entertainment. Of course the rioting was by far the worst element of both races. Negroes in Georgia do not riot, and Georgia has no white riots directed against the race. We have disgraceful outrages, but it is the individual (sometimes, alas, his family) that is attacked and not the race. In Georgia also it is the worst element that thus disgraces us.

Conditions in Illinois

"Illinois has a drastic civil rights statute which makes it a crime for any person in any place of public entertainment or service, railways, theatres, restaurants, hotels, drink stands, schools, anywhere, to exclude any person because of race or color. In 1908 the Illinois Supreme Court gave an illuminating account of resistance to this law, which apparently challenges the prestige of the XVIII Amendment as an example of the futility of efforts to regulate social habits!

"The Negro plaintiff sought a mandamus against the School Board for admission of his children. There had been two mistrials and five verdicts for defendant. Reviewing the evidence the Supreme Court held that that there was no conflict and that it had been clearly shown that the refusal was because of color, that race prejudice alone controlled, and would continue to control. It exercised its power regarding the verdict and itself issued the mandamus notwithstanding the verdict. Meanwhile the plaintiff's children had passed the school age, and the victory was barren. This in Illinois, and in a city of 17,000 where the Negroes were less than one in fifteen.

"The facts reported by the Chicago commission were gathered by educated, intelligent whites and Negroes. Except for one Negro member who neither concurred nor dissented, the report was unanimous. Whether the fact that he was in politics was the cause of hist non-participation does not appear. While it reports schools with both white and black pupils, and sometimes white and black teachers, particularly in or near Negro residential districts, it notes the use for schools where there were many Negroes of buildings mostly built long ago (in some instances before the Civil war) and reservation of the better buildings for schools in which there were few or no Negroes, and social functions in the schools confined to white pupils, who declined to invite the Negroes. It recites repeated meetings of property owners protesting, often with most intemperate speeches, against Negro tenants and Negro owners; fifty-eight separate cases of bombing Negro houses; frequent clashes on street cars; various devices of resistance by restaurants and soda stands; exclusion, not by regulation but by custom, of Negroes from public recreation grounds near Negro residences; with warnings from managers that while they would be protected within the grounds, they could not guarantee protection just outside. It reports persistent resistance by Negroes to segregation anywhere for any purpose and under any circumstances, though it notes instinctive voluntary separation into racial groups in the parks and other public places. It reports the objection by Negroes to the appointment of a Negro principal in one of the schools because this would cause substitution of Negro teachers for white teachers, consequent withdrawal of white pupils, resulting in segregation! It reports inability of Negroes, except by threat of prosecution, to procure seats in places of amusement frequented by whites; prejudicial treatment by the police, particulary during the riot and in pretended search for those guilty of bombing Negro residences; in short overwhelming proof that race instinct and race prejudice in Chicago are at least as strong in proportion to contact as in Georgia, and that no criminal statute and no court can anywhere suppress there manifestation in conduct which while malum prohibitum is not malum in se.

"I have little of no criticism of the Chicago report of facts. It is comprehensive and reasonably exhaustive. But I regret that except in casual instances it does not in reporting treatment of Negroes by whites distinguish native British stock. It mentions sections where they mingle freely in schools, restaurants and other places. These places other than schools seem to be in the industrial section, for example, the stock yards. Less than one-fourth of the white population of Chicagoare native born of native parents, and most of the laborers are of the foreign born. Where the report doe smention the race of whites who do not discriminate it shows them to be non-British. It is fair to conclude that it is where the white population is non-British in race and environment that they mingle freely and without trouble.

Chicago Recommendations

"I looked with interest to the fifty-nine recommendations of the commission. They include the following:

"1. In future race riots or threats of them use white and Negro police and white and Negro militia. Imagine the results!

"2. Eliminate brothels from Negro districts. Most commendable and nothing but justice.

"3. Limit the sale of fire arms. This has been many times tried without success.

"4. Raze unfit habitations. Commendable, but expensive. The report showed serious shortage of houses.

"5. Provide for the Negroes as good schools and as competent teachers as for whites. A just recommendation.

"6. On street car lines much frequented by Negroes place inspectors (with authority) at transfer points. Very practical.

"7. Appoint a permanent committee of Race Relations which shall continue to study and to recommend. Very practical.

"Of the fifty-nine recommendations I find these seven as the only concrete recommendations which would not be included in a single one reading. 'If you have race instinct, do not allow it to influence your conduct or your thoughts. Thus free mixing and amalgamation will come, and you will abhor segregation, greatest of all evils. You must never be unjust or unfair. Thus shall all difficulties vanish!' Reporting widespread race prejudice, the Commission in its recommendations ignores its existence in so far as it advises its suppression. The recommendations are impracticable, visionary and impossible— a veritable mountain in labor for a mouse that is truly a ridiculous mouse!

Fundamental Data

"No individual, no commission, no organization, can progress in the improvement of race relations that discards facts for theory and does not recognize these fundamental data:

"1. Race instinct, frequently exaggerated by race prejudice, does exist in the white man, is particularly strong in British stock, and will manifest itself on slight provocation wherever the percentage of Negroes is not so negligible as to make contact infrequent.

"2. It is stimulaed by economic pressure such as competition for jobs, or depreciation of values in residential districts.

"3. It makes absolutely impossible (at least with British stock) intermarriage, social intercourse, free mingling in recreations, assemblies, places of amusement, hotels, restaurants, and, where Negroes are numerous, in railway cars, stations and schools. It is even impossible in churches. It is as powerful against fear of scriptural punishment in the life to come as against the fear of statutory punishment in the life of to-day!

"4. It may not make impossible if we all did our duty, but it makes difficult equality of privilege and opportunity for the Negro in his struggle for life, liberty and happiness, in which are included the right to better himself and his family.

"It is not race pride or race instinct, but race prejudice augmented by want of character that brings to the Negro injustice as between man and man. If I yielded to a natural reluctance to admit distasteful truths, I could not conceal from you the tendency far too frequent with far too many individuals to deal unfairly in business transactions with the Negro because he is helpless. It is manifest in some shop-keepers (particularly those who give credit) and with some farmers in their dealings with Negro tenants. It is to an appreciable degree more difficult for a Negro than for a white man to obtain justice in some of our courts, whether on the civil or the criminal side. I do not believe that our judges are subject to this criticism.

"It is not race instinct but race prejudice augmented by more reprehensible traits that brings to the Negro discourtesy, rudeness, contemptuous insult and corporal ill-treatment. The white man's claim of superiority may be readily refuted by the manner in which he asserts it. Insulting another or wounding his feelings is always to be condemned, but never more so than when it comes from a superior to an inferior. A gentleman should be more careful of the feelings and sensitiveness of one below him than of his equal or his superior. A Negro dare not insult a white man. Fear restrains him. A more commendable spirit should restrain the white man from daring to insult or maltreat the Negro. Let his "dare do all that may become a man'—remembering that 'who dares do more is none.'

Migration

"It is not amiss to note the heavy migration of Negro labor from the South to the North and West within the past few years, which is now possibly at its maximum. The President of our State College of Agriculture has quite recently estimated that this migration has brought about the recent abandonment of more than 11,000 farms, and that 100,000 Negroes have recently left our state. An actual count by the tax authorities of Wilkes county, published on May 28th, shows that within the year 631 heads of Negro families have left Wilkes county. Counting their families, this means a migration of approximately 2,500 Negroes, and tends to confirm Dr. Soule's estimate.

"Many causes have contributed to this migration, including the tempting of the ignorant, either by false representation or by permitting him to remain in ignorance of what awaits him at the end of his journey. Nevertheless, I believe that if we had sooner inaugurated organized and intelligent study and consideration of the relations between the races and had practiced what was thus found just and wise, there would be no migration. There are some, a minority, I think, who favor the departure of the Negro. I register my dissent, but I do not discuss it. My theme is not economic advantage, but primarily right and justice and secondarily the fair fame of the State we love.

Lynch Law

"The Dyer Bill for trial of lynching cases in the Federal courts and punishment under the Federal statute has earnest support of many able and conscientious persons, whose chief difference from ourselves is their point of view of the Negro problem. Its chance of passage is due solely to the fact that lynchers are allowed to go unpunished. I shall not give you the appalling statistics of lynching. You have often seen them.

"Much has been said and written about lynch law and the mob. I can say nothing that is new, nor can I say it as well or as forcefully or as convincingly as it has been said by others. I cannot forbear quoting a distinguished Confederate soldiers and judge, the late Hon. Thomas G. Jones of Alabama, and my quotations will show how fully he sympathized with our own point of view. Hear him in 1904 in his charge to the United States grand jury in Alabama:

"The instinct of race pride which objects to mingling the blood of the races is implanted in our bosoms by the finger of the Almighty Himself, to preserve the purity of the race. It i sa divine right. It is almost sacrilege to liken it to prejudice. It has nothing in common with the meanness and cowardice which would deny a fellow being those common and inalienable rights which the Creator gave all men, or oppress or outrage a man because he is humble and helpless, or born of a different race. The two feelings are as different and as far apart as virtue and vice. It is infamous to contend the one with the other. Yet day after day, the passions of the unthinking and ignorant, have been stirred by reckless agitators, who argue that the purity of the white race can be maintained and defended, only by beating down the benign rule that justice should be 'administered without respect to persons', and that laws which have one rule alike for rich and poor, favorite at court and countryman at plow,' are not bulwarks of our defense, and that their enforcement is a menace to the integrity of the white race. No wonder then, with the difficulties which naturally surround the subject, that under the influence of these long continued and combined assaults, a volume of race bitterness has been put in motion, which has drowned the law in some communities.'

"Again 'What excuse is there for this condition of things? The white race is superior and wields the power of government. The Negro has practically no part in it. The laws are made by white men. White men preside in the courts. White men sit upon the juries. The danger is not that a guilty Negro will escape just punishment at the hands of the law, but that in many instances the innocent may meet with unjust punishment. The pretext that the criminal will not receive justice, if the law is allowed to take its course, is wholly wanting.'

Race Problem — 1923. II

"Again: 'Every mob is a stab at the sovereignty of the people, and a malign denial to them by force of arms of the right to the freedom of orderly government. There is not a village in Alabama whose able-bodied men and boys would not fly to arms to repel a band of freebooters who organized in their midst to enforce a demand that the community should have nothing to do with enforcing its own laws. Yet this is the mob, and what it does. The fire bells would ring out the alarm and the streets of any of our cities would swarm with armed and indignant people if they were told that a gang of intruders were coming to expel their chosen judges from the judgement seats, and put irresponible and vicious men, chosen by the marauders, in their places. Yet that is the mission of the mob when it arms to storm a jail and put a prisoner to death. If men would only reflect what treason mob law is to their homes and institutions, mobs would be well nigh impossible.

"Aside from his attack on government, the evils of the mob have almost boundless sweep in all the relations of life. Can any man, in the wildest flight of brain, picture Robert E. Lee or John B. Gordon, no matter what the charge against the criminal, joining a mob to break down a jail, and taking a prisoner out to hang him? Why not? Because they are types of courage and honor, and justice and veneration for law, and all these cry out against such an act. No man who forms a part of the flood of passion and cowardice which storms a jail and murders a defenseless prisoner, is ever again the same moral being. Then and there a human tiger is born. He comes to despise the sanctity of human life. He is swift to the shedding of blood of his neighbors, and sure to give loose rein to his passion when it turns upon one who is weak and helpless. These he will always find. He is an enemy of the youth of the land; for he teaches them it is right to subridie their worst passions and to trample down those who are set over them.'

"Lynching is not a sectional crime. Many of the most brutal have occurred outside of the South, and the reason why most of them have occurred here is the greater seriousness of the racial problems because of the greater contact to which I have referred.

Our people oppose this bill and claim it to be unconstitutional. I have not studied the constitutional question. In the same year in which Judge Jones, permeated with our race instinct and our traditions, delivered his charge to the Grand Jury he held in an able judicial opinion (Ex Parte Riggins, 134 Fed. 404) that Congress may legislate directly for the enforcement of the 14th Amendment's guaranties of equal protection of the law and due process of law, and refused to discharge upon habeas corpus one indicted in his court for lynching a Negro, confined in the Alabama jail for trial in the State court. There was not then so strong a tendency as there is to-day to enlarge grants of power in the Federal constitution and to limit restrictions upon Congressional functions. Many statues which would undoubtedly have been declared unconstitutional in the past are sustained to-day, and you are not justified in being confident that the Dyer bill will not become a law, or that it will be adjudged unconstitutional. The way to oppose its passage and to obviate its enforcement is to arouse an enlightened public opinion which will compel such universal and impartial and fearless administration of the laws and protection of the individual as to make Federal intervention clearly unnecessary and inexcusable.

The Negro of To-day

"Thomas Jefferson is quoted as saying that 'a Negro could scarcely be found who was capable of tracing and comprehending the investigations of Euclid.' If this was true when he spoke it is not true now. All Negroes are not of one class. There is a wide gap between the illiterate Negro field hand and the Negro men and women of to-day who are important in the field of scholarship, literature, the learned professions, business, banking, and, conspicuously, oratory. The number of able thinkers among them is by no means negligible. The Negro population with whom we deal is not the Negro population of reconstruction days. We cannot apply to them treatment which has its foundation in the natural resentment and cruel humiliation of the political mistakes which then oppressed a conquered people. We did not then study and carefully consider what we should do, and we have to this day laid down no course of conduct based on the best thought that we can command. We should have begun to look it squarely in the face fifty years ago. This is but an additional reason for not neglecting it now.

"Do you realize what a hard fate it is to be a Negro? Put yourself in his place and imagine that through no fault of yours but merely because your skin is black, you are expected to go through life doing your share as a man, a citizen, for yourself, your family, your community, your State and your Country, with handicaps and restrictions such as these: You are barred from holding an office; and may not serve as a juror. You may not be a clerk. You may work as a porter or a waiter on a sleeping car, but never as a conductor or a steward You may work with white men as a skilled laborer, but never as a foreman. You may work a ttrades and vocations but, however well you may work, you have no hope of promotion. You are altogether barred from many trades and crafts. You are barred from the principal labor unions. You may be a locomotive fireman but never an engineer. Whatever your ability to pay, whatever your dress, your habits, your demeanor, you may never use the best facilities provided for public entertainment. These and many other handicaps must be your lot and the lot of your children and your children's children from the cradle to the grave. Imagine yourself so situated. Would you be content to accept it without question? Would you never dream of changing it? Would you cheerfully agree with those who believe that it must ever be?

"It would seem that race instinct is so firmly implanted that these handicaps are permanent, and that part of our problem is this: How may we continue forever and ever to deal justly and fairly and wisely with a large percentage of our population conscious of the grievance that, not through their own act but by the accident of birth and inheritance, they are denied equality of privilege? The answer is not easy.

Inter-Racial Co-operation

"The immediate cause of my more careful consideration of this question is the recent organization of the Commission of Inter-racial Co-operation in a territory which covers fifteen states, with general headquarters in Atlanta. At the head of the Georgia organization is Rev. M. Ashby Jones, whose name you will accept as a guaranty of earnest purpose and able work on lines which will not clash with our most sacred traditions. There is a local committee in each Georgia county except those in which the number of Negroes is negligible. In my county substantially equal numbers of white and Negro men and women meet for conference in a spirit of mutual co-operation, freely discussing weak spots in inter-racial relations. Every member realizes and tacitly recognizes unavoidable differences of opinion on certain fundamental questions, the futility of discussing them, the hopelessness of agreement on them. I can unhesitatingly say for the white members that, well knowing that practically no Negro endorses their opinions on these fundamental questions, they neither find nor anticipate difficulty in agreement and co-operation in remedying many conditions which all know are wrong. There has been in these meetings no incident which has been either awkward or embarrassing, and we have no reason to anticipate any.

"The general, state and local organizations are actively at work doing all that available funds permit. They are investigating lynching and instituting prosecutions. They have secured no if not complete unanimity opposes, not convictions, but they have every evidence of the beneficial effect of even un successful prosecution, and the efforts of the Commission to educate public sentiment will naturaly in time bring convictions. It has paid the expense of litigation in several flagrant cases of gross injustice in private contractual relations between white and Negro, and will continue this work. It is using the printing press and other means for educational matter.

Some Obstacles

"There are many organizations with the avowed object of improving the status of the Negro, which is improving race relations. Most of them are composed of both races and they represent two different schools—one of Booker Washington-Moton school with which our Commission on Inter-racial Cooperation may freely co-operate, and one whose attitude is so extreme and so radical that co-operation is impossible.

"The leaders of the opposing school are represented by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, with headfuarters in New York, which publishes 'The Crises.' The President is a leader, if not the leader, of the Boston bar, a high class cultivated courageous Massachusetts gentleman, representative of all that is good in the splendid New England Puritan stock. The editor of the Crisis is a brilliant Massachusetts Negro, an A. B., A. M., and Ph. D. of Harvard, a student abroad, and author of several books. If you wish an exhibition of race prejudice, race bitterness, race hatred from the other side, read his book, 'Darkwater,' and other writings. Among the supporters of this association are many of the best white men and women of the North, who are undoubtedly actuated by no desire in the world except to help their fellow man. In the effort to do this they are extensively circulating a mass of literature, intemperate in matter and in form, capable of no results except irritation, anger and opposition, and advocating complete abolition of the slightest distinction in law, official or unofficial, or recognition of the fact that there is any difference between them. They earnestly advocate unrestricted intermarriages, and are the chief supporters of Federal intervention in lynching cases. The very existence of this Association is an additional reason why we should work along more hopeful lines. Like the Chicago Commission it sets its own impossible theories and hopes above conditions which actually confront us, and make the mistake of so many overzealous reformers of trying to attain what can never be attained and losing the opportunity to get that which is possible.

The Crisis is only one of the leaders in the Negro press whose influence makes co-operation more difficult. Some of the many Negro papers published in the United States are conservative and preach goodwill and co-operation, but there are many exceptions. One of the most conspicuous is the Chicago Defender, with a circulation of 185,000, edited by a Negro member of the Chicago Race Commission, who is registered as having been born in Georgia. He is a graduate of Hampton Institute, but he has not followed the policies of that excellent institution, of which Robert R. Moton is also a graduate. The Defender is violently abusive of the South and preaches gall and bitterness. It is credited with having been chiefly responsible for the large migration of Negroes from the South to Chicago which was the primary cause of the riot. Its proprietor and editor joined in the report, which finds that even in Chicago whites and Negroes will not mix in quantity; that you cannot eradicate race instincts; that in Chicago loans on property owned by Negroes are not attractive to investors; that the presence of Negroes is at least one cause of the depreciation of property; that there is deep-seated and general prejudice against Negroes, and many like expressions which show that, while he knows that advice and agitation cannot overcome the race instinct, he forgets it when he maps out his course of action.

"Another obstacle to racial co-operation is the office seekers who curries favor with the large white majority by pandering to their baser instincts and helping to hold the Negro down to the lowest level. Of him I fear we can never be rid. From time immemorial the thirst for office has been a potent influence for evil.

"And there is the Ku Klux Klan. It does not announce hostility to the Negro as one of its principles. I believe it even denis eit. No one is able to test the sincerity or the truth of any of its claims or denials because it has surrounded itself with the cowardly mantle of secrecy. When a communication purports to come from the Ku Klux Klan it is the Klan's own prac tice that makes it impossible to ascertain the truth. Indications are that it does countenance and practice unjust unfair and brutal treatment of the helpless Negro. The man who is himself honest and sincere is not inclined to give weight to asseverations of men who, if not afraid, are ashamed to come out in the open. Historical precedent cannot justify its present existence. We are no longer in the days of reconstruction when there was no law but force, and we have no place for an invisible government hiding behind a mask and repudiating law and order. If its members be sincere, let them teach respect for constitutional organized government, and practice it. They present a serious obstacle to those who do.

Segregation

"In questionnaries to selected groups of men, white and Negro, the whites were asked by the Chicago Commission whether they favored segregation, and the Commission in summarizing their answers reports that they did. These were Chicago men selected by both races. It is significant that this question was not asked of the Negro group, the only reference to it being a question which assumed as of course that the Negro opposed segregation. Here is a serious obstacle to satisfactory treatment. The race instinct of all white men who are near neighbors to the problem unanimously demands reasonable segregation as a sine qua non, while the Negro with substantial unanimity regards not merely inequalities and hardships which unjust and unfair segregation brings—and in this he is justified—but any and all segregation, minor or major, at any time, at any place, under any circumstances.

"The white man is and will continue to be in the ascendency, and the races can co-operate only on terms which the white man will accept. I hope that having the greater power he will be just and liberal; but he will never regard it as just to risk even slightly the perpetual purity of the white race, and liberality will never induce him to abandon his insistence on segregation—not cruel, unjust, unfair segregation, but that degree and kind of segregation which recognizes race instinct and which race instinct demands.

"Negroes, and their radical friends who know the problem only as we know those of the Japanese, the Chinese and the foreign-born, should realize this. When they do, and not until they do, when they accept it as irresistible, we will have made a long step forward, and may look to the future with renewed hope. Until they do, their blindness to stern necessity will continue a stumbling block in the path of the white man who wishes them well cannot suppress his race instinct.

"I have spoken freely, not hesitating to point to our own shortcomings, but trying to avoid criticism which is merely destructive. I have noted the marked progress of the Negro in less than two generations. This and his earlier progress (even with the handicap of slavery) from untutored savagery and paganism indicate capacity for further advance, and give encouragement of success—yes, substantial success if we awake to full realization that we must be up and doing. The task is difficult but not hopeless, and it is our task.

"I know that deep down in your hearts you have an affection for the Negro. Remember his remarkable record during the Civil War. During those four years of trial there was not even one instance of faithlessness by the slaves left to care for the helpless women and children on the plantation. And John Brown called for them in vain. It is a record of which any race should be proud, and I am sure that you are proud of it for them.

"We know that we are in the ascendency and that his fate is largely in our hands. We know that as compared with ourselves he is helpless and that he deserves not our criticism but our sympathetic interest; not our antagonism but our help and our encouragement. I appeal to each of you for active aid in urging upon your community and your State fair and impartial consideration of this harassing problem; for study of it in the light of today and not exclusively in the light of tradition; for encouragement and participation in the work of the Inter-racial Commission; and for a firm determination as men and women on whom the higher duty rests that no unfair advantage shall be taken of our power, and that the Negro shall always receive that justice and fair treatment which is his due, and which we cannot withhold if we wish to retain our self-respect."

"BLACK BELT" DATES TO FIRST SETTLER

Motives Which Brought DeSaible Here in 1779 Still Appeal to Race.

(This is the sixth-fourth of a series of articles dealing with development of Chicago's various business, industrial, residential and suburban centers. Another article in the series will appear on this page next Saturday.)

BY HARRY M. BEARDSLEY.

"The first white man to live in Chicago was a black man."

This is the naive statement attributed to the Pottawattomies by the earliest historians who interested themselves in pre-Fort Dearborn Chicago.

The black man whom the Indians classified as "white" because he was not of the same hue as themselves, was Jean Baptiste Point DeSaible, a free Domingoan, who first appeared along the sandy banks of the Chicago river about 1779.

The same motives that later brought thousands of his race to Chicago and made it the fourth largest colored city in the world, impelled DeSaible to settle here. At that period, the Spanish controlled much of the country west to the Mississippi, and the English had recently acquired control of the lands of the Peorias to the south and west, where DeSaible had lived for many years.

DeSaible Loyal to France.

In Santa Domingo, DeSaible had lived under French rule, and had prospered. He was loyal to France, and hated the British and the Spanish; so he sought new fields where he could be free from the rule of either Britain or Spain, and enjoy greater opportunities and independence.

Thus his presence is noted in July, 1779, by Col. Arent Schuyler DePeyster, commandant of the British garrison at Michelimackinac, who wrote "Baptiste Point DeSaible, a handsome negro, well educated, and settled at Eschikagou; but much in the French interest."

DeSaible built a cabin near the mouth of the Chicago river, and lived there eighteen years, trapping and trading with the Indians. At the end of that period he sold his cabin to another trader, named LeMai, and went back to live with his friends, the Peorias.

Owned Property at City's Founding.

City records indicate there were several colored property owners in Chicago when the city was incorporated in 1837. By 1848 there were at least five owning property on Lake, Madison, Clark, Harrison and Wells streets. By 1848 a colored church owned property at the corner of Buffalo and Jackson, and there was a growing colored colony along Clark and Dearborn streets north of Harrison.

After the Chicago fire the colored colony was pushed further south by the rebuilding of the central business district, and the nucleus of the present "black belt" was created.

The 1920 census credited Chicago with a colored population of more than 106,000, the fourth greatest colored urban population in the world. Estimates by the Chicago Urban league place the present colored population at approximately 130,000.

By far the greatest portion of this population lives in the district bounded by Roosevelt road on the north, Pershing road on the south, Wentworth avenue on the west and Wabash avenue on the east. The census shows a total of more than 92,000 colored people within the area bounded by Roosevelt road, 55th street, Wentworth and Indiana avenues.

Section One-Fourth Colored.

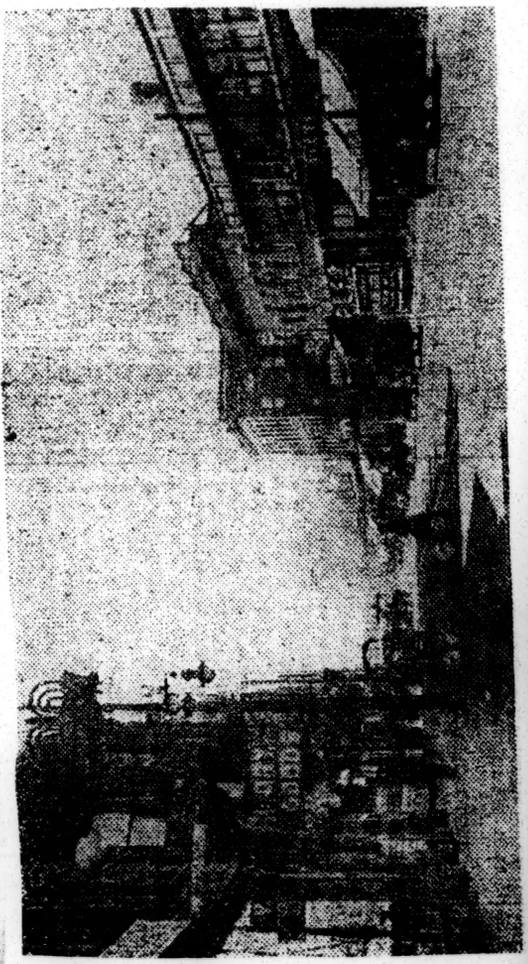
While this is the largest and most densely populated colored section in the city, the colored people constitute only one-fourth of its total population.

That this section would some day be 100 per cent colored, and the remainder of the city 100 per cent white, is a hope that has been expressed in some quarters from time to time during the last decade. That there is no possibility of this wish being realized is obvious, and the desirability of its realization is contested by most students of both races who have investigated the problem.

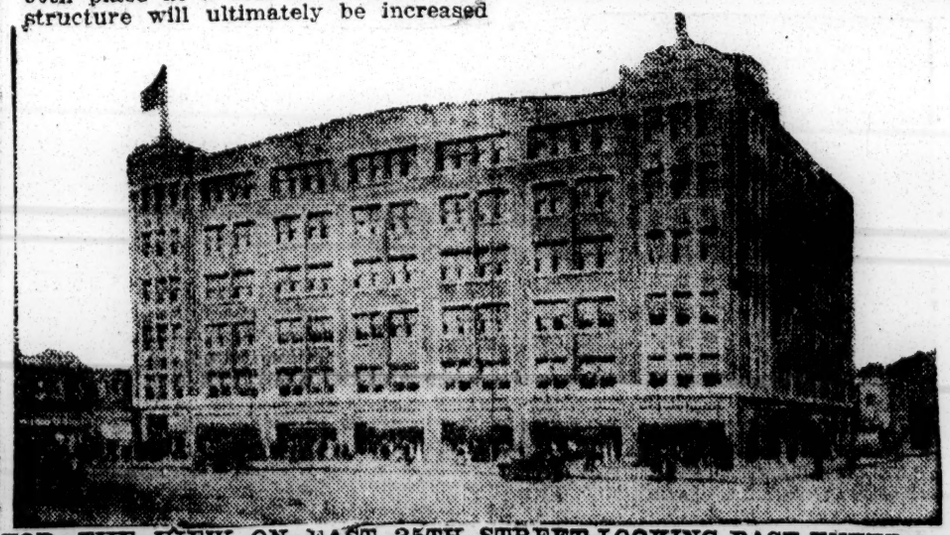
The present "black belt" is well established and the proportion of colored residents probably will increase. It is a convenient location for the thousands of colored workers employed in the stockyards, the loop, the railways, the Pullman service, and the central industrial district. Its many old buildings, with their low rentals, offer poor housing accommodations, but they are the best that many of the race can afford. The growing class of well-to-do colored business men and professional men are seeking homes along the borders of the district or in outlying sections, where they can enjoy benefits of better environment.

Another class that has moved out of the district is the domestic servants. These people must live near the homes of their employers or near the fashionable apartment houses and hotels; hence, the colored colonies in Evanston, Glencoe, west of Lincoln Park, in Hyde Park, and near Beverly Hills and Morgan Park.

The "black belt" is the only local colored colony where colored business men have succeeded in establishing themselves to any extent, and it contains by far the greatest amount of property owned by colored people. Here are nearly 150 colored churches, with approximately 20 per cent owning or buying their church edifices. There were 1,500 commercial and business establishments conducted by colored people within the district in 1920, a survey showed, including thirteen newspapers and magazines, three banks, three insurance companies, and a number of hotels and theaters.



New Projects Launched.



During the last year three new projects have been launched by colored business men that indicate a growing interest in the business development of their own district. The Douglas National bank, the second colored national bank to be chartered in the country, was organized. It is expected to serve as sort of a clearing house for smaller colored banks throughout the country.

The bank will occupy the corner store of the new four-story Overton building now nearing completion at the northeast corner of South State street and 36th place at a cost of $250,000. The structure will ultimately be increased to six stories. Anthony Overton, president of the bank, is putting up the building.

A few blocks away, at the northwest corner of Indiana avenue and East 36th street, a syndicate of colored capitalists plans to build a $750,000 hotel, theater and recreation building, to be operated solely by and for colored people.

Plans of the south park commissioners call for the purchase of not less than eleven acres within the district to be developed as a park and neighborhood center for the people of the district.

Honest and epoch-making is the mandate that Western civilization place a lighthouse upon the uncharted sea of world race relations, that those relations must be adjusted on the basis of equality or that they will prove the shoals of that civilization's involuntary suicide, appearing in the Century of February from the pen of that courageous student of the Orient, Nathaniel Peffer. Had Mr. Peffer on looking back from the Far East upon his native shores soliloquized upon their greatest besetting problem, he could have mused that in tabloid and more menacing form that is the crying, vital question now facing America. There seems nowhere in this great republic among the savants of sociology or statesmanship either the mental courage or the clarity of vision to speak this thing out loud and bold. No Roosevelt appears upon the horizon to carry forward the mandate, to say the honest thing, to do the honest deed in American race relations and thereby compel all his fellow Americans toward that ennobling and saving standard.

To illustrate: The son of a Texas banker on February 1, 1923, says to a group of colored Americans prospecting a haven of refuge in hospitable Mexico for thousands of their harried, hardy kinsmen now leaving or seeking to leave Texas, Oklahoma, the South and the United States: "At conferences of our best men in the South we have agreed that we just can't get along without the colored people." In anxious, fearful tones he asked the writer: "After your long trip throughout the Southern States, do you think they are going to leave?" Thousands of the best colored people of the South, heartsore and embittered, are striving might and main to get away from Dixie by hook or crook, just as they would flee the plague of death, the writer replied. He then told this scion of the Caucasian South of a group of colored Oklahomans, all of whom had been in the State of Tamaulipas less than a year, with whom he talked that day. A black veteran of the World War, who jested with bitter irony that never again would he be within the war call of Uncle Sam; a refugee victim of the Tulsa, Okla., race riots whose fine undertaking establishment and home was destroyed, but now as a bellboy gloats in almost delirious obsession "that the Mexicans treat the gringos just like they treat us"; an angular-featured white-locked and bearded Oklahoma farmer en route by box cars to a leased hacienda fifteen miles from the Mexican Central with his family of eight, four mule and horse teams, farm implements et al., who told of the strategy by which he had succeeded in getting away with $700 from a 200-acre farm; an ebony giant farmer living with a cultured housewife in a thatched cane house, boasting that he would rather live in Mexico without a dollar and be a man than live in the States for a thousand dollars a week; a real estate man who fled a Texas estate of forty thousand dollars in rent houses after a successful court fight preceding a gun fight—these are the types of colored Texans, Oklahomans and Southerners—the beginning of an exodus from the Ku Klux-ridden boll weevil-infested Dixie that will make the World War black exodus from the South seem like an excursion party. Why does this seem inevitable?

The South is determined that the colored people shall stay in a "nigger's place." The overwhelming poor white cracker element now in power and coming into the ascendency in every Southern State knows nothing else, dreams nothing else, wills nothing else. The colored people of the country are in a revolt against this inferno which the white South plans and in which the white North aquiesces.

With this as the major thing in their life, they gratuitously insult, ceaselessly harass and fiendishly mob murder the intelligent and independent colored individual. The docile, plodding exponent of non-resistance who succeeds excites their envy and they rob and terrify him and drive him out. Witness President Harding's lily white Republican party policy and appointments. Witness President Lowell of Harvard's violation of Harvard's tradition toward the equality of colored students in her dormitories, witness the heedless, flippant Pontius Pilate attitude of the Northern press and public toward the exclusion of colored Americans, not only from places of public accommodations, but from sections, and toward race disfranchisement and jim-crowism. These are the ultimate discouragements for colored America. That the intrenched places of equal chance and privilege for them should have capitulated to the Southern mammon of unrighteousness leaves them in the open field of ruin—as predicted Frederick Douglass, their political sage of forty years ago—to tread the wine press alone. They could hope for the future promised land in the United States when only the Southern States practiced their fiendish civic persecution and inhuman physical torture. So long as Dixie denied them schooling and the opportunity to stand as high as they could build they still could pray with faith that right and the square deal and the vaunted ultimate sense of American fair play would prevail. Now that these are not to be—as it becomes apparent—they are turning in larger numbers, not to the North, but to other lands. This movement can no more be stopped than could King Canute stay the tide from rising, nor the foolish husbandman set back the dawn by stopping the cock's crowing.

Nor is this evidence of cowardice upon the part of such as these types enumerated that are leaving. The machinery of government is in the hands of the enemy whose vicious will their implacable foe—may and does work against them with impunity and without scruple. From the Governor of a State like Oklahoma, Texas, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and Louisiana down to the rural justice of the peace, the foreman of a chain gang in a convict camp, working in tar or on the State roads, the rights of the colored citizens the virtue of their women folk, the privacy of their home life are the pleasure of their race-baiting white overlords. A considerable proportion of the refugees are thus being mercilessly driven out. An almost equal proportion of the wiser, thriftier and more ambitious are fleeing, stealing out. That the majority of these should not come north to compete with the fierce struggle of industrial, urban competition there to combat the rigors of a cold climate in Northern, unhospitable congested cities, that the tide seems destined at no distant date to turn southward to sunny, hospitable Mexico, Dixie to tap the virgin agricultural resources of her millions of rich and fertile waiting acres, to mix and mingle with a colored people who now call them paisanos—my countrymen—and to accept all this at the invitation of Mexican people and officials as recently wrote the Governor of the prolific high and health-giving State of San Luis Potosi, who appears at once as the logical solution of their industrial and political problem. This is the practical solution of the problems of the million colored citizens of the South that within the next decade that will go to Mexico. This is the practical fulfillment of the "Back to Africa" dream of the hosts of the South's black Americans for generations looking for relief from the relentless storm of colorphobia.

That this may be the practical solution of the problem of the millions, more or less, of colored people who still remain in Dixie may be conjectured. With the tens of thousands more of her fertile acres lying fallow and waste, with her wheels of industry more nearly paralyzed, her cotton gins, her sugar and her planing mills more completely deserted, the South will face the alternative of black race civic equality or impossible foreign immigration. This is the inferno and the future of the South's race problems.

SOUTHERN CIVIC EQUALITY OR—!

Professor Kerlin

PROFESSOR KERLIN is a Southern white man of letters and liberal ideas. He occupied the chair of English in the Virginia Military Academy, Lexington, Va., for a number of years. His literary curiosity led him to make a study of the outgivings of the Negro mind in cultural form. Like all other Southern white people, he was acquainted with the Negro only on the lower level of household and domestic familiarity. There can be no honest expression of sentiment or sincerity of soul under the constraint of servility. Professor Kerlin undertook to study the movement of the free and untrammelled mind of the Negro through the medium of his newspapers. The revelations opened up a new world of suggestion as to the real Negro soul, which turns itself wrong side out, when it is unconscious of the presence of a critical or unfriendly eye. He decided to follow the leading of this new ray of light. This led to the study of Negro poetry, which still further revealed new and unsuspected angles of the Negro mind. He discovered that the Negro possesses not only the appreciation of beauty, but also the power of expressing this appreciation in literary form. 'The Voice of the Negro' 'is not a catalogue of grievances or a list of complaints, but the cultural expression of the feeling of the race in terms of poetic excellence. It is easy to imagine the surprise of a Southern white man at such a discovery.

The traditional attitude of his class expects only the animal reactions of the field hand and domestic servant, but looks not for artistic genius or expressional excellence. An individual instance might be shunted aside as a monstrosity hardly expected to recur. But Professor Kerlin found such indications widely distributed among various authors who strove to cultivate the poetic art. He was not hesitant or grudging in the expression of appreciation and praise. He disclosed his discovery to the members of the faculty of his school and the cultured society of the college town. They gave their cautious assent with a mixed feeling of curiosity and surprise. Professor Kerlins' interest deepened with his knowledge. He sought a wider audience. He began to appear before colored gatherings to tell of the hidden treasury which he had found. This step naturally led to a mad version upon the manhood claims of the Negro. He had the temerity to appear at a meeting of the N. A. A. C. P. and appeal for a square deal of the people who are struggling for simple justice and human recognition. This was at Detroit, if my memory serves me right.

Swift as the wire would carry the word, the report was flashed back to the authorities at Lexington that Professor Kerlin had turned Negrophile, and was advocating race equality. This was, of course, more than the traditional Virginia attitude of mind could endure. It upset the tradition of the elders and removed the landmarks which the fathers had set. Professor Kerlin's connection with the college was ruthlessly severed. Of course, there was no argument of the merits of the case. Those intrenched in power, but who are doubtful of the tenableness of their position, never argue. It is a word and a blow. "It is against our policy, and we need no further defense." Prejudice pays a tribute to truth by refusing to consider the merits of the case. The moral position of the South, from the beginning until now, has been wholly indefensible.

Whenever they attempt to justify their attitude, the intellectual and moral hollowness of their position is quickly revealed. There is not a right-minded white man in the South today but who is ashamed of the discredited arguments which their fathers advanced in defense of human slavery. The apologists for Negro suppression today show the same paucity of moral and intellectual resource. Tillman and Tom Watson could only asseverate—assert and swear. Those who feel forced to defend the wrong side of a moral issue are indeed to be pitied.

The professor was summarily dismissed and sought occupation in the North.

Ill fares that land whose genius and conscience is drained away by reason of local intolerance.

A brief chapter in the story still remains. Professor Kerlin sued the Trustees for non-fulfillment of contractual obligations. He could not find a qualified white lawyer in Virginia to undertake the case. Herein is the narrow-minded intolerance of the South self revealed. This high-minded Southern professor selected competent colored attorneys to handle the case, not as a studied affront to Southern prejudice and tradition, but simply because the declination of white jurisconsults made this course necessary.

Professor Kerlin is a high type of American manhood that believes in the freedom of speech and the rights of man. It is easy to believe that he is typical of many a Southern man of liberal impulses who chafes under the galling gyves of provincialism, and who would, if he could, gladly free himself from the bonds of soul blighting prejudice of race.

The Negro in New England

I WAS in Boston last week. Boston is New England and New England is Boston, so far as the Negro is concerned. After delivering my set address on the Negro Sanhedrin, I was invited to meet with a delightful group that was giving a reception to the graduates and students of Harvard, Boston University, the New England Conservatory of Music and other regional institutions. Hon. William H. Lewis, ex-Assistant Attorney General, was the orator of the occasion. His address was up to his usual high standard of eloquence, wit and wisdom. By the way, Mr. Lewis is recognized as being one of the great lawyers of New England. He has found ample room in his profession on top. It was an inspiration to witness these thirty or forty young men and women gathered from all parts of the country seeking knowledge and culture of the highest scholastic type. I could not but advise them that their special attainments would find useful expression mainly in service to their own group, but would become comparatively impotent and barren unless quickened by the human motive and winged with missionary zeal and enthusiasm. The situation of the New England Negro is a study and a puzzle. The old traditional spirit of philanthropy is dying with the years. The abolitionist freed the slaves, and are dead. Their descendants maintain a decent and distant respect for the deeds and devotion of their ancestors. They have little interest in the Negro in New England in the year of our Lord Nineteen Twenty-Three. The forms of traditional equality still survive. Harvard was forced to the right decision out of deference to its traditions rather than the dictates of contemporary attitude and feeling. Trotter and the Equal Rights League are fighting manfully for the maintenance of the old foundations. Foreigners are flooding New England with moral indifferentism. On the whole, the race is losing rather than gaining in the sphere of racial rights and recognition. The numbers are increasing slowly. There are scarcely enough Negroes to sustain a highly functioning life of their own, while there is a lessening disposition on the part of the whites to have them amalgamate with the general life of the community. There are no Negroes in business who measure up to Lee and Lewis of a generation ago.

The ordinary workingman is scarcely more than holding his own. The professional men are doing well. There is shown a fine spirit of social service on the part of a number of noble women and worthy men. Associated business enterprise is making a commendable beginning. The race problem, however, is as evident in Boston as it is in Baltimore. It merely takes on a different mode of manifestation. The Negro is brought face to face with himself and his problems in all places and sections of the country. The Negro in New England, like the Negro in Mississippi, must keep constantly on the alert to keep from losing out. The Negro problem is one with only local variations, and the Negro must understand and deal with it as such.

Harlem, With Population of 150,000 Negroes, Is City of Variants in Chiaroscuro.

LACK OF COMMERCIAL ENTERPRISE STRIKING.

Few Native to America Are Successful Storekeepers—"Back to Africa" Is Taught.

By LESTER A. WALTON

That section of Harlem inhabited by over 150,000 colored persons has become the world's centre of Negro thought. From Africa, Asia, Europe, South and Central America and all parts of the United States are wont to congregate Negroes speaking different tongues, yet bound by racial ties and a community of interests. Confirmed followers of nearly every dogma and ism extant are conspicuous by their mental ebullitions. Both the conservative and radical schools of thought have their biased adherents.

Democrats, Republicans, Socialists, Communists and I. W. W.'s enunciate their adopted political faiths with unbridled fervor. In religion every denomination of the Protestant church has its large quota of worshippers, as has the Catholic church. There are Negroes of the Jewish faith who speak Hebrew fluently. Mohammedanism has its loyal disciples, and Christian Science, New Thought, Seventh Day Adventist and Spiritualism have their devout believers.

"Back to Africa."

In this polyglot Negro community the outstanding race question of international importance is the "Back to Africa" movement, in a large measure fomented and agitated by the foreign-born. The majority of natives do not look with favor on this Utopian scheme. The average American Negro, while not mindful that he does not get a square deal in this country, labors under no delusion that his condition is to be improved by emigrating to Africa. He argues that he was born in the United States as were his great-grandparents before him, and the only sane and practicable thing to do is remain at home and fight it out.

Proponents of the "Back to Africa" plan greet this view with derision and skepticism. Many of them are fanatics on the subject and cherish a dream of setting up a Negro Government in Africa far away from what they term "the white man's baneful influence." They scoff at the Caucasian's civilization and standards and think mostly in terms of black. To date, this movement has not assumed tangibility. No one has departed for the Dark Continent except on the wings of imagination.

The treatment of the Negro in the South is the overshadowing domestic issue which is the theme for animated discussion in Harlem. Lynching, disfranchisement and Jim Crowism are keenly felt and severely condemned. A oneness of opinion prevails that the Negro in the South is entitled to a larger measure of justice, but how to bring about a betterment of conditions is the question dividing Harlem Negroes into hostile camps of opinion. As to method of procedure is where schism enters.

"Fire With Fire."

Barber shop and street corner orators, bitter in their arraignment of the South, loudly advocate "fighting fire with fire." Negro men and women of the South who are devoting their lives to improving race relations are as soundly berated as the white people for alleged subserviency to Southern sentiment. The garrulity and bellicose attitude of this element, hundreds of miles from Dixie, where the so-called race problem exists in all its poignancy, is frequently commented upon by conservatives. Those familiar with the Southern situation do not think an effective panacea has been discovered by indulging in Harlem echoes.

The grouping of more than 150,000 Negroes in an abridged territory, who live under modern conditions and in the morst progressive city on the globe, presents a situation clothed with unusual aspects. A comparison of the community's population with that of some of our well-known cities should afford one a better opportunity to visualize its numerical status. Nashville, Tenn., has a population of 118,342, while Trenton, N. J., is peopled with 119,289 souls; Des Moines, Ia., 126,468; Dayton, O., 152,559; New Haven, Conn., 162,537; Richmond, Va., 171,667; Birmingham, Ala., 176,806, and Atlanta, Ga., 200,616. The entire population of the States of Nevada and Delaware are 77,407 and 223,003, respectively.

Negro Business Failures.

The big local issue in Harlem is waking the Negro to the realization that it is incumbent upon him to support race business enterprises. Big business is yet an unknown quantity. Harlem's Negro section furnishes a striking illustration of the impotency and ineffectiveness of numbers unless used as a cohesive force. Larger than Nashville, Tenn., or Des Moines, Ia., in population, it is unable to boast of one race bank, dry goods or clothing store. Three months ago the only shoe store conducted under Negro management failed and went into bankruptcy for lack of support. A haberdashery had previously met a similar fate.

Group or race consciousness seems to be more highly developed among foreign-born Negroes. They are more clannish. West Indians, Cubans and Porto Ricans conduct more grocery stores and meat markets than the native born, who are successful as operators of real estate, restaurants, hotels, barber shops, cabarets, undertaking establishments and beauty parlors. Seven newspapers and two monthly magazines are published.

When the Negro visitor goes to Harlem he invariably looks for elevator office buildings. Instead elevator apartments meet his gaze. The spectacle of white storekeepers reaping a financial harvest in a Negro community always excites the wonderment of the Southern Negro, for race enterprises of all kinds flourish in the Southland.

The backwardness of Harlem Negroes to establish and maintain a larger number of commercial ventures gives substantiation to the contention of those who assert race progress in business is most marked where prejudice thrives. In New York relations between whites and colored citizens are unusually pleasant. The latter's trade is respectfully solicited and he spends his money wherever he sees fit. Furthermore, as the cost of living is high his patronage is given to the tradesman whose prices are more in keeping with his pocketbook.

The bulk of Harlem's Negro population, 135,000, reside in the 38th Police Precinct, which extends from 130th Street to the Harlem River, and from Fifth Avenue to St. Nicholas Avenue. Capt. Patrick F. Gargan, commanding officer, says the precinct has a record for observance of law and order that compares favorably with any community having a population of similar proportions.

Of the sixty-five places of worship in the precinct (which number is said to exceed that of any other police precinct in Greater New York), but five are white. There are thirteen dance halls and cabarets. According to Capt. Gargan, police regulations, such as 2 o'clock closing, denial of admission to females without male escort and the ban on vulgar language are faithfully complied with in most instances. Unlike the Gay White Way, no shootings nor serious quarrels are recorded.

Make Good Tenants.

Capt. Gargan, who has been a member of the New York police force for forty-one years, believes the Negro, as a whole, the best tenant of any race group, which statement is backed up by records showing that Harlem Negroes are taken to court less by landlords for non-payment of rent than any other people. Usually in a land-tenant case they appear as complaining witness.

There reside in the 38th Police Precinct 200,000 inhabitants, 65,000 of whom are white. Race riots are unknown, both white and colored manifecting a spirit of tolerance that is essential for the well-being of all.

In some sections of the country colored police are appointed to arrest members of their race only. In New York police officers are sworn to arrest all violators of the law, an evildoer finding no immunities because of the color of his skin. The Negro bluecoat is a full-fledged guardian of the peace.

William Jennings Bryan's recent statement that the North would act as the South in dealing with the Negro when the question of political equality was involved is flatly contradicted in the 19th and 21st Assembly Districts. Colored and white voters join in sending representatives of both races to the State Legislature and the Aldermanic Chamber. Negro aspirants for office do not seek nomination and election because of their racial identity but chiefly as members of some particular political party. In the 19th Assembly District the Negro Assemblyman is a Democrat, who is the standard bearer of his party and represents all of his constituents. The Negro Alderman is a Republican and performs a similar duty. The white officeholders of the district maintain an analagous attitude.

Beauty of Some Girls.

Our poets and writers have waxed eloquent in describing foreign beauties of twilight complexion. Some day, when less amenable to time-worn tradition, the pulchritude of face and symmetry of form of Harlem's dark-skinned daughters will be imperson-ally extolled—beauties who rival the rainbow for variety of types.

Some day Harlem is destined to be a fertile field for writers in search of new material, and yet in an atmosphere distinctively American. For right in the very heart of the Nation's great metropolis has risen this modern City of Ethiopia, where smiles and laughter are more articulate than sighs and tears, and where music and song are the natural and spontaneous outpourings of the soul.

Such is Negro Harlem, pulsating night and day with its romance and adventure, and teeming with a colorful and adolescent life yet unsung in poetry or prose.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

Hot Springs, Ark., June 15, 1923.
To The Commercial Appeal,

I see so much being said in regard to the exodus of the colored people of the south to the north and east, I write to say that I was one that went east attracted there by the higher wages—but I find that the climate does not suit me and am now here taking the baths to get back to normalcy, as our president would say; and when I do get in shape I expect to find a landlord that will give me a square deal.

The colored people have begun to think for himself and to "figure." The writer knows of two young men a few years back who entered into the "furnishing business" with only two thousand dollars cash—that was all they had. Today they are so rich that they had to split their business and start them a separate business. You have one of the biggest cotton firms on Front Street—the founder of this firm about 20 years ago left Mississippi with only $10,000 to enter into this cotton commission business, and in less than three years after he had entered this business he had bought himself a $40,000 home.

Now we that do the work certainly ought to be entitled to something. What we need is schools, better schools and the white people will soon see that the negro does not care to leave the south. The south is his native heath, and it would take generations for him to become acclimated in the north and east. Now what will help to keep the negro in the south and contented is to let us get "acclimated" to the cash and business, i. e., give us a square deal.

I have the interest of the south and the colored race at heart just as much as any one; I also with thousands of others have the interest of the white race at heart; but let's figure: Ain't it a little one-sided?

HARVARD RACE ISSUE

THE Board of Overseers at Harvard has decided to maintain in its rules for admission the "traditional policy of freedom from discrimination on grounds of race or religion." That is the only principle applicable in a non-sectarian American institution of learning—the principle of an equal privilege for all in the democracy of scholarship. Every boy who genuinely wants a college education should have his opportunity to secure it; and the first touchstone of fitness, beyond any scholastic ordeal, should be the intensity and sincerity of that desire.

If members of any one race show an extraordinary zeal for a liberal education, if by persistence and application they outstrip others who are leisurely and self-indulgent and half-hearted, they deserve to be rewarded, not penalized, for their initiative. The prizes in every worldly competition go to those who "strive and agonize" for them, and the collegiate premiums are not on sloth or luxurious dalliance but on zeal and diligence. These excellent qualities are not the monopoly of any race.

The doors of such a college must, therefore, [illegible] who qualify. [illegible] is the work [illegible] inquest suffices [illegible] seen in civil[illegible] academic exe[illegible] formances [illegible] men whose [illegible] to the pass[illegible]

PREDICTS YOUNGER GENERATION WILL NOT STAND FOR INSULTS

President of Organization Says That Old Spirit of Cringing Cowardice Has Been Replaced With True Democratic Ideas.

PRES. HARDING SAYS

That Progress of Negro During Last Two Generations Has Been One of the Wonders of Civilization — Predicts a Great Future.

(Special to The Pittsburgh Courier)
By CHARLES STEWART

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 10.—Mrs. G. Pelham was elected executive secretary of the National Race Congress and will establish headquarters on You street, N. W., in Washington, where information regarding the race will be sent out and every interest of the Negro from Washington as well as other parts of the country will be watched with the eye of an eagle.

One of the most interesting sessions in the history of the Race Congress was held here last week, and the legislation put through will be far reaching and helpful to the entire race. The sessions were held in the Mt. Carmel Baptist church. Dr. W. H. Jernagin was reelected president, and during the next few months he will spent some time on the road, and will hold conferences on racial matters. He will visit Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

An invitation was extended to President Warren G. Harding to address the congress. He wrote the following letter to President Jernagin:

"My dear Mr. Jernagin:

"Thank you most heartily for your invitation, and for the opportunity which it presents to me to address the annual Race Congress at the beginning of May. I am sorry it is not possible to accept. I hope the congress will be fruitful of useful contributions toward dealing with the many problems which confront the colored race in this country. In those problems, as you know, I have long taken a keen interest, and I am especially convinced that the greatest service to the colored people will be rendered in the future, as indeed it has been in the past, through the effective organization and efforts of the colored people themselves. Their progress in the last two generations has been one of the wonders of civilization's advance, and there is every reason to believe that its projection into the future will largely remove the most difficult of our race problems in the next few decades."

'The man or woman who says that the Negro is a baby in civilization should be examined by a specialist, for there is something wrong with his head," declared the Rev. W. H. Jernagin. 'We are over 50 years from slavery and are still babies. Not a bit of it.

"We are not seeking favors because of our race or color. We are not asking for any special legislation. We do want justice, fair play, protection under the law, and the free use of the weapon placed in hands of Americans with which to protect their right and that is the ballot. This is what the National Race Congress stands for, and this is what we are contending for. You are called together each year to take under consideration the future of our people in America. We are getting together for the purpose of being in better position to protect ourselves. We want to be represented in congress by members of our own race, and by the help of God we are going to be.

'We believe that we have long since paid the Republican party, for the part it took in our emancipation, both principal and interest, and then we took some part, too, and in doing so we helped to save the Union. [illegible] can no longer look in my face and tell how I am going to vote. [illegible] am independent in politics, voting [illegible] he Republican ticket when the R[illegible]ublicans are right and have the rig[illegible]t kind of men.

"We have no Bolshevists, or anarchists, or traitors in our rank. Every black face you see is 100 per cent American, ready to strike down any enemy who offers an insult to our flag. We are no longer blind to the discriminations which come to us in our country, where thousands of our men have died to hold together and protect against every foe we have had. We have been true, and bore all without murmur, but with the continuation of lynchings, burnings, shooting down our fellow beings in cold blood, we cannot guarantee what will be the attitude of our young people in the future who believe in protecting themselves. The spirit of cri ing cowardice which was bred in us in slavery days is fast disappearing, and those of us who have imbibed the free air and ideas of America, who love the flag and have sacrificed for its preservation cannot stand idly by and see these ideals destroyed by the dispicable and wickedness of lawless men."

The following officers were elected: Dr. W. H. Jernagin, president; Dr. J. U. King, vice president; Dr. C. C. Somerville, recording secretary; Miss D. E. Harris, assistant secretary; G. Pelham, executive secretary; Dr. C. T. Welcher treasurer; Dr. M. A. Hunter, national lecturer; J. C. Calvert, chaplain; Charles Stewart, organizer and press agent; John R. Hawkins, treasurer of defense fund. President Jernagin will visit Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma and Missouri in interest of the congress.

Negro In America Hundred Years Ahead

South African Educator Greatly Pleased with Race's Progress Here.

SETS STANDARD FOR WORLD

Africa Offers Fine Field of Service for Trained American Negroes.

Atlanta, Ga.—That the Negro in America is in every way a hundred years ahead of the natives of South Africa is the statement of Dr. [illegible] Henderson, a noted educator from that country, who is spending a few months in America in the study of race relations and Negro education. This is due, he said, to the fact that the American Negro came much earlier into contact with Christian civilization, and has had far greater opportunities for education and self-development. He was particularly impressed with the economic progress which the race has made in this country, which he said was far beyond anything he had expected.

Dr. Henderson has given his life to the education of the natives of British South Africa, having been for many years principal of Lovedale Institute, the great African Tuskegee, a missionary institution with a faculty of 60 and a student body of 900. While in Atlanta he visited a number of Negro colleges and was greatly pleased with them, commenting most favorably on their fine equipment, competent and devoted teachers and intelligent students. A number of well-trained American Negroes, he said, are rendering fine service in Africa as teachers and social workers Wherever they have been tried they have made good, was his emphatic testimony. He believes that the number of such workers will greatly increase and that in this way the educated American Negro is destined to make a great contribution to Africa's development.

The good will work of the Interracial Commission, of which he had heard in Africa, where its methods are beginning to be adopted, interested Dr. Henderson greatly. The problems of race relations, he said, are much more [illegible] there than here, and much further from solution. It was his opinion that the progress of the American Negro is setting a new standard for the world in the development of backward peoples.

From Atlanta Dr. Henderson went to Tuskegee Institute.

Race Problem—1923.
United States.

SOCIAL JUSTICE, WANTED

A speaker at the 100 per cent American meeting held at the Englewood Christian Church Thursday, May 30th said among other things, that there was a secret Negro organization for the purpose of promoting inter-marriage between the Races and called upon the Protestant Churches to organize against the inter-marriage of Negroes and Whites. Ninety-nine Negroes out of every one hundred in America will laugh at this statement as so much silly twaddle, born of a mind that is desperate to make a case against the negroes. It is unfortunate that we haven't a voice that will carry to every white home in America, that they may know for all times to come, that the American Negro is just as much opposed to inter-marriage as is the American white man. As for the organization to spread propaganda between the Races we confess that we have never heard of such an organization and feel safe in saying that no such organization exists, but there is an organization, a very active one, that is trying to get a law through that will make the American white man responsible for his illegimate children born of a colored woman. The funny thing about some of these 100 per cent Americans is that they rave about the purity of the race and of womanhood and about crossing the line and yet they say not a word about the thousands of mulattoes that are born every year. The American Negro wants to know who is the offender. Let the American white man answer. The Negro is justly proud of his race and of his women and stands ready to join with anybody on a program for the protection of womanhood, not black nor Jew nor Gentile, but the purity of womanhood. The fact is this 100 per cent speaker flatters himself when he think the Negro wants inter-marriage or social equality in the common acceptation of these terms. What the Negro wants is protecttion and social justice. The Negro has his own home, church and social life and does not give a rap about the other fellow. It is very strange that if these 100 per cent speakers are so afraid of Negro invasion into their social world that they don't get behind a program to prevent that very thing. Why not say that the womanhood of America must be protected without regard to race or color and that the black brute of white brute who crosses the line will feel the teeth of the law. If these 100 per cent fellows do not want Negroes to move into exclusively white neighborhoods, why not see to it that the Negro has better streets, lights, sanitations, etc., in exclusively Negro neighborhoods? Why not see to it that the rent hog gives value received, in other words, why not a program of Christian co-operation instead of one of misrepresentation and hate?

TELLS WHITES TO GIVE RACE EQUAL RIGHTS

Senator McCormick Makes Plea Against Lynching; Seeks Racial Justice

Monmouth, Ill., July 6.—Senator Medill McCormick, addressing the students (white) at the commencement exercises of Monmouth college here June 14, made a strong plea for justice and law for our race and American citizens in general. He compared conditions in this country and in other countries where law and observance of law had broken down. He made it plain that Americans here at home must meet the test before this country can take its rightful place in the leadership of the affairs of the world. He made this plea not to a gallery of Race people, but to white people and white students who did not expect such plain words from the honored statesman. He spoke as follows:

"Already has the fever which followed the war been broken. The horrid period of mob violence we may hope has passed, but we must not forget that it was only a short time ago that West and East, North and South, men were put to death by mobs. The states which have tolerated the lynching of black men have been subjected to a salutary and ominous punishment in the migration westward and northward of the Race which not only has been disfranchised and which has been too long denied its elemental civil rights. And yet it does not become any of us in one section of the country to sit in judgment upon those living in another section of the country. The ancient rights of free assembly and of free speech too often, in many parts of the country, were denied men not only by mobs but by officers of the law. That is not American. That is in violation of the principles of the bill of rights. If officers of the law thus flagrantly violate the law what is the moral authority to uphold the law?

"The public service which we may expect during these coming years will be measured by the public spirit which moves the average citizen in the assertion of his rights and the discharge of his duty as a citizen. It was the greatest American of our time who said that the discharge of our duty to the commonwealth was no less important than the assertion of our rights under the commonwealth. It is an old truism too often misconstrued that ours is a government of laws, and not of men. How are the laws to be executed? Who is to assert the supremacy of the law and the constitution unless the public servants under the law and the constitution are devoted to the upholding of both and are fearlessly dedicated to the service of the people who have chosen them? I have no regard for the citizen or the public servant who so long as the constitution and the law stand as they are written would not enforce one or the other, despite the threat of any mob or public pressure, or the secret seduction of any powerful interest."

The address of the senator made a powerful impression on his hearers, particularly as it was evident that he made his plea, not with an eye to winning the favor of our men and women, who were conspicuous by their absence, but in sincere good faith to help justice and right under the law of the land for all races of men regardless of color or social position, from the lowest to the highest.

Boston Begins to Take Notice of Race Problem at Home

Editor Constitution: As a southerner and friend of the south and The Constitution, I am inclosing a clipping from The Boston Post which I consider very significant as regards the race problem, not only in the south, but in New England.

When the negro section of Houston, Texas, was burned some time ago, some newspaper stated that if the wind had changed a little the best part of the city might have been swept away by the flames. Then some Boston paper drew this moral from that statement, and added, "What if that wind should blow this way some day, what would Boston do?"

As a matter of fact, that wind was already beginning to blow in Boston and Boston was beginning to feel that unwelcome cr[illegible]

It will not be long now before Boston is going to be so busy with that wind that she is going to have very little to devote to Georgia and Georgia's problems.

Here is a Boston minister, Rev. J. J. Ross, moving out, as The Post article shows, and leaving his church because there are too many negroes around there, and he thinks that they might have their own churches and keep to themselves. Now, doesn't that sound just like Georgia?

Can you realize how much like Georgia Boston is becoming? It is one thing to criticize somebody else or another section of the country, in its dealings or relations to some problem, and quite another thing to deal with that same problem in a practical way when it comes home to you.

The negro is mistaken and deluded if he expects to find the color line eliminated in New England and other parts of the north, and all smooth sailing here. What he needs to do is to disillusion himself of that illusion which he received in France. Then he would find himself better satisfied and much happier. The only reason why the race problem has been in the south, instead of New England, is because the negro has been in the south.

I was reading a few days ago some account of the early slave trade in Boston for a while, but owing to the rice and cotton fields in the south combined with a warm climate, the slave trade became much more profitable in that section of the country. And so the slave business gradually went south.

Now, I wonder what would have happened had the rice and cotton fields and warm climate been in New England.

I have quoted a New England writer, and I am not saying this to justify slavery, but to help us to come to a better understanding of the race problem as it exists today. It was an economic problem that divided the north and south to begin with—not a political or social or religious question. These came later and were inevitable.

Now New England and the north invites the negro economically to come and work in her industries, and where his labor is profitable, but not to sit in her parlor, nor even her church.

Yes, it is admitted that it was the climate which carried the negro to the south, to a climate for which he was better suited. And I am going to say that if the negro is wise, he will still consider the climate before he moves away from the land of sunshine, the land of cotton blossoms, sweet potatoes and watermelons, to a land where they come near to having nine months of winter with the thermometer often down to 40 below and coal selling for $20 per ton, and sometimes not obtainable at that.

I know that the negro has his problems. We all do, but if he is wise he will stay with the people who understand him and love him best, and welcome him most.

I would not be hard on Boston, or New England either. As I understand New England and Boston, I love them more, and as they understand us they love us more. And I believe that some day we'll understand.

The Term Negro

(Crusader Service)

(Note: The editor of this paper assumes no responsibility for the views advanced in the following article by Dr. Campbell. These views are given here merely in recognition of bias held by many against the use of the term Negro as our racal designation. Within the next month articles presenting both viewpoints—for and aganst—will be run in these columns for the information of our readers.)

This unique implication, Negro, is the ugliest civic misnomer without a parallel applicable to any race. Convince me to the contrary if any man can.

Ethnologically, all races of mankind have been so inexplicably amalgamated, that any attempt to prescribe racial limitation by delineation is a miserable failure. The Bible is the oldest or most ancient ethnological authority. And from the earliest Bible times, until now, races and people have been designated geographically, with this exception Negro. See the origin of the term. Then think of the ridiculousness of it all. Thus:

Italians are from Italy. Greeks from Greece. Russians from Russia. Japanese from Japan. Chinese from China. Mexicans from Mexico. Hebronites from Hebron. Jews from Judea and Jerusalem. Ethiopians from Ethiopia, etc., ad infinitum. Negro from where? No geographical location.

It is quite evident that this abominable nomenclature has no geographical location as other races or people. The Bible never termed this mis-named race Negro. Why should the American people, black or white, be so married to this term? Why should this name be fastened upon

...le dark people scattered abroad or at their original homeland today? It is used as a mark of reproach now as it begun in slavery. It is the product, residue and remaining odium of slavery. Any man of color, regardless of his present position, who cannot see his way to relinquish the use of Negro as a noun should be brushed aside from leadership. The word is bad enough as an adjective. Why should people of African descent alone be classified by a foreign language adjective? If you say white American then say black American, since we are speaking English and to hades with the abominable odium Negro; and some lingual fool claims that the word should be capitalized!

Du Bois Is Praiser of Segregation

Philadelphia, Pa., July 6.—In this city, early scene of his labors, Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, well known author, is a fallen idol.

Dr. DuBois

Before a large, cultured and determined audience of progressive Race men and women assembled in Wesley church Dr. DuBois came out flatfooted for segregation and the rule of Jim Crow. We have segregated hospitals, separate churches, race lodges, insurance companies advertising racial identity, our own undertakers, and finally graveyards where only our blood is buried," declared the critic of Booker T. Washington, "and I, therefore, glory in separate schools."

The audience acted as if the fire department had turned the ice water hose upon it.

Dr. DuBois had been advertised to speak against segregation, and particularly against the effort to make the Cheyney school a Jim Crow retreat.

The speaker took the other route. One of his utterances that cold-watered his listeners was this: "Stop fighting Cheyney and Hill; let them alone. We must hang to segregation to save our Race."

Hill is principal of Cheyney, which citizens of the state claim is a Jim Crow school, and which they are opposing.

For an utterance less unpatriotic than that Booker T. Washington was read out of the society of respectable men by Dr. DuBois.

As the author went along his audience could see that his opposition to Booker T. Washington in the life time of the great leader was built on jealousy.

Dr. DuBois, who boasts of his Harvard degree, is really a product of Fisk university, class of '88.

"I am proud of Jim Crow schools," declared the "champion," "because my daughter is a product of one."

Likewise Dr. DuBois, although he never owned it until recently.

The speaker was handled without gloves and with large hands by J. Francis Lee, Rev. Wm. Lloyd Imes, Attorney G. Edward Dickerson, Dr. J. Wesley Bailey and Rhoda Tilton. Each speaker expressed surprise that Dr. DuBois, supposed champion of equal rights and identical opportunities for our children, could fall from grace with so much ease and self-satisfaction.

The audience refused to respond to the invitation to join the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the collection plate looked like a pauper's oath when the offering was called for.

His magazine, Editor DuBois said, is a segregated proposition, and will continue to be so.

Philadelphians might call in other noted leaders to sound the toscin when big ideas are to be pressed, but it will be a long time before this city pins its faith again to DuBois.

To the statement of the speaker that his views were inherited from his grandfather one of the speakers said he would like to meet the grandfather of a man who had so many views on one matter.

SOUTH MUST LEAD IN FIGHT ON RADICALISM

Official Exposes Moscow Fund to Work Among Negroes.

NATIONAL UPRISING, HOPE

Thousands of Spies Throughout America, Under Direction of Soviet Authorities Fostering Strikes to Aid in Revolution.

Commercial

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., May 2.—An appeal for the south to take the lead in starting a back fire to quench the flame of hatred and anarchy which is being fed and fanned by un-American forces, was made in an address before the opening session of the 27th annual convention of the Interstate Cottonseed Crushers' Association here today, by Wade H. Ellis, of Washington, D. C., assistant attorney-general of the United States during the Roosevelt and Taft administrations, recently counsel for the Senate's foreign relations committee in its investigation of Russian affairs, and at present a member of the American Bar Association's committee on law enforcement.

Speaking on "The Opportunity of the South in the Face of National Perils," Mr. Ellis declared that the south is the most natural and appropriate section in which to start a counter movement against radicalism in America because of the racial purity and political traditions of the southern people and because of the fact that the south has only recently struck her stride in great industrial development, and any interruption of her growth "would be a calamity from which the whole world would suffer."

"World Shell-Shocked by War."

Declaring that the whole world had been shell-shocked by the World War, Mr. Ellis said that there is a disposition everywhere to re-examine the basic principles of society and that there are those who believe that every institution we have heretofore respected is wrong. Demagogues in every land, he said, are preaching the doctrine of class terrorism and it is the duty of the sensible, level-headed men and women of America to stand shoulder to shoulder and beat back this attack upon orderly government.

"As counsel recently for the foreign relations committee of the Senate in the investigation of Russian propaganda in the United States, I have had some occasion to study the spread of radicalism and I want to say very seriously, consciously measuring my words, that I believe if all the facts were marshaled and reported to the people the information would amaze and startle the country," Mr. Ellis said. "I donbt if there are very many people who know that there are nearly four hundred periodicals, daily, weekly or monthly, with a combined circulation of approximately five million, which are openly or covertly advocating violent sedition and insurrection, by force and arms, against the government of the United States."

Great Communist Strength.

"I doubt if many people know that the combined numerical strength of the communist party of America, the so-called workers party, the I. W. W. and all the extreme left wings of the various revolutionary groups in the United States, is probably greater today than the total vote cast for the socialist candidate for president a few years ago. I doubt if very many people believe a fact which is well known to government agencies, that many of these organizations are financed and controlled directly by Soviet authorities in Moscow, and that their purpose, frankly avowed in Russia and known to hundreds if not thousands of spies and representatives in this country, is to take advantage of every opportunity, by fostering strikes and otherwise, to provoke a revolution in the United States. Don't imagine they are without money, and don't imagine they are without brains. Men of the type of Martens, who was a self-appointed Soviet ambassador to this country, and who was deported because of his activity in stirring up revolution; and Lenine and Trotzky and Tchitcherin and Zinovieff, are cunning, conscienceless tyrants who have seized power from a weak and supine peasantry, and stolen millions in money and treasure from a rich aristocracy and a powerful church."

American Negroes in Moscow.

"I have myself seen the minutes of the last Congress of the third internationale held at Moscow only a few months ago, and there were present four American negroes, proud of their membership in what they call the 'African blood brotherhood,' and representing to their bolshevik leaders that they could enlist people of their race in the United States to join in a world wide revolution. They openly discussed the plan for organizing what would be called a central committee of action and candidly debated whether that would be in Georgia, Louisiana or some other southern state. And this meeting in Moscow appropriated $400,000 to be devoted to the one cause alone of fomenting an uprising among the negroes of the United States."

Mr. Ellis declared that there are two classes of people among our own citizenship who are more dangerous than the reds. He called them the pinks and the yellows. Mr. Ellis described the pinks as being the parlor bolshevists, many of whom are weak-minded men and women of wealth and high social station, who go in for radicalism as a fad, and who are contributing annually millions of dollars, some of it consciously and some unwittingly, to aid in the subversion of the government which protects them. The yellows he described as being cowardly mob followers among the politicians who are willing to compromise vital principles and who, although they know better, are ready to advocate any measure which they think will please the envious or the ignorant. It is leaders and legislators from the latter class, Mr. Ellis said, who make such proposals as the one which recently escaped enactment by a narrow margin in Wisconsin to abolish the state militia, and the pending bill in the West Virginia Legislature making it unlawful for any owner of a coal mine to hire a guard to protect his property.

Travel Notes: The Race Problem Moves North.

To find the color problem in its full intensity do not go to Mississippi, in which the Negro outnumbers the whites and in which large masses of him are held in an economic subjection not many degrees removed from serfdom; but try Chicago, which sixty-five years ago was pouring out troops to fight for abolition.

Chicago has been acquiring her Negro problem (or, as the Negro might look at it, her white problem) since the world war put labor at a premium. The southern colored man moved into northern cities, including Chicago, for the simple and elemental reason that he desired more pay. The northern white employer invited him, and even sent agents into the south to plead with him to come north, for the reason that he wanted a supply of docile and muscular labor.

The northern white employer's interests, however, did not jibe with the northern white worker's notion of what was right and proper. So there was friction in the packing industries and in other occupations in which Negroes were put to work with white men. There was also friction in the residential districts in which the Negro, having the human desire for a roof to cover his head, had secured lodgings. As the brotherhood of man was far from being realized, even in Chicago, the arrival of the darker skin was the signal for the departure, in high resentment, of the more or less light-colored skin. In 1919 the white man's indignation at the Negro for being black, or for being at all, led to riots in which lives were lost and property destroyed.

When calm had been restored, a commission was appointed to investigate, and its findings have been embodied in two large volumes. Perhaps the report of the Chicago race commission is the best work of its kind that has been done in America.

But the volumes of the race commission sit upon shelves in libraries and newspaper offices, collecting dust. And Chicago's Negro population has grown, since 1920, from one hundred thousand to probably as much as one hundred and ten thousand.

In the south, where the white man asserts himself to be "the Negro's best friend," custom has sanctioned segregation and imposed a recognition of the white man's domination. Chicago has no such tradition upon which to fall back. There the Negro cannot be compelled to "keep his place." Even though he has no desire to mingle socially with the white man, he is not under the necessity of admitting, at every turn of the road, that he is the white man's inferior. He has all the rights guaranteed under the constitution to white men, or, rather, such of them as are readily accessible to white men of a depressed economic status. He votes. His vote is sought by politicians. And the tension grows, although people do not publicly speak of it.

I do not know of any solution, unless it be along the lines of the southern Commisison on Inter-racial Relations, which has brought black and white together in the "black belt" to confer on matters which affect them both. But until these racial problems are satisfactorily adjusted, America must be not a realization, but an experiment.

FOR WHAT SHALL THE AMERICAN NEGRO CONTEND?

Sheild M.E. Rev. Quarterly Review

By Rev. A. C. Cook.

Individua's, without any expressed desire, or personal request, may be forced to accept conditions or live under environments that will prove embarrassing; but because of the force of circumstances, they take their medicine mildly or uncomplainingly. But as they multiply and are elevated from all angles, they naturally show their development through some medium that races, wea nations, will be forced to recognize.

The colored group was brought to his country for the purpose of becoming developers of the dense woods of this country (i. e. the south).

As time passed on the Negro was mpressed with certain characteristics of his master. Among the many, I mention his desire to populate and serve the white man's God. Though poorly clad, apparently, they were at ease and assumed a position as watchmen. They were not conscious of what good things there were in store for them in the future. We realized that civilization had its birth in Egypt where great pyramids were builded, her fine arts, sphinxes etc., were in evidence. Still, as a matter of fact, this civilization was passing, and a new civilization was to take its place. Xerxes and Artaxerxes were pre-eminent figures in those days, but their sun had to go down. When Egypt passed, a more powerful civilization than she came on the stage. I refer to Greece. She gave the world Solon, Alexander the Great, the warrior, Demosthenes, the orator Xenophon, her historian, Socrates, her philosopher, who was styled "the walking school of Greece," and many others.

Her literary and many other advantages caused her to become selfish. She boasted of being the monarch of all that she surveyed, and her supremacy could not be overcome, and that all power was in her hands. But God, with an unseen eye was watching the destiny of His people. When conditions became intolerable Greece collapsed. So soon as she had crumbled Rome came on the stage of action. She had her good emperors and her bad emperors. Caesar, being one of her best emperors boasted of finding it built of brick, but of leaving it built of stone. He said he could stamp his feet upon the ground and an army would rise there from. During this reign, the Son of God came into the world. She, too, ruled the world, and there was no civilization at this time, in existence so far as she knew that could subdue her. God finally frowned upon her, and she became a nonentity.

This civilization was followed by the Teutonic and Anglo-Saxon civilizations. The latter, a Christian civilization. Hence the American civilization. She became great by means of her extensive commercial endeavors, agricultural industries, human tarian ventures and her democratic form of government.

This nation's power amongst nations of the Orient became of such magnitude, that wealth or a greed for money has become her paramount desire.

For two hundred and forty-four (244) years the Negro group in the south was apprenticed by a civilization or people that knew not what the final outcome would be.

In 1865 he stepped out of slavery as a freedman; and having served as a producer of wealth, being forced world to be conversant with our political, economical, social, educational, and moral desires.

We contend that we are entitled to the best this country has to bestow; and to that end, we invite the great minds of the present day to join us.

(5th.) Race peace officers in purely race territory. We concur with Bishop Clement in his suggestion that the Knoxville, Tennessee idea should become nation-wide.

This country should be willing to trust this privilege into our hands since we have been tried in so many walks of life and have rung true.

Many racial clashes might have been averted had members of our own race group been permitted to watch the trend of things, and thus apprehend the guilty party.

This, the land of the free, and the home of the brave, must wake up to this necessity; or else she will be weighed in the balances and found wanting.

America upright, America awakened, spiritual America, altruistic America, America with higher ideals, and noble aspirations, reach hither your strong arm of hope to a fearless and faithful group, who demand that you lay your cards on the table, and go before the world and make known, that you mean to be fair to all groups. The Orient is watching thee, small nations will imitate thee, large nations will adore thee and the world will respect thee more.

SHAW VERSUS MILLER.

The Independent has given a lot of time and space to the All Race Conference or Sanhedrin Council. We have given it considerable time and attention, because the condition of the race deserves a united front—and organization of all of its forces, with a view of the several agencies co-ordinating together for the general uplift of our group in America. We are not interested in who calls the conference or who suggests the idea. We are simply interested in getting that class of representatives of the race together, which is truly representative of the minds and thought of our people. We take the position that the race has been misled and exploited long enough by a self-constituted leadership. We are hopeful that some day we may get race representatives together who are not so much leaders, but are men, who represent the thought, character and opinion of our group in this country—men who understand the fundamental that honor does not come to man for what he receives from others, but that honor comes as a logical sequence for what man gives out to others in service. 8-23-23

The Atlanta Independent

So our one object in discussing the All Race Conference has been to awaken a consciousness among our people of the character and thought of the men who pose as our race leaders. We believed, to start with, that Kelly Miller was sincere in his effort to serve his people and to get together a set of men who place service above a dollar, and we were fearful that he had capitulated to the professional leadership idea, which is of little concern to the public. The public is not interested in who calls the meeting, but in the character, and purpose of the meeting. Dr. Shaw writes us very largely to inform us that the attempt of Dean Miller to answer our criticisms was futile and unsatisfactory, and did more harm than good, and as president of the promoting organization, the United Front Conference, it was his plain duty to come to the rescue of Dr. Miller and answer the questions that we had raised, and thus the letter published in another column of this paper is the effort of Dr. Shaw to make adequate answer where Dean Miller had failed.

We will not go into the argument of Dr. Shaw, for the reason he raises no new issue, and does not adequately meet the issues already raised by us, and merely expresses his opinion and submits his opinion of our criticisms for argument. We commend the spirit in which he addresses us, and believe very largely in his sincerity.

Dr. Shaw shows very ably his responsibility for the All Race Conference, and strips Dr. Miller entirely of the claim that the All Front Conference adopted his idea; and that we are in error to credit Dean Miller with the thought, when in fact, the idea was enunciated by the Equal Rights League long before Dr. Miller published his idea. Dr. Shaw further explains that Kelly Miller, having failed to answer us satisfactorily, he takes up the cudgel in the interest of the cause. There is no need of our criticising things or the charges that Dr. Shaw brings against us as erroneous, for the reason we would merely be expressing our opinion of his saying, as he was expressing

In harmony with the league's idea, he was appointed chairman pro tem over the executive committee with power to proceed with the organization of the conference under the name of an All Race Conference instead of the Sanhedrin, as Dr. Miller was pleased to call his movement. Atlanta Ga.

Thus, arises a controversy between Dr. Miller and Dr. Shaw as to the authenticity of the conference idea, which is of little concern to the public. The public is not interested in who calls the meeting, but in the character, and purpose of the meeting. Dr. M. A. N. Shaw, president of the National Equal Rights League and disabuses our mind of the originality of the Miller idea.

Dr. Shaw shows by evidence, which he submits in the form of resolutions, that in the meeting of the National Equal Rights League in July, 1922, he the head of the league was ordered to call all civic organizations together for the purpose of securing their co-operation in an effort to bring about such a conference as would ally all racial organizations to pull for the general uplift of the race. We were of the impression that Kelly Miller called these race organizations together in New York until Dr. Shaw informed us in an article, which we publish in another column of this issue, that in obedience to the resolutions passed by the National Equal Rights League, July, 1922, he caused the several organizations to meet in New York March, 1923, and not Dr. Miller. And these several organizations organized the permanent United Race Front Conference, for the purpose of promoting the general welfare of the race throughout the nation, and that Kelly Miller was invited to present at this meeting with the idea, and that the action of the conference was not an endorsement of Mr. Miller's program, but was an endorsement of the idea which originated in the Boston meeting of the National Equal Rights League in July, 1922. Dr. Miller's idea being his opinion of our sayings, and opinions are not always logic or true.

We asked Dean Miller certain questions which he failed to answer, but Dr. Shaw, recognizing the importance of the questions, and that a satisfactory answer was essential necessary to the success of he conference, answered so far as he was personally concerned. We asked Dr. Miller to give us; First, the name of the president and secretary of five of the institutions forming the United Front Conference, the time and place of their election and the number of their membership. Second, their headquarters, occupation, if they had any visible means of support which Dr. Miller understood us to be asking about the moral character of the individuals, which concerns him but little. But Dr. Shaw gives us an account of himself as president of the National Equal Rights League. He tells us that he has three professions: pastor of the Twelfth Street Baptist Church Boston, for twenty-five years, and from which he makes a salary that a Negro editor would be proud of; that he was a practicing physician, at which he made another salary of which an editor would be proud, and that he was a politician, having worked on both sides of the fence, sometimes Democrat and sometimes Republican, and that he was a property holder in Suffolk, Norfolk and Middlesex Counties, Virginia.

This was the kind of information we asked Brother Miller for, feeling that if Brother Miller was going to call upon the public to give him $5,000.00, it was his duty to tell the public the character and class of men who would use this money and the purposes for which they would use it. Dr. Shaw comes clean. We have not time to go to Virginia to examine the registrar's book, but we take the good doctor's word.

It is not necessary for Brother Trotter of the league to explain what he does, for everybody knows of the Boston Guardian and of Monroe Trotter. But nobody knows who are the members or officers of the African Blood Brotherhood, the Friends of Freedom, Jernegan's Race Conference or the International Uplift League, their occupations or where they live. This is the information we asked Brother Miller for; not for the moral status of the men. We presumed that if they are race leaders, as they advertise themselves to be, that they are men of good moral repute among their neighbors where they live. So it appears to us that unless Dr. Miller makes a better showing for the All Race Conference, Dr. Shaw had better displace him or place somebody else in charge of the publicity end of the affair, because Dr. Miller has successfully pleaded guilty to the charges we preferred against him for personal gain and self-aggrandizement.

The Negro.

Numbered among our population are some 12,000,000 colored people. Under our constitution their rights are just as sacred as those of any other citizen. It is both a public and a private duty to protect those rights. The congress ought to exercise all its powers of prevention and punishment against the hideous crime of lynching, of which the negroes are by no means the sole sufferers, but for which they furnish a majority of the victims. 12-7-23

Already a considerable sum is appropriated to give the negroes vocational training in agriculture. About half a million dollars is recommended for medical courses at Howard University to help contribute to the education of 500 colored doctors needed each year. On account of the migration of large numbers into industrial centers, it has been proposed that a commission be created, composed of members from both races, to formulate a better policy for mutual understanding and confidence. Such an effort is to be commended. Everyone would rejoice in the accomplishment of the results which it seeks. But it is well to recognize that these difficulties are to a large extent local problems which must be worked out by the mutual forbearance and human kindness of each community. Such a method gives much more promise of a real remedy than outside interference.

NEW MIDNIGHT FROLIC.

Negress Jazz Composer to Sing at Lyric.

The management of the Lyric theater announces it will stage another Midnight Frolic for white patrons Friday night. 12-29-23

The headliner on that night will be Ida Cox, singer and composer of jazz music, whose rendition of her own songs on graphophone records has already attracted attention. Singing and dancing by Pugh and Barbour and by Seels and White will be a feature. Watts and Willis will entertain with stories in Southern dialogue. The doors will open at 11 and the curtain is due to rise at 11:15.

Invitations may be obtained in the lobbies of the big downtown hotels or at the circulation counters of any of the newspapers only.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM

The negro problem in the south is discussed in the Century magazine for December by Frank Tannenbaum with the same frankness he has employed in studying, in the pages of that magazine, the conditions in southern prisons, the effect of the single cotton crop and other topics of importance to those south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Mr. Tannenbaum believes the only practicable way to meet the problem is to encourage migration of the negro to other parts of the country, and to encourage the immigration to the south of foreign white labor. His reason is that in this way the negro problem will become a national one, the south will be relieved of its preoccupation with the negro, and efforts that soon will be made to keep negro labor in the south will benefit the condition of the black man and improve the attitude of the white man toward him. The influx of new white blood, Mr. Tannebaum believes, will be equally beneficial even though it break down some of the present pride of race that is possessed by southern whites.

In speaking of the preoccupation of the south with the negro, Mr. Tannenbaum writes, "One might really say that the trouble with the south is that it has not trouble enough. It suffers consciously from only one major affliction: it has only one great fear. It has only one great topic of conversation, it has only one great center of emotional excitation, only one scapegoat. What the south needs is more trouble, so that it could diversify its passions, its fears, its hates and see them a little more reflectively, a little more passively, a little more objectively."

He continues, "The present relation must be upset by the introduction of new factors, new elements. The south needs to stop being afraid of the negro. That, however, will occur only when the specter of negro dominance disappears. Destroy once and for all the fear of negro preponderance, and the whole scheme of negro baiting, negro hatred, negro complex, lynching and terror, will go by the board, and the elimination of this fear is the real problem that the far-seeing people of the south must undertake. This is a specific problem, which can, I believe, be achieved."

Migration of negro labor and a gradual substitution of immigrant white labor is the solution presented here. "The communities relieved of the fear of negro dominance will strain themselves, as they are already doing in places, to keep the negro by giving him better schools, better homes, better conditions of life and labor, a better social status. All these factors are bound to react powerfully upon the attitude toward the negro. You can't really hate people whom you put yourself out to serve.

"The migration of the negro will have other far-reaching consequences. It will, if there is any intelligence in the distribution of this large mass of colored workers be a very important factor in breaking down the self-righteous, holier-than-thou attitude on the part of the rest of the country. It will make the negro problem a national problem rather than a sectional one. It will give the north and the west an opportunity to exhibit the greater wisdom, intelligence, kindness, that they have been boasting of; it will put their protestation of good faith to the test of experience, and from indications already available it is very doubtful indeed if they will do better with it than the south has done."

"Numbered among our population are some 12,000 000 colored people. Under the constitution their rights are just as sacred as those of any other citizen. It is both a public and a private duty to protect those rights. The congress ought to exercise all its powers of prevention and punishment against the hideous crime of lynching, of which the Negroes are by no means the sole sufferers, but for which they furnish the majority of the victims.

Board of Missions for Freedmen.

Dr. Clarence E. McCartney, chairman of the standing committee, addressed the Assembly in behalf of the work of the Freedmen's Board and submitted the recommendations of the committee, the principal one of which called for the passage of the Dyer Anti-Lynching bill. Dr. McCartney said that this committee had been referred to as an unimportant one but that he was glad to be chairman of it since his father had assisted Negroes in escaping from slavery through the "underground railway," and in the attic of his father's home there was always a room for Negro students. He called attention to the fact that the Negro population of this country was being shaken now as it had not been for a generation, making more earnest efforts in their behalf necessary. He said that there was a very popular society now whose chief business seemed to be to keep the Negro in his place, which place was not that given him in the New Testament. He was of the opinion that if we were to honor the men who are working for Jesus Christ, the chief place should be given to those who were working for Negro welfare. Dr. Gaston, secretary of the board, called attention to the fact that the board was finishing its twenty-three years of work, in all of which there had never been a deficit. Its work is to be done from this time forward by the Division of Missions for Colored People of the National Board of Missions. The discussion of the report was greatly enlivened by contributions to it of colored members of the Assembly.

THE NEGRO SCANDAL SHEET

It is not unusual that now and then one runs across a sensational journal published for Negroes. Some white people publish such "newspapers," and it would be surprising if no Negroes did. One suspects that the "some white people" are really the ones who are getting out the Negro scandal sheets; no skunk was ever more low-down and mean than a yellow-streaked white man.

For instance, there is the paper called The Chicago Defender. When it comes to reeking in slime, it takes the cake over all slime-reeking journalistic upheavals that have come to our attention heretofore. There is nothing intelligent about its meanness—no phosporescent brilliance that has been discovered in some of the mud that these papers never fail to wallow in. Its appeal is so sordid and its case so badly made out that the intentional inaccuracies are the most prominent part about it.

In mentioning the Chicago paper, it should be said in justice to the average Southern Negro that he doesn't swallow very much of the kind of talk that The "Defender" puts out on its sales counter. There are, of course, in every race those who satisfy a particular abnormal, degraded craving and appetite with just this sort of stuff, and there are those demagogues and false leaders that make use of it for selfish purposes. About the same vicious thing is done in our own race as regards politics; it would be passing strange if the example set did not bear fruit in the race that watches and imitates.

So it is really unnecessary to become excited over the following article in the Chicago paper "devoted to the welfare of the colored race" and which article is a comment on an editorial in the New Orleans States:

What are your privileges North?

Here, by the side of white people of intelligence, fair play and honor, you have the privilege of sending your children to school nine months instead of three; riding on trains and cars like humans, casting a vote in a government you are taxed to support, and going into courts of law without fear of the rope and torch.

Breathe and die in the South. Live and breathe in the North.

Only a heart of scandal, a heart of hate against God's free North could have written this:

"All that the Northerners want out of you is your labor and they do not care what becomes of you outside of that. There is no age-old sentiment in the breasts of the white people of the North towards you, such as is held by the Southern white people towards the Negro."

Call out the fire department!

Watch the "age-old sentiment" in action. Weigh, measure the "sentiment" held by the Southern white people towards the Negro.

That sentiment keeps you in rags, maintains the chain-gang and the convict camp; drags your daughters into the ditch of shame, kicks and cuffs your sons, lies against your name, drives you as if you were cattle, and sends word North, East and West that you will not work.

God once choked the life out of slavery. Again he must come and choke slavery out of the life of Dixie.

The North cares nothing for you? Question the hypocrites and blasphemers, question them by God's truth in New Orleans.

What "sentiment" built New Orleans university and Straight?

Whose money, whose sacrifice, built every Negro college South?

The North has given millions for your education in the South, while the White South has not given even $10,000 in 60 years for your education.

Come North and pay back; come and pay for Northern blood spilled for your freedom and Northern money spent for your education.

But for the North a spelling book would still be a stranger to your eyes and the cotton patch and corn field your only playground.

"Your advancement in much quicker and easier in the South than it would be in the North," Southern Colored people are told by the great New Orleans paper.

Your advancement into a Jim Crow car it not only quicker in Dixie than in the North, but immediate. Ask for a ballot and you are requested to look down the barrel of a cocked gun.

Nail a final lie: "Even the Northern Negroes do not receive the Southern Negroes with open arms and hospitality," says the States.

Nine-tenths of "Northern Negroes" are Southern by birth or immediate ancestry.

The only arms wider open for the Southern Negro than those of his Northern brother are the arms of the calaboose in Dixie. The only hospitality warmer is that of a Southern mob making its black victim feel at home under trying circumstances.

Tell the States to advertise that henceforward Southern people of color may vote, ride as human beings up and down the railroads, have their daughters protected in the courts from white despoilers, send their children to school nine months in each year and the Chicago Defender will help in the campaign to keep the Negro South, if he wants to stay there.

Until then keep coming out.

Better a dunghill for a home in the free North than a mansion on St. Charles Street in New Orleans.

The Final Shot: "The colored people have a wonderful opportunity to achieve and advance in the South," is the States' farewell.

In the North Colored people have a wonderful opportunity to be free, to dress up, learn from the only American White people who know A from bullfoot and give the Ku Klux Klan hell as it gives him.

That used to be racket, but it don't go now!

The "Defender" doesn't seem to be very well versed in facts concerning the South. No defense of the section is needed; the Negroes in the South know wherein they are justly treated and wherein they are not. They are considerably better posted than the defending editors up in Chicago. But one interesting remark might be touched upon. The paper says: "The White South has not given even $10,000 in 60 years for your education." The other day we asked a highly intelligent Negro educator, the head of the Albany normal school, for the figures on the amount spent this year by North Carolina for Negro higher education. Without a pause, he responded that the State is expending $600,000 for one Negro college alone, and some $900,000 for the other Negro colleges in that State.

Some colored man seems to be wrong; and we think he lives up in Chicago.

As to the Negro exodus, it is an excellent thing for both races and both sections.

An Ohio Effort To Incite Racial Prejudice Exploded

"Editor Constitution: In a recent issue of "Sergeant Dalton's Weekly," from Winnfield, La., there appeared this notice:

"Columbus, Ohio, March 28.—Robert Russa Moton, president of Tuskegee institute, in a speech here has declared that the negro was in America to stay and if anybody had to get out, it would be the white man who would have to go."

A marked copy of this weekly has been mailed to Principal Moton and a large number mailed to different people over Macon county and over the south.

Naturally our white citizens, supposing that the quotation was a correct report of the address, felt bitterness against the speaker. It was only recently that the publication came into my hands. I was sure that these words, if said at all, when taken in connection with the full address, would produce a different impression. I had heard Dr. Moton speak on several occasions in Alabama, and read his remarks as he toured Mississippi, Louisiana and Georgia on his "Good Will Tours" where he spake to thousands of whites and blacks.

On every occasion he sought to create a better spirit of co-operation among the races, and I was so sure that the circulation of this report was not only doing him injustice, but was unfair to those whites who believe that he is honestly trying to help both races, and that it would tend to injure the influence of that great school, founded by one of the truest friends that the south ever had, that I felt it my duty as a trustee, and as a southern white man, to get a true copy of the speech and to give it to the press, and I append the copy of a letter written to one of the prominent editors of Alabama who had asked if this language was said by him.

"March 31, 1923.

"Mr. Walter F. Miller, Editor The Colbert County Reporter, Tuscumbia, Ala. Dear Sir: I appreciate very much your letter concerning the report of my address in Columbus, Ohio. In reply I wish to say that my address in Columbus, as in other cities of the middle-west, was on 'Inter-Racial Co-operation' and I emphasized the good feeling which existed between the races in the south and the remarkable progress which the negro had made in the past sixty years through the co-operation and support of white people in every community.

"Relative to the point referred to in your letter, my exact statement was as follows:

" 'There are a great many people who say that two races cannot live together in peace and progress, but the white people and colored people have been living together in America, and particularly in the south, in rather close and helpful contact for some three hundred years. While there have been difficulties, the two races have continued to live together for all time, or at least for as long a time as any of us need to worry about. The negro loves America and does not want to leave, and deep down in the heart of the white man, especially of the southern white man, there is no desire for the negro to leave this country. Thus with the negro wanting to stay and the white man likewise desiring him to stay, no power on earth can drive him away. There is in America kindness enough, patience enough and Christianity enough to enable both races to live together in this country, and especially in that section from which I come—the south—in harmony and prosperity, and each can, and I believe will, be of the largest possible service to the other.'

"The preceding is my exact statement and I have used it scores of times, as it expresses my opinion of this question. I am frank to say that the report to which you called my attention is a distortion of my statement.

"Again let me thank you for writing to me concerning the dispatch and calling my attention to the distortion of my statement.

"Very truly yours,

(Signed) "R. R. MOTON,
"Principal."

I believe that the white people of the south have only the kindest feelings for the law-abiding negro, they have all along since his freedom helped to build his schools and churches and are still helping him in thousands of neighborly ways. And I know hundreds of the most intelligent negro leaders of the south, and, like Booker T. Washington and R. R. Moton, they teach and live sobriety, industry, peace and love for their neighbors and neighborhood. And it would be unwise and un-Christian if we allow ourseives wrought up over any sort of a race propaganda.

C. W. HARE,
Attorney-at-Law.

Tuskegee, Ala., April 30, 1923.

AN EXPLODED CANARD.

On this page appears a communication from C. W. Hare, an attorney of Tuskegee, Ala., and a trustee of Tuskegee Institute, puncturing a sordid morsel of racial propaganda sent out from the capital city of Ohio relative to an alleged remark there of Robert R. Moton, president of this negro institution of the south that the late Booker T. Washington made great and famous.

Dr. Moton, who succeeded to the head of Tuskegee after the death of its founder, has promoted and sought always to develop the same spirit of helpful co-operation between the races that Dr. Washington promoted.

Naturally, therefore, when a dispatch from Columbus, Ohio, where he had spoken on April 28 on "inter-racial co-operation," charged him with having said "the negro is in America to stay and if anybody has to get out it will be the white man to go," those of the south who saw it accepted the report as a sinister distortion, coming out of the north, to fire racial prejudices in the south, and without foundation or fact to sustain the statement that Dr. Moton had used any such expression.

Among those who very promptly investigated was the editor of the Colbert Reporter, of Tuscumbia, Ala., and Dr. Moton's reply, which is incorporated as a part of the communication from Attorney Hare, published elsewhere, not only proves convincingly that he made no such statement, but he made no statement that could possibly be construed by the bitterest foe of racial amity as meaning or suggesting any such thought, or otherwise leading an auditor to draw any such inference.

What the Tuskegee president did say as to the two races can live in the south in harmony and prosperity and each can be of the largest possible service to the other."

It is significant that this new attempt to incite racial prejudice —in Ohio, where the negro population is already heavy, and to which state a substantial proportion of the negro exodus from the south is supposed to pilgrimage.

But, whether this particular libel

There is nothing intelligent about its meanness—no phosporescent brilliance that has been discovered in some of the mud that these papers never fail to wallow in. Its appeal is so sordid and its case so badly made out that the intentional inaccuracies are the most prominent part about it.

In mentioning the Chicago paper, it should be said in justice to the average Southern Negro that he doesn't swallow very much of the kind of talk that The "Defender" puts out on its sales counter. There are, of course, in every race those who satisfy a particular abnormal, degraded craving and appetite with just this sort of stuff, and there are those demagogues and false leaders that make use of it for selfish purposes. About the same vicious thing is done in our own race as regards politics; it would be passing strange if the example set did not bear fruit in the race that watches and imitates.

So it is really unnecessary to become excited over the following article in the Chicago paper "devoted to the welfare of the colored race" and which article is a comment on an editorial in the New Orleans States:

What are your privileges North?

Here, by the side of white people of intelligence, fair play and honor, you have the privilege of sending your children to school nine months instead of three; riding on trains and cars like humans, casting a vote in a government you are taxed to support, and going into courts of law without fear of the rope and torch.

Breathe and die in the South. Live and breathe in the North.

Only a heart of scandal, a heart of hate against God's free North could have written this:

"All that the Northerners want out of you is your labor and they do not care what becomes of you outside of that. There is no age-old sentiment in the breasts of the white people of the North towards you, such as is held by the Southern white people towards the Negro."

Call out the fire department!

Watch the "age-old sentiment" in action. Weigh, measure the "sentiment" held by the Southern white people towards the Negro.

That sentiment keeps you in rags, maintains the chain-gang and the convict camp; drags your daughters into the ditch of shame, kicks and cuffs your sons, lies against your name, drives you as if you were cattle, and sends word North, East and West that you will not work.

God once choked the life out of slavery. Again he must come and choke slavery out of the life of Dixie.

The North cares nothing for you? Question the hypocrites and blasphemers, question them by God's truth in New Orleans.

What "sentiment" built New Orleans university and Straight?

Whose money, whose sacrifice, built every Negro college South?

The North has given millions for your education in the South, while the White South has not given even $10,000 in 60 years for your education.

Come North and pay back; come and pay for Northern blood spilled for your freedom and Northern money spent for your education.

But for the North a spelling book would still be a stranger to your eyes and the cotton patch and corn field your only playground.

"Your advancement in much quicker and easier in the South than it would be in the North," Southern Colored people are told by the great New Orleans paper.

Your advancement into a Jim Crow car it not only quicker in Dixie than in the North, but immediate. Ask for a ballot and you are requested to look down the barrel of a cocked gun.

Nail a final lie: "Even the Northern Negroes do not receive the Southern Negroes with open arms and hospitality," says the States.

Nine-tenths of "Northern Negroes" are Southern by birth or immediate ancestry.

The only arms wider open for the Southern Negro than those of his Northern brother are the arms of the calaboose in Dixie. The only hospitality warmer is that of a Southern mob making its black victim feel at home under trying circumstances.

Tell the States to advertise that henceforward Southern people of color may vote, ride as human beings up and down the railroads, have their daughters protected in the courts from white despoilers, send their children to school nine months in each year and the Chicago Defender will help in the campaign to keep the Negro South, if he wants to stay there.

Until then keep coming out.

Better a dunghill for a home in the free North than a mansion on St. Charles Street in New Orleans.

The Final Shot: "The colored people have a wonderful opportunity to achieve and advance in the South," is the States' farewell.

In the North Colored people have a wonderful opportunity to be free, to dress up, learn from the only American White people who know A from bullfoot and give the Ku Klux Klan hell as it gives him.

That used to be racket, but it don't go now!

The "Defender" doesn't seem to be very well versed in facts concerning the South. No defense of the section is needed; the Negroes in the South know wherein they are treated and wherein they are not. They are considerably better posted than the deriding editors up in Chicago. But one interesting remark might be touched upon. The paper says: "The White South has not given $10,000 in 60 years for your education." The other day we asked a highly intelligent Negro educator, the head of the Albany normal school, for the figures on the amount spent this year by North Carolina for Negro higher education. Without a pause, he replied that the State is expending $600,000 for one Negro college alone, and some $900,000 for the other Negro colleges in that State.

Some colored man seems to be wrong; and we think he lives up in Chicago.

As to the Negro exodus, it is an excellent thing for both races and both sections

"March 31, 1923.
"Mr. Walter F. Miller, Editor The Colbert County Reporter, Tuscumbia, Ala. Dear Sir: I appreciate very much your letter concerning the report of my address in Columbus, Ohio. In reply I wish to say that my address in Columbus, as in other cities of the middle-west, was on 'Inter-Racial Co-operation' and I emphasized the good feeling which existed between the races in the south and the remarkable progress which the negro had made in the past sixty years through the co-operation and support of white people in every community.

"Relative to the point referred to in your letter, my exact statement was as follows: 'There are a great many people who say that two races cannot live together in peace and progress, but the white people and colored people have been living together in America, and particularly in the south, in rather close and helpful contact for some three hundred years. While there have been difficulties, the two races have continued to live together for all time, or at least for as long a time as any of us need to worry about. The negro loves America and does not want to leave, and deep down in the heart of the white man, especially of the southern white man, there is no desire for the negro to leave this country. Thus with the negro wanting to stay and the white man likewise desiring him to stay, no power on earth can drive him away. There is in American kindness enough, patience enough and Christianity enough, patience both races to live together in this country, and especially in that section in which I come—the south—in harmony and prosperity, and each can, and I believe will, be of the largest possible service to the other.' The preceding is my exact statement and I have used it scores of times, as it expresses my opinion of this question. I am frank to say that the report to which you called my attention is a distortion of my statement.

"Again let me thank you for writing to me concerning the dispatch and calling my attention to the distortion of my statement.

(Signed) "Very truly yours,
"R. R. MOTON,
"Principal."

I believe that the white people of the south have only the kindest feelings for the law-abiding negro, they have all along since his freedom helped to build his schools and churches and are still helping him in thousands of neighborly ways. And I know hundreds of the most intelligent negro leaders of the south, and, like Booker T. Washington and R. R. Moton, they teach and live sobriety, industry, peace and love for their neighbors and wise and un-Christian if we allow ourselves wrought up over any sort of a race propaganda.

C. W. HARE,
Attorney-at-Law.
Tuskegee, Ala., April 30, 1923.

AN EXPLODED CANARD.

On this page appears a communication from C. W. Hare, an attorney of Tuskegee, Ala., and a trustee of Tuskegee Institute, functioning a sordid morsel of racial propaganda sent out from Columbus, Ohio relative to an alleged remark of Robert R. Moton, president of this negro institution of the south that the late Booker T. Washington made great and famous.

Dr. Moton, who succeeded to the head of Tuskegee after the death of its founder, has promoted and sought always to develop the same spirit of helpful co-operation between the races that Dr. Washington promoted.

Naturally, therefore, when a dispatch from Columbus, Ohio, where he had spoken on April 28 on "inter-racial co-operation," charged him with having said "the negro is in America to stay and if anybody has to get out it will be the white man to go," those of the south who saw it accepted the report as a sinister distortion, coming out of the north, to fire racial prejudices in the south, and without foundation or fact to sustain the statement that Dr. Moton had used any such expression.

Among those who very promptly investigated was the editor of the Colbert Reporter, of Tuscumbia, Ala., and Dr. Moton's reply, which is incorporated as a part of the communication from Attorney Hare, published elsewhere, not only proves convincingly that he made no such statement, but he made no statement that could possibly be construed by the bitterest foe of racial amity as meaning or suggesting any such thought, or otherwise leading an auditor to draw any such inference.

What the Tuskegee president did say as to the negro race living in America, and particularly in the south, in co-operation with, and in helpful contact and service with the white race, is what every right thinking and understanding white person, and what every sober, industrious, law-abiding negro thinks and speaks every day — that "the two races can live in the south in harmony and prosperity and each can be of the largest possible service to the other."

It is significant that this new attempt to incite racial prejudice should have originated in the north —in Ohio, where the negro population is already heavy, and to which state a substantial proportion of the negro exodus from the south is supposed to pilgrimage.

But, whether this particular libel

An Ohio Effort To Incite Racial Prejudice Exploded

"Editor Constitution: In a recent issue of "Sergeant Dalton's Weekly," from Winnfield, La., there appeared this notice:

"Columbus, Ohio, March 28.—Robert Russa Moton, president of Tuskegee institute, in an address here has declared that the negro in America to stay and if anybody had to get out, it would be the white man who would have to go."

A marked copy of this weekly has been mailed to Principal Moton and a large number mailed to different people over Macon county and over the railroads, have their daughters protected in the courts from white despoilers, send their children to school nine months in each year and the Chicago Defender will help in the campaign to keep the Negro South, if he wants to stay there.

Until then keep coming out.

Better a dunghill for a home in the free North than a mansion on St. Charles Street in New Orleans.

The Final Shot: "The colored people have a wonderful opportunity to achieve and advance in the South," is the States' farewell.

In the North Colored people have a wonderful opportunity to be free, to dress up, learn from the only American White people who know A from bullfoot and give the Ku Klux Klan hell as it gives him.

That used to be racket, but it don't go now!

The "Defender" doesn't seem to be very well versed in facts concerning the South. No defense of the section is needed; the Negroes in the South know wherein they are treated and wherein they are not. They are considerably better posted than the deriding editors up in Chicago. But one interesting remark might be touched upon. The paper says: "The White South has not given $10,000 in 60 years for your education." The other day we asked a highly intelligent Negro educator, the head of the Albany normal school, for the figures on the amount spent this year by North Carolina for Negro higher education. Without a pause, he replied that the State is expending $600,000 for one Negro college alone, and some $900,000 for the other Negro colleges in that State.

Some colored man seems to be wrong; and we think he lives up in Chicago.

As to the Negro exodus, it is an excellent thing for both races and both sections should have originated in the north or south does not make any especial difference. There are elements in both sections seeking mischievously at all times to arraign race against race, religion against religion, nationality against nationality, even section against section, and individual against individual; and the quicker the strong arm of the law, through its constituted arms of enforcement, puts down every effort to incite intolerance, the quicker will the ideals of the advanced civilization for which the world war was fought be realized.

In the meantime, it must not be overlooked that the negro belongs to the south and is a part of the south. His best friend is the southern white man.

Discuss Problems of Negro Race

The progress of the negro race in the last 60 years was lauded by speakers at the 24th annual session of the Negro National Educational Congress held at Washington. Senator Spencer of Missouri said this record could be surpassed during the next half century by the unceasing application of patience, education and prayer. "Be patient when some states act unjustly with you," he warned, "for the time will come when the rights of American citizens, white or black, will be safeguarded by the entire nation. Remember Lincoln and practice patience, suffering injustice if necessary." Senator Fess of Ohio declared that there is no deeper or more sincere loyalty to America than that found in the negro race. "We don't find bolshevism among the negroes," he remarked; "we don't find anti-government movement among the negroes, nor do we find anything among them that is un-American. When I stop to realize the short time that the black men have been citizens and think of the progress they have made in that time, I know there is nothing in the world that can equal it." He rapped the Ku Klux Klan by contending that "any organization which denies the black race what it wants for itself is un-American."

President Harding was unable to attend but sent a letter in which he said that the education of the negro is "precisely the right approach to the great problem." He wrote: "The same might be said of every other race or nation but it is particularly true of the colored people because they have been so little favored with educational opportunities and therefore have a great deficit in this regard to be made up." Letters were also read from the governors of Montana, Iowa, Illinois, Oklahoma, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Kansas.

Senator McCormick of Illinois, referring to the lynching question, declared that "once the Christian people in America are awakened to the evil that has been going on within their country, they will go far to put an end to it. Commenting on the employment of negroes in the U. S. treasury department, Harley Speelman, registrar of the treasury, said in employing so many he was only doing his duty and that he was highly pleased with their work.

The negro race should concentrate in some place where it can gain economic and political control, in the opinion of Rev. Henry Callis of the African M. E. church. He remarked that Virginia logically belongs to the negro and that the race should seek to control that state. He said if the negroes would talk less and work more, in 25 years Virginia would be in their hands. "No race can become great that has not got its feet in the soil," he continued. "Negroes should work the truck farms, prune the orchards, dredge for oysters and manufacture the products in that state. The white people are waiting for some negro that has backbone enough to lead his people to political control. A few negroes with a few thousand dollars could start such a movement." He called attention to President Harding's Alabama speech in which the chief executive said: "I see no way for the black man but to fall in behind the white man until such time as he can control the legislators."

Any move to change the designation "negro" should be thwarted according to John Painter of Colorado. "I am proud of the name," he told the session; "we sprang from it, we are it and we can't get away from it, and the thing for us to do is not to change it but to work to make it mean the best in citizenship." As a result of a recent trip around the world in which he studied the conditions of the black and brown races, Rev. Charles Stewart of the African M. E. church told his hearers that no country in the world gives the negro better opportunities than the United States. He said that if the negroes build homes, become producers, seek education and elevation America will stand ready to recognize them as good citizens. Dr. Stewart declared that since Booker T. Washington there has been no man of whom it could be said "he represents the negroes." He warned against the negro dabbling in petty and cheap politics. "Politics of the right sort should be encouraged," he said, "but the grafting, vote-buying variety should be stamped out, and the sooner it is done the better off the race will be."

In discussing negro secret societies, Miss Maggie Walker, president of a negro bank at Richmond, declared such organizations are beneficial and there are not enough. However, Prof. J. E. Johnson of the Prentiss Normal and Industrial School, Prentiss, Miss., believes there are too many and that they put too much expense on the race. Gov. Sweet of Colorado sent a telegram to the convention inviting negro farmers from the South to work in his state. The session went on record as favoring "identical education for white and black youths" and declared its faith in the U. S. congress. 9/24/23

J. Silas Harris, of Missouri, who was elected president of the congress, argued that the future does not hold out much hope for the race unless a better relationship is established between the whites and blacks. He said that the present relationship is precarious. A resolution of the convention concluded: "We unalterably declare our faith in God and the religion of Jesus Christ as the saving element of the race, of the nation and of humanity."

Daily Talks With Thinking Philadelphians on Subjects They Know Best

PHILADELPHIA EVE. BRIDGE
FEBRUARY 19, 1923

MRS. ANNE BIDDLE STIRLING
On a Better Mutual Understanding of Two Races

THE extraordinary migration of Negroes from the Southern to the Northern States which began a few years ago has created some difficult problems for both sections of the country, and these can only be solved by a better mutual understanding of the races, says Mrs. Anne Biddle Stirling, chairman of the Inter-Racial Committee of Philadelphia.

"Since about 1912," said Mrs. Stirling, "the white men of the South, especially the business men, have begun to realize the fact that the Negroes, upon whom the South is chiefly dependent for its labor, were leaving that section in very large numbers and coming to the North for a variety of reasons. The situation has recently reached the point where the industries of the South are menaced for lack of the necessary workers.

Huge Migration During War

"About 1915 and all through the period in which the United States was involved in the World War about 500,000 Negroes came North. Immigration from foreign countries had been cut off and the industries of the North regularly imported free of cost the Negroes of the South to take the places in industry of the white men who had gone abroad or who were engaged in war work.

"This was the real beginning of what has since proved to be an extraordinary migration northward. There had always been the fear of lynching and the appreciation on the part of the more intelligent of the Negroes of the lack of educational and other opportunities for their children, and the industrial crisis brought about by the war simply speeded up this great migration.

"The South soon became aware of the situation and did everything in its power to stop it, but with only partial success. The Chambers of Commerce of the large cities and the educated and far-seeing men of the South declared that the only practicable way to stop this wholesale leaving was to make the South attractive to Negroes; if this were not done the North would get them and the South would not have the necessary labor to conduct its industries. There were men in the South who had tried to solve the problem from the moral and religious standpoint, but this method had met with but little success.

The Atlanta Plan

"Finally the Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta adopted what is now known as the 'Atlanta Plan.' This, in brief, was to insist that through the courts and the other legal machinery of the South full justice be done the Negro; to make immediate and radical changes in the housing condition of the Negro families; to provide for safe and comfortable public traveling conditions for them, and to fulfill the obligations of the stronger race toward the weaker one in the matter of educational facilities.

"The work in Philadelphia began in 1919, when I was appointed chairman of a committee of fourteen at the Yearly Meeting, and we first took up the matter of lynching. We made an intensive study of the causes and responsibility and soon came to the conclusion that the North did not know anything about the Negro. They knew, of course, that there were educated Negroes; they did not know them, nor where they were.

"The educated Negro is retiring and usually keeps closely to his own race, for which he is doing a great work; it is only the ignorant and pushing representatives of the race who come closely into contact with the white and therefore it is this kind by which the whites usually judge the whole race.

The Philadelphia Committee

"In 1920 the Philadelphia Inter-Racial Committee was established, and we called into our conferences two highly educated Negroes and found them to be exceedingly intelligent, well informed and altruistic men. The first meetings were on various points, such as segregation, social equality and the like, but were largely devoted to getting acquainted and to showing the representatives of the other race that we meant well and wanted to get all the light that we could upon their situation and their problems.

"We also had to find out in these early meetings whether we could work with their ideals, and, somewhat to the surprise of some, we found these to be pretty much the same as our own would have been in a similar position and that these ideals were perfectly reasonable. Where people were unreasonable it was because they did not know anything about inter-racial matters.

"At the next meeting the committee was doubled in number, and we tried to make it absolutely undenominational and include representatives of all religions. Then some members of the federated church organization asked me to tell them about the movement, and we got thirty members more from that body.

Different from Southern Job

"We took in southeastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, but people came to us from six States. There will be an inter-racial conference here in April which will be largely attended.

"Our job is very different from that of the South in the whole matter, largely because of a great division of sentiment. We are not affiliated with the Southern movement, but are constantly in close touch with it. In the South Mr. James H. Dillard is at the head of the movement, and he knows more about the whole situation than any other man in the United States.

"There are now 600 inter-racial committees in the South, and their method of procedure is, wherever danger threatens or there is bad feeling between the races, the representatives of both whites and Negroes get together and go over the whole situation and decide what is the best method to follow. Usually this has been very efficacious in preventing serious trouble and in restoring good feeling.

"These men are getting the women together, and forming them into State committees, and women are sent out to tell what must be done to save the women and the children of the Negro race from exploitation.

An Erroneous Viewpoint

"Our findings, in pursuance of our campaign against prejudice, were that the great majority of the white people cannot think straight on the Negro question. We have paid virtually no attention to it since the Civil War; we thought of them only as servants and did not know by experience that there were any highly educated Negroes.

"No race in the history of the world has made such a jump in the acquirement of a higher civilization in sixty years as have the Negroes of this country since the Civil War, but the majority of the white race do not know anything about this. This and other things of importance to the well-being of both races it is our aim to teach, and surely it needs to be taught.

"Our idea is to have some sort of a yearly meeting in which the whole matter, which vitally involves two races, may be discussed with profit to both. There is no doubt that in the constant influx from the South, which has now been going on for some years, there is a certain proportion of young Negroes who are decidedly tough and who come North with the idea that they are going to the land of promise where they can do just as they please. These constitute one of the great problems before us.

Interpreting the Races

"There is no doubt that these young men are a menace to the good order of a community. They think that they are free, but what they actually demand is not freedom, but license, and the great trouble is that there is at present no place where they can be taken in.

"As a result of this there are occasional gruesome happenings, such as have occurred at Coatesville and at Wilmington within the last decade or two. Every industrial center where the migrants congregate in large numbers should have an Inter-Racial Committee, which will take the necessary steps to interpret the races one to the other. This is the logical and proved method of meeting such a situation.

"This work should be carried on throughout the State, and every year delegates from each of the communities should hold a convention of at least two days, at which the captains of industry and other leaders should talk things over in a frank and friendly manner.

"It is easily understood why the people of the North have not taken up this very important matter, but the time has now arrived when it must do so for the benefit of both races. The question has now passed beyond the bounds of a local matter and become a national problem."

The Old Grouch I found peculiar interest, remarked Demosthenes McGinnis, in the story in Saturday's EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER of the man who got into the wrong house and proceeded to undress and was severely beaten before he was allowed to establish his identity. If it serves to induce builders to quit building houses in row, the beating will not have been in vain. There is nothing more depressing than a walk in some of our residence districts where the houses all look alike, alike flat, stale and unprofitable to everybody but the landlord. Far otherwise is downtown Philadelphia, as delightful as some of the outlying districts are depressing. Some day, let us hope, houses will again be built with artistry and good taste.

NEGRO CONFERENCE IN LOUISVILLE

Kansas City Star
3/24/'23.

200 DELEGATES FROM 20 CITIES AT NEGRO CONFERENCE

The Kansas City Star

Two hundred or more of the leading Negro city pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church will gather in Louisville, Kentucky, from May 9th to 13, to discuss the problem facing the church and the race in northern and southern cities, and to arrive at means of their solution. The conference will be held under the auspices of the Bureau of Negro Work, Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, Methodist Episcopal Church. Dr. W. A. C. Hughes, Director of the Bureau, will preside. Dr. I. Garland Penn, Jr., will be conference host.

The Conference will make a special study of the movement of Negroes from South to North, noticeable during and since the World War. It will consider the results of this migration upon southern agriculture, southern cities, and upon the cities and industries which the Negroes are entering in the North. The trend of large numbers of Negroes away from the rural sections into southern cities with the new problems of congestion, public health, housing, church crowding and school crowding, will also be considered. At least one session will be devoted to a consideration of Negro health in urban centers, and those health problems connected with the moving of thousands of people to a more northerly climate.

The four-day program now being arranged by Dr. Hughes will include some of the leading men of the Negro race, inside and outside the church. Bishop Robert E. Jones, of New Orleans, the first Negro bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will have a prominent part on the program. About twenty of the largest cities in the country will be represented by delegates.

This is the second conference of Negro city pastors to be held by the Bureau of Negro Work. The first was held last year in Atlanta, Georgia, where for the first time in the history of Methodism religious leaders of both North and South met to discuss their particular city and racial problems. Some valuable plans were projected at the Atlanta meeting and have been in the process of being carried out since that time. They include: the organization of "city missionary societies" in all cities having three or more Negro Methodist churches, for the purpose of helping the weaker parishes; the use of church buildings seven days in the week as social and educational as well as religious centers; the adoption of programs of recreation, health and sanitation lectures, class instruction in industrial arts and kindred subjects.

OWENS DENIES BIBLE AND BACHS PICKENS.

Messenger Editor in March Issue Makes Statement Supporting Views of Contributing Editor.

(Crusader Service)

New York, March 24.—Resenting the storm of disapproval evoked from many ministers throughout the country by the sentiments contained in his article in the February Messenger in which he disavows belief in a material hell and in most of the fundamental beliefs of Christians, Dean Pickens promises to reply in a forthcoming issue of the magazine. 3-31-23

That the Dean is not alone in his views is proved by the statement of Chandler Owen, editor of The Messenger, in the March issue in which the boldly states that "we accept no Bibles or creeds." Mr. Owen, whose disbelief is even more sweeping and general than that of Prof. Pickens will soon start on a lecture tour and is scheduled to speak on "Is Salvation Really Free?" as one of many radical subjects he will deal with. Many preachers have announced their intention to deny their churches to the Dean and it is expected that even more drastic action will be taken against Owen, who, curiously enough, solicits engagements in churches on his Western speaking tour this Spring. Owen who is regarded as a Black Ingersoll in radical circles in New York is noted for his extreme views in opposition to Christianity and all forms of revealed religion.

KEEPING THE SOUTH SOLID

In the current number of Collier's Weekly there appears an article by a country editor of North Carolina, who announces that he dares speak for the younger generation of the South. This editor whose name is W. O. Saunders, publishes a weekly paper at Elizabeth City, N. C. Measured by the rooted standards of the white South Mr. Saunders would be styled broad-minded and progressive. He thinks that the South is bored by its own solidarity and tired of being caled solid, but "its political life is still largely influenced by old men, many of whom were early maimed in mind and spirit, hopelessly embittered by a bitter past." He further admits that "the most sinister influence is the Ku Klux Klan, the extent of which organization no one exactly knows."

Having thus indicated the extent of Mr. Saunders' broad-mindedness and progressiveness, it will prepare us to hear, even if it strains belief, that the South "isn't as solid as it appears to be." He says on this point:

> Even among the older heads I can point you to leaders of industry and finance who vociferously proclaim their Democracy in municipal, county and state elections and quietly vote for Republican "protection" in a national election. And the South generally today is stirred by a spirit of revolt and independence which manifests itself in countless splits and factions in the Democratic party itself.

Notwithstanding this admission of Democratic disintegration, the North Carolina editor deals this damper to the aspirations of the "Lilywhite" Republicans, who hoped to profit thereby. He says:

> The Republican party can never break the Solid South so long as the race issue lives, because the Republican party has so far committed itself to the Negro that it cannot break with him now. The Republicans in the South may declare themselves "Lily White," but the Republicans in the North do not dare; they have got to coddle the Negro to hold the Negro vote and have a little solidarity of their own; and the Negro vote must be paid for with offices. The Negro knows exactly what he wants in politics, and he is a hard trader. When he doesn't get what he wants, he bolts, as was evident in several Eastern States in the recent November election.

This involutary tribute to the political sagacity of the Negroes in the North from such a source is to be viewed with suspicion. Mr. Saunders' object is undoubtedly to magnify the importance of the Negro vote in the North, thus creating jealousy and confusion in Republican ranks and making its seperation not only possible but permanent.

Coincident with this attempt at political strategy from North Carolina, has been the setting adrift of certain straws of Southern expression calculated to mollify or cajole racial sentiment favorable to the South. First among these straws was the "Mammy monument" project, started by the Daughters of the of the Confederacy with the approval of Congress, for the erection of a memorial to the black mammies of the South at Washington, D. C. Then came the South Carolina legislature with a proposition to pension those Negroes who served their masters, while the latter were fighting for the Confederacy. Unusual publicity was given in the newspaper accounts to the funeral of a faithful black employee in a Southern city, which was attended not only by his white employer, but by the city officials and best white citizens. Special newspaper publicity has been given to the action of ex-Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, when as Director of Railroads during the World War, he maintained the principle of equal wages for black and white railroad employees. The fact that Mr. McAdoo is one of the leading candidates for the Democartic nomination for the Presidency may have nothing at all to do with the revival of this creditable attitude on his part.

These various straws, taken in connection with Mr. Saunders' contention that "the South is all dressed up for adventure, but has no inviting place to go," would indicate that the South is counting on the division of the Negro vote as a preliminary to this adventure. The South has invited this division in its municipal elections, both for city officials and for the issue of improvement bonds. Now it looks as if it would carry the principle a step further and apply it to State, Congressional and Presidential elections. The Negro has always been responsive to fair treatment in other lines, and if a fair deal in politics is offered him, the time is propitious for it.

UNITED-FRONT RACE ORGANIZATION MEET

TO BE HELD IN NEW YORK CITY MARCH 22ND, 23RD, CHIEF OFFICERS OF 5 EQUAL RIGHTS BODIES WITH KELLY MILLER INDIVIDUALLY AS AUTHOR OF A SPLENDID CALL — BOSTON MEETING FOR ON-TO-NEW YORK AT 12TH BAPTIST CHURCH MARCH 21, 1923

On March 22nd and 23rd in New York City will be held the Initial Conference of the United Race Front Movement by Organization working for protection and rights for Colored Americans.

The call is one issued by the national president of the National Equal Rights eague in accord with the vote of the eLague at its annual meeting in Boston last July, Rev. M. A. N. Shaw of Boston. When Prof. Kelly Miller issued his call for a united race convention, Rev. Shaw consented to collaborate with him, and invite him to this preliminary conference of the chief officials of the 5 leading bodies oon equal rights, the National Race Congress, National Asso. for Advancement of Colored People, African Blood Brotherhood, Universal Uplife League and Equal Rights League.

Cyril Y. Briggs of the African Blood Brotherhood is the executive secretary for the first initial conference March 27, 1923.

On-to-New York

The local Boston, Mass., meeting to send officials of the National Equal Rights League to this conference, and the only meeting will be held on Thursday night, March 21st, in the 12th Baptist church and should be crowded. This is the most promising issue for race unification ever attempted in the history of our race.

Booker T. Washington Was Right

"Dr. Booker T. Washington knew, and the Negro as a race knows that the economic problem lies at the very heart of the welfare of any race. The possibility of honest bread is the noblest possibility of civilization and it is the indispensible condition of thrift, probity and truth. No people can do what is right, or love what is good, if they cannot earn what they need." This statement is one of the many new evidences of a conscience stricken South. This statement is part of a speech made by Milton E. Fies, vice president of the DeBardeleben Coal Company, before the annual meeting of the Alabama Mining Institute at Birmingham. This company may have for years practiced what they heretofore, perhaps, were afraid to preach. However the entire speech is unusually strong and is well worth reading by thoughtful students of the subject.

Dr. John Haynes Holmes Advises Non-Resistance Policy As Aid to Negro

Dr. John Hayes Holmes, pastor of the Community Church, in the heart of the theatrical district, and nationally known for his radical views on religion, spoke to a large congregation, representing the membership and friends of the Harlem Community Church, at Renaissance Casino on Sunday night, May 13.

Dr. Holmes' subject was "True Religion, the Salvation of the Negro." After telling ho wreligion had kept the Negroes hopeful during the dark days of slavery and had played a large part in securing their freedom, he spoke at length on the things he considered as the fundamentals of true religion, enumerating a belief in God, a belief in the kinship of all men, and love as some of these fundamentals. He concluded his address by saying that he considered it suicidal for the Negro race in America to fight the many injustices heaped upon it by hating the people who do them and by matching physical force against them. He recommended the example of Gandhi in India to the colored races in America and declared that only by non-resistance and by doing good unto those who despitefully use the Negro could a full measure of justice and equality be gained.

Others on the program were the Rev. and Mrs. Ethelred Brown, who sang a duet, and Mrs. W. A. Domingo, who rendered a piano solo.

RACE PREJUDICE IS BUILT UPON MYTH

Says North and South Must Work Together In The Solution of Problem.

(By The Associated Negro Press)

Washington, D. C., June 1.—"No longer can the south be left to solve the race problem," said Graham R. Taylor, of Chicago, speaking before the closing session of the national conference of social work in session here, pointing out that by migration it had spread to a national question, and "the north can no longer point the finger of scorn at the south's violence toward the Negro."

Race prejudice, Mr. Taylor said, will not be diminished, even though the Negro may become further advanced, until the white people have learned to overcome many of the prejudices now held against the Negroes, which in some instances, are founded upon a background of myth, misunderstanding and, misinformation. Indeed, the advance of the Negro may bring with it the increase of prejudice unless time-honored white prejudices are combatted, with the result that the present-day race problem and its solution must "start with the whites," he declared.

Miss Laura J. Abbott, of the U. S. Department of Labor, was elected president of this organization. Many prominent colored social workers representing some 20 organizations, were present, among them being Eugene K. Jones, J. R. E. Lee, Charles S. Johnson, Jesse O. Thomas, Monroe N. Work, E. T. Attwell, George E. Haynes, Miss Beulah Terrell, Miss Hazel Lyman, Miss Bondine Lee, David Jones, William R. Conners, John T. Clark, Miss Willie Brown, Miss Alice Hull, John C. Dancy, Jr., A. J. Allison, William M. Ashby, Gordon H. Simpson, Maurice Moss, Mrs. J. F. Horne, R. L. Elzy, J. H. Hubert, Miss Eva Bowles, Miss Anna L. Says Some U. S. Problems Can't Be Solved

Among These Sir Basil Thomson Includes the Negro and the Automobile

By SIR BASIL THOMSON, K. C. B.
Former Director of the Criminal Investigation Department at Scotland Yard

EDUCATED Americans are alive to the gravity of the social problems that confront the nation. One or two of these are insoluble, and therefore, like wise men, they do not allow them to disturb their sleep. Foremost, of course, is the negro problem. It is unthinkable that the negro can be absorbed, and the comfortable belief entertained by some that tuberculosis and other ills to which the negro is peculiarly susceptible is preventing the increase of the race is a fallacy. The problem will have to be left to posterity to deal with.

The Ku Klux Klan movement is probably only a passing phenomenon. It has nothing in common with the old Klan, except the name. The old Klan rescued the South from the carpetbagger, and helped to unify the country in those dark hours that followed the civil war; the new Klan professes to wage war against modern social evil, but in reality it fosters animosity against the Roman Catholics, the Jews and the colored people. It can do no possible good, and it may do much harm. Its use of the mask opens the door to the adoption of disguse by violent criminals who will not be slow to copy the form of the Klansman's mask when they have old scores to settle. It is a danger which the Klansmen should have been the first to appreciate if they really valued their good name.

Some unthinking people have likened the movement to the Italian Fascist Movement, but the Fascist works openly and scorns the use of masks. The Klansmen's defense for the mask, or rather the defense of those with whom I have talked, is that some people are shy of joining a movement, however much they approve of its objects, if they have to come out into the open. One would have thought that recruits so destitute of moral courage were scarcely worth enrolling. I venture the suggestion, which I make without any disrespect to the Klan, that without the masks there would be no recruits.

Mistake to Treat Ku Klux as a Joke.

We do not all, like St. Paul, put away childish things when we become men. Children love "dressing up." In European countries the grownups indulge this harmless weakness by donning glittering uniforms, wigs and gowns and the other trappings of court and official life. Americans have no such outlet for the subconscious instinct, but they get much satisfaction out of masks and passwords and the secret nocturnal ritual provided for them by the Klan.

Nevertheless it would be a mistake to treat the movement as a joke. No movement that condemns the law by taking the law into its own hands is to be treated lightly. But it would also be a mistake to pay it the compliment of passing special legislation to deal with it. The existing law is good enough provided it is enforced, for whenever the Klan proceeds to the execution of its sentences it must necessarily bring itself within the scope of the ordinary criminal law and the police can deal with the individual members of it. I feel sure that if it does not find a better and more logical program the Klan will die a natural death, and therefore there is no room for serious uneasiness, even though ministers of religion and certain highly placed persons are members of it.

I think that the "dope" problem, serious as it is, will be solved. In Europe people are working on it with some success. The severe sentences passed upon traffickers in England have had the effect of running up the price until drugs are beyond the reach of all but the well to do. This has not abated the evil altogether and the present plan is to control the traffic at its source through a committee working under the League of Nations. Most of the commercial product comes from Germany; the present German Government is not adverse to helping to control it and in due course cocaine and the more dangerous heroin and its kind will be rare and difficult to get. That is the only satisfactory solution, for people will always be found to run the risk of arrest for so lucrative a traffic.

The increase in the number of automobiles in the United States has produced a crop of problems of which some seem quite insoluble. I was told that there are thirteen million cars on the road, and I can well believe it. In England the number is drastically regulated by an annual tax of $5 per horsepower, which amounts in the case of a Ford car to $110 a year—nearly one-third the value of the car. Automobile owners in England have also to pay anywhere from 50 to 60 cents a gallon for their gasoline, and the automobile is therefore beyond the means of a poor man. The police in large cities are quite obdurate about parking and owners who ride to their offices in automobiles have to take a chauffeur with them to bring the car back. In America parking has become an institution, and it is too late to go back.

Our Traffic Problem Is More Difficult.

But where is it to end? If the streets of some middle West town are to remain open for traffic some contrivance like a huge garage—amply provided with elevators—will have to be erected in the business sections. That will go only a little way toward solving the traffic problem, which becomes more difficult every day. The traffic police do their work admirably in most cities, but in New York the problem is far more serious than anything we have in London, and it is handled with great skill. The system of towers on Fifth avenue is ingenious, but it is not perfect, for there are many times in the day when the main stream is automatically held up for traffic from the side streets when these are empty. After careful examination of London from the point of view of the traffic towers, we came to the conclusion that in a city with so many converging streams of traffic they would be a hindrance rather than a help.

The automobile is affecting social life profoundly in all countries, but in none so much as in America. It has of course given birth to a new breed of crime, from the automobile theft to the robbery under arms by gangs from distant towns, who make elaborate plans beforehand and use the stolen automobile to get away with their plunder.

If they have come from over the border of a neighboring State and the police have evidence against them, the cumbrous and antiquated procedure of extradition from one State to another has to be put in motion; and yet, with all of its problems for the police, if the automobile were to be the means of breaking down the parochialism which seems to be inherent in the system of government by States it will have done a service which cannot be measured. This parochial outlook struck me very much as I went West and South. One notices it in the newspapers as well as in conversation.

Two cities such as Cincinnati and St. Louis are not in the least concerned in the affairs of one another; still less are they interested in New York and Chicago, and very little indeed in the proceedings in Washington or in the European capitals. The enormous distances between city and city are doubtless the cause of this. Each city depends for the formation of public opinion upon its own newspapers, and there is no corrective in the shape of a metropolitan newspaper circulating in all parts of the country, as in England and most of the western European countries—indeed, with the exception of the Saturday Evening Post, the Literary Digest and perhaps the New York Times, no newspaper can be said to circulate far outside the borders of its own State. For a country so vast it is unfortunate that the political capital, Washington, and the commercial capital, New York, should both lie on its extreme Eastern shore; the wonder is that so vast a country should be held firmly together as it is by the one bond of being American.

That bond is insoluble. The weak point, as it seems to me, is the insistence upon State rights and the impatience against Federal legislation and Federal control. I am told that this feeling is not as strong as it was, but I confess that I thought it stronger than it ought to be. The wisdom of those who framed the Constitution could not foresee how modern facilities for communication would develop, and how injuriously diversity of laws in such matters as divorce, succession to property, punishment for crime and extradition would affect the well being of the community. The agitation for State rights seems to be based upon the fiction that the United States is still a confederation of separate entities whereas it has become one undivided country which can no longer wrap itself in splendid isolation now that the economic system of the world knows no frontiers.

A traveler from another country will notice in the West and middle West a certain feeling—it cannot be described by so strong a word as jealousy or even disapproval—toward New York. She is coming to be regarded as the idle pleasure loving sister whose fashions set the virtuous stay-at-home family in a flutter of secret envy and open disapproval. When all of the institutions of the country ought to be making for whole hearted unity, the university of laws in the State legislatures seem to be tending in the opposite direction. In a country so huge, with local interests so diverse, the principle of local self government must of course be maintained, but it ought not, I suggest, to extend to matters that are of universal application such as those I have mentioned. The principle of State rights has already had to yield to organizations such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, and before the country is much older, doubtless it will be found that further concessions have to be made.

Taxation Is a Cause of Grumbling.

I was amused to hear my American friends grumble about taxation: it reminded me of home. In the view of any Englishman the Americans do not know what taxation is. Long may they remain in happy ignorance, for if they had to pay income tax on the scale exacted in the British Isles their constitutional good nature might break down.

After traveling the length and breadth of the land I have ceased to be surprised at the despair of the Russian Communist of ever converting the country to the creed of Karl Marx. There was a time, not many months ago, when people became seriously alarmed at the growth of radicalism under the red flag. The fact is, as compared with other countries America is a paradise for the artisan. In no other country in the world can the skilled workman afford to ride to his work in an automobile; in no other country can he enjoy such opportunities for improving his position. The whole temper of the people is individualistic, and it is difficult to imagine a condition of things, even in a passing wave of commercial depression and unemployment, which would incline them to consider the experiment of collectivism. The radical agitator may succeed in winning followers among the foreign born; these, in spleen at their powerlessness, may resort to outrage, but the intelligence of the mass of the American people will remain sane and unimpaired. Sporadic outrage would be no new thing—and if it s[hould] come it would have the effect of ing public opinion to the danger it is running in undermanning its police.

I learned in the middle West the proper way for conducting public charities. I was first introduced to the Community Chest in Cleveland, where a fund amply sufficient for all the charitable needs of the city had already been collected. The great merit of the system lies in the discouragement it gives to the bogus or doubtful charity, for its promoters cannot hope to collect money independently and before they can draw upon the Community Chest they have to satisfy a vigilant and expert committee that their accounts are properly kept and that their funds are properly expended. I wish that the system could be introduced into England on the model set by Cleveland—it would certainly be unpopular among the wrong kind of people.

Avoids Burning Question of Prohibition.

I have no impressions to give about prohibition, because I saw very little of it, and also because it is a burning question—a question so incandescent in some parts of the country that I should not care to touch it with my naked hands.

America is passing through a period of great material prosperity, but the sky is not cloudless. The industrial pace seems to me to be too hot to last. Though individualism may be a safeguard agai the foolish creed of the extreme Socialist, it is impossible to believe that it is to go forever unchallenged. Labor is bound to assert itself as a class, and a class that will demand recognition as a political party; when that comes the struggle will be the graver for having been so long delayed. Then people will look back on these days much as we in England look back on the '80s and '90s as a time of plenty and profound peace, which, of course, they were not. Fortunately for humanity there is one thing in the world which is as old and unchanging as the hills, and that is human nature, which may be scored by torrents and swept by floods, but will always emerge when the waters have subsided with all its familia. outlines unchanged.

Every Englishman Should Travel Here.

A tour through the United St ought to be part of the education of every Englishman, just as no American should consider his education complete until he has taken a tour through England, avoiding the hotels which cater for American tourists. Nothing is so humbling to the insular pride to which we are all subject, or so disinfecting to the mind. It is always a shock to find that our own country has something still to learn, when we were brought up to believe that its only mission was to teach, but it is the kind of shock that is much needed in these days. Whether we like it or not our two countries seem destined in the future to police the world together, and when that time comes mutual respect and admiration are going to make our task the easier. A true knowledge of one another is the first step; the other things will inevitably follow.

I count myself happy to be among those few Englishmen who have learned to know and love the Americans in their own home, to have made many friends among them and to have realized what an enormous force they will be in molding the destinies of the world in the generations to come.

SOUTHERN CULTURE.

THE TIMES has spoken in praise of those admirable periodicals, The Reviewer of Richmond and The Double Dealer of New Orleans. While hospitable to Northern writers, they have the larger merit of bringing out a native and original talent. They are part of a literary and artistic renaissance that is going on in many Southern States. The Poetry Society of Texas is a strong co-operator in this revival. Savannah, Jacksonville and some other cities have poetry societies whose intelligent activity and influence are acknowledged. These people are no dabblers and poetasters. They are producing high and serious work, much of it of undeniable beauty and felicity.

The Year Book of the Poetry Society of South Carolina, founded in 1920, records a real achievement not only in poetry but in all the sister arts. In Charleston the Carolina Art Association, which has a beautiful building of studios and galleries, conducts a successful Winter art school. To this association is due the All-Southern Exhibition of Paintings, which has become a highly regarded experiment in American artistic life. A year or two ago Miss ALICE R. HUGER SMITH'S water colors of the Carolina "low country," shown in various cities at once interested critics in Charleston art. The Charleston Museum, through its children's classes in painting, modeling, and so on, is broadening the revival and preparing it for the next generation. The Charleston Musical Society and the Musical Art Club bring the famous Symphony Orchestra and concert performers to that city every year.

o colleges of the State hold annual al festivals. Original with Charles- as the negro gathering for the purpose presenting and preserving racial spirituals" and folk-songs. Through the co-operation of both races large choruses were drilled in the city and quartets and soloists assembled from the Sea Islands and coast country. This concert, which was widely attended by students and lovers of folk-lore as well as of music, was an inspiring success. It is hoped that the movement will result in an annual folk-song convention.

South Carolina has its "little theatre" the Town Theatre of Columbia. We must mention the honorable part alued contemporary:

> Through the co-operation of The State, Columbia's daily newspaper, with the theatre, the idea of an uncommercialized drama has been, we believe, carried further than any other similar movement in America. The plan which has been evolved is briefly this: The State offers substantial prizes to winners in drama contest. The winning plays are presented at the Town Theatre by casts of "student actors" who are given free, practical instruction in acting. The plays are then taken on tour to towns within the State. The author receives the customary royalties for such performances, and at the same time secures critical expression from various types of audience. Thus the play is written, produced and presented before several audiences, without a commercial step in the process, while those aspiring to the careers of actors are given an opportunity to secure training and actual experience of dramatic life at no expense to themselves. The Town Theatre is also ready to welcome poets, musicians nad lecturers on the arts, and acts as a centre of art for Columbia and its surrounding country.

This is only a little of the fruitful effort of the Poetry Society and the other workers for cultivation in the arts. The society offers prizes for poetry. In this Year Book are included poems, some of them by distinguished Northerners, some of them signed by famous Palmetto names, PINCKNEY, RUTLEDGE; one prize poem by a RAVENEL. A new choir of young, genuine South Carolina "makers and singers" is heard. Yet a little while ago we Northern folks thought of HENRY TIMROD and PAUL HAYNE as the only South Carolina poets; and knew them usually only as names. The literary and artistic revival in the South has come swiftly. It is unforced. spontaneous, strong, and gathering strength.

Race Problem—1923
United States.

McCord's Bulletin

The Atlanta Independent

In 1900 Georgia made goods worth 94 millions and North Carolina 85 millions. 5/4/23

In 1920 the Georgia product was 692 millions and that of North Carolina 943 millions.

5/7/23

—Blue Book, Manufacturers' Record.

Georgia not only has more land, more people and more railroads, but has more capital, more labor and more varied resources than any other Southeastern State.

It has the greatest technical school in this section, with graduates heading some of the greatest industries in the United States.

Its capital is the center of vast commerce, the market and source of supply for a great region, the financial center of the Southeast, Southern Headquarters for telephones and telegraphs and the great national industries. Here is the leadership of great movements in the South.

Why, then, does a smaller State, long behind us in manufacturing, forge ahead of Georgia with a third larger product?

H. Y. McCORD.

Above we are publishing a bulletin gotten out by Mr. McCord, a member of the Wholesale Dealers firm of Stewart & McCord, in which Mr. McCord asks certain questions relative to the economic progress of North Carolina and Georgia. He recites that in 1900 Georgia manufactured goods worth ninety-four millions, and North Carolina goods worth eighty-five millions. He recites that in 1920 Georgia manufactured products were six hundred and ninety-two millions, and that of North Carolina nine hundred and forty-three millions, and asks the question, "Why does North Carolina, a smaller state, in twenty years forge so far ahead of Georgia, a larger state, with greater resources and economic possibilities."

Mr. McCord says that Georgia has more land, more people, more railroads and more resources than North Carolina, yet North Carolina leads her in manufactured prod[illegible] by 251 millions in twenty years. In 1920 Georgia led No[illegible] Carolina by nine millions in manufactured goods, but in a score of years North Carolina steps ahead of Georgia 260 millions.

Now, the answer is not far-fetched. While North Carolina is seeking to promote the general interest of all of its citizens by its educational program, Georgia, in her effort to keep half of her citizens in ignorance and idleness, is defeating the other half of what is rightly theirs—the best educational advantages and the best and most profitable opportunities to work. Abraham Lincoln said it was impossible for the Union to stand half free and half slave, and Georgia had as well understand, as North Carolina has already understood, that the state cannot reach its highest usefulness and keep pace in the production of wealth with her sister states, with half of her people educated and the other half in ignorance.

North Carolina has no dual educational program or system of education. She is relatively as liberal in the appropriation of money for the education of the black child as she is for the education of the white youth, and the state that pursues any other policy than of a liberal education for all of its people must necessarily lag, not only in intelligence and character, but in both production and distributio[illegible] of wealth. For the higher education of the black youths in North Carolina, North Carolina appropriated more than one million and a half dollars. It appropriated for one school, the leading Negro institution in the state, located at Greensboro, this year $601,000.

Georgia has appropriated nothing for the higher education of the Negroes in this state, and has not appropriated anything for them, so far as our information goes, since we have had a university system. The little pittance that is paid for the maintenance of the excuse of a school we have at Savannah, and the two secondary schools we have at Albany and Forsyth does not use up the appropriations made by the Federal Government from the Landscript Act, the Morrell Fund, the Smith-Lever Fund or the Smith-Hughes Fund The state of Georgia obtains far more money from these Federa[illegible] sources than she pays out for the higher industrial or technical education of the Negro. The industrial education provided for the Negroes by the state is little better than no education at all, and there is no provision made by the state for the technical or commercial education of the Negro.

North Carolina provided every kind of education for Negroes that it provides for white people, because it believes that education is a far better investment than ignorance. North Carolina believes that it is far better to spend money for the education of its youths than to spend it to maintain them in idleness and in prison.

The second answer to Mr. McCord's question is that lawlessness prevails in the state of Georgia to a degree not excelled by any state in the Union, with the possible exception of Texas. In mob law and industrial oppression, Georgia leads. The migration of the Negro from the South to the North is far greater in Georgia, and Georgia has lost more economically from this standpoint than all the other southern states together. Georgia is derelict in the maintenance of law and order. She is derelict in the education not only of the black youth, but of the white youth. The white youth is not furnished such an opportunity and equipped as he should be to make him the most useful and helpful citizen, and the provisions made for the education of the black youths is only an excuse on the part of the state to rake in money from the Federal Government and to tax the citizens of Georgia for the support of the whites' education.

The state, like the individual, which is engaged in k[illegible]ing a part of its people down, loses much effort that it might spend in uplifting all of its people up. The man who undertakes to hold another fellow [illegible]ill have to s[illegible]wn with him, if he succeeds in his purpose, [illegible]d the same philosophy [illegible]me of the state.

The answer is not far-fetched, and if Mr. McCord would study [illegible]efully and painstakingly the conditions that surround him here in [illegible]nta and throughout the state the a[illegible]r is apparent.

Time after time during the course of Johnson Raps Misconceptions.

Charles S. Johnson, a colored man who served as associate executive on the Chicago commission, also vigorously attacked the misconceptions which the white people have for years maintained against his race, and cited voluminous statistics to refute the assertion that the negro was mentally inferior, inherently immoral or invariably criminally inclined. Popular brands of fiction surrounding the activities of colored persons were having their effect in forming the white opinion of the race as a whole, he said.

"THE BIRTH OF A RACE"

"THE Birth of a Race," by Mr. A. M. Chirgwin, which appeared in the London Quarterly Review, represents a masterly summary of the Booker Washington movement, the Garvey movement, the Du Bois movement and a masterly grasp of the Asiatic, West African and South African situations. The closing sentences ably sum up the article: "Due to many causes, ranging from segregation laws to higher education, the Negro is beginning to perceive in himself the arousal of a new and mighty thing. Many factors seem to be conspiring to force upon him the realization that he is not a hanger on to white civilization, but a member of a people with a destiny. The Negroes are achieving race consciousness. A new race is being born."

The U. N. I. A.

Mr. Chirgwin is not overfriendly to Marcus Garvey and the Universal Negro Improvement Association, and yet he recognizes their importance. Mr. Chirgwin says of Marcus Garvey: "It is as foolish as it is easy to dismiss with impatient gesture this man and the movement he represents. . . . The movement is numerically large, but not morally significant. Its importance here is that it reveals the extent to which race consciousness has developed among large sections in Afro-America." We are inclined to believe that if Mr. Chirgwin were to take his cue from personal visits to the U. N. I. A. mass meetings instead of from the words o critics he would find the U. N. I. A. morally significant. As it is he recognizes the U. N. I. A. as a tremendous spiritual fact whicl must be reckoned with.

Next week we will give an elaborate review of this significan article and also a review of "The Philosophy and Opinions of Marcu Garvey."

Pola Negri Gets a Wallop.

In a double column editorial in the Houston, Texas, "Mayfield's Weekly," Editor Mayfield goes into journalistic convulsions because of the photo-play, "Bella Donna," in which Pola Negri is starring, and which portrays a dark-skinned Egyptian making love to a white English woman on the banks of the Nile.

But listen at the Colonel. Writing of the picture he says:

> "It is a brazen propaganda for social equality. It is a stench in the nostrils of the Southland and an affront to the Caucasion race.'"

Colonel Mayfield must also be a Jew-baiter and a friend, at least, to the Ku Klux Klan, for he continues:

> "So help me God, that foul and blasphemous lie was sent over America by the depraved and conscienceless Jews of Hollywood. And that is but the beginning of the Jewish assault upon social equality. They hate the Ku Klux Klan; they have no interest or love for the Gentile race, and the batteries of their tremendous power are turned on social equality. They will send out kindred pictures of Pola Negri's * * *. They will have white men wildly infatuated with saddle-colored women; they will do anything under God Almighty's sun to degrade the Protestant people."
> "Read white sons of the South—read it and reflect. The South has never been safe from the Negro rape fiend. We have hung them by their necks, we have burned them at the stake, and still no woman is safe beyond their husband's rifle."

Yes, many white sons of the South will read that editorial and reflect. In Texas especially, where white men have so often invaded the sanctity of Negro homes and brushed aside their own barriers of social equality to such an extent that it is hard to tell who has or has not Negro blood in their veins; they will reflect on the deeds of their fathers that made these conditions.

Since the whites of the South have little to fear from the Negro forcing himself socially on them, and since they have been able to deal so efficiently with the occasional rapist, thanks to the rope and the torch, what have they to fear?

Is the memory of their past misdeeds with colored women haunting their souls and driving them insane on this question, or are they afraid that their own women will bolt and take a fling now?

A NEGRO STATE

THE South and West already have some pioneering builders of Negro cities. A State is not an impossibility. Certainly it would afford a solution to many of our problems. It woulld give an opportunity for Negroes qualified in every way to fill any position in government, to exercise their talent and satisfy their ambition. A State would have force at its command to bring together the extremes of Negro thought and action, and make them work for the good of all. Negro citizens of the State would be compelled to invest their capital in business and industrial enterprises on a large scale. Goods would be made and distributed in the markets of other states and throughout the world. Negro clerks, bankers, engineers, skilled and unskilled workers in commercial and industrial enterprises would be a necessity and become a reality in large numbers. They would be pushing and helping each other in their ambition to rise higher and higher. Negro schools and educators would have more freedom and independence in the development of Negro intellect. The Negro creative instinct would become aroused and active, and the race would enjoy a splendid opportunity to cultivate and develop its own special characteristics and talents without discouragement or hindrance.

UPON WHAT MEAT DOTH THESE CAESARS FEED?

OUR American environment has produced a crop of Negro "leaders" some of whom in their perfectly natural thirst for power, appear to believe they have been Divinely called to sit in judgment on the utterances and actions of others. They believe themselves nominal rulers of their 12,000,000 brothers and sisters of color. Their conceit and arrogance have no bounds. They think the Negro world must move forward with their thinking and advice, or go backward if its people display regard for the thinking and program of others. Everybody must bow to their will. Over-zealous in their talking on public platforms, they disregard all rules of politeness in private conversation. Their fool vanity is running riot with their reason. They damn every Negro "leader" whose program differs from theirs—stamp him sycophant, traitor, liar, hypocrite and fakir, if he belongs to a different school of thought, and they raise hell in general. Everybody else must curse out the white race as often as the "Caesar's" want it done, and must do it in words pleasing to their exquisite taste. If not, the "leader" failing to do so is "disloyal to the race." Again we ask, "Upon what meat doth these Caesars feed that they have grown so great?"

These over-lords feed out of the hand of charity—Christian tolerance. We have no industrial organizations, no commercial organizations, no manufacturers organizations, no great business organizations of our people. We are not rooted and grounded in material prosperity like the Anglo-Saxon race in whose system we are living. Manufacturing, business, commerce, industry and agriculture are the essentials of civilization. Every organization of Negroes in America, and every Negro official of any one of these organizations is directly or indirectly sustained by the prosperity and progress of the white man's economic system.

These "leaders" who have arrogated to themselves the power to supervise the utterances and programs of their rivals, are like so many beggars fighting for the bones thrown out from the kitchen doors of the rich. They show their unfitness for freedom by the persistence with which they try to suppress the thinking and talking of others who happen to think differently from them. Differing with a man in thought and principle does not necessarily imply that he is a fool, a sycophant and a coward. But the man who differs with him may express his differing in a manner to imply that he is a more malignant evil than the one he stamps as sycophant and coward.

Negro Says Equality Talk Lured Him From Home

George Johnson, 24, of 319 West Thirty-ninth street, who admits he came to this city recently from a large plantation in Louisiana on the strength of glowing reports of conditions in New York, confessed yesterday in General Sessions that he has changed his views. At the same time he made it plain his advice to Southern negroes who feel that they are "underpaid and underfed" would be to stay "down home."

Not long after he had landed in New York, according to the story he told the court, Johnson and another negro, Julius Brooks, 27, of 8693 Eighteenth avenue, Brooklyn, also lately from the South, found themselves without work or money or prospect of either.

That explains why there were boring a hole from the hallway at 454 Seventh avenue into the clothing store of Hyman Bernstein, when Patrolman William L. Rode of the West Thirtieth street station happened along. Both pleaded guilty and were sent to Elmira for indeterminate periods.

Before they were sentenced, they explained that "down South" they had heard wonderful stories about New York being a place where whites and blacks were on a common social and industrial footing.

It Seems to Me

By Heywood Broun

Bad habits are generally evil things and, for that matter, so are most good habits. Arnold Bennett seeks to put habits in their proper place in "How to Make the Best of Life" (Doran).

"Beware of absolutely fixed habits," he writes. "They are nearly always the sign that the sense of proportion has gone or is going, and that one part of the mental organism is flourishing at the expense of another. Fixed habits become ruthless; in the end they will demand terrific sacrifices from their rivals in the organism.

"You may read in the paper such an item as the following: 'Mr. Joshua Crath died yesterday at the age of eighty-eight. He was to the end a prominent member of the choir of Winchester Cathedral, and it was his boast that he had not missed a single service for seventy-six years.'

"The record is appalling. Not to miss services is laudable on the part of a chorister, but not to miss a service for seventy-six years is a crime against the humanity in one's self. It is plain that after Mr. Joshua Crath had done, say, twenty-five years without a break, his life must have been reduced to one sole object—not to miss services in Winchester Cathedral. The habit of not missing services in Winchester Cathedral, must have come to occupy the throne of an autocrat in his organism. The conscience of Mr. Crath's organism was that habit, and it had no other conscience. Every family and social consideration was judged by one standard: Will attendance at the services in Winchester Cathedral be interfered with? If so, away with it!"

The most famous habit to be brought to public attention lately is Mr. Everett Scott's custom of playing short stop, a habit which he has kept up more than 1,000 consecutive times. But in the promulgation of the achievement a certain injustice has been done to Mr. Scott. The emphasis has been placed on the fact that he has played shortstop 1,000 times without a break. This overshadows the information that he has played the position exceedingly well and has led his league innumerable times in fielding.

That, after all, is the important point about Bennett's mythical Joshua Crath. If he sang well it may have been important that he missed not a single service in seventy-six years, but, if the contrary were the case, the long distance record may well have been an affliction rather than a blessing.

Speaking of injustices, we have received a letter of protest from Sidney Blackmer, who plays Captain Absolute in the Equity production of "The Rivals." In reviewing the performance we expressed the opinion that he did not play well on the first night.

"With that feeling of having listened to a dissertation on roast pig and being the pig, I beg leave to squeal a little," writes Mr. Blackmer. "Last evening I got up from an annoying attack of 'La Belle Grippe' and laryngitis, and with fevered brow and aching throat opened in 'The Rivals.' Feeling the dramatic side of it keenly, as actors do, you know, not caring whether the fever went up as the play went on—or whether the morrow would bring a relapse, as it surely did—I did my darndest. I couldn't hear much—but I did hear the ladies talking down front—and that didn't help you or me very much in enjoying the evening.

"But now, in defense of 'odorous comparisons': I stood my ground, as Absolute is, a 'feeder' and 'feeders' always stand their ground. I missed no cues, but found myself painfully deprived of important speeches because other cues were missed. And Arthur Hopkins never directed me in anything except the way back out of his office. Yours right out, Sidney Blackmer, Fahrenheit 101."

The fact that acting becomes a compulsory habit to which the player must yield on the scheduled evening, whether ill or well, undoubtedly works some hardships. And columnists are up against the same handicap. For instance, we don't feel at all well to-day.

However, Arnold Bennett is in excellent health and he writes concerning education in the same book from which we have already quoted:

"We shall learn from geography the importance of environment, and from history the annoying but useful truth that all acts have consequences, and that those consequences cannot be escaped. Also, that society is forever moving on, evolving out of something into something else; that there is nothing final or absolute; no goal, but a succession of goals; that everything is always in a state of flux or change, and that this is the very essence and meaning of life!"

All of which may be true, but not in New York State, where youngsters are taught that the Constitution of the United States was the last word in the science of Government and that it was drawn up by a set of supermen free from any single mental or moral weakness.

We haven't seen all the plays in town, but among those which crossed our path, we have had the most fun out of "Rain," "Merton of the Movies," "You and I," "Zander the Great," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Adding Machine," "7th Heaven" and "The Last Warning."

Thirteen readers have written to commend the use of the first person singular instead of the plural in this column. We thank them.

As a matter of fact, we intend from now on to be both singular and plural. "I" is best for confidences and distinctly personal reflections, upon the rare occasions when they are brought into "It Seems to Me," but when there is a need to be vindictive and disagreeable, "we" is the obvious choice, since it gives the writer the air of attacking in numbers.

Some phases of the Southern point of view toward the Negro we find distinctly puzzling. We sat next a Georgian at the performance of the Ethiopian Art Theatre the other night and he shared our enthusiasm for the first play on the bill, which is called "The Chip Woman's Fortune."

"But of course," he added, "these actors aren't really Negroes. All of them have white blood."

When the Negro achieves success in the arts, the smallest admixture of white blood is noted and the credit is duly assigned to the Nordic race. But when he rides on a railroad train below the Mason and Dixon line one drop of Negro blood is sufficient to place him definitely in the ranks of the black race and put him in the Jim Crow car.

"Humiliating and Degrading."

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, has come to the conclusion that the Fifteenth and Eighteenth amendments to the Constitution never can be enforced. He analyzed the "revolt" against Negro enfranchisement in the South and against prohibition enforcement, which he declared to be nation-wide, in an address before the Ohio State Bar Association. He dragged in the Fifteenth Amendment simply to support his argument with respect to unenforceability of the later one which, he said, is opposed by men and women "as a forcible, an immoral and tyrannical invasion of their private life and personal conduct." Dr. Butler sums up the situation thus:

> No one who is familiar with the practical workings of our political system would expect either the Fifteenth or the Eighteenth Amendment to be repealed within measurable time. So far as one can see, therefore, we are shut up to the alternative of their attempted enforcement by soldiers, and police and special agents, and detectives and spies, or to their abrogation over a large part of the land by local initiative and common consent. Either alternative is humiliating and degrading.

There is ground for disputing the analogy which Dr. Butler draws between the two cases, but there must be quite common agreement that the existing situation is "humiliating and degrading." Nor will it be made less so by condemnation of the fact without constructive suggestions for remedying the condition. Violation of the law is encouraged by those who, while deprecating disobedience, insist that prohibition is wrong and hold out the prospect of legislation destructive of the constitutional enactment. It is absurd to say the law cannot be enforced with a reasonable degree of efficiency when enforcement measures so far have been notoriously inadequate. The sources of supply on which the small offenders rely have not been closed as they should be. Raids on retail dealers that yield a few pints of liquor are spectacular but of little account. While the producers of beer and the warehousemen whose places are bulging with whisky are able to deliver their illegal wares enforcement will be a good deal of a farce.

Furthermore, those people who are so sure on the stump that the majority of the American people who can make their will known are opposed to prohibition would, if they had the courage of their convictions, undertake by legal process to repeal the Amendment. They know they would be defeated. And defeat would mean the strengthening of enforcement legislation to the point that their wilful disobedience would become more difficult. The rights of minorities are as sacred under the Constitution as are those of majorities. There should be no room for misunderstanding of the rights of any where prohibition is concerned.

Spirit of The Press

Negro and the South

From Norfolk Ledger Dispatch

Beyond doubt the colored people of the south are moving to other sections in the hope of bettering their condition. This is but natural. The only way to combat it, as Prof. Moton says, is to give them here the things they are moving to obtain in so far as it is possible to do so. As a matter of fact, many of the inducements held out to them to go north or west have proven chimerical, but there is no doubt that some reforms for the benefit of the colored people should be made in the south. One of the most important is the matter of living conditions. In a large number of cases they are not what they should be by any means. The southern states as a rule, are awake to the value of education and the facilities for the colored race are undoubtedly getting better. The climate of the south is far more suitable to the race than that of the north, and they are much happier here. For their ultimate good they should remain here and join forces with the white race to get here the betterments for which they are now making a doubtful move.

THE CASE OF PROFESSOR KERLIN: CRUCIFIED.

When the court at Lexington, Va., decided against Professor Robert Kerlin, in his suit for damages against the Virginia Military Institute for summary dismissal because his conduct in writing in behalf of colored prisoners in Arkansas, he was crucified on the cross of white supremacy in the South.

Since the settlement of Virginia, except for the brief regime following the Civil War, the sessions of the General Assembly have engaged themselves in enacting laws to keep the colored people in subjugation and slavery.

One reason why there are more Virginia colored people distributed over the United States than there are any others, is because of the steady stream of migration for the past 300 years. White men carried or sent their colored families into the Northwest Territory after the Revolution to escape the persecution of free colored people. Colored people themselves have left in streams through the centuries.

Tyranny, open or subtle, has characterized the state administration. The whole South has followed Virginia's lead in controlling and limiting its colored citizens.

He is a wonderful man who dares to move in behalf of our oppressed people, unless he simply contributes money, in which case the banks and business absorb it and its minor benefits filter through to those for whom it was intended.

Professor Kerlin had lived so long in the atmosphere of the beautiful ideals which find their way into the white man's literature, that he had lost recognition of the outstanding characteristics of greed, domination, cruelty and partial justice by which he has become the world's administrator.

No man who knows the plain meaning of our language and compares it with the technical twists of decisions against the oppressed and their friends who happen to seek justice in the courts, can doubt the final outcome.

When a nation departs from the ideals of its founders the decay of that nation has begun; injustice is its odor and disaster its evidence.

Professor Kerlin's case marks an epoch in the progress of American disrespect for law.

KELLY MILLER SAYS

Why Professor Kerlin Was Compelled To Employ Colored Lawyers—— Northern Farm Lands Beckon Southern Farmers

* * * *

Professor Kerlin

Professor Kerlin is a Southern white man of letters and liberal ideas. He occupied the chair of English in the Virginia Military Academy, Lexington, Va., for a number of years.

His literary curiosity led him to make a study of the outgivings of the Negro mind in cultural form. Like all other Southern white people, he was acquainted with the Negro only on the lower level of household and domestic familiarity. There can be no honest expression of sentiment or sincerity of soul under the constraint of servility.

Professor Kerlin undertook to study the movements of the free and untrammelled mind of the Negro through the medium of his newspapers. The revelations opened up a new world of suggestion as to the real Negro soul, which turns itself wrong side out when it is unconscious of the presence of a critical or unfriendly eye.

He decided to follow the leading of this new ray of light. This led to the study of Negro poetry which still further revealed new and unsuspected angles of the Negro mind. He discovered that the Negro possesses not only the appreciation of beauty, but also the power of expressing this appreciation in literary form. "The Voice of the Negro" is not a catalogue of grievances, or a list of complaints, but the cultural expression of the feeling of the race in terms of poetic excellence.

It is easy to imagine the surprise of a Southern white man at such a discovery. The traditional attitude of his class expects only the animal reactions of the field hand and domestic servant, but looks not for artistic genius or expressional excellence. An individual instance might be shunted aside as a monstrosity hardly expected to recur. But Professor Kerlin found such indications widely distributed among various authors who strove to cultivate the poetic art.

He was not hesitant or grudging in the expression of appreciation and praise. He disclosed his discovery to the members of the faculty of his school and the cultured society of the college town They gave their cautious assent with a mixed feeling of curiosity and surprise. Professor Kerlin's interest deepened with his knowledge

He sought a wider audience. He began to appear before colored gatherings to tell of the hidden treasury which he had found. This step naturally led to animadversion upon the manhood claims of the Negro. He had the temerity to appear at a meeting of the N. A. A. C. P. and appeal for a square deal of the people who are struggling for simple justice and human recognition.

This was at Detroit, if my memory serves me right.

Swift as the wire would carry the word, the report was flashed back to the authorities at Lexington that Prof. Kerlin had turned Negrophile, and was advocating race equality.

This was of course more than the traditional Virginia attitude of mind could endure. It upset the tradition of the elders and removed the landmarks which the fathers had set. Professor Kerlin's connection with the college was ruthlessly severed.

Of course there was no argument of the merits of the case. Those intrenched in power, but who are doubtful of the tenableness of their position, never argue. It is a word and a blow. "It is against our policy, and we need no further defence." Prejudice pays a tribute to truth by refusing to consider the merits of the case. The moral position of the South, from the beginning until now, has been wholly indefensible.

Whenever they attempt to justify their attitude, the intellectual and moral hollowness of their position is quickly revealed. There is not a right minded white man in the South today but who is ashamed of the discredited arguments which their fathers advanced in defence if human slavery. The apologists for Negro suppression today show the same paucity of moral and intellectual resource. Tillman and Tom Watson could only asseverate, assert and swear. Those who feel forced to defend the wrong side of a moral issue are indeed to be pitied.

The Professor was summarily dismissed and sought occupation in the North.

Ill fares that land whose genius and conscience is drained away by reason of local intolerance.

A brief chapter in the story still remains. Professor Kerlin sued the trustees for non-fullfilment of contractual obligations. He could not find a qualified white lawyer in Virginia to undertake the case. Herein is the narrow-minded intolerance of the South self-revealed. This high-minded Southern professor selected competent colored attorneys to handle the case, not as a studied affront to Southern prejudice and tradition, but simply because the declination of white jurists consults made this course necessary.

Professor Kerlin is a high type of American manhood that believes in the freedom of speech and the rights of man. It is easy to believe that he is typical of many a Southern man of liberal impulses who chafes under the galling gyves of provincialism prejudice, and who would, if he could, gladly free himself from the bonds of soul blighting prejudice of race.

RECOGNITION OF NEGRO'S PROGRESS IN THE SOUTH.

Tuskegee Institute, Ala., May 16, 1923.

Editor The Advertiser:

Allow me to make the following statement:

Many of our southern white friends have recently sought to express in some tangible way their deep gratitude for the unselfish devotion of our mothers (slavery-time negroes) and our fathers—even though no monument to them has been suggested—who were just as loyal to their owners as were our women.

It is felt that it would not be out of place also if more were said of the first and second generations of these same negro people. Have they not a sense of honor that is equally high and well tempered to meet the present conditions as was true of their mothers and fathers in their day and time? It is not thought opportune to praise individual negroes to the extreme and at the expense of the race. The mass of negroes will discount such, but in a broad and impartial way, set forth facts on the progress of the race as a whole in South in the past twenty-five years. If the negro is needed to help develop this section (which is commonly conceded), it is suggested that in their own way the daily white papers of the South carry on a system of publicity, setting forth some of the many good traits and virtues of the "new" southern negro as a racial group at the present time, as for instance:

(a) Home ownership; (b) education; (c) religious growth; (d) business; (e) professions; (f) the negro in the world war; (g) the negro as farmers, mechanics, common laborers, etc.

The white South could tell these stories more accurately than anybody from the outside. They know that the negro responds more quickly to praise, encouragement and fair treatment than any other separate racial group living among white people.

Most of the southern states are putting on advertising campaigns to attract white farmers from other sections into the South. Similar methods might be employed to help keep negro labor here which the South already has.

It is believed that through such campaigns much good can be accomplished. It is also thought that no other agency can do as much constructive good at the present time as the southern press towards welding the friendship of the two races, for indeed there is much distrust and misunderstanding existing now, and the negroes who are going north in large numbers are carrying, by word of mouth, a kind of news that is destined to do harm to this section of the country for many years to come, unless certain counteracting forces are set in motion at once. In order to be effective, the desired change must first come from within.

Race Problem — 1923.
United States.

Race Co-Operation

IN making out a program for the All-Race Conference the selection of a keyword was of utmost importance. The committee deliberated at great length to make sure that no mistake was made. It was at once seen that it would be needless to parallel the programs of our usual conventions and organizations. The anecdote of Abraham Lincoln was brought into play. When the great War President consented to meet representatives of the Confederacy as to some compromise basis of ending the war, Mr. Lincoln insisted on only one word. He said to the Southern representatives: "If you let me write Union at the top of the page, you may write any thing you please underneath." The committee decided to write co-operation at the head of the program and felt that this was of far greater importance than anything that could possibly be appended below that caption. It was in this wise that the keyword of the conference came to be adopted. Co-operation is absolutely essential to race salvation. If we were united in aim and objective, we could ask whatever we would and it would be granted unto us. There is neither the power nor disposition in our civilization to deprive eleven million American citizens of their just deserts if they demand them with one united voice. But as long as we proceed by divided counsel, our numbers but add to our weakness. Divide and conquer is a motto as old as human oppression. The overlord always seeks to dominate the underman by keeping him divided. To quote from myself: "The white man hopes to keep us under by keeping us asunder." He has played this game successfully from time immemorial. Will he be permitted to play it to the end? The salvation or damnation of the race depends upon the answer. If the intelligencia of the race cannot devise a statesmanship which will lead the race to unity of aim and purpose in things essential to racial welfare, then our higher education is a failure and leads to no desired end.

VIEWS and REVIEWS

By James Weldon Johnson, Contributing Editor.

PAUL D. CRAVATH ON SEGREGATION.

Cleveland, Ohio, papers last week in giving an account of a speech made by Paul D. Cravath at a dinner of the Union Club reported Mr. Cravath as saying:

> "The only solution of the Negro Problem is complete segregation and the building up of a seperate Negro society. To do this it is necessary that we educate Negro leaders to build and maintain that society."

This is no new doctrine and it deserves attention only because of the man by whom it was enunciated. Paul D. Cravath is chairman of the Board of Trustees of Fisk University. Mr. Cravath's father was the first President of that University and it is probable that Mr. Cravath received his earlier education at Fisk.

Present at the dinner were Dr. Wallace Buttrick, chairman of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation; E. M. Williams, president of the Cleveland Board of Education; and a number of leading citizens of Cleveland. Dr. McKenzie, the president of Fisk, was also present.

Mr. Cravath is a great lawyer and, naturally, has had opportunity to study the Negro question. How he can arrive at such an absurd judgment as he seems to have made is difficult to understand.

But even if Mr. Cravath does not understand it, thinking Negroes do understand that complete segregation means nothing more or less than a permanent secondary status for the Negro in America, and that the Negro will not accept. There are only two choices for the Negro in America—either full and unlimited American citizenship or a permanent and unalterable secondary status. He must either rise to the one or fall to the other. There is no middle ground. If the Negro either accepts or has forced upon himself complete segregation he need never expect to participate in the common rights of American citizenship. The two things are self-contradictory.

Of course, the solution of the whole thing is the rating of men by their individual worth, character and abilities.

This statement by Mr. Cravath is a strange one coming from the chairman of the Board of Trustees of one of the great Negro universities. We shall watch and see what reply the Board of Trustees of Fisk University will have to make to it.

The Negro Sanhedrin

Some criticism has been waged against the term "Sanhedrin." A good Baptist brother came to me in some excitement, and demanded that the word be changed, as in the minds of many the most significant meaning of "Sanhedrin" is that it was the body that condemned our Lord. The official name is "All-Race Conference."

> Sanhedrin is a sort of rhetorical synonym which more easily fixes the movement in the popular imagination. The term originally was applied to the highest Jewish Court, composed of the leaders and elders of Israel. In 1806 Napoleon Bonaparte called a Sanhedrin of the Jews in his wide dominion and requested them to formulate stated relations with the gentile world, in all matters wherein they functioned apart. The outcome of this deliberation laid the basis of dealing of the Jews with the Gentiles down to the present time.

The Negro Sanhedrin is calculated to assume something of the sense and significance of its Israelitish prototype. By the way, I notice that a call has recently gone out for an all-Jewish Conference. The scriptures are daily being fulfilled: through the seed of Abraham shall all the nations of the earth be blest including even the sons of Africa.

That Uncle Tom Negro.

We have quite enough of the Uncle Tom Type of Negro in America. There never was any mandate for him in this country as judged by its ideals of equality and freedom for all. Yet we have never been without him. During the days of Negro enslavement there may have been some excuse for him. There certainly is no such excuse for him today. Indeed he is only in demand by those white people who would like to perpetuate the class distinction for which the enslavement of one human by another has always stood. The days of slavery art over and both Uncle Tom and his would be master are mischievous anachronisms, which darken counsel and militate against wholesome and indispensable understanding between the races.

The Uncle Tom Negro is marked by his painful politeness, flattery, and self segregated fawnings. He usually has his hat under his arm in the presence of white folk. He is obsequious in his gestures and seems ready to jump over the moon at the suggestion of his white master. He has a long line of idiotic flattery always on top and meets a smile or a reflection on his manhood or a swift kick from a white man with a skulking that puts the traditional yellow dog to shame. He is always wanting something. In fact he is a professional beggar ready to lick spittle personally or to sell his entire family or race for a mess of pottage.

Now there is no objection to any man's being polite, considerate of others and modest in spirit. Indeed there is no excuse for any Negro not being a gentleman any time or place. He can be upstanding, respectful, and self-respecting withal. These qualities coupled with sincere, honest, intelligent purpose wll always win respect and admiration. Against these things there is no law. Nor can there be. It is wholly in the province of every Negro to have people respect him, whether they like him or not.

One of the detestable features of the Uncle Tom Negro is his colossal hypocrisy. He is not so inherently polite, nor does he respect white people more than other Negroes. He is just playing the game. He knows most white people are usually full of conceit and he capitalizes it for profit. He knows in his own heart that he is a consummate liar. So does the white man who like to be "Uncle Tommed" and doesn't mind paying the bill. He praises this racial sycophant to the skies gives him tlaborate space in the white press and parades his most silly twaddle as words of profound wisdom to be laid seriously to the heart by the entire Negro race.

Uncle Tom is found in all ranks among us from some of the few remaining slave-time Negroes to be presidents of some of our Negro Schools in the South. At all times he is a public nuisance. He does not represent any manly Negro or group of Negroes. He has never made any permanent contribution to his Race and cannot because he predicates all things on expediency rather than truth which makes men free. His monkey antics and oracular Negro stories calculated to tickle the ears of the white man at the expense of the Negro, constantly humiliate and hinder us. May his tribe hastily decrease.

—Indianapolis Freeman.

DR. DUBOIS AND SEGREGATION

THE Crisis editor, Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, has created excitement in the house of his friends, by stating facts in that plain blunt manner which characterizes some of his utterances. Some of them are up in arms and others fallen in spirit, because the N. A. A. C. P. mentor said plainly, "I, therefore, glory in separate schools." They were startled, amazed, disturbed and disordered by the confession of the erudite editor of the Crisis. Careful thought upon what the Crisis editor said, would enable every dissatisfied auditor to accept the truth stated by Dr. DuBois and share his glory without dissent.

Every Negro who amounts to anything in America, is what he is because he is first of all things a man of Negro blood. Few would have the chance to be what they are, if they were white. J. Francis Lee, Rev. Wm. Lloyd Imes, Attorney G. Edward Dickerson, Dr. J. Wesley Bailey and Rhoda Tilton are enjoying the opportunities and advantages of being Negroes. If they were white, it is doubtful if either one of them would be known outside of the neighborhoods in which they reside. Imes is a Negro preacher with a Negro congregation. Attorney Dickerson, Dr. Bailey and perhaps all the others get most of their profit and joy out of life because of the fact of segregation—voluntary or involuntary.

DuBois was right when he said: "We must hang to segregation to save our race." Without segregation, American Negroes would be nothing—absolutely nothing today. It matters not what they may say or whom they may denounce for believing and saying so, it is a fact walking nude and unashamed in America. Negro ministers, teachers, journalists, physicians, lawyers, business men and laborers would have small chance in life without segregation. Their opportunities are slight enough with it. Because of segregaton, American Negroes have ministers, teachers, journalists, lawyers, physicians, business men and other representative characters whose lives and careers are an inspiration to the present generation and will be to those folllowing.

Dean Kelly Miller's All-Race Conference Makes Progress Select Date, Approve Program

By NORMAN L. McGHEE

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 21.—Dean Kelly Miller's All-Race Conference Program has been making progress even though there has not been much publicity lately. When the movement was launched in New York City under the general direction of the temporary United Front Conference composed of the National Equal Rights League, the African Blood Brotherhood, the Friends of Negro Freedom, the International Uplift League, the N. A. A. C. P. and the National Race Congress, a Committee on the All-Race Conference with plenary and final powers was designated. This committee has been holding meetings regularly for the purpose of arranging for the conference.

Committee on All-Race Conference

The committee is as follows: Dean Kelly Miller, chairman pro tem; James F. Bowie, secretary pro tem; Dr. M. A. N. Shaw, James L. Neil, Maurice E. Spencer and Wm. Monroe Trotter, representing Equal Rights League; James W. Johnson, Robert W .Bagnall, Richetta G. Randolph and Prof. L. M. Hershaw, the N. A. A. C. P.; R. B. Moore, C. V. Briggs, W. A Domingo and Otte E. Husiwoud, the African Blood Brotherhood; A. Phillip Randolph and George Schuyler, the Friends of Negro Freedom; Dr. D. N. E. Campbell, the International Uplift League; Prof. John R. Hawkins, the A. M. E. Church; Miss Nannie Burroughs, the Baptist women; Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, the National Federation of Colored Women; James A. Cobb, the Legal Fraternity; Dr. A. M. Curtis, the Medical Fraternity; Henry P. Slaughter, the Fraternal and Benevolent Orders; J. Finlay Wilson, the Negro Press; Norman L. McGhee, the College Fraternities; Rev. D. D. Turpeau, the M. E. Church; Eugene Kinckle Jones, the National Urban League; Channing H. Tobias, the Y. M. C. A.; Dr. George E. Haynes, the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. Emmett J. Scott, Negro Business; Rev. W. H. Jernagin, the National Race Congress; Hon. Phil H. Brown, Negro Labor; Prof. G. C. Wilkinson, Negro Education; Rev. E. D. W. Jones and Rev. H. J. Callis, the A. M. E. Z. Church; Dr. Julia H. P. Coleman, the Negro Business Women; Rev. George D. Bullock, the Lott Carey Convention; Mrs. A. F. Hilyer, the Y. W. C. A.; and Rev. G. T. Long, the C. M. E. Church.

Method and Purpose of—Representation in Conference

The purposes and methods of the Conference have been discussed in all details and certain basic conclusions have been reached. These conclusions being that the All-Race Conference shall be held during the week of November 5, 1923. This is in accordance with the resolution that the meeting be held prior to any of the national conventions to be held during the year of 1924. It was also decided that instead of attempting to have a mass convention that the basis of representation be a flat assignment of ten delegates and ten alternates to all national organizations engaged in race activities; that the program of the Conference be arranged around special commissions so that definite study might be given to all subjects of racial interest instead of discussing them in mass convention. Co-operation is to be the key-word of the Conference which is to be a kind of "Super-Council" or "Super-Senate" of Negro organizations. Each organization under this program will elect delegates who will seek at the Conference to "legislate" in certain given directions for the benefit of the race.

Program of All-Race Conference

The general outline of the program is as follows: Monday, November 5th, 1923, Registration, Credentials, Home Assignments, etc.; beginning Tuesday, November 6th, and occupying the entire week various discussions based upon co-operation for race betterment will be conducted by the commissions representing the church and religious, fraternal and benevolent, educational, business and industrial, social workers, civil and political, women workers, health improvement, inter-racial relations and cultural organizations. The final session will be devoted to the report of the commission on plan and scope of a permanently organized race co-operative movement.

Invitations From Cities Desiring Conference

Pittsburgh, Atlantic City, New York, Louisville, Boston are among the cities planning to extend invitations to the Conference to hold its sessions in their city. Dean Kelly Miller will be pleased to receive word from other cities wishing to entertain the Conference. On a tour covering practically the entire country, beginning June 11th, Dean Miller, the Father of the All-Race Conference, will give out first-hand to the people the purposes and method of the Conference. It is hoped that every member of the race will avail himself or herself of this splendid opportunity to get a clear understanding of the workings of this movement.

Officers—Committees

Prof. John R. Hawkins, financial secretary A. M. E. Church, has been elected treasurer with power to select additional members who will constitute the Committee on Ways and Means. Mr. James F. Bowie, Washington, D. C., has been elected secretary prot tem; Mr. James L. Neill, corresponding secretary pro tem; Dr. Emmett J. Scott, Washington, D. C., has been elected chairman of the Press Committee with power to select additional members, who are Prof. L. M. Hershaw, Hon. Phil H. Brown, Norman L. McGhee, James F. Bowie and James L. Neill. It has been decided to elect an Administrative or Executive Committee to function during the summer months in order that everything will be in readiness for the meeting next fall. The sessions of the Committee on All-Race Conference have been characterizd by a spirit of profound appreciation of the momentous task ahead and by a subordination of everything except co-operation for the general good of the race.

DR. DUBOIS AND SEGREGATION

THE Crisis editor, Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, has created excitement in the house of his friends, by stating facts in that plain blunt manner which characterizes some of his utterances. Some of them are up in arms and others fallen in spirit, because the N. A. A. C. P. mentor said plainly, "I, therefore, glory in separate schools." They were startled, amazed, disturbed and disordered by the confession of the erudite editor of the Crisis. Careful thought upon what the Crisis editor said, would enable every dissatisfied auditor to accept the truth stated by Dr. DuBois and share his glory without dissent.

Every Negro who amounts to anything in America, is what he is because he is first of all things a man of Negro blood. Few would have the chance to be what they are, if they were white. J. Francis Lee, Rev. Wm. Lloyd Imes, Attorney G. Edward Dickerson, Dr. J. Wesley Bailey and Rhoda Tilton are enjoying the opportunities and advantages of being Negroes. If they were white, it is doubtful if either one of them would be known outside of the neighborhoods in which they reside. Imes is a Negro preacher with a Negro congregation. Attorney Dickerson, Dr. Bailey and perhaps all the others get most of their profit and joy out of life because of the fact of segregation—voluntary or involuntary.

DuBois was right when he said: "We must hang to segregation to save our race." Without segregation, American Negroes would be nothing—absolutely nothing today. It matters not what they may say or whom they may denounce for believing and saying so, it is a fact walking nude and unashamed in America. Negro ministers, teachers, journalists, physicians, lawyers, business men and laborers would have small chance in life without segregation. Their opportunities are slight enough with it. Because of segregaton, American Negroes have ministers, teachers, journalists, lawyers, physicians, business men and other representative characters whose lives and careers are an inspiration to the present generation and will be to those folllowing.

Dean Kelly Miller's All-Race Conference Makes Progress Select Date, Approve Program

By NORMAN L. McGHEE

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 21.—Dean Kelly Miller's All-Race Conference Program has been making progress even though there has not been much publicity lately. When the movement was launched in New York City under the general direction of the temporary United Front Conference composed of the National Equal Rights League, the African Blood Brotherhood, the Friends of Negro Freedom, the International Uplift League, the N. A. A. C. P., and the National Race Congress, a Committee on the All-Race Conference with plenary and final powers was designated. This committee has been holding meetings regularly for the purpose of arranging for the conference.

Committee on All-Race Conference

The committee is as follows: Dean Kelly Miller, chairman pro tem; James F. Bowie, secretary pro tem; Dr. M. A. N. Shaw, James L. Neill, Maurice E. Spencer and Wm. Monroe Trotter, representing Equal Rights League; James W. Johnson, Robert W .Bagnall, Richetta G. Randolph and Prof. L. M. Hershaw, the N. A. A. C. P.; R. B. Moore, C. V. Briggs, W. A Domingo and Otte E. Husiwoud, the African Blood Brotherhood; A. Phillip Randolph and George Schuyler, the Friends of Negro Freedom; Dr. D. N. E. Campbell, the International Uplift League; Prof. John R. Hawkins, the A. M. E. Church; Miss Nannie Burroughs, the Baptist women; Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, the National Federation of Colored Women; James A. Cobb, the Legal Fraternity; Dr. A. M. Curtis, the Medical Fraternity; Henry P. Slaughter, the Fraternal and Benevolent Orders; J. Finlay Wilson, the Negro Press; Norman L. McGhee, the College Fraternities; Rev. D. D. Turpeau, the M. E. Church; Eugene Kinckle Jones, the National Urban League; Channing H. Tobias, the Y. M. C. A.; Dr. George E. Haynes, the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. Emmett J. Scott, Negro Business; Rev. W. H. Jernagin, the National Race Congress; Hon. Phil H. Brown, Negro Labor; Prof. G. C. Wilkinson, Negro Education; Rev. E. D. W. Jones and Rev. H. J. Callis, the A. M. E. Z. Church; Dr. Julia H. P. Coleman, the Negro Business Women; Rev. George D. Bullock, the Lott Carey Convention; Mrs. A. F. Hilyer, the Y. W. C. A.; and Rev. G. T. Long, the C. M. E. Church.

Method and Purpose of—Representation in Conference

The purposes and methods of the Conference have been discussed in all details and certain basic conclusions have been reached. Race Problem—1923.
United States.

BINGHAMTON N. Y. SUN
MAY 11 1923

WHY NOT BE FAIR?

Some phases of the Southern point of view toward the Negro we find distinctly puzzling. We sat next a Georgian at the performance of the Ethiopian Art Theater the other night and he shared our enthusiasm for the first play on the bill, which is called "The Chip Woman's Fortune."

"But of course," he added, "these actors aren't really Negroes. All of them have white blood."

When the Negro achieves success in the arts, the smallest admixture of white blood is noted and the credit is duly assigned to the Nordic race. But when he rides on a railroad train below the Mason and Dixon line one drop of Negro blood is sufficient to place him definitely in the ranks of the black race and put him in the Jim Crow car.—Heywood Broun, in the New York World.

Booker T. Washington said once upon a time, "The Negro blood is the most potent blood there is. You may take a man with ninety-nine parts of white blood and one part of Negro blood and invariably he is declared by the white race to be a Negro. According to white reckoning one drop of Negro blood is far stronger than ninety-nine drops of white blood."

It is a common assertion of men of white blood that all that is fine and good in the Negro from a white man's standpoint is due to any Caucasian blood he may possess. This, of course, is not true. Paul Lawrence Dunbar, the poet, was a full-blooded Negro, just to mention one man of color who became distinguished without the help of an infusion of white blood.

The Negro has capacity to be very much of a man without any Aryan sanguinolent. It is due the white man's assumed but not always proven sense of superiority that he will not—particularly if he be a Southerner—admit that anything good can be discovered in a black man which does not trace to the causes which have mulattoed him. Facts that are demonstrable do not bear out this assertion, but the lie is still persistent among white folks of a certain inferior grade. They assert it with great emphasis for the purpose of proving not only the superiority of their own race but the inferiority of the black race as well.

It is easily shown by statistics gathered by the United States Government that during the half century of freedom the colored man has known he has shown capacity as a business man in many branches of commerce and manufacture, and that he has administrative ability the ownership of businesses that range through the whole mercantile and fiscal catalogue proves beyond dispute.

The great trouble is now and has been ever that a voluble and ignorant white contingent has always loudly denounced the Negro race individually as well as collectively. The comparative silence of the rest of the whites in this country has seemingly given assent to the untrue assertions of the ignorant Negro baiters. Common justice demands that the bald truth be told.

There is not on record in all history a more wonderful chapter of human achievement than that which tells of what our colored population has accomplished in educational, ethical, industrial and intellectual ways since the shackles of slavery were stricken off and the light of education has been let in. And what the colored man has achieved has been in the face of great obstacles gratuitously and maliciously erected in his thorny pathway by the gross injustices of the self-styled superior race which has so grievously wronged him for centuries. How any white person with sensibility can have the heart to put out anything but a helping hand to the man of color has been one of the greatest of mysteries to us. They need it so badly and they deserve it so richly from those who have for centuries wronged them so deeply!

ALL RACE CONFERENCE

The Atlanta Independent

Possibly a year ago Professor Kelly Miller got it into his head that a great race conference, representative of the thought and character of our group, would prove a helpful step in the solution of our problems. Because of the high character of the man, the movement took the name "Sanhedrin." 8-9-23

About April 23rd, certain superficial organizations, composed of self-selected race leaders, met in New York and took over the Kelly Miller idea and named it All Race Conference, naming Professor Miller chairman pro tem. These self-constituted leaders named the personnel of the committees over which Professor Miller is permitted to preside, selected the organizations to be represented in the All Race Conference and allotted the number of delegates to each. Atlanta

Without disagreeing with the wisdom of Professor Miller's Sanhedrin Council, we took the position then, and adhere to it now, that no good could come out of any movement dominated by the same old gang of professional politicians and self-constituted leaders of fake organizations which had misled and exploited the people for the last twenty-five years. To which Brother Miller dissented, and denied that he had been disposed of by giving him a minor place in his own movement, and that the Conference would not be hand-picked, but purely representative in personnel and character. The public is familiar with the discussion that has gone on between us and Brother Miller, and is advised that Brother Miller admits that we are substantially right. Read his communication in this issue.

We charged that the men who took over Professor Miller's idea were patent-back, self-constituted leaders, and that their motives were ulterior; that their religion was graft, and they had taken over the Sanhedrin to head off any good it might do and leave them free to exploit and mislead the people.

First, let us examine the record of the movement so far made:

(a) Kelly Miller surrendered his movement, body and boot, to six organizations, only one of which has a bona fide following.

(b) These self-constituted leaders changed the name of the movement, elected themselves the executive committee, with Kelly Miller as chairman pro tem., in exchange for the surrender of his "Big Idea."

(c) These self-constitutes then proceeded to handpick the organizations entitled to representation in the All Race Conference, and placed the burden of raising the graft upon the shoulders of Brother Miller, through a membership selling scheme of $5.00 a seat.

(d) The substitution of money consideration as a basic qualification for membership in the conference, instead of the will of the people, as expressed by their suffrage.

If the officers have been chosen, the place selected, delegates handpicked, program gotten out, speakers selected, address written, what is the need of the Conference? There seems to be nothing to do except to complete the budget of graft and adjourn without date.

Let us ask Brother Miller, who seems to think he is responsible for everything, a few questions. Will there be any limit to the number of seats for sale at $5.00 each? What will become of the will of the people, if you have more $5.00 delegates than you do representatives elected by the people? You say you need $5,000.00 to cover the expenses; have you a budget, or are you guessing? You said some time ago that the following civic organizations met in New York and took over the movement with yourself at the head, viz: N. A. A. C. P., Friends of Freedom, Equal Rights League, African Blood Brotherhood, et al.—we don't remember the other two—possibly you do. Excepting the N. A. A. C. P., will you be good enough to give the public the names of the officers of the other five, telling where and when they were elected and the membership of each? Also location of their headquarters and the occupation of their presidents and secretaries, if they have any visible means of support?

If these men met you and took over your idea and are now calling on the public for $5,000.00, the people have a perfect right to know who they are and whether they work or loaf. When you invited these self-constituted leaders to meet you, if you called them, why did you leave Garvey out, and he had a larger personal following than the six invited organizations combined? Did you invite the six organizations to meet you in New York, or did they invite you? If you will tell the people who the men are who constitute the organizations which took over your idea and placed the burden of raising the money to float the scheme on your shoulders, and what their daily occupations are, it will be no more than what the public expects of every honest man who calls on it to support his idea, and may help you sell some seats and encourage the dear people to send some delegates.

Speak out, Chairman Miller.

THE SAME OLD SELF-CONSTITUTED LEADERS.

6/2 8/23

The race is weary of being imposed on and being misrepresented by a self-constituted and self-appointed leadership. It was earnestly hoped that when Mr. Kelly Miller suggested a race conference to look into the economic, social and political welfare of the Negro throughout America, that we would have a representative gathering fresh from the touch of the people. We never dreamed that the same old gang who had misrepresented the race for twenty-five years, would take over Prof. Miller's movement and appropriate it to selfish purposes. But when we see the aggregation of misfits, who have arrogated unto themselves the right to hold the conference, arrange the program, select the officers and the place, and as a clever way of disposing of Prof. Miller give him a temporary office in his own movement, we despair of any good coming out of the movement. In fact, the conference has already been had; the officers have been selected and the address to the people prepared, and all the end that the dictators and self-appointees have for the movement is to fleece the delegates of a little money and to lay the foundation for the continued exploitation of the masses.

If we are to have such a conference as Mr. Miller had in mind, who appointed the agents of the N. A. A. C. P., the Equal Rights League, The African Blood Brotherhood, the Friends of Freedom and the lesser lights from churches and other organizations to represent the masses? What authority, except self-arrogation, has this bunch of professional leaders to represent anybody? If we are to have a conference that is democratic in spirit and which represents the real people of America, the self-constitutes have not gone about it in the right way. All that was necessary to have such a conference as the public thought Mr. Miller had in mind, would have been for Mr. Miller and a few others, equally as representative as himself, to issue a call, setting out the reasons therefor, and call the representatives of our group to meet in some centrally located place, for the purpose of considering whatever causes or conditions the promoters had in mind, and then permit the conference, itself, as made up of the real representatives of the people to perfect a temporary organization and such other organizations as would serve the best interest of the people of America.

Let the conference outline its program and issue the address to the people, and the only organization preliminary to the convening of the conference would have been a local organization for the purpose of looking out for homes, selecting a place and making such other necessary local arrangements as are necessary to pull off a large gathering or convention of people.

The efforts of these other organizations, which represent nobody except the selfishness of the men who constitute them, is nothing less than an effort to thwart and misdirect the purposes that Prof. Miller had in mind, and the country is deceived that he would become such an easy victim to the intrigues and plot of the self-constituted bunch of race-progress destroyers.

Dean Miller, who is the father of the idea, has become a secondary factor, and the bunch of self-constitutes, who undertake to dictate the policy of the race in all matters, are the big I's; but the race has no confidence in them. They have accomplished nothing for the race, except to remove it further from a full enjoyment of its economic, social and political rights.

The organizations represented by the men who have taken from Mr. Miller his idea, have only one point in view, and that is to keep Mr. Miller from organizing a movement that is constructive in character and helpful in results. These men have done nothing themselves, and their determination is that nobody else shall do anything. What has either of them contributed constructive to the racial character? Each of them is a liability charged against our race, and in no sense stand as an asset in the estimation of those whom we must convince of our worth and usefulness.

These men met in conspiracy in New York. The rank and file is tired of being exploited by a self-constituted leadership. We are tired of a bunch of self-constitutes making capital out of our political afflictions and economic poverty. The race is weary of them and will follow them no further. This gang is a set of destructive agitators, without a constructive program, each in a way, working against the other, and for the first time in the history of these organizations, which consists only of the men who style themselves leaders, have been able to get together on a definite program, and they have gotten together this time because they felt that a conservative man, like Mr. Miller, would challenge the confidence of the American people, and that their organizations, which have for their purpose only, the exploitation of the masses for the benefit of self-styled leadership, would be put out of business, and they had better make a common cause, form a conspiracy to thwart the purposes of Mr. Miller by capturing his convention and turning it into a hot-air circus and a resolution mill.

These leaders are very largely a set of men out of jobs,—clerks, demagogues, agitators, non-property holders and professional self-styled leaders for bread and butter.

Scoffs At Social Equality As a Bugaboo of the Politicians

Home Mission Secretary of the Southern Methodist Church Says There Isn't Any Such Animal and Never Will Be. Tells What South Owes to Its Negro Neighbor.

(By Associated Press)

Lake Junaluska, July 12.—"Social equality is a bugaboo of politicians," declared Dr. J. W. Perry, home mission secretary, Methodist Episcopal church, south, in an address, "What the South Owes to Its Negro Neighbor," before the social service conference of Southern Methodists, in session here.

"It does not exist and no revolution is in prospect to usher it into being. Let us bury it and forget it, and our social relations take their course under the direction of an All-Wise Providence."

Dr. Perry said the declaration of independence in its first paragraph assumes as axiomatic truth the statement that "all men are born equal."

"But," he continued, "to stop with that is to misunderstand the meaning of the paragraph. Soap box orators and corner loafers are often heard prating the untruth of the statement. They say men are not born equal; and they are not, for they are not equal physically at birth, not equal mentally; not equal in social rank. None of which the declaration proclaims. In the discussion of such questions as that before us today is it not true that we of the south are too prone to raise the bugaboo of social equality, as an old mountaineer of my native country when looking at a giraffe in a circus declared, 'They haint no such animule.'"

"The declaration proceeds to define what is meant by equality of birth," Dr. Perry continued, "that all men have certain inalienable rights, such as life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. These are rights of which no man can be justly deprived without due process of law.

"Every man has the right to live. He did not bring himself into the world, nor is he responsible for the flag under which his life begins, nor for the race or class to which he belongs. He has a right to live and the duty of a Christian society is to protect him in that right. If the priests and Levites had policed the road to Jericho the work of the Good Samaritan would not have been needed. It could have been traveled in safety. The fact that a road existed which was notoriously unsafe for a peaceable citizen to travel was reproach to the social order of Palestine.

"A very black spot rests upon the character and honor of our country—citizens are too often deprived of life without legal process. The non-Christian world questions our religious faith and integrity as a people because of this. When a scholarly and cultured Hindoo gentleman some time ago was asked by an American for his opinion of the value of our Christion missions, he replied that he did not think a nation whose citizens lynched many black men had any religion to export. Our missionaries in every land meet the same criticism. 'Why do you not stop the fearful crime of lynching and such violence at home before you come preaching a gospel of righteousness to us?' To our credit be it said that the number of victims has been growing smaller each year and that some southern states have practically eliminated it. We owe it to ourselves and to the race which has served us for generations to end the evil in every state. It is the only way to secure justice and insure just punishment for every crime."

"The Christian south is under obligation to provide for the liberty of every man, "Dr. Perry asserted. "No one desires to see involuntary slavery introduced into the country again. . . . If peonage be practiced in a few other countries, it must not be in the Christian south. Thank God! Wherever it dares to lift its head today in all our south it is made to feel the strong arm of the law. And yet has our negro neighbor been accorded in every place the liberty of economic justice?"

Dr. Perry said every man of whatever race deserves the best chance the nation can provide to make himself the best and most useful neighbor and man he can make. The negro brought no tradition of home life from Africa.

"Do we not owe him Christian sympathy and help in the effort to make his home an institution which will contribute to the development of the best traits of character?" Dr. Perry asked. "Is it right to charge him high rent for poor quarters and leave his quarters in filth and darkness? To use his labor for our enrichment and put him to live in a miserable shack which no art could make attractive?

"If he is to make the best man possible he must have the blessing of a pure and holy religion. He is naturally religious. The race does not produce skeptics and infidels. We can learn from these neighbors as we try to help them. Their religious work is carried on under great handicaps. But their loyalty and devotion to their churches is inspiring, and their liberality puts us to shame.

"In 1860 the southern Methodist church had 247 of its white preachers appointed to work among the slaves. Now we are helping to support only 110 colored preachers, and that has not been done for many years. We must establish more contacts with them in their religious life. We can help them in training schools, institutes, and so know them better and give them the chance to know us. Do we not need this as well as they?

"The struggle of the negro race for education, which they must have if religion is to be anything more than superstition, is a story of one of the most heroic struggles in the history of our nation. Have we toted fair with them? Have we not neglected their school houses, or failed to build them? Have we not given them too meager a share of the public school fund?

"Kentucky and Missouri are the only states that show a disposition to treat every child alike. Louisiana spends $23.37 for each white child and $3.49 only for each negro. Even North Carolina, which is leading the whole south in its program for negro education spends $15.37 for every white child and $5.83 for each colored child or nearly three to one. Is that up to the Christian standard of a square deal? Is it wise or right to compel those who want to prepare themselves for the best service in teaching or other forms of service to go to the northern schools for that preparation? But where else could they go? Even the best schools, schools of highest grade for them in the south have not been builded by southern people and are not conducted with southern ideals. Should not the south, the southern Methodist church build for them and in co-operation with them a school in the south where under the best traditions of the south, and with the ideals of the south, surrounded by the balmy atmosphere of the south a negro may be able to prepare himself for any special service to which he devotes his life, and be a trained workman who need not be ashamed?

"The world looks on us today and expects to lead in the way to right relationship," Dr. Perry said in conclusion.

Booker T. Washington Was Right.

"Dr. Booker T. Washington knew, and the Negro as a race knows that the economic problem lies at the very heart of the welfare of any race. The possibility of home and bread is the noblest possibility of civilization, and it is the indispensible condition of thrift, probity and truth. No people can do what is right or love what is good, if they cannot earn what they need." This statement is one of the many new evidences of a conscience stricken South. This statement is part of a speech made by Milton H. Fies, vice president of the Delardeleben Coal Company, before the annual meeting of the Alabama Mining Institute at Birmingham. This company may have for years practiced what they heretofore, perhaps, were afraid to preach. However the entire speech is unusually strong and is well worth reading by thoughtful students of the subject.

Race Problem—1923.
United States.

COLUMBIA S. C.

AUG 27 1923

THE RACE QUESTION.

That the United States cannot risk its civilization to oriental immigration, that there is a possibility of civil war between the East and the West in the United States, if the Japanese are permitted to overrun the West, and that the whole problem of oriental immigration to this country might be solved once and for all by a definite stand upon the part of the American government, are some of the high spots in the lecture of Professor William McDougall of Harvard University at the meeting of the Round Table Political Institute, Williamstown, last week.

The view of Professor Williams is not a very new one, but it is far more frank than that of the compromisers for temporary peace at Washington. The Japanese problem is one of the most cogent of race problems, as the Harvard man says, because the compromise of the government on the question a few years ago, sidesteps the inalienable right of every nation to say whom it will admit to its borders. On that basic ground this country will have to ultimately take its stand with its back to the wall.

A complete solution of the problem would be the revision of the immigration laws of this country, so that the census of 1890 would be used to determine the quotas of immigration groups rather than the census of 1910. Since there were but ten thousand Japanese in the United States in 1890, it may be seen at a glance that the Japanese problem would be solved, in that respect, at least, once and for all. This feature of the program was advocated by Professor McDougall with splendid logic.

In offering this suggestion Professor McDougall made it clear that he does not sponsor the restriction of Japanese and all other orientals from the United States on the ground of inferiority but rather on the ground of the incompatibility of stocks. The American people are incapable of assimilating orientals even if oriental immigrants are willing to be assimilated; and since every nation has right to preserve its own civilization, Professor McDougall affirms that the United States must sooner or later definitely take a stand against Japanese immigration.

That deduction does not leave the Japanese diplomat a single peg upon which to hang his hat. It cannot be logically denied. It is a pity that the race discussions at Williamstown could not be so widely broadcast that they would be familiar to the masses of the world. For example, it is a great thing to learn from a master in the field of psychology, a man who has tested his teahing by travel and observation in all quarters of the globe, that race is probably the primary factor in all world affairs. Some of us with different backgrounds think that Professor McDougall stresses overmuch his race doctrine, but he maintains a high argument for his proposition. And the real point is, he gives the immediate as well as future political meaning of race purity and race mingling. He is a scholar and not an alarmist, but just the same he does make a far-seeing person sit up.

Religion is another factor in politics that has been overlooked except in church history, and even there it has been unrelated to the great currents of life. Nationalism, a factor of impending power, has probably come into more assertiveness since the Great War than ever before in history. Many other factors are present in our life, but race is plainly of tremendous importance. We see it here at home.

The other day, Dr. Jesse Jones, one of the best authorities on the negro, spoke at Williamstown. He said the people of Boston are just like the people in Atlanta. The difference of attitude on the negro is not due to the two sections of the country, but to the numbers of that 'different' race. This is the principle —the attitude of a dominant race in a community to a 'different' race is determined by the proportion of the 'different' race to the dominant race. If the proportion is one to three, the attitude will differ greatly from the attitude where the proportion is only one to one hundred.

The problem is to get on with our neighbors and at the same time neither injure their stock nor our own. Can we do that without renouncing our democratic theory, or must we become aristocrats, in both the racial and social sense? If so, whither goes our Christianity, our religion of brotherhood? Nice question, that. And there is immigration. Professor McDougall arouses us by saying that if we had opened our gates to orientals a hundred years ago, by this times we should have two hundred millions of them in this country. What would have happened to our culture, our democracy, our race? Is he right, that our first duty is to close up our country in large part, and develop our nationalism, and by that means do our part in the world? It is another nice problem.

OUR LEGISLATURE'S OPPORTUNITY

The General Assembly or legislative branch of our state will meet in annual session on June 27, 1923, at which time the new Governor will be inaugurated and the officers elected in October, 1922, will go about the duties imposed upon them by a vote of the people nearly two years ago. Of course, at the time the Legislature and Governor were elected they may have represented the views of the people, but at this time, quite two years hence, they do not represent their constituents, for the reason their constituents' views and ideas of government have largely changed.

The Chattanooga Times
6/24/23

But the reason for writing this editorial is to point out to the Governor and Legislature, when it convenes, the opportunity to legislate for the benefit of all the people. Legislation in Georgia for a goodly number of years has been very largely class legislation or race legislation. Legislation enacted by our lawmakers did not contemplate the good of all the people. There has been too much legislation in favor of the white man and against the Negro. Very largely, though, a majority of our laws are fair, so far as enactment is concerned, but in their administration they are misapplied and discriminating.

But there is one question today that is affecting the commonwealth as no other question has in a number of years, and that question is migration, or the movement of a very large class of our working people to the north. Every chamber of commerce, business or social club, among both white and black, is discussing migration and its effect upon the economic welfare of the state; and the Legislature has the opportunity, if it will take advantage of it, to find out the cause and apply the remedy. It is a fundamental that the laboring man in every community is an essentially indispensable asset in the economic welfare of the community or state. Capital can neither increase nor pay a dividend when idle. It must have employment, and the most profitable way to employ capital is to furnish work at a wage above a living level for the working man.

The Negro has most largely been and is the chief labor factor in the south. The south's leading staple product—cotton—is made by the Negro. In fact, the Negro is very largely an agricultural factor, and prospers more, gets along better and makes a better man, physically, morally and intellectually, in the country than he does in town. But the shortsightedness of the white man, blinded with prejudice, has kept him from investing in the Negro as an asset. He has rather regarded him as a liability, and has not given him that care that his relation to the economic, industrial and social order in the south deserves.

The legislature now, facing the crisis that it is facing in the labor situation, has the opportunity to legislate with a view of correcting its economic neglects. The Negro is vitally interested in his own economic welfare, education of his children and his housing condition, and wants more economic opportunities to make a living, have a home and a bank account. He is troubled to the point of unrestfulness about the education of his children. He wants the opportunity to grow out of them useful, helpful and healthy men and women. He wants comfortable schoolhouses to house them in and capable teachers to teach them, not only to develop them in books, but physically and morally. He wants to remain in the south. It is his natural home. He had rather be here than anywhere else, because he knows the soil and the people who inhabit it. He knows the white man, though the white man knows but little of him; but he cannot stay here unless he can earn a wage sufficiently above the living level to educate his children, purchase him a home and to lay a little aside for a rainy day. And he cannot stay here, if he must be forever terrorized by the fear of mob law, lynching bees, Ku Kluxism, night riders and man regulators. He must have contentment; he must feel safe in the enjoyment of his life, liberty and property; he must feel that in the courts his case will be decided upon its merits, and that a white man will have no advantages before the law, by reason of his color, and that he will be put to no disadvantages by reason of his race or color. Confidence must be restored in the black man. The white man must impress him that he is willing to give him a square deal by actually delivering the goods. Public school funds must be distributed, not along the lines of race or color, but in the interest of the youth, and the facilities must be as adequate for the Negro youth as for the white youth. He must have every opportunity for his improvement and development that the white youth has. In fact, there must be an equality in the distribution of public rights, including public school funds among the people.

So the Legislature has the opportunity to stop migration—to check it, at least, until the law-abiding white man and patriotic and law-abiding colored man can appeal to those of our group who are inclined to leave, and persuade them to stop and consider before they pull up stakes and move to a section where they know not the soil, condition or people.

(a) The Legislature has the opportunity to pass an anti-lynch law, adequate legislation to suppress mob violence, and guarantee to every citizen the right and protection to enjoy life, liberty and property unmolested.

(b) To provide ample and adequate school facilities for the education of the Negro youth, substantial schoolhouses, competent, capable, consecrated teachers—men and women of character and learning—not only common schools, but high schools. The state of Georgia appropriates one thousand dollars a year for the higher education of the Negro.

(c) To establish an Agricultural and Mechanical school in every congressional district for the practical education of the Negro, and support said schools in the same manner and in the same way and just as adequately as the twelve Agricultural and Mechanical schools for the education of the white youth in the twelve congressional districts are supported.

(d) To repeal all contract labor laws. Since the state courts and the Supreme Court of the United States have declared them, unconstitutional. Thereby suppressing contract labor and every form of peonage, as now practiced in many parts of our state.

(e) To provide a building code which will have for its purpose the regulation of the building of homes in cities and in country, with a view of improving the health and lengthening the expectancy of the citizen body.

(f) To provide fair elections laws and elect a set of men to administer them who are fair and honest, and permit every elector to vote who qualifies under the law, without regard to race or color.

These suggestions suggest to the Legislature its opportunity to check migration and to restore the black man's confidence in the white man. Nothing can be done to check migration until the white man, by his actual performance, restores the black man's confidence in his willingness to give him a square deal. He must be paid a living wage, given more opportunity to work, and have better treatment on the railroads, street cars and every other place of contact with white men. White men must be more humane in their treatment or conduct toward Negro men and women, if they would have them remain in the south and become each year more dependable as a labor factor.

CAR WASHER AD IN DIXIE PAPER INSULT TO RACE

No Such Advt. in Northern Papers as Rotten Southern Sheets Print for Companies

WANTED—Nigger car washer. No colored gentlemen or loafers need apply. Must have references. Ingram & Co., Asheboro, N. C.

Greensboro, N. C., June 22.—Ordinarily this is a most conservative town. It has a population of close to 45,000 and there are many people, white and black, who would be more than a credit to any community. The Race folks are, for the greater part, sober, industrious and law-abiding. Many of them are skilled mechanics and some are recognized as artisans in certain lines which would mean credit and high salaries if it wasn't for the handicap of color. On the other hand many of the better class of whites show their friendship and esteem by hiring members of our group who are qualified, the fact that low wages are paid them being more a matter of local custom than anything else. Despite these conditions Greensboro and the surrounding territory have given their full quota toward the so-called "migration North" which has been causing so much trouble and worry among the whites throughout the Southland. Here, as elsewhere, the "causes" of the moving is a topic which is daily discussed by the thinking folks whose business and other connections are being affected.

Some Causes

Wise cracks regarding fear of the Ku Klux, references to high salaries paid white compared wtih those given Race workers, housing and sanitary conditions and all that sort of thing are suggested as being the principal reasons of the "getaway" of the thousands who are producing a condition in the South which will force the low-bred rednecks and hillbillies to work. There may be some truth in the suggestion, and then again there may not. Have a look at this clipping—taken from the classified "ad" columns of the Greensboro Daily News—and you may be able to form a better opinion as to why our men and women are kicking the Southern dust from their heels:

WANTED—Nigger car washer. No colored gentlemen or loafers need apply. Must have references. Ingram & Co., Asheboro, N. C.

Everybody in Greensboro knows Asheboro and everybody in Asheboro knows Ingram & Co., a dinky concern in a dinky town; but nobody in Greensboro among the classes of white and Race folks mentioned above considers the wording of this advertisement anything but a dirty insult to our men and women in both towns as well as a piece of poor policy on the part of a so-called "newspaper" that would print anything of the sort. If Ingram & Co. would take on one of the white bums with which both boros are infested they would deserve more credit than they might hope to gain through a rotten advertisement of the kind published in a rotten publication like the News.

Leaving There

Towns supporting newspapers like the News and burgs supporting firms like Ingram & Co. are no fit places for self-respecting, industrious members of the Race. Ads of the kind never appear in Northern newspapers and it is safe to bet that copy of the sort is never submitted for publication by firms in the North, no matter how small and obscure. If Ingram & Co. can get Racial help through such "readers" those who hire out to them are a blamed sight worse than the members of the firm and the dinky, dirty, Race-hating sheets that print their insulting calls for honest aid. There is room for thousands of our men and women throughout the North and an abundance of work at high salaries for them. There are living conditions awaiting them that even the middle class whites of the South do not enjoy. There are schooling conditions in the North for your children such as you have never dreamed of and there are privileges accorded you which, if sought in the South, would mean the knout, the torch or the lynchers' noose. Don't let the Southern whites fool you into believing anything different. This newspaper has told you the truth for many years and we are not lying to you now. All it asks is that you leave the drones behind. Take a look at who is doing the car washing for Ingram & Co. and folks of his stripe. Do this so you can feel assured that you will not be disgraced by a set of barnacles who have no self-respect or Racial pride. Come out. You can't find conditions any worse, and if you are the right sort you will win. There is no other result possible.

DUBOIS FOR SEGREGATION

Audience Resentful; Regard Him as a Knave

In our news account of the address of Dr. DuBois on the "Separate School" we said the consensus of opinion is that Du Bois in an attempt to help rehabilitate his friend Leslie Hill has hurt both himself and the N. A. A. C. P. in this city. And in his volumnous diatribe against the writer which we published in the Journal, Fielding Ford, treasurer of the local branch wrote: "It (lack of loyalty to N. A. A. C. P.) is the same germ that made you (the writer) wind up that disreputable article with the statement that you believed the membership drive in Philadelphia would suffer as a result of Dr. DuBois' address. This idiotic statement is on a par with your report of the address. (Ford's apology is now in order.) Even if it were true, ect., Dr. DuBois is not the N. A. A. C. P." By his last sentence Mr. Ford meant that the people would not hold the N.A.A.C.P. responsible and for that reason withhold their support. Dr. DuBois returned to Philadelphia last Sunday and under a slightly different subject before a packed house, delivered practically the same address, only going further in reiterating his support of Cheney the Jim Crow School. Result—one single new member, and a collection so we are informed, of thont eight dollars. The people showed that they not only held the N. A. A. C. P. responsible and that while they had been only disgusted at DuBois' endorsement of Jim Crow, and had been resentful against him before, now they consider him a knave. We do not reproduce his address here because it is too nauseating a melange with which to regail our readers, who live in the cradle of Liberty and who cannot countenance one definition of Liberty and Democracy for the white and another for the blacks. Just one word as to the question box. Any lawyer or professor of economics, following his profession, can easily answer questions in his particular line for his profession fits him for this very thing. Dr. DuBois' answers were not in the main, free and frank but mostly evasive. We say again that he is totally ignorant on the political situation here as was obvious to those who know it. The Negro here is in no position to bring about a single educational reform by his votes. DuBois is neither a leader nor a sage. Knave better expresses the Journal's opinion of him.

TREAT THE NEGRO RIGHT!

The following very timely and most commendable excerpt is from an editorial in The Greenville (S. C.) Piedmont, under the caption "For the negro who stays at home"—

"While thousands of negroes in South Carolina have joined the exodus to the north and west, the bulk of our negro population is still with us and may remain with us. So far as our observation extends, the leaders of the race in the state are staying here and are advising the rest of the colored population to do likewise. Probably many of us have not thought of this phase of the matter, but there are a large number of negroes in South Carolina who are and always have been law-abiding, thrifty, industrious and home-loving, who have been here all their lives and who will probably stay here. Love of the Palmetto State is by no means confined to the whites.

"In recognition of the loyalty and character of these people, as well as to encourage them to remain here, the whites, who control all the machinery of government, ought to see to it now that better schools and better housing, sanitation and streets are provided for the colored population."

As it is in South Carolina so it is in Georgia. Thousands have gone —many of them to their regret— but a great majority not only remained at home but in refusing to be lured by the flattering promises of the labor agents used their influences to prevent the mistakes that were made.

That the negro exodus was a most serious mistake is being daily demonstrated, if the news reports from the congested industrial centers of the north and west are to be believed, and if any reliance can be placed in the hundreds of letters that are coming into the south daily from southern negroes in the north.

The majority of the negroes are law-abiding, industrious, home loving, and contribute their part to the material welfare of the south.

The outstanding leaders among the race, almost to a man, have urged the negroes to remain in the south. At the same time they have urged—and correctly so—a more equitable distribution of the services of government in the interest of the negroes. They are entitled to better schools than they have, as a rule, in Georgia—and no doubt in other southern states. They are entitled to more governmental attention to their housing, sanitation, hygiene, open-air, playground and other services due them as human beings, and as a part of the industrial life of the south.

Says The Piedmont further—

"The average negro school in South Carolina is a disgrace to the state. The buildings are old and miserable, unsanitary, ill-lighted, ill-heated, if heated at all, dirty. Very little is spent on the education of the negro child for teachers and school equipment. The total expenditure in this state for negro schools is almost infinitesimal compared with what is spent for the white schools. The eagerness of the better class of negroes for better schools and their willingness to go into their own slim purses to help them is as pathetic as it is creditable. No man of good conscience and a right sense of justice can contemplate the facts about our negro schools without reaching the conclusion that it is the unavoidable duty of the whites to see to it that the negroes have far better schools."

Perhaps the situation is not as bad in Georgia as alleged in South Carolina, but it is far from being just and equitable. In Atlanta the negro schools are maintained under the same rules of health, air, protection, etc., as are the white schools. The buildings are not ample, nor are they ample for the whites, but the teachers are chosen for giving efficient training.

On the whole in Georgia, however, proper attention is not being paid to public negro education; and in many sections conditions very similar to those referred to by The Piedmont exist.

Says The Piedmont further—

"Equally a reproach to every community and the state are the living conditions of the average negro. Most of the colored population live in hovels, poorly lighted, unsanitary, uncomfortable, unfit for habitation. Conditions of sanitation among them are bad. Better housing would mean better health for them, as well as an incentive to thrift and industry, and more contentment and good order. They have no paved streets. They are entitled to betterment of their lot in all these respects.

"It is high time that the white citizenship take thought of all these wrong conditions and right them. The negroes who have stayed here, who are peaceful, law-abiding, hard-working and home loving, are entitled to more consideration than they have had in the past. Our policy toward them must be broader and more just."

These lines strike deep at the consciences of the people of Georgia as of other states in the south. The housing conditions are not what they should be—the incentives to thrift are not what they should be.

The white people of this state could do no greater service to themselves than to begin a general campaign for improvements in these matters. The healthfulness of negro colonies contributes to the health of the white people. The thrift, industry, contentment, amenableness of the negro population contribute most strikingly to the advantages of the whites. And the converse of these things is equally true.

There is much food for thought in The Piedmont's very timely editorial.

THE NEGRO CONFERENCE.

When the leading colored citizens of Georgia gathered here on July 4, to discuss cause and effect of the migration of their race to the industrial centers of the North and East, their deliberations attracted the thoughtful attention of all white citizens who have the best interests of the state at heart.

It is interesting to hear what the most thoughtful among the African race in our midst have to say in regard to Georgia's attitude toward their people.

In the letter, addressed to "all white citizens of Georgia," but primarily intended for the members of the general assembly, now in session, there is food for serious thought for us all. And there is, it must be admitted, cause, in that letter, for very serious searching of heart and admission of failure for the white race. Honesty can not deny that the Negroes make out a good case on many of the grounds on which they base their claim for better treatment.

Perhaps greatest stress is laid, by the Negroes themselves, on the lack of fair opportunities for education provided by the state. It is stated that out of $750,000 appropriated last year for higher education, only $15,000 of this was for Negro institutions. It is also declared that there is a total lack of agricultural colleges for the Negroes, though there is one in each congressional district for the whites, in addition to the Agricultural College at Athens. And the Negroes with justice ask, "How can the colored farmer adopt profitable, diversified farming, in place of the boll weevil-ruined cotton raising(if you don't teach him how?"

The complaint against the average housing conditions for Negroes, both in the cities and the rural communities, is also well founded. It is useless to point out a few high-class Negro homes and pretend that they are typical. They are not and we only fool ourselves when we shut our eyes to the wretched hovels in which the large majority of the Negroes live.

It would, in truth, be the best investment we could make, to raze these insanitary, ugly, disease and crime-breeding shacks, and provide, in their stead, simple and comfortable homes. The reduction in crime and disease alone would pay the expense in a very few years, even forgetting alutruistic reasons entirely.

While the Negro frankly says he does not want to leave the South, reasonable men can not criticize him for leaving when staying means no education for his children, no comforts for himself and unfair wages for his labor.

The above excerpt is clipped from the Atlanta Constitution, and it is so manly and covers so well what is in the Negro's mind with reference to migration or the movement of the Negroes to the North, the causes and the remedies, until we adopt it as our own sentiments, and want to both congratulate and thank Mr. Howell for the space he gave our address and the editoria analysis and endorsement of the sentiments expressed. We coul not write anything better were we to attempt, and we beg to add o this occasion that it is the mos manly and straight forward edi torial utterance that we have rea in a white daily in years; tha there is no evasion, no dodging, bu a frank statement of the truth a enunciated by the conference. N bolder editorial or braver utteranc could have been made by the Nev York World or any other metropolitan paper than the Constitution made with reference to our State-Wide Conference.

JUL 8 1923

THE NEGRO CONFERENCE

The Negro conference held in Atlanta last week for the purpose of discussion of the situation that the Georgia Colored people find themselves confronted with and the question of how to improve it, resulted in a statement to the people of Georgia, and especially to the Georgia Legislature, which calls for serious and sympathetic consideration. As all of us see most of the time through our own eyes, it is well to occasionally look at the world through the eyes of others. It is especially interesting, as the editor of The Atlanta Constitution observes, "to hear what the most thoughtful among the African race in our midst have to say in regard to Georgia's attitude towards their people."

The report gives recognition to the fact that thousands of White as well as Colored people in Georgia, on account of the ravages of the boll weevil, are without means of earning a living. Add to this situation the fact that the Colored people upon the whole do not know how to practice diversified farming, and you have a real economic tragedy and at least a temporary breakdown. This, of course, is the main reason why so many Colored people are going North, and why so many White people are seeking employment in the cotton mills and other industrial plants.

The Negro leaders of the Atlanta conference feel that the poor housing conditions on the most of the farms in Georgia make seriously against the health and morals of the Colored people, and that no investment that could be made would be more advantageous to both races than the proper housing of the Negroes. Complaint is also made against the type of overseer whose business it is to get all the work he can out of the Negro and who shows no special interest in the things that will make the Negro better morally and a better citizen.

Special stress is laid on the lack of fair opportunity for educational privileges. It is stated that out of the three-quarters of a million appropriated last year for higher education in Georgia only $15,000 of this was for Negro institutions. This is contrasted with other Southern States, North Carolina having appropriated over a million, Louisiana $500,000, Texas $500,000, Mississippi $400,000, and Virginia $750,000. While these States mentioned are much more generous in their appropriations for the higher education of the Whites than is Georgia, it seems almost unthinkable that with our large Negro population we would be appropriating such a small pittance as $15,000 for their higher education. While there is a feeling on the part of some against the education of the Negro in Latin and Greek, the higher education that the Negro is asking for is of a practical, agricultural and industrial type that will fit him for usefulness and for teaching these necessary things to the Colored youth. There can be no sound objection on the part of anyone against preparing anyone to become a good worker and a good citizen. To quote the statement of the conference, "how can the Colored farmers adopt profitably diversified farming in place of boll-weevil ruined cotton-raising if you don't teach him how?"

For years, Georgia has been providing a short-term course at the State Agricultural College for the benefit of the White farmers, where they may learn the latest methods of diversified farming and adapt themselves to the conditions forced upon us by the appearance of the boll weevil. It is just as much a matter of wisdom and foresight as of essential justice that a similar opportunity should be provided for the Colored people. If the Negroes do not have adequate seating capacity in their schools to accommodate great assemblages of Negro teachers and farmers, they do have in their churches, and no doubt they would gladly open these for such assemblages.

The conference seems almost forced to the belief that many of our laws are made primarily to be enforced against the Negro, and makes a plea for equal treatment before the law.

Their greatest source of alarm is mob violence, which they characterize as "the most disturbing menace of all the evil which we now suffer." It is further asserted that "no influence has done more to drive Colored people away from the State, to give Georgia a bad name in the mouths of those who live without its borders, to deter both capital and labor from our State, and to keep up the unsettled conditions of Colored labor here, than the influence of the mob." And "in the midst of it, no Colored person, however honest, industrious and law-abiding, can possibly feel himself safe overnight."

Towards the conclusion of the report, these unusual words are used: "The whole truth is, and you ought to know it, that a very large percentage of us have lost faith in either your willingness now or your intention ever to treat the Colored people justly and to allow them to become a basic part of our civilization." But that those who framed this have not entirely lost faith is indicated by the sentence which then follows—"This faith restored by unmistakable evidences to the contrary would infinitely improve the unsettled conditions among us."

The more exact truth is that the best elements of the Whites and the Colored do desire right, helpful relationship, and that they have faith in each other. The race prejudice that exists here in the South is not an unusual thing, but one of the factors that always has to be dealt with where races different in color and characteristics live side by side. As one intelligent Negro has put it, wherever the Colored man goes, he is going to take his problem with him.

It is highly important for the best element of Colored people to set their faces strongly against everything that incites fear and suspicion. The case quoted by the July World's Work is illuminating: "In a Kentucky town a bad Negro had shot a Sheriff while resisting arrest, and a mob was forming with intention of raiding the Negro quarters. The Inter-racial Commission nipped the riot in the bud by inducing the Negroes to issue hand-bills deploring the crime and offering a reward for the capture of the guilty man."

If the best Negroes would always take the lead in condemning the crimes that incite special resentment and fear, they would make it much easier for those of us who desire for them every opportunity to become good Negroes and good neighbors. On the other hand, it is highly incumbent upon the best White people to take the lead in condemning and preventing everything that tends to the degradation of the Negro.

Here in the South, we are confronted with one of the big problems of history, namely, how to attain to racial purity and integrity on the one hand, and how to give opportunity and justice on the other. If we solve it, we have done one of the big things in the history of civilization.

One of the leaders of the Atlanta conference was Prof. B. S. Ingram, head of the Negro Industrial School of Macon, who has proven a valuable factor to the sane and conservative forces of his race in the State.

A Negro on Segregation.

Editor The St. Louis Star: Segregation of races has been declared unconstitutional by the supreme court. The Bible tells us that of one blood God made all men and that there is no difference between the Jew and the Gentile.

There are some white people who have forgotten that the Civil War is over and what it was fought for. They have forgotten that the negro was made a citizen and given equal rights with any other citizen. They still look upon the negro as a beast or a thing to be avoided as a contagious disease, and that he has no rights that a white man ought to respect, and at every opportunity they belittle his efforts to better himself. White men do not show to negro women the same respect they do white women. After you have stood back for their women to get on a car they will not wait for any negro woman to get on, but will step ahead of them, as though they were not due the same courtesy. This is a common occurrence, yet these same folks expect negroes to be courteous to their women. The negro problem is not the negro's problem; it is the white man's problem and will always remain an unsolved problem, unless the white man manifests a spirit of tolerance.

PROMINENT WHITE MINISTER DENOUNCES RACE HATRED SPONSORS

Rev. Jesse Bogue paster of the North M. E. Church at the Exchange Club, Friday in the Hotel Lincoln, strongly denounced individuals or groups who would revive race and religious prejudice. Rev. Bogue said: "America demands that all who dwell beneath the protection of her flag and enjoy the prosperity of her land shall forever foreswear allegiance to their native governments. It is equally necessary the hyphen that attempts to connect any citizen with organizations that are divisive of civic liberty, unity and peace shuld be struck from the names of all true Americans.

View of True American

"Every true American grants the same rights and privileges to others which he asks for himself. He stands in daily thought and practice by the national Constitution, all of it, not simply the parts that are egreeable to his personal convenience and taste. He is loyal to the methods as well as the aims of American citizenship and attempts to rule by no invisable empires whatsoever, economic, political or religious. One of the great events in our national life was the declaration by our fathers that this country should have full religious liberty. Liberty means exactly what it says—it is not Protestant, Catholic Jewish, Buddist—it is liberty. Every man in America has the full right to worship God according to the way he thinks best. It is deplorable that there should be any revival of religious prejudices or racial hatred in a country founded on freedom of worship and populated by people from all races.

Attempts of Minorities.

"Attempts to interfere in matters of government by highly organized minorities, sometimes open and blatant, sometimes secret and sinister must stop. Those who think this nation subordinate to or the instrument of any particular section, class, bloc, race or sect may well take warning When carried to its logical conclusion the civil war is the answer. Its light reveals the sacrifice which an aroused citizenship will make to preserve national unity when threatened by any menacing movement.

"If I may be permitted a personal word in this club formed for the free exchange of ideas and views, I desire to say that I interpret the work of the Christian minister as that which makes for positive good will between all classes, races, parties, religions and nations rather than that of a propagandist for some particular organization."

JUL[illegible]

THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

Respectable and well known colored citizenry of the city write The News-Palladium a congratulatory letter on the way this paper reported the Hall park episode the other evening, in which two armed Negroes attacked a white couple. The letter serves to remind us that we have a permanent colored population that is 99 per cent law abiding. The other one per cent—plus the temporary newcomers and inevitable floaters—are the ones who give the trouble and add to the burdens of the entire race.

The north is rapidly developing a Negro problem that has serious phases. Thousands of colored workers and also non-workers have been leaving the south. In the south the Negro knows how to handle himself. When he arrives in the north he finds totally different conditions and an environment he has never before known. Under the stress of the change he often gets into difficulty. Benton Harbor has had a taste of this in the last year or so. Several shootings, a number of violent deaths, stabbings, etc., have drawn the public's attention to the fact that a lawless element has seeped into the city's colored population. In almost every case of Negro lawlessness locally the offenders have been non-residents.

Respectable and intelligent colored citizens of the city—the old-timers, as it were—genuinely deplore and condemn these offenses by members of their race. How to deal with the problem successfully is their concern as much as it is the concern of the whites. They realize that one bad Negro can offset the good work of a dozen respectable members of their race and so the problem to them is of vital personal concern.

Our correspondents plead for public sanity at times when a member of their race go wrong. They ask the public to judge fairly and to act in a law abidingly. They ask nothing that should not be granted. We in the north abhor and denounce some of the south's methods of handling the Negro problem. As we get more

A POLICE OFFICER STRIKES AN INNOCENT RACE WOMAN IN THE FACE.

Boston Guide Litter Racial Exhibit

When a police officer struck one of the best known and most highly respected race women in the face the other day; he may have vented his own prejudicial spleen and given a degree of satisfaction to those of his ilk; but on the other hand he has simply placed another straw on the camels back of Negro patience and fidelity to Southern rule and unreasonable practices. Of course, hidden securely behind the Fort of his race's white skin; crouching behind the walls of racial antipathy and the might of racial prejudice; he possibly is reasonably secure from the just indignation that his conduct has aroused among our racial groupe. The incident from the facts brought out in court was so unreasonable and uncalled for until it was clearly repulsive to the Judge who dismissed the whole affair. It appears from facts brought out in Court and the subsequent act of the Court that the race woman was not guilty of any crime whatever; that she had in no way violated the law, she had been accused of obstructing an alley in the rear of her premeces and resisting an officer. The Court found that neither of these charges were true, thus declaring that she was perfectly innocent of any wrong doing whatever, and and yet she was forced to the humiliation of being hauled down in the city patrol and to this insult was added the injury of being struck in the face by the arresting officer. The act of this officer of the law was so repulsive until the Ku Klux Klan frowned upon it; and is said to have had present an attorney to see to it that this Negro phobist who was sworn to look after the peace of the city did not himself crush to earth an innocent woman. The unjust imposition of the women of any race necessarilly arouses the feeling and blood of the manhood of that race; for there is no point in the world among the sons of men so tender and vital as the point of their women; touch the womanhood of a race; impose upon the mothers; sisters wives and daughters of any people and that people feels that there is not much left worth living for. The imposition upon the womanhood of a race always bring men to one of three decisions as to what is best to do. (1) Whether to cowardly submit to it and proceed along the line of waiting on the forces of civic righteousness to adjust themselves in the light of justice to all (2) To look out for other localities; to migrate to communities more tolerant and which gives a more liberal interpretation of human rights (3) To yield to the temptation of passion and avenge in blood the insult offered their families. All of these thoughts enter into the mind of men whose women are imposed upon; the most thoughtful people and the most intelligent races have adopted the second expedient viz pack up, sell out, give away leave. There is one thing that is always true with intelligent races that is; thay never remain any where they cannot protect their women. The striking of this race woman in the face means the quiet packing up and leaving the South of thousands of well to do Negroes and their families.

Mencken on the South.

The New York Age 6/30/23

Henry L. Mencken is one of the free lances of American literature. Merciless in the exposure of shams and empty pretensions to superiority he saves his most vitriolic execrations to excoriate the white South, of which he is intellectually an emancipated offspring. So savage are his attacks upon the vaunted pretensions of the South to progress and superiority that one looks intently to find a hidden cause for this rampant resentment of things as they are in "that stupendous region of fat farms, shoddy cities and paralyzed cerebrums," as he describes the section whence he sprung.

How far the South fails to meet the critical standard of such a writer as Mencken is shown by his dogmatic assertion in a recent magazine article, that "it is almost as sterile, artistically, intellectually, culturally as the Sahara Desert. There are single acres in Europe," says this unsparing critic, "that house more first rate men than all the states south of the Potomac." "If the whole of the late Confederacy were to be engulfed by a tidal wave tomorrow the effect upon the progress of civilized men in the world would be but little greater than that of a flood on the Yangtse-Kiang." Shades of Confucius and Vardaman, Dr. Sun Yat Sen and John Sharp Williams, Li Hung Chang and Pat Harrison, which side has the greater cause for protest?

What is needed in the South, according to Mr. Mencken, is a survey of the population by competent enthnologists and anthropologists, before the public problems of that section may be intelligently approached. He gives the myth of Anglo-Saxon racial superiority a hard jolt by pointing out that the chief strain down there is Celtic rather than Saxon, with French, Spanish and German entering into the combination. He even goes so far as to say "it is very likely that in some parts of the South many of the plebean whites have considerable Negro blood," a statement that will be resented on both sides of the line. His final conclusion that "some of the worst blood of Western Europe flows in the veins of the Southern poor white, now poor no longer," is backed up by the testimony of an ancient historian, Philip Alexander Bruce and Fannie Kemble Butler.

In conclusion, Mr. Mencken asserts, with his usual positiveness, that "it is not by accident that the Negroes of the South are making faster progress, economically and culturally, than the masses of the whites. It is not by accident that the only visible aesthetic activity in the South is wholly in their hands. No Southern composer has ever written music so good as that of a half dozen mulatto composers who might be named. Even in politics the Negro reveals a curious superiority."

The essential quality of truth in Mr. Mencken's strictures of the South would account for much of the desperate effort to keep the Negro down. The prejudice based on color is really due to envy and fear of being surpassed in the acquisition of those attributes which make life worth living. The saving of the remnants of civilization existing in the South may be the mission of the despised black race, which refuses to be submerged in the ignorance and degradation reserved for its portion.

The education of the white South along broader lines of tolerance and liberality might take it out of the narrow rut of intellectual sterility into which it has fallen. There is need for missionary effort along these lines by its best thinkers, especially the ministers, editors and teachers of youth.

SOUTH IS SOLVING RACIAL PROBLEMS, DECLARES HOLMES

The Atlanta Independent 8/25/23

Detroit, Mich., August 19.—(Special.)—Rev. B. B. Holmes, president of the Holmes Institute of Atlanta, in addressing the Metropolitan State Baptist association in session at Mt. Olive Baptist church here paid a high tribute to the white people of the south for what they have done for education of negroes and the committee on race cooperation of the leading people of both races which has established a more friendly relation between the races in the south.

"Negroes who are born in the south," declared Holmes, "are superior to those who are born and reared in other sections and are more loyal to their churches, schools and race enterprises. The south furnishes the best opportunities for the colored race to develop from all angles than any other section of the country. No rights are denied them to make a living. In my six weeks' travel and study of the migrated negroes in Boston, New York, Newark, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Detroit, I have observed more than 500,000 colored people discriminated against and not given an opportunity to work on account of their color.

Solve Race Problems.

"I will admit that we ha e some irregularit s in the south, but the leading people of both races are trying to solve these problems.

"There are no races upon the face of the globe who have succeeded who did not have obstacles to overcome and problems to solve. The race that expects to succeed by migrating from one section of the country to the other with expectation of attaining success without sacrifice is no good in the south or any other section of the country. I advise the negroes in all sections to stop migrating and settle down and work out their own destiny and success will come. No people can merit the confidence and respect of a city and state who are unsettled and are continually migrating from one section of the country to the other.

"Rev. W. M. Ferrell, C. A. Hill and others made addresses endorsing the work of the Holmes institute. Rev. Holmes will deliver a series of lectures in the city to raise funds for the school.

American Scholars Are to Take Part in Course at Breslau

NEW YORK HERALD JULY 15, 1923

Prof. Franz Boas of Columbia to Speak in Germany on Negro Problem.

Special Correspondence to THE NEW YORK HERALD.

New York Herald Bureau, Berlin, June 30.

American scholars are to take a conspicuous part in the special course for the study of Americana, arranged by Breslau University for the fortnight beginning June. 25. The two general themes will be "America's Intellectual Life" and the "Relations Between the United States and Germany. The American lecturers will be Prof. Franz Boas of Columbia University, who will speak on the "Negro Problem in the United States"; Prof. Thomas C. Hall, formerly of the faculty of the Union Theological Seminary, on the "Historic Foundations of American Political Life"; Prof. W. W. Rockwell, now of Union Theological Seminary, whose theme will be "Religious Life in America" and the Scientific Intellectual Relationship Between America and Germany."

Additional lectures on America will be delivered by men well known in German academic life, among them Prof. Bernhausen, who will speak on "William James and the Significance of Pragmatism for the Religious Philosophy of America"; Prof. Dietrich on the "Economic Structure of the United States," Privy Councillor Kuehemann on the "Philosophy of American Life," Prof. Lehmann on the "American Educational System" and Prof. Ziekursch on the "Political History of the United States and Canada."

Commander William T. Halsey, whose duties as American Naval Attache extend to the three Scandinavian capitals in addition to Berlin, is leaving for Copenhagen this week, accompanied by Mrs. Halsey, to welcome the fleet of four United States battleships, having on board the midshipmen from the Naval College at Annapolis for the yearly practice cruise. The fleet is commanded by Admiral Scales.

Aristocrats Hold Meeting.

The Hotel Bristol was the rendezvous this week of large numbers of the German and Austrian-Hungarian aristocracy and for the moment it seemed as if war and revolution were only a dream and that time had turned back to the pre-war days of courts and kings and their retainers. The outstanding personality was Ferdinand, ex-Czar of Bulgaria, who with his second son, Prince Kyrill, and his former chamberlain, Baron von Weich, came up from Coburg, where he is now residing, and gave a dinner at the Bristol in honor of Gen. Gantcheff, his former courtier. Archduchess Isabella (nee Duchess of Croy) was in Berlin en route to the hereditary castle of the Croy family at Duelmen in Westphalia, accompanied by her daughter, Princess Gabriele, and Princess Isabelle of Salm-Salm. Here they met Duke Albert of Schleswig-Holstein who had motored over from Castle Primkenau in Silesia and Prince Julius zu Lippe coming from Dresden. Stopping at the Bristol this week was also the Italian Ambassador to Copenhagen, Signor Salvatore Barzillai, returning to his post.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Bode of New York, who were guests at the Busch-Tauscher wedding, have left the Hotel Adlon for Bad Kissingen, where Mrs. Bode will take the cure. They expect to return to America on the Aquitania in July. Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Jaeckel, who were also of the wedding party, have left for Frankfurt, the former en route for Baden-Baden, while Mrs. Jaeckel will take the cure at Bad Gastein. Their son, Mr. Theodor Jaeckel, at present American Consul in Bordeaux, has been transferred to Hamburg and will arrive in Berlin some time in August to pay the customary official visit to the American Consul-General, Mr. William Coffin.

American and German friends of Mme. Gadski-Tauscher participated in a housewarming and birthday fete given at her new villa in the Zehlendorf suburb of Berlin. The presence of a number of Mme. Gadski's operatic colleagues enabled the guests to listen to an impromptu musical program of distinction. The hostess was heard in well known numbers from her repetoire and also in conjunction with Mme. Niessen-Stone and Baron von Kleydorff. Among those who came in during the afternoon and evening were Secretary of State Dr. Albert and Mrs. Albert, Commander and Mrs. William F. Halsey, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Bode and Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Jackel of New York; Mr. William Rycken and Mme. Busch-Rycken, Baroness von Kleydorff and her daughters and Director Krass of the Krupp concern, with which Capt. Tauscher is connected. Mrs. Felix Wilekes of New York presided at the tea table.

Mr. Reilly at Bristol.

Mr. Arthur Reilly of the American Consular Service has been at the Bristol this week en route from Warsaw to Norway.

The American contingent is displacing the European traveling public in the lounges and restaurants of the large hotels on Unter den Linden. As the swallow senses the return of spring, so the return of Americans in conspicuous numbers is believed to be due to some occult knowledge that a sharp and favorable change might be expected in the financial atmosphere, and in this they have not been disappointed, as Berlin is for the moment the cheapest capital in Europe. Just how long it will remain so is a question to which the oracles as yet have given no answer.

Mr. and Mrs. George Carroll of Louisville, Ky., have arrived at the Hotel Adlon with their daughter, Miss Evelyn Carroll, whose marriage, so it is reported, will take place shortly in Berlin.

Mr. John H. Jackson of Philadelphia has arrived at the Adlon coming from Vienna with three American physicians who expect to do special research work at the Berlin University.

Bishop Kirkman G. Finlay Gives Sound Advice at Race Conference

AUG 3 0 1923

The white and negro races must look forward to parallel development, declared Bishop Kirkman G. Finlay, of the Upper South Carolina Diocese in an able address before the Inter-Racial conference last night. Bishop Finlay stressed the fact that the race question was not peculiarly a problem of the South's but was world wide. Neither white nor negro race wants racial equality and racial equality is not desirable for either race, he pointed out. There will never be racial equality in the commonly accepted sense and the races will each make progress parallel with each other, but not interfering with each other's development.

Bishop Finlay pointed out causes of friction between the races and stressed the need of greater efficiency for the colored race.

The following synopsis of events at the conference yesterday was prepared by the publicity committee:

At the colored conference the program for Wednesday was well carried out. Mrs. J. R. Cain of Columbia gave the devotional, basing her well chosen remarks on John 15.

Jellying, preserving and pickling were taken up in the cooking class, and home sanitation in the health department. Mrs. Cain also gave a good talk on prevention of tuberculosis. In the sewing room the finishing touch was given the dress form and the delegates planned to help each other make one for themselves. Economical and judicious selection of shoes, clothing and hats was discussed. Realistic poppies were made in the handicraft course.

The splendid work which these trained state agents are doing is receiving a great deal of appreciation among the earnest, intelligent colored women who are in attendance.

A fine address was made at the Open Hour by Rev. D. H. Sims, pastor of the colored Methodist church.

At 8:30 the conference listened to a masterly address by Bishop Finlay of the Episcopal church.

At the close the colored leaders rose and one after the other gave approbation to the Bishop's remarks, and finally took a rising vote of thanks.

A collection was taken in order to try to raise the last $2,000 necessary on the colored hospital. Professor Beadle stated that if this comparatively small amount is not to be had at once that operations on the building will have to be suspended. The white friends of this project are asked to take this matter under consideration and do what they find it in their hearts and purses to do in helping the cause.

Program for Tomorrow.

9:45 to 10:15—Devotional by Mrs. G. W. Gardner.

10:15 to 11—Milk and milk products, by E. P. Gulledge.

11 to 11:45—Prenatal and Obstetrical Care, Miss Elizabeth Woodson.

11:15 to 12:05—Talk on Tuberculosis by Dr. Isadore Schayer.

12:05 to 12:30—Bible Talk, Prof. H A. Beadle.

1:30 to 3 p. m.—Use of Commercial Patterns. Mrs. E. A. Reynolds.

3:00 to 3:15—Rest.

3:15 to 4:15—Basket making.

4:15 to 4:30—Vesper service. Rev. E. A. Fuller.

THE SOUTHERN NEGROES

The assertion of negro leaders at a conference in Georgia that the negroes do not wish to leave the south is based on good evidence. Seldom does any considerable body of people wish to leave the country of its birth and upbringing except for urgent reasons. The tendency of most people has always been to stay at home and enjoy the society of relatives and lifelong friends. The lure of gold, the desire for religious freedom, the quest of adventure, or the demand for a mere living may operate to uproot families from their native environment and drive them into new surroundings, but if there is food, shelter, liberty, community spirit and some degree of prosperity, the desire for peace and comfort surpasses any temptation to move.

Last month a similar conference was held in Mississippi. In reply to a request from planters and other white leaders with whom they conferred on the migration question, negro leaders said that the negroes were leaving Mississippi for the north because "the negro feels that his life is not safe in Mississippi." The negro leaders asserted that the state was spending twenty times as much for the education of white children as it was spending for the education of negro children, that there were more than 1,000 high schools for white children in the state, and only one for negro children, and that as against 800 rural consolidated schools for white children the negro children had none.

Much of the economic distress of the negroes in the south is due to the fact that sixty years ago the race had practically no property, and it obtained its freedom in an era of southern despondency and poverty. Racial animosities that are expressed in a policy of keeping the negro ignorant will, however, have to be overcome before the negroes can be satisfied. As long as they are ignorant they are easy marks for unprincipled leaders, often of their own race. Certainly when they give, as their main excuse for migrating, a desire to enable their children to benefit by schooling, they challenge the white south and arouse the sympathy of all Americans.

The South and the Negro

Remarking that in the South the negro has been regarded as "about equally a social problem and an economic necessity," the New York World goes on pointedly to say:

"Often the fact that the negro is an economic blessing has been lost sight of in the irritation naturally felt by communities which consist of two mutually antagonistic layers. The race problem has overshawoded the question of the negro's usefulness, but once the negro leaves, his importance to the cotton-growing States looms suddenly large. His importance as the only labor supply of the South for any purpose begins to outweigh all his disadvantages." Turning to the negro arrived in the North in large numbers, the World as pointedly adds: "He brings along with him his status as an economic blessing and a social complication. Wherever he goes he is both welcome and unwelcome. His problem is not solved by the exodus. It is merely scattered and shifted."

Friction, now and then, between two widely different races inhabiting a common territory is almost inevitable under the best of circumstances, as the North will find and, indeed, has already found. But it can be avoided and for many years has been avoided in the city of Winston-Salem, where thousands of colored people live and work and enjoy the blessings of civilized society in as much peace and contentment as the average white citizen enjoys.

But even in those sections of the South where there is friction, where the two races have not yet learned how to live together as well as they have learned their lesson in citizenship in Winston-Salem, it is highly probable that but for a grave political error the "economic blessing" of the negro would have been more generally recognized and the "social complication" his presence involved would have proved less irritating. The error referred to was foundly humiliated by their former slaves under the direction of white aliens and the protection of Federal bayonets. It was during that dark period in American history that the franchisement of more than enough whites to secure an easy black majority in every community.

In consequence, during a period varying from five to ten years in the eleven States of the defunct Southern Confederacy, the Southern whites were misgoverned, robbed and pro-

The error referred to was the insistence of the radicals in Congress, after the Civil War, on the sudden gift of manhood suffrage to the negroes together with the disfranchisement of more than enough whites to secure an easy black majority in every community.

In consequence, during a period varying from five to ten years in the eleven States of the defunct Southern Confederacy, the Southern whites were misgoverned, robbed and profoundly humiliated by their former slaves under the direction of white aliens and the protection of Federal bayonets. It was during that darkest period in American history that were sown the seeds of inter-racial enmity which are still bearing fruit after fifty years, and which promise a continuing fruitage even after a century has passed.

DEAN KELLY MILLER'S ~~ALL-RACE~~ CONFERENCE MAKES PROGRESS.

Washington, D. C., June 29.—Dean Kelly Miller's All-Race Conference Program has been making progress even though there has not been much publicity lately. When the movement was launched in New York City under the general direction of the of the temporary United Front Conference composed of the National Equal Rights League, the African Blood Brotherhood, the Friends of Negro Freedom, the International Uplift League, the N. A. A. C. P., and the National Race Congress, a Committee on the All-Race Conference with plenary and final powers was designated. This Committee has been holding meetings regularly for the purpose of arranging for the Conference.

Committed on All Race Conference.

The Committee is as follows: Dean Kelly Miller, Chairman, pro tem; James F. Dowis, Secretary pro ten; Dr. M. A. N. Shaw, James L. Neill, Maurice E. Spencer, and Wm. Monroe Trotter, representing Equal Rights League; James W. Johnson, Robert W. Bagnall, Richetta G. Randolph, and Prof. L. M. Hershaw, the N. A. A. C. P.; R. B. Moore, C. V. Briggs, W. A. Domingo, and Otte E. Husiwoud, the African Blood Brotherhood; A Philip Randolph and George Schuyler, the Friends of Negro Freedom; Dr. D. N. E. Campgell, the International Uplift League; Prof. John R. Hawkins, the A. M. E. Church; Miss Nannie Burdoughs, the Baptist Women; Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, the National Federation of Colored Women; James A. Cobb, the legal Fraternity; Dr. A. M. Curtis, the Medical Fraternity; Henry P. Slaughter, the Fraternal and Benevolent Orders; J. Finlay Wilson, the Negro Press; Norman L. McGhee, the College Fraternities; Rev. D. D. Turpeau, the M. E. Church; Eugene Kinckle Jones, the National Urban League; Channing H. Tobias, the Y. M. C. A.; Dr. George E. Haynes, the Federal Council of. Churches; Dr Emmett J. Scott, Negro Business; Rev. W. H. Jernagin, the National Race Congress; Hon. Phil H. Brown, Negro Labor; Prof. G. C. Wilkinson, Negro Education; Rev. E. D. W. Jones and Rev. H. J. Callis, the A. M. E. Z. Church; Dr. Julia H. P. Coleman, the Negro Business Woman; Rev. George D. Bullock, the Lott Carey Convention. Mrs. A. F. Hilyer, the Y. W. C. A.; and Rev. G. T. Long, the C. M. E. Church.

Method and Purpose of—Representation in Conference.

The purposes and methods of the Conference have been discussed in all details and certain basic conclusions have been reached. These conclusions being that the All-Race Conference shall be held during the week of November 5, 1923. This is in accordance with the resolution that the meeting be held prior to any of the national conventions to be held during the year 1924. It was also decided that instead of attempting to have a mass convention that the basis of representation be a flat assignent of ten delegates and ten alternates to all national organizations engaged in race activities; that the program of the Conference be arranged around special commissions so that definite study might be given to all subjects of racial interest instead of discussing them in mass convention. Cooperation is to be the key word of the Conference which is to be a kind of "Super-Council" or "Super-Senate" of Negro Organizations. Each organization under this program will elect delegates who will seek at the Conference to "legislate" in cedtain given directions for the benefit of the race.

TWO FRIENDLY CRITICISMS.

The Daily News recently has received two letters which interest it exceedingly. The writers have one thing in common—each is a friendly critic of the Daily News. In everything else they are about as widely separated as they well could be. One is a conservative southern woman in her sixties, the other a radical northern man in his thirties. Their attitudes on pretty nearly everything are diametrically opposed to each other; but they both land heavily on the Daily News, and as we think the matter over, we are forced to the rueful confession that they are both partially right.

One, the southern woman, declares that she hears the Daily News accused of cynicism (we deny that) but for her own part contents herself with the statement, which cannot be denied, that "the tone of the paper is critical." The northern man, on the contrary, remarks "an overemphasis on the negro problem to the point where it amounts almost to an emotional fixation, so that there is a lack of sufficient emphasis on other problems. . . . Now it seems to me that the only way of achieving objectivity—or at least greater objectivity—on the negro problem is to force other problems upon the consciousness of the Southern community." This indictment, let us add in justice to ourselves, was not brought specifically against the Daily News, but against southern thinking in general.

We deem these criticisms worthy of attention and reply because both are constructive, and each has a reasonable basis. As to the first, we are perfectly sure that any investigator who would take the trouble to measure the editorial columns of the Daily News for any given month would find at least twice as much space given to praise as is given to blame. But it isn't all praise; and the reason it isn't is because we thoroughly agree with our second critic that one of the main difficulties facing the south today is its habit of reserving all its invective for the negro problem—not the negro, please note, but the negro problem—and sugar-coating all its other nauseus messes. The Daily News is profoundly, not to say passionately, convinced that the danger threatening the south today is not black supremacy, but the wrong sort of white supremacy.

We do not believe that there is the remotest danger that the blacks will ever again dominate the south politically. There may be temporary local disturbances occasionally, but in so far as the whole south is concerned the spectre of negro domination is laid forever.

But a different sort of problem has arisen to take its place. There is a false and mischievous notion abroad that race relations in the south are like a see-saw, so that if the negro begins to rise, the white man, now at the top, must inevitably begin to come down. The truth is the relation is similar to that of the members of an Alpine club, roped together to make a difficult ascent. As the member in front climbs, he is compelled to haul the other up with him; if he were foolish enough to undertake to thrust the other down, he would necessarily be jerked from his own footing. Both must go up, or both must come down; and the quickest and easiest method of ascent is for each to do his own climbing, always with due care not to throw any sudden strain upon the other.

It has been our habit in the south to act and talk as if there were no doubt that nothing but the negro holds us back. If that were true, it would not be worth discussing, for here the negro is, and here he will remain; but the Daily News does not believe for a moment that it is true. It can see innumerable things that would hold us back even if we were cut loose from the negro, and that, as it is, are holding back both white and negro. To the best of our ability we have outlined these things, and to that extent we acknowledge that the tone of the paper has been critical.

Yet we believe that in that course the Daily News has been representative of the most advanced and vigorous thought of the state. It isn't merely the Daily News whose tone is critical; North Carolina's tone is critical. The state is waking to the fact that many an accepted formula, many an ancient dogma, has either no foundation in fact, or no relation to present conditions. It is questioning principles and policies that heretofore it has always accepted as part of the established order of things. In fact, it is coming to the conclusion that the very existence of an established order of things is in itself pretty good evidence of dry rot. Look at the road program. Look at the program of social legislation. Above all, look at the educational program. The road program would never have been adopted if the state had not seen that its existing roads were rotten. The social program would not have been entered upon had not critics proved that the existing conditions were abominable. The educational program had no chance until the state had awakened, into its consciousness the evils and dan-

NEGRO ENTERPRISE BEGAN ILL-FEELING NEAR TUSKEGEE

Merchants Were Friendly Until New Store Took Trade From White Haberdashery Shop.

BY LESTER A. WALTON.

Little did Booker T. Washington think some years ago when he founded Greenwood, a Negro colony situated on the outskirts of Tuskegee Institute, that the first rift to disturb the unprecedented era of good feeling existing for so many years between the town of Tuskegee and the school would be directly due to Greenwood's zeal in enlarging the scope of its business activities.

Along with Tuskegee Institute and the National Negro Business League, Greenwood's development was another pet project dear to Dr. Washington's heart. The noted educator had visioned a model town of pretty homes, well-kept lawns, paved streets, a busy business centre—an orderly, thriving community—proving to the world the Negro's capacity for self-government just as Tuskegee had demonstrated the Negro's ability to successfully manage his own institutions on a large scale. While perhaps a bit discursive it may be of interest to mention that the budget for operating the school for the coming scholastic year amounts to nearly a half million dollars.

Some members of Tuskegee's faculty live in attractive homes built in Greenwood and only a stone's throw from the institute's grounds. Last summer an alumnus, rated as one of the wealthiest citizens of Macon County, erected a pretentious brick structure in Greenwood, costing over $50,000. It consists of a hotel, restaurant and stores. Having in mind the opening of the Negro Veterans' Hospital, and because of the great demand for sleeping and eating accommodations on such events as the Tuskegee Farmers' Conference and the annual commencement exercises, this modern hotel was put up.

The plan to conduct a hostelry in Greenwood for Negroes met with the hearty approbation of the white people of Tuskegee, but when it came to their notice that another Tuskegee graduate was arranging to open a drug store and a haberdashery in the new building surprise soon kindled into indignation and outspoken opposition. Tradesmen of the town who had for many years reaped a financial harvest dealing with the school teachers and students did not hesitate to remonstrate, declaring Greenwood was invading their sacred business precincts.

Thus the first seeds of racial ill-will were inadvertently sown in a hitherto friendly environment. It was not difficult to arouse opposition among the townspeople to the Federal Government's program of manning the Negro hospital with Negro physicians and nurses. The hospital's monthly payroll will amount to $60,000.

The enrolment of Tuskegee Institute is much in excess of the entire population of the town. The financial benefits accruing to Tuskegee due to its proximity to the school have been great. Not only has this Negro school helped make Macon County one of the richest counties in the State, but it has given the State of Alabama its outstanding show place.

Completely disrobed of all secondary issues involved in the controversy and discounting much of the loud talk about principle being at stake and the gnashing of teeth about "Negro domination," the intrinsic reason for all the hullabaloo is easily discernible; the deep-rooted cause is not hard to fathom; the almighty dollar!

Negro Porter Shows How Complex Works

Recently, returning from a trip South, I was instructed in a lesson on the "Superior Complex" as the train on which I was a passenger industriously ploughed its way Northward through space, dust and humidity. My mentor on this occasion was the Pullman porter, a young man who is in school two-thirds of the year and puts down berths during the other three months.

"The only use they have for you down this way when you are travelling on a sleeper is when you have on something like this," he complained bitterly, pointing to his white coat. "Don't get on a Pullman, act the same as any other passenger and mind your own business. Then you raise the color question," remarked the porter.

Pointing to a colored girl in the coach who was with a white woman and two children and officiating in the capacity of nurse, the Pullman employee continued: "Although she is a Negro no one will object to her riding in a sleeper. I guess you've been noticing how pleasant all the white people have been to her? That's because she's a servant. Just let some Negro board this Pullman not a menial. Most everybody will then look daggers and you can hear unfriendly comments. Social equality will then be the cry."

An hour or so after I had been given my lesson on the "Superior Complex" I saw the colored nurse take the two white children to the diner. Upon their return I heard the children relating to their mother what they had selected from the menu.

"What did you eat, Mammy?" although the nurse was not over forty, the employer inquired.

"Nothing was the answer.

"What's the matter; why didn't you eat?" queried the white woman.

"Said I'd have to wait till later on," indignantly declared the nurse.

"Think that's a shame!" flared the white woman.

And yet had this same employee encountered Mrs. Booker T. Washington or Mrs. Robert R. Norton in the diner she would have waxed wroth

But the preachments of the Pullman porter on the "Superior Complex" were more forcibly impressed upon my mind a few days later, when, under the headline, "Negro's Ride Stirs South," I noticed the following despatch from Goldsboro, N. C., in The World:

"Allen Moses and his wife, wealthy Negroes, left here in Pullman berths to-night for Washington and New York. This is the first time in the history of this city that Negroes have had 'the nerve,' as one citizen expressed it, to buy sleeper tickets here. White citizens are aroused, and it is said the Ku Klux Klan will be asked to give Moses a warm reception on his return."

There are others besides members of the Ku Klux Klan who believe Uncle Sam's currency should be less than par when in the possession of a Negro, and prefer to look with kindlier eyes on a Negro servant than a Negro of education, means and independence—one who by dint of achievement merits all the comforts of travel his money can command.

MENCKEN ON THE SOUTH.

Henry L. Mencken, the educated ruffian who edits Smart Set and writes for the Baltimore Evening Sun, is never so happy as when abusing people. He rarely praises. He specializes in what he regards as devastating criticism. In a characteristic article in the Baltimore Sun, Mencken deals with negro migration and the South. He tells his readers how there are two Souths, the South of the old gentry, and the South of the "poor white trash" who he says have governed this section since Reconstructtion. Mencken is false and unjust enough to say:—

> It is this second South that has been on top since Reconstruction days, and out of its ascendancy has flowed nine-tenths of the difficulties, political and social, that have beset the Southern people. It has steadily brought down Southern politics to the level of spoils and demagoguery; it has made a pathetic buffoonery of Southern education; it has fostered and inflamed race differences; it has corrupted and degraded Southern journalism; it has reduced Southern Christianity to a burlesque and an obscenity. This is the South of the Ku Klux Klan, of the Billy Sunday revival, of complete aesthetic and ideational sterility, of burnings and lynchings, of Blease and Vardaman, of Prohibition and Jew-baiting, of anti-Darwinism and free silver. This is the South, alas, that Northerners usually think of when they think of the South at all.

These are half-truths, conceived in venom. We characterize them as half truths, unwarranted and unjust, for these reasons:

Southern politics is no nearer the level of spoils and demagoguery than the politics of other sections, although we should be the last to deny that our politics could not be greatly improved.

Southern journalism is as enlightened and as honest as the journalism of other sections; no more so, no less.

Southern education is no more a pathetic buffoonery than education in other sections.

Racial passions are no hotter here than elsewhere—no hotter here than in California, or Illinois, or Ohio.

Southern Christianity is not different from Christianity in the East or West.

As for the "Billy Sunday revival," that sort of revival is not peculiar to the South. Billy Sunday lives in Illinois and holds most of his meetings in the North.

The Ku Klux Klan headquarters are in Atlanta, but the New York World said a year ago that the Klan was stronger in the North than the South. The World ought to know.

Prohibition started in Maine and Kansas, and came to the South after the West had accepted it. All States but two, we believe, ratified the eighteenth amendment—among them New York State.

Jew-baiting and anti-Darwinism are not peculiarly Southern. Henry Ford is the chief Jew-baiter of the Nation, and he lives in Michigan. The South has less sympathy with his methods and practices in regard to Jews, perhaps, than any other section. William J. Bryan, a westerner, is the leader of the anti-Darwin legislative crusade. Mr. Bryan and his Western followers were responsible for free silver threat.

Vardaman and Blease have been repudiated by the people of their States, but Hylan, of New York, is still in office, while Thompson, of Chicago, was twice elected mayor of his city.

The South is not a section of "ideational and esthetic sterility." There is a widespread revival of cultural interests and activities in every Southern State. The work of Southern artists and writers today compares favorably with that of their colleagues from other sections. Naturally the richer East attracts a greater number of artists than the poorer South, but we think that the South is today contributing its share to the thought of the nation.

Our point is that if Mencken were really honest he would not give a list of things and conditions that inflame him, and declare that they are peculiarly Southern.

The South is open to criticism. Its own men and women are freely criticising the South's short-comings. They should be encouraged in this, rather than driven into a defensive attitude by such vicious and unwarranted slurs as the gifted Mencken casts at the South. The South does not resent honest criticism, but it does resent insulting slurs.

BRAZIL OFFERS GREAT OPPORTUNITY TO COTTON GROWERS OF AMERICA

The article which we reproduce here taken from the Brazilian American, a leading magazine in that country, will show cotton growers of the Race who now have to contend with peonage, robbery, and murder what a splendid opportunity and future are open to them in Brazil. There nature favors the man who has a knowledge of cotton growth and culture. An investment of $5,000 to $10,000 in the cotton future of Brazil will bring a fortune to ambitious and expert cotton growers. To begin with the exchange rate between American money and Brazilian money gives one a great advantage. Your dollars will buy twice as much of everything there than they will bring you here 12-29-23

Your experience will bring immediate returns and make you a leader and power among Brazilians engaged in the same business. Moreover, your children will be recognized as men and women without regard to Race, color or religion. The very top of the ladder is open to them. Careers in the army and navy, in politics and public life right up to the presidency of the country are possible for your children and their children when they know the language and have become citizens of this freest of free countries for Race men and their families. This article will repay careful study and reading. People who live in the South now in fear of life and property, with no guaranty of future security other than the charity of the white man, have an opportunity to live and prosper like men with fear for no man or race.

SERGIPE, THE VANGUARD STATE IN PRODUCTION OF FINE COTTON

Cotton is rapidly coming into its own in Brazil and the state of Sergipe, the smallest in the union, is showing the way in this new enterprise which will eventually put Brazil on the map as one of the foremost "white gold" producing countries of the world. This fact has already been established and experts agree that the cotton grown in the little northern state equals the best sea island of Egyptian cottons grown in the world today. Cotton growing in Brazil at present is a healthy young enterprise, but experts believe that within 25 years the annual output will be between four and five million bales.

For many years cotton has been grown in Brazil but it is only recently that real, up-to-date, scientific methods have been introduced. Since then the change in the quality of this world staple product has been little short of marvelous. This enterprise is now out of its swaddling clothes and cotton growers and users are watching with great interest the steady advancement Brazil is making. The results from the state of Sergipe in less than a year's time have far exceeded the expectations of those interested in this line. As a result the state has attracted world-wide attention, the wheel of prosperity is turning slowly but surely and it is believed that within five years the state will be one of the most prosperous in Brazil.

T. R. Day, who has been experimenting with cotton growing in this country for several years, is in charge of the enterprise in Sergipe, and has given the Brazilian American the following information about cotton culture in Brazil:

"The state of Sergipe is an ideal place to grow cotton. Sergipe today is producing cotton equal to that grown in the United States or any other country in the world. By that I mean in quality, and in time it will be able to produce on a much larger scale. I believe no country can show climate or soil with any better natural advantages than we possess in the North for the growing of all kinds of cotton, especially sea island, Egyptian hybrids and other fine sorts. Fine cottons are being produced in Sergipe now from varieties which I have grown in Brazil for many years and after numerous experiments."

Mr. Day, who is chief of the cotton growing service for the state of Sergipe and the federal government, showed our representative samples of fiber, bolls and manufactured goods from Sergipe cotton. He explained that if the cotton goods manufacturing plants were equipped with modern machinery their products would be equal to those that are now being imported from foreign countries. The most important of the varieties shown, Mr. Day said, was "Day's Pedigree," a very heavy producing cotton giving fibers of excellent quality up to 30 centimeters in length, just the kind of cotton required throughout the world for manufacturing. Other and newer varieties shown, which are expected to be of great importance, are known as the "Improved Pedigree," which has been named "President Cardoso," in honor of the president of the state. Two long staples were also exhibited which have been named "Gold Mine" and "Silver Mine." The latter two are Egyptian hybrids. These, according to Mr. Day, promise excellent results in the producing of the highest classes of fiber to take the place of Egyptian and sea island cotton for the manufacture of best quality fabrics and mercerized goods.

"The production of these and higher class cottons," continued Mr. Day, "will quickly lead to the manufacturing in this country of a higher class of goods to equal those which are now being imported. These Egyptian Hybrids are well adapted for the manufacturing of best quality of mercerized hosiery and when made up, could only be distinguished by an expert, from pure silk goods. In addition to the varieties mentioned which are already successfully grown in this country from American seeds, experiments are being made with 30 other types of American cottons. In order that the very highest improvement may be made in the selection of seeds or kinds for the various localities of the state, several experimental stations have been established, although most of this work is being carried on at the main station in Aracaju.

"The State of Sergipe has the most extensive organization for the selection and improvement of cotton to be found anywhere in Brazil. At present we have four stations and have under cultivation 300 acres. This year's crop for the state will amount to about 15,000 bales of high-grade fiber, and a sufficient supply of seeds for distribution throughout the state. Next year we propose to increase the acreage and more than 1,000 acres will be planted with the new improved varieties we are now growing.

"When I first grew cotton in Sergipe, it was on the Ilha dos Coquieros (Island of Cocoanuts) just a short distance from Aracaju and the fibers equaled the best grown at Sea Island, John Island or James Island, off the coast of South Carolina. The medium and long staple cotton now grown in Sergipe is as good as any in the world and it is impossible to produce better.

"Naturally a good part of our success is due to the well organized staff we have and the whole-hearted cooperation from President Cardoso. The chief executive of the state, is a thorough progressive and active head of the state. He has given every encouragement possible and personally assists in the work. He has spent considerable time visiting throughout the state, talking to the manufacturers, the cotton growing farmers and members of our staff. In addition he has surrounded himself with a very capable cabinet. Politics do not count in the state of Sergipe where the welfare of the people is at stake. All the politicians work with and for the president and, as a result, the state is prospering.

"Ouh staff is working hard and our field people have been especially trained. The chief pest of cotton in Brazil is the 'lagarta rosada,' which is known as the Egyptian boll worm. We keep eliminated much of the danger from this pest. The work is so efficiently done by those in charge of this section that the insects never get the opportunity to make headway. As a result the crop has suffered no damage.

"Cotton is bound to bring prosperity to Sergipe and the cotton growers are delighted to raise a higher grade, as they receiev more money for their product. At present all the fair grade cotton can be sold at 10 milreis a kilo and right in Aracaju. There are six cotton goods manufacturing plants in Aracaju and they are all preparing to install the most modern machinery in order that their goods can compare with the best being imported."

An expert who spent two years in the United States and a year in England investigating cotton told Mr. Day after seeing Sergipe cotton that he had not found a be[illegible]le during his trip.

A cotton fair is to be held in Aracaju in January and cotton from all sections of the state will be placed on exhibition. Rewards will be given. The people are enthusiastic and it is believed that many experts from the United States and Europe will attend. Mr. Day said that already a number of inquiries for cotton from Europe and the United States had been received and many growers in the United States have asked for information about the state. Some have announced their intention of moving to Sergipe, if conditions were favorable. Mr. Day believes that in the next few years 40,000 or 50,000 bales of high-class commercial grade, which are always in demand, will be grown in Sergipe soil.—Brazilian American.

DEFENDER HEAD MADE WELCOME BY BRAZILIANS

Mr. Abbott Finds South American Metropolis Wonderful City; Ability Counts

Chicago Defender
3-31-23

Rio de Janeiro, March 30.—Prominent Brazilians during the past few weeks have engaged themselves in extending the courtesy of the country to Dr. Robert S. Abbott, director and proprietor of the Chicago Defender. Dr. Abbott arrived here on the steamship Pan-American, accompanied by his wife. On the same ship came another North American publisher, Edward McLean of the Washington Post.

Quite a creditable announcement of Dr. Abbott's arrival was made in an interview which appeared in A Noite. The correspondent for that paper wrote:

"Dr. R. S. Abbott of North America, director and proprietor of the Chicago Defender, is visiting our capital. The Defender is a journal of the Negro Race in North America.

"He is an excellent representative of the Race, accompanied by his wife. He is on a vacation, the first, he says, of his life, and proposes to make observations for later use in his paper of Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia and Peru. He will return to New York by way of the Panama canal.

"We had not had the time to shake hands or visit with him before he complimented the city.

"'What a beautiful city!' he exclaimed. 'What cordiality I find here. How all the races of men shake hands as brothers. Pardon me, senor, but I cannot find words to express my admiration for the people here.

"'We want in North America, as you have in South America, ability rather than color to count, especially in the Southern States where we work hard to progress and do progress. In my employ I have 79 people of both races. There is no question of color, only of ability.'

"He told of some of the conditions of living in North America. A Northern city like Cincinnati, he said, is almost as bad as cities in Louisiana so far as treatment of his Race is concerned. In the Southern states, he declared the two races to be absolutely separated. He praised the work of Booker T. Washington in North America.

"Dr. Abbott has been the guest of Dr. Alfred Clendenen in this city."

Symbol of Liberty in Books Only; Millions Fight for Freedom and Get Oppression

Robert S. Abbott was a name to attract. A pure Negro, without any intermixture, only by prodigious intellectual force and will could be attain in the United States the respected position he today enjoys, writes M in a recent issue of the Brazilian weekly, Revista da Semana. An advocate before various North American tribunals, the editor and proprietor of the Chicago Defender, a pamphleteer and renowned author of criticism, he is the champion of the Negro cause and the missionary of a redemption which borders on the miraculous.

Chicago Defender
4-28-23

At the announcement that he would speak to Brazilians, the question was asked: What extraordinary words would this formidable paladin utter, victor in the most difficult and antagonistic of all mediums?

Prominent Brazilians

We foresaw the theater transformed into an assembly of Race, crowded with Negroes, all a glorious black spot which proudly reflected the light. At last the drums sounded. On the stage around a table at which was seated the principal speaker, the most prominent Brazilian Negroes seated themselves in hierarchical order. The Colored men of Brazil presided over the meeting which was organized by the Beneficiary Association of the Federation of Colored Men of Brazil. One of them, of bronzed skin, clad in a priest's cassock, remained standing; he was the Rev. Canon Dr. Olympio de Castro, one of the most brilliant pulpit luminaries, who welcomed the eminent North American fighter. The effulgent word of the preacher shone, scintillated, recalling through various periods the great Negroes, our brothers in God and country, from the chivalrous figure of Henrique Dias, renowned in the defense of the sacred soil of this country against the ambition of the Dutch conquerors, to the names of Antonio Reboucas, Jose de Patrocinio, Cruz e Sousa and many others, dead or living artists or scientists, all equally invested with the laurels of glory and clad in the chlamys of immortality.

Mr. Abbot Speaks

Dr. Abbot then arose. His exordium was brief, indicating his pleasure in addressing the people of Brazil, in whose bosom the human race lives in such perfect harmony. Taking up his subject, he next described the situation of the black man in the United States, telling how despite the Negro's valuable and innumerable services, and of faithful collaboration through the course of a century, the white concedes him not the slightest consideration which he deserves and always ardently strives to attain.

"The Negro," said Mr. Abbott, "who in time of stress offered his life or his blood in the North American cause to free Cuba from the grasp of Spain and to make the world safe from the German monster, has not yet secured liberty under the sky of his own fatherland; and the Negro child eternally reaches out its arms to the symbolic statue in the principal port of the United States without ever being able to touch it."

Praises Brazil

He framed lofty panegyrics to Brazil, "who opens the doors of her heart to all men." He affirmed that while with us he would learn to associate the expressions, "Liberty and Brazil," declaring that Brazilian Negroes could not comprehend the points of view of the American Negro because in Brazil there is but a single point of view for men of all races. Entering into his peroration, he exhorted the Brazilians present to learn English in order that it might be possible for them to understand the life of bitterness of the American Negro, and he concluded in a transport, his voice somewhat broken, saying that he would take to his country, as an incentive to renewed and more accentuated struggles, the sublime example of Brazilian fraternity, extolled by the greatest dreamers of political science and sociology.

Under the spell of his words we left the theater. In the calm afternoon, still kissed by the sun, the crowd moved with the restlessness of the city and none knew that there, two steps from the tumult, a spirit so brilliant had just shown itself.

SWEET LIBERTY WIELDS SCEPTER DOWN IN BRAZIL

Mr. Abbott Finds Brazilians "Sublime"; Sees the Spirit of Equality; Signally Honored

Chicago Defender
4/14/23

Rio de Janeiro, April 13.—"It is my wish and hope to one day awaken and find my native land a safe place for any man in which to live, no matter what the color of his skin—such as a place as you now have. Since my coming here, and my reception, my observation and inquiries, I am here to say to you that I have concluded the words 'liberty' and 'Brazil' are synonymous."

The above is taken from the report of the speech of Dr. Robert S. Abbott, proprietor of the Chicago Defender, that appeared in one of the leading dailies here on the front page. The address was made before the Democratic conference of Brazil.

What Brazil Recognizes

"It would not be a hard matter," Dr. Abbott continued, "for Brazilians to understand the American Negro. It is so hard for America, the U. S. A. Why can YOU so easily understand us? The answer is simple, my good friends—because YOU RECOGNIZE AND APPRECIATE that ALL MEN ARE EQUALS and because you know that in LIFTING YOU CLIMB and that in keeping down you cannot progress. The sooner my countrymen realize this fact the sooner will America reach the sublime state you already have. I end, my friends, in saying again—I hope some day to see my U. S. A. follow your sublime example of fraternity."

Following Mr. Abbott Dr. Tito Carlos spoke in English. He began by explaining how happy he was in having Dr. Abbott meet him and his friends in conference and how much hope he had that the meeting would result in benefit to all concerned.

Mental Worth Counts

"Brazil has always and always will stand for the spirit of fraternity," he promised. "We shall always say that all men are born FREE and EQUAL and we shall always be brothers to all! I pray that the time is soon here when the world will all know the truth of these words: It is only by recognizing mental worth, no matter whether in a white or black person; giving justice and practicing fraternalism, that the world can hope to reach peace and happiness."

After the conference Mr. Abbott was made a member of the Federation of Men of the Brazilian corps.

The Brazilian press describes the American journalist as a leader of his Race and a welcome ambassador to their country.

South America Gets Prejudice From the South

Mr. Abbott Tells Appomattox Club Members Interesting Stories of His Travels

Chicago Defender
5-26-23

South American prejudice is the imported variety exclusively, Robert S. Abbott, publisher of the Chicago Defender, just returned from a coast-to-coast tour of the other part of the western hemisphere, told friends at a banquet tendered in his honor at the Appomattox club. There is almost as much Texas prejudice in Brazil as there is in the United States, he emphasized.

Mr. Abbott, a member of the Appomattox club, was welcomed back by David Hawley, first vice president of the club, with words well chosen to convey the sentiments of genuine good fellowship with which the boys had come out to hear "Bob" and to enjoy themselves with him.

Dr. George Cleveland Hall was master of ceremonies, he being introduced by the president of the club, S. A. T. Watkins. Seated at the table with the guest of the evening, besides Dr. Hall and Mr. Watkins, were Hon. Edward H. Wright, Louis B. Anderson, A. L. Jackson, second vice president of the club, and Phil A. Jones, general manager of the Robert S. Abbott Publishing company.

Mr. Jones in a few preliminary remarks, referred to Mr. Abbott as a man with whom he had worked for years and learned to respect and love as a father because of Mr. Abbott's own respect and admiration for others, even for the so-called "fourth assistant janitor." He praised his "boss" for that vision that had enabled him to establish a business and surround himself with men who were able to carry on that business without the constant presence of the "boss." As evidence of how well the business might go on, even if Mr. Abbott did take a rest, Mr. Jones reported circulation figures 23,000 in advance of those available when his chief left America.

In turn, interesting stories connected with the life of Mr. Abbott in Chicago were told by Richard E. Westbrooks, head of the law firm of Ellis & Westbrooks, who referred to himself as a member of the Chicago Defender staff who could not be got rid of; Major R. R. Jackson, telling of Sundays not so many years back when the now affluent publisher could scarcely afford the money to buy a couple of "sodys"; Louis B. Anderson, who credited Mr. Abbott with being one of the mainstays of his political success, and Edward H. Wright, founder of the Appomattox club, who took cognizance of that note in the Defender which dedicates itself to building up rather than tearing down.

Mr. Abbott's speech was a series of interesting stories connected with his trip. Most of them centered about various outcroppings of prejudice here and abroad, and the racial attitude of South America.

He admitted that he had had considerable difficulty getting out of America. The Brazilian consul general refused to vise his passport, and various steamship companies refused to sell him passage. He got busy, however, and finally had the president of one of the companies that had turned him down come and offer him the best passage available. He claims to have been so well taken care of on the boat that many white persons couldn't believe he was an American Race man. One curious passenger he had to convince he was not an East Indian by taking off his hat and showing his hair.

One Sunday on board ship he was being questioned by six white gentlemen when the chaplain, an Episcopallan bishop, came and shook hands with each member of the group, the white ones, inviting all to church except Mr. Abbott. Four of the white men refused to go to church to hear the message of such a Christian.

In Rio de Janeiro he was refused admission to four hotels, all run by Americans. They claimed to be full. The Brazilian law would have shut them up if they had claimed any other reason. The same thing happened in Valparaiso, Chile, but backed by the law, he got the service he demanded, despite the opposition of North Americans and the attitude of the United State consul general.

He found among Brazilians a distrust of Americans and of the American Race man. When he first went to the country, papers warned of the doctrine he might try to spread among the inhabitants. They have no race problem and the Brazilians did not want him to create any. When they learned that he appreciated their feelings they turned from warnings to praises. He was invited to speak before the Press association of Rio and was made a member of it. Shortly after he had been given his card he "covered" a fire, passing the cordon of police to the astonishment of all around.

"Negro," he explained, is given its original meaning in South American countries, black. Persons speak of a negro dress, meaning a black dress; a negro hat, meaning a black hat, etc. The term does not refer to race. Citizens of Brazil are Brazilians."

In Colon, Panama, Mr. Abbott pointed out, he found that we as Americans were paying taxes for the maintenance of segregation down there. He told of a gold line and a silver line at certain stores, the gold for the whites, the silver for the non-whites.

In concluding his address he declared that one of the big lessons he had learned was that South Americans do not feel prejudice, that Americans are its chief distributors, that Race groups in South America are so unaware of it that they have not awakened to fight the American infiltration, and that it must be our duty here in America to keep up the fight for the eradication of prejudice at home as the first step in checking its spread abroad.

MY TRIP THROUGH SOUTH AMERICA

Article 1—Personal Motives

By ROBERT S. ABBOTT

Editor and Publisher of the Chicago Defender

IT WAS with secret thrills of a peculiar and inexpressible joy that I, at last, on the third day of last February, accompanied by my wife, sailed from the port of New York for a visit to the South American republics. It was the opening chapter in realization of a golden dream long cherished. Time after time had I made plans for such a trip, but ever and anon some exigency of business had arisen to lay check.

R. S. Abbott

My desire to visit South America was actuated primarily by the further desire to observe the social pulse of the Negro placed in a climatic environment similar to that of his original African home, and one in which life was stimulated by the exigencies of modern society; to ascertain the nature of the Negro's social progress when projected within the sphere of a Latin-European tradition and culture, of which I had reason to believe to be wholly devoid of those singularly irrational social-mental attitudes, based on a consciousness of race differences—that which has been so strangely potent in hindering the natural and wholesome evolution of 12 millions of Negroes within the confines of North American society; more, to grasp somehow, however superficial, the major lines of South American ethnic evolution, as thus probably indicative of what might be her future ethnic homogeneity; and further, to not only comprehend the real status of the Negro in South American society, but to ferret out in a broad sense the possible industrial, commercial and social opportunities for that enlightened and growing group of North American Negroes, who so recently are beginning to look to the South American continent as, after all, the most likely haven for a solution of their individual problems.

SOME UNEXPECTED OPPOSITION

But in the very first stage of preparation for the voyage we were confronted with a set of irritating circumstances of which I shall not herein fail to mention: We applied to the Lamport & Holt Steamship company for sailing accommodations, and after some delay were informed that all first class accommodations had been taken—this, it seems, and we have reasons to believe was nothing more than an act of racial discrimination. To prove that this was race discrimination my wife called at the office and she was offered a ticket (first class) on the boat that refused me passage.

And the flagrant act of racial discrimination we suffered in the offices of the above named company is by no means a distinction of that company. For we immediately found from that moment what seems to be a general agreement or common understanding among all the steamship offices located in Chicago against selling first class passage to Negroes. We went hither and thither, calling at all the steamship offices, and the only varying features identical with their respective policies of denying Negroes first class accommodation were the degrees of discomfiture to which we were put. It was only after fully two months of constant effort that we succeeded.

It was at the office of the Munson Steamship company, after an undue amount of delay, persistent effort and tried patience, that we, at last, got booking. In reply to a letter of protest, addressed to the officials of the latter company against what I had interpreted as manifestations too of racial discrimination, I was given to understand that such, if practiced, was wholly contrary to the policies of the Munson Steamship company.

However, a letter sent to a steamship company's representative in Chicago and which is reproduced herein shows the methods used to discourage one seeking first class accommodations.

Jan. 5, 1923.

Mr. J. C. ————,
Blackstone Hotel,
Chicago, Ill.

Pursuant to my telegram of yesterday, I called on the Munson line today relative to securing passage to South America for Mr. Abbott and his party.

The Munson people informed me that while they or the U. S. Shipping board, whose steamships they operate, do not discriminate, at times they have received complaints from first-class passengers; therefore advise, presuming that Mr. Abbott and his party are Colored, that you diplomatically suggest second-class accommodations.

Awaiting your instructions,
Very truly,

Then came the business of securing passport vises from the respective consuls stationed at Chicago, representing the several South American countries we had proposed to visit. When called upon each and all rendered me the most prompt and cordial service—all save the consul from Brazil. His was a flat refusal, and that solely on the ground of being Negroes. This, no doubt, may strike the reader as strangely interesting, considering the fact that the republic of Brazil has a Negro population far exceeding in relative proportion that which obtains between Negroes and whites in the United States of North America.

I at once called the attention of Congressman Martin B. Madden to the circumstance, requesting him to lend his efforts. This he did, but seemed quite unable to accomplish anything. I append a telegraphic communication from him on the matter, as follows:

I made appeal to state department and they advise me that Brazil has immigration regulations which she will not set aside in a case like yours. State department of course cannot demand favorable action. I am sorry.

I then turned to Senator Medill McCormick. Forthwith the matter was taken up with the Brazilian embassy. It was only after much effort and refined judgment on the part of Senator Medill McCormick was there anything achieved on this score. Appended are four telegrams from him appertaining to his efforts.

MEDILL McCORMICK

Thus it was only after pressure was brought to bear did I succeed in getting the consul from Brazil to vise our passports. This, it seems, has been the experience of every American Negro during the last few years who has sought entry into Brazil. But why is such the case?

BARRIER BROKEN

We later discovered that the conduct of these Brazilian consuls, stationed in several American cities, in refusing to vise anyone's passport on the ground of race is entirely contrary to the Brazilian national constitution and shamefully at variance with the finely democratic temper of the Brazilian people.

Could this circumstance be in any way a lingering feature of some secret prohibitive policy against Negro emigration enunciated under the Wilson administration? Then it was that the Negro for the first time on his own initiative made it quite plain how indispensable he is to American industry. One might have been willing to believe that at some recent time a gentlemen's agreement had been effected with the Brazilian government to help to keep American Negro labor at home, and without, at the same time, making a formal distinction between the worker and the tourist. But such has not been the case. Brazil needs people. With an expanse of territory something larger than that of the United States of North America, leaving out Alaska, but possessing a population of only about 24 millions, it is imperative that she encourage immigration; and this she has done and is doing at a cost of millions of milreis. To her shores gather in immigration representatives of every black, brown, yellow and white race under the sun.

And yet why Brazilian consuls in America are refusing to vise the passports of American Negroes remains an unanswered problem; but suffice it to say that such is wholly contradictory to a most rigid and well established constitutional law of Brazil.

AT SEA

It was a 12 days sail from New York to Rio de Janeiro on the steamship Pan-American. And the sea! It is either in the great waste places of the earth or in the midst of a great common danger that human nature will evince its true, inherent quality. In the great, vast Alone, whether it be in wide, endless plains, on the mountain top, or far out at sea, man detached from his social milieu, overwhelmed by a sense of the Infinite, at once manifestly becomes his true self.

To contemplate for long the might and majesty of the sea, to spend days under its mystic spell is to slowly orientate upon the pettiness, the emptiness of human pride and deceit; and the vastness of God, who created all men, who endowed each and all with an equal, inherent dignity as men. It is at sea that the sense of human fraternity in us all will surge to the fore.

The social touch at sea for those 12 days was wholly delightful. There was nothing to harrow or to offend. Men felt their kinship, save in one pitiable instance of a clergyman, who, wishing to appear in a Christlike ardor, approached a group of men among which the writer happened to be, shook hands with all except the writer. He then invited them into the chapel to attend his Sunday morning service, but there were some among that group too Christlike to accept his invitation.

On the 15th day of February we enter the beautiful harbor of Rio de Janeiro. The spell of the far tropics is upon us. The calm, crystalline beauty of sky and atmosphere, the enveloping rays of a rich, golden sunlight, the riot and abundance of infinite life and color, crowds in upon the senses, and one is intoxicated, overwhelmed by the very existence of life itself.

SUSEQUENT ARTICLES

In the series of articles that are to follow, I propose to give a vivid description of my first impressions of the city of Rio de Janeiro; an account of my reception as a stranger and as an American Negro, social contact and acquaintances, race relations in Brazil and the ethnic structure of Brazilian society, an analysis of Portuguese temperament with side lights on Brazilian history.

I shall give my general observations on the Brazilian form of government, her national constitution, church, educational system and press; an understanding of her present industrial stage, her natural resources, her possible economic future, and a conjecture on the probable future of the Negro in Brazilian society; a broad survey of life in the Argentine republic; a theory explaining the paucity of Negroes in that country of wonderful possibilities; and observations on the numerous American fortune hunters who have found the Argentine a veritable El Dorado.

Moving into the republic of Uruguay, I shall write of the people of Uruguay in respect to ethnic origin, contrast of racial types, customs, general economics, political conditions, and with some interesting facts pertaining to Uruguay's monetary system. Thence, across the wild staked pampas through the Andeas mountains down into the queen city of Valparaiso, I shall attempt to describe with my deepest appreciation what I have witnessed of the faded features of the strange, ancient glory of the civilization of the Andean people, with a word on the general social conditions of the Chileans in respect to economics, politics and education. Thence, into the republic of Bolivia, I shall give some observations on the age-long territorial dispute between Bolivia and her sister republic, Peru, and the almost perpetual state of war existing between the two peoples; a word on the singular traits of the people of Bolivia, and something of their cultural life; then into the republic of Peru, with a superficial study of the landmarks of the ancient civilization of the Peruvian Indian; an account of the present day humble descendants of the glorious Incas; the great and ancient University of Lima and some small description of the enormous rubber industry in Peru.

The great market of the South American continent is a rare gem sought by the United States and the three great industrial nations of Europe. The commercial rivalry between these nations in South America is sordidly keen, and in the course of these articles I shall explain why it is invariably the European trader who wins.

The countries of central and southern Europe, in order to meet the exigencies of overpopulation, are encouraging emigration to South America; it is into the latter that the great waves of migration today are sweeping. It is interesting to speculate as to what influence this shall have on future South American affairs, both from within and without.

I shall give what I have gleaned in respect to opportunities for the American Negro in South America, and in conclusion some broad deductions in comparing the motivating influences in South America and North America for the Negro toward plans of the highest social achievement.

BRAZIL FINDS DANGER IN U. S. HATE POLICY

Dr. Mauricio de Lacerda, owner of one of the most powerful newspapers in Brazil, brilliant parliamentarian and stanch defender of the Brazilian constitution, is the author of an article appearing in A Nacoa, issue of July 25. This paper is published in Rio de Janeiro and it is significant that not one of the other journals which some time ago opposed immigration of Race men from the U. S. A. has attempted to answer the argument set forth in this article. This seems to indicate that Brazilians have found out that they were the victims of the American white man's propaganda of race hate and prejudice when they attempted to restrict immigration on a basis of race. Translation of the article, written especially for the Defender, follows:

War Against the Black

Inhuman and unconstitutional act.

There are known the difficulties, ill-contrived, opposed by our country, to impede the immigration of North American Negroes.

We were at the point of prohibiting it. We closed our ports to the Negro as if this act were a licit one, which is not human nor moral nor legal. We made this restriction to orderly working people and equal restriction was NOT made to other parasitic elements.

Very well then!

Lately, however, the port authorities commenced to verify that the government's order was being frustrated.

The black immigrants now arrived disguised in dress coats, top hats, etc., accompanied by ladies with modern hats; they landed and went immediately to the Far West—Matto Grosso.

What bad was there in it?

None whatever.

Why, then, do we not really want workers and capital?

The question of inferiority of races is too much a complicated question to be discussed here, yet, by the way, we may point out that it is nothing else but a mere race prejudice. What there is is not race inferiority, but education and culture.

The black man, in consequence of different circumstances, in this particular case, has not yet attained the grade of white man's development; but on account of this to pretend not only to antagonize him, but also to eliminate him, is painful as well as unintelligent on the part of the civilized whites.

Since, as to the work—it is that which we want—the little we possess in general lines is NOT the work of the white man, but IS that of the Negro.

Let us proceed.

Because of the government [illegible] having been evaded, our authorities notified our New York consul not to vise any more passports for this kind of people. This measure excited the U. S. Negroes and their lawyers called upon our consul and showed him his own constitution of the 24th of February.

The Yankee lawyers argued that the Brazilian constitutional law allowed anyone to enter and leave our territory in peace time independent of passports and that their clients, not being crippled nor anarchists, carrying their money with them and thus being within the terms of the Brazilian immigration law, cannot be considered undesirables.

The consul limited himself to saying that as a government official he complied with the orders of his government.

This caused the emigrants' attorneys to go to their minister of foreign affairs and demand their clients' rights.

Thus informed, the government of their country communicated with our government, which stated in reply that the said measure had been adopted in order to safeguard our race because of our already having a great Negro population.

Not agreeing with this, however, the claimants, supported by some journals—while others antagonized them in their own country—now maintain their right to disembark black immigrants in Brazil, not by virtue of their own country's laws, but those of our own country under the provisions of the constitutional law of February.

The black North Americans and their lawyers are in the right, while we are wrong.

With the law change, with the currency depreciated on one side, and on the other side to make war upon immigration and, be it said, a strong and useful immigration, we wage war at the same time against capital and foreign labor, though without these elements we will continue to be what we are now: A country of lagging and apathetic people.

THE NEW BISHOP OF HAITI

The people of the Hatian Republic are mostly Catholic in their religion and French in their language. Some of us remember Rev. James Theodore Holly, D.D., a splendid scholar and devoted worker for Christian doctrines as a Negro among Negroes, who went to Haiti and after a long struggle and labor built up the Protestant Episcopal Church work and made it possible for his denomination to elect him as Bishop of Haiti. Since his death the work in Haiti appears to have fallen greatly.

We had hoped that a Negro priest would be designated to succeed Bishop Holly, but it was not to be. Rev. Harry Roberts Carson has just been consecrated Bishop of Haiti, at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York, the Right Rev. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle acting as presiding Bishop at the ceremony. Bishop Carson was selected for the Haitian work because of his many years of missionary labor in Latin America.

It is reasonable to desire and expect that the black Episcopalians of the British and American church in American and British colonies, should have bishops of their own race, and we believe they will ultimately have them, even if they have to recede from the mother churches to do so. The white Methodist Episcopal Church of America has receded from its non-Negro-Bishop policy and the Pr testant Episcopal Church will have to do it.—The Negro Times.

CUSTOMS OF HAITI REVEAL YEAR OF GREAT PROSPERITY

Houston Post

Associated Press Report.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Feb. 3.—The report of the receiver general of customs for Haiti, for the year ended September 30, shows a decidedly healthy economic improvement. The collection of customs for that period was $4,672,993 as compared to $3,606,-173 for the preceding twelve months. Even more favorable are the combined collections for October and November of 1922, with the total of $1,-076,159, as compared with $630,829 for the corresponding months of 1921.

The volume of trade for the year is $23,062,481 as contrasted with $16,-910,775 for the previous twelve months; while the imports aggregate $12,350,271 against $11,957,206 and the exports $10,712,210 in place of $4,953,-570. A recapitulation of the imports shows the United States leading with a value of $10,359,613; the United Kingdom second with $763,363, and France third with $642,382. The United States figures show an increase of $816,602, while the United Kingdom fell off $55,393 and France $495,207.

In the export trade the United States was second with a volume of $1,438,755, France having $6,018,524 and the United Kingdom $589,175. France is a heavy consumer of Haitian coffee, having taken more than $5,000,000 worth of this product. In Haiti's export trade coffee leads with $7,487,312 the other exports in volume being cotton, $1,547,205; sugar, $537,475; dyewoods, $506,953; cacao, $274,124; goatskins, $62,352; honey, $62,076; lignum vitae and mahogany, $27,014. Miscellaneous exports are shells, old copper, beeswax, lignum vitae wax and corn. With the exception of cotton, coffee and honey the great bulk of these products went to the United States. The figures also show, in comparison with those of last year, that coton and cacao trebled in volume, and that honey doubled.

The total collections from all sources by the receiver general, including the balance of $4,391,163 carried over from the fiscal year of 1921, amounted to $9,419,542 and expenditures and dispositions to $7,955,-181, leaving a balance of $1,464,360. The gain of 73 per cent in volume of trade, the increased expenditure of money for the use of the Haitian government, and the great increase in collections since the dating of the report, with the beginning of the payment of interest on the internal bonds held so largely by Haitians, usher in what promises to be a banner year for Haiti.

RT. REV. HARRY R. CARSON WAS ARCHDEACON OF PANAMA—NATIVE OF PENN.

The Guardian

New York, N. Y. Jan. 15, 1923:—Before several hundred relatives, friends and dignitaries of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Archdeacon Harry Robert Carson of Panama, yesterday was consecrated Bishop of Haiti in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Amsterdam Avenue and 110th Street.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, presiding bishop, officiated at the elaborate communion service, assisted by several Bishops and lesser members of the clergy.

Bishop Carson is a native of Pennsylvania and was educated at Sewanee University. He was ordained in 1896 and served as chaplain of the 2nd Louisiana Volunteer Infantry in the Spanish American War. He then went to Panama, and it was in recognition of his work for more than 20 years there that he was elected Bishop at the General Convention of the church in Portland, Ore., in September.

HAITI ON UPGRADE, MARINE LEADER REPORTS TO U. S.

Better Judicial System Is Sad Need of Island Nation

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The opinion that the future of Haiti never was brighter than at present is expressed by Brigadier General John H. Russell of the marine corps in a report to Secretary Hughes, submitted by him as the American high commissioner in Haiti. He has been serving in that capacity since March, 1922.

In his report, made public today by the state department, General Russell declares that "it is believed that a continuance of the present policy of co-operation with the Haitian government, together with a maintenance of the sincere and earnest co-operation that has been given by it during the past eight months can lead but to the development and progress of Haiti, the maintenance of peaceful conditions and the increased welfare and prosperity of the Haitian people."

Praises Marines.

After reviewing events in Haiti since his arrival there, General Russell comments on the activities of the marine corps occupation force and makes this observation:

"During the period covered by this report the efficiency of these forces has been maintained at a high standard and in addition it has been indoctrinated with the purposes for which we are in Haiti and the necessity for the maintenance of the most cordial relations and co-operation in all dealings with the Haitians."

The gendarmerie of Haiti, according to the report, has been "most efficiently handled during the past year, and as a result it has been brought to a very high standard of excellence."

Both the public health and public works department, General Russell reports, have done excellent work despite a shortage of funds. Discussing the finances of the Haitian government he says steps have been taken to revise obsolete customs and internal tax laws. A law putting into effect a general accounting system also is planned.

General Russell devotes considerable space in his report to a discussion of Haiti's judicial system which he declares is "sadly in need of renovation."

"In the lower tribunals, generally speaking," his report continues, "the administration of justice is entirely unsatisfactory and there is a general feeling that political, family and other interests have an undue weight.

"The salaries given to judges are considered to be much too small, and it is believed that with a reduction in the number of officials and a material increase in the salaries, the efficiency of the judiciary system will be increased. But it will not be satisfactory until certain laws are passed changing slightly the methods of procedure. The framing of such laws is now receiving consideration by the Haitian government.

"The present unsatisfactory conditions result from insufficient pay, no provision for retirement, lack of careful selection and inadequate corrective measures where necessary. The entire administration of justice should be placed outside of politics and other improper influences.

"The judiciary system is a foundation stone of stable government, and when the Haitians have been taught to look with pride upon their courts and to respect them, much will have been done toward establishing permanent stability of government in Haiti."

HAYTI IN BETTER SHAPE.

Gen. Russell, However, Advises Stay Of American Troops.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—Conditions in Hayti have shown a marked improvement during the past year, but [illegible] al of the United States from the affairs of the island republic.

Brig. Gen. Russell, American high commission to Hayti, so states in a report to Secretary Hughes, made public by the states department today.

Despite a lack of funds, the report points out, there has been a marked progress in the public works and public health departments of the island government, but the system is "sadly in need of rejuvenation."

The foreign trade of the island has increased substantially, the report shows. Exports for the past year were $10,712,210 as against $4,953,570. Imports increased from $11,957,206 to $12,350,271.

HAITIAN REPUBLIC DISSATISFIED WITH AMERICAN TACTICS

Washington, D. C.—Haiti, the Black Republic of the West Indies, is again to the front. There exists there keen disappointment and depression. The Associated Negro Press is given this information from absolutely reliable sources, and unless there is a change of attitude in administration, the glowing promises of Haiti's future under American supervision, will be swept to the four winds in failure.

The Associated Negro Press has firsthand information and is giving the facts to the people of the United States in the line of public duty. This service has kept closely informed on the program under the administration of President Harding, and the public has been lead to believe that justice would be given.

The committee of the United States Senate, of which Senator Medill McCormick of Illinois is chairman, gave out a report of promising import, albeit, some parts did not meet with general approval.

Captain Marshall Deceived

Captain Napoleon B. Marshall, who was selected by the State Department to go down to Haiti as a representative of the government, and to bring about a feeling of good will between the people of the two countries, has been deceived and humiliated. Even his friends have been decieved and humiliated. Who is responsible for this?

Senator McCormick of Illinois, as chairman of the Haitian Committee, in an address in Chicago, prior to the departure of Marshall, declared publicly that he was turning over the work for the redemption of Haiti to Captain Marshall. Marshall was present. It is believed that the Senator was in earnest. The entire address was broadcast in its entirety with the full knowledge of the Illinois Senator. But from the very beginning Marshall found a stone wall.

In the records of the State Department, Marshall is designated as a clerk, and as a clerk he has been retained in Haiti. This amazing state of affairs has been known for some time, and has been the source of great surprise to the Captain's friend,s who had remained silent, hoping that there might be an adjustment.

Senator McCormick Informed

The Associated Negro Press is informed that Senator McCormick, the State Department and other high officials of the government are aware of the facts in this case. When the Captain was appointed Senator McCormick, who had just returned from Haiti, declared he "was resigning his commission into Marshall's hands." Obviously the revelation of the Marshall status strikes Colored America like throwing cold water in the face. The political mind of the group is in a sickening state already.

General John H. Russell, high commissioner of Haiti, appointed through the good offices of Senator McCormick, also had studiously avoided meeting Captain Marshall during the whole of the captain's stay in Port au Prince. The American friends of Marshall had looked forward to Gen. Russell and Captain Marshall working in harmony for the welfare of Haiti.

James C. Dunn, charge d' affairs of Port au Prince, a white man, is now in Washington, and it is understood that in the face of all the humiliation through which Marshall has passed, Dunn is expected to ask for his withdrawal! Why? Marshall went to Haiti with the high purpose of being of service to his country and the people of Haiti, in line with the expressed purposes of Senator McCormick.

Marshall did not, in the first place, seek the position. He was the most surprised man in the country when the fact was first mentioned to him He heads a large law firm in New York; owns property, a Harvard graduate, and married the daughter of the late Judge Gibbs, who is an accomplished artist and musician. In Port au Prince, both the captain and Mrs. Marshall have entered loyally into the spirit of helpful service, and have become popular with the Haitian people, but seemingly persona non grata to the white Americans who are controlling things with an iron hand. These white Americans, from all indications, do not wish Colored Americans to function on equal terms with Haitians and themselves. They have studiously ignored Captain and Mrs. Marshall socially. However, Marshall's status as a "clerk" prevents him from being socially recognized officially. Nevertheless, President Borno, and other officials have defied custom and received both the Captain and Mrs. Marshall. On one occasion Marshall was invited to sit on the bench by a judge during a prominent trial; Marshall was refused "time" from his employment to go to the trial, it has been learned from prominent Haitians.

Haitians themselves are saying: "If the white Americans treat Captain Marshall thus, what may we expect in justice, as Marshall represents the best in Colored American progress." The crisis has arrived, and American sincerity of purpose is placed to the acid test.

Would Recall Capt. Marshall

American White Charge d' Affaires In Hayti Asks To Be Relieved Of His Colored Assistant

—o—

Copyrighted 1923

(By The Associated Negro Press)

Washington, D. C., June 27.—The question of the removal of Captain Napoleon B. Marshall from his present position at the American Legation in Port au Prince has been laid before Under Secretary of State Phillips by Charge d' Affaires James C. Dunn white.

The Associated Negro Press can state on most reliable authority that there will be nothing done on the matter until after the most thorough investigation.

James C. Dunn, is a native of Newark, N. J., and came into the diplomatic service under the Wilson administration. He has seen service in Havana, Cuba, and other sections of the West Indies, and has been in Port au Prince for a little over three years, first as secretary of the legation, and at present Charge d' Affaires.

While it is understood that Dunn's chief complaint is that "Marshall is too able a man to be a mere clerk," and that it is desired that just an ordinary person, presumably white, should succeed Marshall; friends of Marshall in the United States wish to find out WHY MARSHALL WAS THUS ASSIGNED IN THE FIRST PLACE AFTER HE HAD BEEN LEAD TO BELIEVE HIS POSITION WOULD BE ONE OF AUTHORITY. WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE MIX-UP, AND WHY? WILL IT BE ADJUSTED, AND HOW?

Senator McCormick Authority

So far as the whole Haitian situation is concerned, Senator McCormick of Illinois, has been the one authority to whom the people have listened, and to whom they have turned for first-hand information. The Senator has always suggested a pretentious program for the island Republic. Is the program, so far as colored America is concerned, to fall flat?

Technically, Marshall's position is under the State Department, but the State Department would naturally give respectful consideration to suggestions from the chairman of the Senatorial Committee having to do with the affairs of Haiti.

Delegation To Haiti

One of the subjects popularly discussed a few months ago was the sending to Haiti, through the State Department, a delegation, committee, commission, or something of that sort, to study conditions and recommend a program of co-operative action.

There was, in the first place, a hitch over what such a group should be called. It was decided that it would, or could, not be called a "Commission" as that would require Congressional action. "But a rose by any other name would smell as sweet," and so the name feature was overlooked.

There has been a tentative agreement, in which it is understood that President Harding, and the State Department were agreed, together with Senator McCormick, that the committee would be composed of three: Robert R. Church of Memphis, representing business interests; Dr. R. R. Moton, of Tuskegee Institute, representing agricultural information, and Dr. U. G. Dailey of Chicago, who should look into the promotion of hospitals.

Dr. Moton could not accept because of a tour to Europe, and Prof. Williams, of Tuskegee Institute, was substituted. Dr. Dailey's name was dropped, without explanation to the public, and R. R. Church declined when he learned that the committee would be required to go without the usual attaches supplied on such occasions Prof. Williams went to Haiti, and made some valuable investigations for the Haitian republic's development.

USE BALLOT TO AID HAITI, SAYS BISHOP HURST

Harding Criticised for Failure to Keep Promise to Withdraw Marines From Island

MARSHALL A FIGUREHEAD

Haitians Regard Colored New Yorker As Second-Rate Clerk

President Harding has failed to keep his pre-election promise to withdraw the United States Military forces from Hayti.

Because we are strong and they try, taken its lands and its resources are weak, we have gone into a country and use them as our own.

No country in modern times has perpetrated such a vile and damnable outrage upon another as the United States upon Haiti.

The United States is dealing with the black people of Haiti like the Southerners deal with the Negroes in Georgia, Florida and Mississippi.

We are an interloper and have no more business there than I have in my neighbor's house.

* * * *

Caustic criticism of the Harding administration, high tribute to the spirit of the natives and an appeal to American Negroes to use their ballots marked the address of Bishop John Hurst before a group of college men meeting with the Century Club of the Y. M. C. A. Wednesday night.

Bishop Hurst, just back from a tour of his former home Haiti and Santo Domingo, told how Americans have violated the sovereignty of the former black republic and now govern the island with marines.

How the United States has taken over control of Haitian finances, taken over their banks, suppessed newspapers and jailed editors, dismissed both branches of the Legislature and forced upon the islanders a new constitution was told by the Bishop to an audience that listened in painful silence.

Asked from the floor what Baltimore can do to get the marines out of the island Bishop Hurst declared "use your ballots next year in the Presidential election to restore the liberty of Haiti."

Harry T. Pratt who presided, declared the U. S. control of Haiti was a part of its plan to control all approaches to the Panama Canal.

Major Wm. H. York of Philadelphia declared that Senator McCormick of the Senate Committee which investigated Haitian conditions admitted that the U. S. had bungled in seizing Haiti, and that it intended to withdraw marines as their enlistment expired. Bishop Hurst stated that far from withdrawing marines, the U. S. was landing detachments at parts of the coasts where it was thot they might escape ordinary observation Proposals to send black troops to Haiti instead of white marines, and to substitute a commission of colored American for the white U. S. commission, he declard were turned down by the Administration.

Marshall Regarded as Clerk

Captain Napoleon Marshall sent by the Harding administration to Haiti to act as a liason officer between natives and Americans is regarded by Haitians as a second-rate clerk, the Bishop said. Captain Marshall has a desk in the Commission's headquarters and is said to be drawing a salary of $1800 a year.

Haitians say the American commission is costing them $60,000 a year, that they have been forced to borrow $60,000,000 from American Bankers which the Commission is spending to suit itself.

William M. Brewer suggested that the Haitians might take a page from India's history and resort to passive resistance, since it was impossible to drive the American out by force of arms.

ROOSEVELT TO PROBE EDITOR'S ARREST

Rumored U. S. Will Establish Naval Base at Port Au Prince.

Theodore Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, has ordered an investigation and report of the arrest of M. Fouget, editor of La Poste, a newspaper of Port Au Prince, Haiti.

According to the report forwarded to the Navy Department by the N. A. A. C. P., 76 Fifth avenue. Fouget was arrested because he bad written in his paper that the place of Haiti's President, M. Borno, was in the national penitentiary. The antagonism to M. Borno in Haiti is said to have been aroused by the report that he intended giving the harbor of Port Au Prince to the United States for use as a naval base in the Caribbean.

A JAMAICA NEGRO BEATEN BY THREE POLICEMEN

Negro Press

KEMEDIOS, Cuba.—On Sunday night, December 24, a young man by the name of John Sawyers was sitting on a bench in the park when a white man arrived with his family and ordered him to leave the bench. Sawyers arose immediately and went a few steps from the bench. Suddenly a policeman appeared and, without any question, started to push him. Sawyers asked him "What is going wrong?" Then the policeman started to use his club on Sawyers' body. This was past bearing for Sawyers, who laid hold of the club and gave the policeman a cuff with his fist. By this time two other policemen appeared, and the three together after giving him several brutal blows, took him to jail. He was released next morning, his left arm useless and with cuts on his right arm, all from the blows of policemen. Doctors were called, but after investigating and finding the young man was not a Cuban and, worst of all, that he was a Negro, they refused to visit him. He then had to resort to his own remedies. It may be a long time before his left arm is of any use to him.

This and many other similar incidents show the sort of treatment given to the Negro in this country. Despite the advice of his friends, Sawyers has resolved to be content with his lot, for he considers it a waste of time and money to write the British Consul about the matter. Sawyers was once a liberal contributor to the funds of this branch, but never became a member, and all that is in the power of the branch to do for him is to report the matter, as it affects one of the race.

Jamaican Officials Strike Snag in Rising Tide of Color

Kingston, Jamaica, Dec. 27.

[illegible] confined to the [illegible] existing itself in the [illegible] recently created executive council [illegible] two or three [illegible] executive councillors are members of the colored race.

The dispute now was over a bill [illegible] the creation of the [illegible] Major Thomas, the [illegible] appointed director of railways, an appropriation of 1,700 pounds with [illegible] the consent of the council which [illegible] is a clear violation of the constitution granted the island by [illegible] and the law in 1884. The council [illegible] incensed when the Colonial Secretary, Col. H. H. Bryan, deliberately sought to deceive the people by omitting to read to the council the communications bearing on the matter that passed between the local government, Major Thomas and the secretary of state for the colonies, Mr. Winston Churchill. This dummy piece of trickery was discovered and its authors were denounced by the legislators led by [illegible] A. G. Smith, H. A. L. Simpson, D. J. Wint and Rev. G. I. Young (all colored). With unlimited courage these men treated "His Excellency" the representative of the king, to severe dialectical castigation and invited him to cease polluting the community by betaking himself to some place where his talent for dishonest methods might have full play. Although at no time the race question was raised, still it is easy to realize that the denunciation of the colonial secretary and Major Thomas, particularly the latter, who is lately from South Africa, was due to their contemptuous attitude toward Negroes. Having had their first contact with Negroes in Africa, the [illegible] should treat Jamaicans with the superciliousness and irresponsible methods that have characterized their sojourn in that unfortunate continent.

The action of the legislators [illegible] and will have a [illegible] on the future of the island inasmuch as these same men [illegible] were the recipients of [illegible] from the under secretary of state for the colonies, Major Wood, who recently headed a commission to the West Indies and in his report advised the granting of a greater measure of political rule.

Not only was the administration denounced, but no longer did the natives show the usual timidity and unnatural deference to Europeans. These latter were told to "shut up," "sit down," "you are wasting time," with truculence that bodes good for the manhood of the race and gives the lie to ignorant and misguided mountebanks who tell Negroes that they must give up what rights they have in the western world in order to get greater rights in Africa.

The Lynching Barrier

There is nothing new about the doctrine that the United States should own or control the West Indies, for it has been coming up at intervals for three-quarters of a century. If the idea were forgotten tonight, one glance at the map would revive it tomorrow.

The West Indies are detached bits of the North American continent. Their natural products are things for which the United States furnishes the best market. They would be far more prosperous under our flag than under any other, provided they were given free access to our markets. They are useless to Europe, and in European hands furnish theoretical bases for threatening the Panama canal. Practically, that threat is meaningless.

But every time the question of annexing part or all of the West Indies has come to the fore, obstacles have intervened; once they were furnished by national pride and fancied military or naval advantages. That day has passed, but a higher barrier than ever is found in the principle of self-determination.

Two facts stand out clearly in any survey of the West Indies, British, French or Dutch. One is that the islands must be governed, must lean on some stronger authority than they can muster for themselves. Even Cuba, largest of the islands and probably best fitted for independence, has been obliged to fall back on the help of Uncle Sam more than once. The other fact is that an enormous majority of West Indians are of African descent. Everywhere, the negroes form 60 per cent or more of the total population, and in Jamaica their numbers rise to about 98 per cent.

Will West Indian negroes vote themselves out from under authority which grants them complete civic equality and a large measure of special recognition to put themselves under the rule of a country in which the social color line is drawn with steely hardness, in which scores of black men are lynched every year, and which has at least two race riots every decade?

While lynch law prevails in the United States, discussion of the West Indian transfer is idle. Of course, America wants the islands. Europe would be glad to get rid of them if it could be done without wounding national pride, and "saving face" is the special task of diplomacy. But we can not buy reluctant peoples as if they were cattle, and they appear to be strangely unattracted by the possibilities of mob rule.

"Devil Dogs" Make Virgin Islands a Hell, Speaker Asserts.

PEOPLE AT POINT OF REVOLT

Duplication of Haitian Scandal Predicted, Unless Public Opinion in America is Quickly Aroused Against Cracker Practices.

(Crusader Service).

NEW YORK, Feb. — Citing many brutalities alleged to have been committed by American marines, Virgin Islanders in a mass meeting at Lafayette Hall last Sunday afternoon declared that the Navy Department, by its high-handedness and misrule, was driving the peaceable, law-abiding people of the Virgin Islands to the point of revolt and that unless the American people took the matter in hand, they would be faced with another scandal. The meeting was held by the Congressional Council, an organization of Virgin Islanders agitating for justice on behalf of their fellow-islanders at home.

Casper Holstein, the principal speaker and president of the Council, declared that the Navy Department had read its own interpretation into the laws of the islands, and were enforcing the same discipline that prevailed in the Navy. The beating up of men and women by the marines for no other reason than the color of their skin, was, he said, a common occurrence.

"The laws," said Mr. Holstein, "are being administered by judicial tyrants acting under the Navy Department. Appeal is useless, as the two courts—the Police Court and the District Court—practically function as one and an appeal from the first is but another appeal to itself."

Magistrate Payne, of St. Croix, a Negro, was mentioned by the speakers as the chief enforcer of the Navy Department's orders. "If records of cases could be had and a comparison drawn between them and the original statutes of the islands, you would find that in the majority of cases Magistrate Payne has over-stepped the bounds. This Negro has all the instincts of his overlords. As in all oppressed groups there are always those who are used as slave-drivers. Payne serves out injustice in large doses and there seems to be no cessation of his criminal acts."

Other speakers declared that free speech was forbidden. "It is impossible," said Tomas Fawcett," for the islanders to protest without causing reprisals by the judiciary. Free speech is forbidden. Editors who tell the truth are subject to the wrath of the officials. It is a deplorable condition and we are asking the American people to give us their moral support in this struggle for justice.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND WILL NOT SELL W. I. ASSERTS PUBLICIST

3-16-23

GENEVA, March 16.—The proposed plan which has been mooted for the cession by England and France of their possessions in the Antilles to the United States in exchange for their war debts and interest has naturally aroused considerable interest on this side, and an article which appears today in the Tribune de Geneve from the pen of M. Rene Gouzy may be taken as fairly representative of neutral opinion on the subject.

After describing the Antilles as "this chaplet of islands long colonized, with an interesting past and, for some at least, glorious historical traditions" and detailing the American proposal, he proceeds:

"I am not in the confidence of the Ministries either of Paris or London, but I doubt very much whether this ingenious and very commercial proposition will arouse much enthusiasm in the breasts of the suggested 'sellers.' In politics, of course, one can never swear to anything. But I am sure that public opinion, as much in Great Britain as in France, would never consent to a transaction which smells too much of the Chicago meat packer.

"Let us not forget that in these islands which it is proposed to barter with such sans gene there are inhabitants, colonists—men, in fact. Do you think that the British subjects of Trinadad or the Barbados, that French citizens—black or white—of Guadeloupe or Martinique would not protest as one man and with their last breath against such a denationalization, against this opprobium that it is proposed to place upon them?"

"The Prince of Wales' trip to the Antilles two years ago showed how much these populations are attached to the 'old country,' for which they shed their blood during the great conflict. It is certainly not otherwise with Martinique and Guadeloupe, French at heart for so many years. All these 'Americans' intend to remain Europeans, and I for one hope they will remain so.

There is a distinct lack of psychology, and above all of tact, on the other side of the Atlantic. For this traffic in countries handed over with their inhabitants belongs, happily, to other periods of history. A colony is no longer sold like a barrel of molasses, Mr. Jonathan!"

John Sharp Williams Objects to Uncle Sam, Annexing W. I. Islands

Pittsburg American
Pittsburg Star

(By The Associated Negro Press)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, is opposed to the annexation of the West Indies to the United States for a number of reasons, not the least of which is the fact that 6,000,000 or 8,000,000 colored people would be added to the 15,000,000 now living under the American flag. Senator Williams so expressed himself in the Senate following a lengthy discussion on the subject by Senator Reed, Democrat, of Missouri.

The Senator cited twelve reasons why the United States should have the islands. His chief argument was that they were of great importance to the defense and security of the American mainland and that their possession by foreign nations constituted a menace to the safety of the Panama canal. He also declared that, under American ownership, they could be made of great economic value.

"I am neither seeking to stir up animosity toward Great Britain nor to arouse any feeling of distrust against that great nation," said Senator Reed. "We all entertain the hope that the great English speaking race will never be engaged in a death struggle. Reasonable men, however, will concur in the conclusion that if the view I have just expressed is sound, then their is no strategic reason why Great Britain should insist upon holding these islands against us, because we are not to be attacked."

Senator Williams further said: "The senator says those islands, under American rule, will become a winter paradise," he said. "They are a paradise now, but would they be after they were brought under the rule of Wheeler and the Volstead act?"

The following editorial was written by Mr. Morenga-Bonaparte and appeared in the St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, "Emancipator." On account of the sentiment here expressed Mr. Bonaparte was ordered deported by the United States naval governor.

Glancing over the report of the Joint Commission that visited these islands a few years ago, we find the following remark concerning our government under the Navy. "The Commission cannot speak too highly of the work done by the Navy in carrying on the government of the Islands."

We turn the leaves further to find out what report was made re the police department; but fortunately or unfortunately as one care to take it we failed to find what we had expected. Nevertheless, under the caption "Laws" of said report, we came across something about the Police master, which reads: "The Judge of the court is Police master, a member of the Colonial Tax Commission, a member of the Colonial Council, also in charge of deeds and mortgages of records. As police master he institutes cases which are tried before him. This is an un-American policy."

Of course, while the first reference to the Navy government is both past and present fact; we believe that at present the Police master is not a member of the Colonial Council nor the Colonial Tax Commission. In fact we do not know of any individual policemaster.

As far as we do know, we have a police director stationed at For Christian, St. Thomas; a Chief of Police stationed at St. Jan; three sergeants; six patrolmen and one "special" officer, who drives the police car These are the eleven heads who are entrusted to take care of the peopl residing in the Municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, as far as we knov The executive body which is supposed to govern our Police Department is styled "the Police Commission." It is very interesting to know that the Government Secretary, a merchant, a gold smith and the Police director form and represent the body in question.

Judging from the cases which we have heard that have been dealt with by these gents, we have all reason to believe that the commission will call the present system un-American, just the same as they found it a few years ago. Pittsburg American Star,

The holes in the Police Department must be darned. We cannot sit still and see such impositions and wrong-doings of the petted few without raising our voice. Out of numerous references just let us recall to recent date.

On Friday night last the St. John Vigilante grabbed on the back of a child, only about 11 years old, and called on a patrolman who he ordered to take the boy to the police station. What for? God knows. We are informed by our reporter who witnessed the scene, that the boy simply fired off a paper cap in the neighborhood of the Park; whereupon the St. John Vigilante held him and declared him under arrest.

The boy was then taken to the police station by another patrolman by orders of the Vigilante in question. The poor boy's sister luckily found the Police Director at the movie show on the barracks ground; and the latter went up to the police station where he found the boy in the guard room. "What is the charge?" queried the Director, but the top sergeant at the desk could not answer. He only gave to understand that a patrolman had brought the boy to the station by order of another sergeant. The Director told the boy to go home. This is reference No. 1. How will it end? We are on the qui vive.

Our second reference is as follows: Yesterday afternoon our black and white traffic vigilantes, raided Cha Cha town and drove up a couple carloads of Cha Chas in the police car to the police station. From these only a few are alleged with gambling while all the others were looking on. The case will come before the Police Judge on Wednesday, we understand.

It is no gainsaying the fact that something is wrong with our Police Department, of course we cannot rightly use the word force, for we would be wrong in so doing. A police force is made up not only of men with heads on and wearing stripes, badges, uniforms or civilian clothes; but brains in the men's heads coupled with discretion are the main factors of such a responsible body.

While at present the Director of Police is not a member of the Colonial Council as it was with the police master of the past, he has got a bigger pull for he sits in the Governor's conference circle every day and not one of the men on the police commission has any idea of real police work.

The holes in the Police Department should be darned."—M. B.

SPANISH-SPEAKING NEGROES THINK US IGNORANT AND NON-PROGRESSIVE

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Cuban Lawyer Speaking Here Tells of 5,000 Black Cubans Killed in 1912 Revolution

An appeal for closer contact between English- and Spanish-speaking Negroes in America was made by Dr. Bernardo Ruiz Suarez, noted lawyer and author of South America in an interesting lecture in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. Thursday evening.

The subject of his talk was "The Future of the Negro Race in Spanish-America." According to Dr. Suarez, the Cuban knows his North American brother only as a low uncultured being, who lacking intelligence and race pride, cannot progress socially or politically. This he attributes to propaganda spread throughout Cuba and the Argentine by American whites.

When asked if he had found such conditions here, Dr. Suarez replied: "I have found the Negro of the United States far more advanced than my people in Cuba." He also stated that in most South American countries a class distinction between Negroes of different complexions exists. In refering to the Argentine, the lecturer pointed out the fact that race prejudice ran higher there than in any other Spanish American country, owing chiefly to the vast number of white Americans.

In the course of his talk the Doctor stated his belief that it would benefit the Negro of both Americas if it were possible for them to come in contact with each other, as the South American Negro knows very little of his northern brother only through the unsavory ideas gathered from the whites traveling through those countries. 3/9/23

In 1912, a bill was passed in the Cuban Congress making it impossible for a Negro to become President of Cuba. This resulted in an unsuccessful attempt to overthrow the government then under the administration of President Zomez. In this insurrection five thousand Negroes were killed and Dr. Suarez with three hundred other members of the Negro party were thrown into prizon where he was held for eighteen months.

It was during his imprisonment that he received his inspiration for his wonderful book of verse, "Vibrations." It is also interesting to know that while undergoing the privations of prison life and the brutality of the guards, Dr. Suarez's hair turned immaturely white.

The Doctor is a graduate of Havana University, having studied law there and came to this country in the latter part of 1921. His lecture was greeted by an enthusiastic audience, this being his first attempt to deliver a talk in English, having hitherto always used an interpreter.

RACE PREJUDICE SPREADING; WHITE AMERICANS CAUSE SERIOUS TROUBLE

(By the Associated Negro Press)

Washington, D. C., June 19.—Haiti, the Black Republic of the West Indies, is again to the front. There exists there keen disappointment and depression. The Associated Negro Press is given this information from absolutely reliable sources, and unless there is a change of attitude in administration the glowing promises of Haiti's future under American supervision will be swept to the four winds in failure.

The Associated Negro Press has first-hand information and is giving the facts to the people of the United States in the line of public duty. This service has kept closely informed on the program under the administration of President Harding, and the public has been led to believe that justice would be given.

The committee of the United States senate, of which Senator Medill McCormick of Illinois is chairman, gave out a report of promising import, albeit, some parts did not meet with general approval.

Capt. Marshall Deceived, Humiliated

Capt. Napoleon B. Marshall, who was selected by the State Department to go down to Haiti as a representative of the government, and to bring about a feeling of good will between the people of the two countries, has been deceived and humiliated. Even his friends have been deceived and humiliated. Who is responsible for this?

Senator McCormick of Illinois, as chairman of the Haitian Committee, in an address in Chicago prior to the departure of Marshall, declared publicly that he was turning over the work for the redemption of Haiti to Captain Marshall. Marshall was present. It is believed that the senator was in earnest. The entire address was broadcasted in its entirety with the full knowledge of the Illinois senator. But from the very beginning, Marshall found a stone wall.

In the records of the State Department, Marshall is designated as a clerk, and as a clerk he has been retained in Haiti! This amazing state of affairs has been known for some time, and has been the source of great surprise to the captain's friends, who have remained silent, hoping that there might be an adjustment.

Senator McCormick Informed

The Associated Negro Press is informed that Senator McCormick, the State Department and other high officials of the government are aware of the facts in this case. When the captain was appointed, Senator McCormick, who had just returned from Haiti, declared he "was resigning his commission into Marshall's hands." Obviously the revelation of the Marshall status strikes Colored America like throwing cold water in the face. The political mind of the group is in a sickening state already.

Gen. John H. Russell, high commissioner of Haiti, appointed through the good offices of Senator McCormick, also had studiously avoided meeting Captain Marshall during the whole of the captain's stay in Port au Prince. The American friends of Marshall had looked forward to General Russell and Captain Marshall working in harmony for the welfare of Haiti.

James C. Dunn, charge d'affaires of Port au Prince, a white man, is now in Washington, and it is understood that in the face of all the humiliation through which Marshall has passed, Dunn is expected to ask for his withdrawal! Why? Marshall went to Haiti with the high purpose of being of service to his country and the people of Haiti in line with the expressed purposes of Senator McCormick.

Marshall did not, in the first place, seek the position. He was the most surprised man in the country when the fact was first mentioned to him. He heads a large law firm in New York; owns property, a Harvard graduate, and married the daughter of the late Judge Gibbs, who is an accomplished artist and musician. In Port au Prince, both the captain and Mrs. Marshall have entered loyally into the spirit of helpful service, and have become popular with the Haitian people, but seemingly person non grata to the white Americans who are controlling things with an iron hand. These white Americans, from all indications do not wish Colored Americans to function on equal terms with Haitians and themselves. They have studiously ignored Captain and Mrs. Marshall socially. However, Marshall's status as a "clerk" prevents him from being socially recognized officially. Nevertheless President Borno and other officials have defied custom and received both the Captain and Mrs. Marshall. On one occasion Marshall was invited to sit on the bench by a judge during a prominent trial; Marshall was refused "time" from his employment to go to the trial, it has been learned here from prominent Haitians.

Haitians themselves are saying: "If the white Americans treat Captain Marshall thus, what may we expect in justice, as Marshall represents the best in Colored American progress." The crisis has arrived, and American sincerity of purpose is placed to the acid test.

Jamaica and Its People

WHERE THE TWAIN MEET. By MARY GAUNT. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. 1923.

Reviewed by WILLIAM McFEE

N Y C POST
MARCH 31, 1923

FOR those who know Jamaica this book by Mary Gaunt will confirm and amplify their previous knowledge and enthusiasms, while for that other more numerous class who have yet to visit one of the loveliest islands of the tropic sea "Where the Twain Meet" will arouse their immediate interest and curiosity.

It is a remarkable volume in several ways. Mrs. Gaunt has a unique equipment for dealing with her theme. An Australian born, who has lived in West Africa and in England, she comes to Jamaica with sympathy for and clear-headed judgment of the grave problems of slavery, negro superstition, and the planter class. Above all, she likes colored people in a way that, for good or ill, it seems impossible to achieve in the United States. And so, by reason of this unusual knowledge and sympathy, Mrs. Gaunt has built up for us a complete and spirited picture of the island history from the fifteenth century to the present day.

Of all the travel books which are being put out more and more plentifully, this might serve as a class textbook for authors. It contains everything pertaining to the subject. The author is an experienced and indefatigable traveller. She has not only studied the history of Jamaica and visited the island as a tourist; she has lived there as a resident and fallen in love with the place and the people. Yet it is a strictly business-like performance. It would be absurd to draw comparisons between "Where the Twain Meet" and Mr. Hergesheimer's "San Cristobal de la Habana," for example. We read the latter in a mood of poetic delight, knowing all the time in our hearts it would never be like that if we went there ourselves. But Mrs. Gaunt makes us want to go to Jamaica because we are convinced that it will be exactly as she says and possibly much better. For many travellers nowadays write books to tell us about some part of the world because they went there to get away from themselves or from civilization. Mrs. Gaunt has no such ambition. She gives one the impression of being quite the sanest and healthiest minded person in the world, and the more civilization Jamaica gets the better Mrs. Gaunt will like it. We are inclined to agree with her.

One of her most interesting chapters deals with the little-known people called Maroons. For a hundred and forty years a small band of colored folk maintained themselves in the mountain fastnesses of Jamaica and waged a sanguinary and relentless war upon the British Government. Whether they were authentic descendants of Spanish slaves left behind when the Spaniards quit the island no one can definitely discover. Whoever they were, they deserve recognition in history, and it is reasonable to suspect that if only one could get at old records that must be hidden away in some planter's house near Montego Bay romantic tales might be devised. Even the bare record of the feud—for such it became—as told by Mrs. Gaunt in her racy and spirited style is a fascinating thing, to which we return more than once.

It is a great pleasure to recapitulate the history of the negro in Jamaica and see the slow but sure ascent towards life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To meet men of color who hold responsible executive positions and whose mental resources are in every way equal to our own is a notable and bracing experience. These men are themselves the first to advocate the maintenance of white ascendance in the Government. Mr. Marcus Garvey may be vociferously welcomed when he comes to Kingston as the first President of the "African Republic," but the average responsible negro comprehends the sources of political stability more truly, and, as far as a casual spectator can see, the whites attack the island Government much more fiercely than do the colored folk!

Jamaica has incurred a debt of gratitude to Mrs. Gaunt for this lively and enthusiastic contribution to West Indian literature. We note with pleasure that she advises all whose interest has been aroused to read the novels of Herbert de Lisser, who has depicted with relentless fidelity and shrewd humor the life of the poor colored folk. It is to be hoped that in the near future Mr. de Lisser's novels may appear in American editions and gratify the readers of Mrs. Gaunt's admirable volume.

CIVIC STATUS IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The Negro World N.Y.

IT is decidedly in the interest of justice for the United States Congress to consider the Open Letter sent it by the Virgin Islands Congressional Council, of which Casper Holstein is president. Also, it would be well for Mr. Denby to examine the circumstances surrounding the outrageous deportations being engineered by the Naval Administration, as in the case of Morenga-Bonaparte. Uncle Sam's record in the Virgin Islands is a disgrace to democracy. No wonder Jamaica,, held by its throat in a vise-like grip by John Bull, cries out against United. States annexation. This phase of our machinery of government is the most chaotic. Our colonial administrators, like most of our consuls, are petty and provincial lilliputians not in sympathy with the yearnings and aspirations of dark subject peoples. In the Virgin Islands, to quote the Open Letter, there exists a "curious anomaly":

"We do not know whether any portion of the people of a republic can very well be subjects, but we do know that the form of American government which we now have in the Virgin Islands does not exist anywhere else in the United States. Its like is to be found only in Haiti or Santo Domingo, as it was to be found some years ago in those parts of the Philippine Islands which were in a state of military insurrection against the United States. But we have never been in insurrection against the United States; we were peacefully acquired by treaty of sale negotiated between the government of Denmark and that of the United States and ratified by your honorable body. It should seem, then, that by the transfer we should have become American citizens. But American citizens are those who enjoy the rights and privileges defined in the United States Constitution as pertaining to American citizenship. And it should be known to you that not only do we not enjoy these rights and privileges in the Virgin Islands, but they have been explicitly denied to us."

Of the problems facing the folk led by that noble non-compromiser of rights, D. Hamilton Jackson, the civil status of the Virgin Islands is the chief and most pressing, and ought to be dispensed with at once.

FINDS HAITI NEEDS MARINES TO GO ON

Denby Party Fears Loss of Handful Left Would Precipitate Anarchy.

PROGRESS ONLY BEGINNING

Topography, Illiteracy and Suspicion Bred by Oppression Make Problem.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti, April 2.—Wonders literally have been achieved by the American occupation of Haiti, but the time has not come when the American marines can be withdrawn. The consensus of opinion among members of Secretary Denby's Congressional party is that the American Government should go forward with its treaty obligation to remedy the present condition of Haitian revenues and finances, maintain the tranquility of the republic and carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of Haiti and its people. They believe that withdrawal of the marines would be followed by disorders, bloodshed, revolution and anarchy.

On its way back from Panama the Denby party has spent two days in Haiti. Senators and Representatives have been received at the national palace with cordiality by President Louis Borno and members of his Cabinet and Council of State. They have conferred with Brig. Gen. John H. Russell of the United States Marine Corps, who has been nearly a year acting as American High Commissioner to Haiti by appointment of President Harding.

They have discussed the situation with American naval and marine officers on duty in Haiti, with American treaty officers engaged in putting Haiti on its economic and financial feet, as well as with American and other foreign business men in the island, and have covered a wide range of Haitian territory.

Thorough Survey Made.

The American legislative party has sped in high-powered motors across mountains into the hill country—once the stronghold of the dreaded Cacos bandit—along newly built highways which are linking all parts of Haiti and opening commercial routes from the rich interior valleys to the principal seaports. They have gone by airplane to distant northern sections of the country and visited the Haitian in his native habitat and found peace and quiet everywhere prevalent.

President Borno appears to have confidence in the American occupation, has been co-operating with the American treaty and marine officers to achieve substantial good for his country, and the result is apparent in maintenance of peace, works of sanitation, construction of good roads, education of the gendarmerie, and public administration. But progress has only begun and it will be a long time before the Haitian will be able to stand alone.

The present American marine occupation has continued for eight years, but most of the marines are gone. The first work was one of pacification. That has been achieved. Haiti is entering the second phase of development. Th' likewise will be difficult. The country is small. It is as thickly populated as any rural section of the world. Less than 5 per cent. in a population of 2,500,000 are literate.

Natural Supicion to Be Overcome.

Outside the towns the people, more than 99 per cent. black, live in the most simple and primitive state. Behind them lie more than four hundred years during which there was much oppression by the Spanish, and exploitation by French masters, so that distrust and even hatred of the white man has been ingrained in many of the natives. It has been difficult to uproot from the Haitian negro's mind his suspicion of the foreigner, and equally as hard to win support from him for the lighter-hued Haitian politician who too long had treated the hill people as cattle for purposes of governmental grant and financial exploitation.

The problem of teeming population is a tremendous one in Haiti. No rural part of the world is more thickly populated. The average density of Haitian population is 200 persons to the square mile, compared with 217.9 per square mile in New York State, 56 in Cuba, 39 in Santo Domingo, while the average population of the whole United States is only 35.50 per square mile. These figures are official, obtained from members of the treaty administration.

While Haiti and Santo Domingo occupy the same island—the Hispaniola of Columbus—Haiti constitutes only one-fourth of the land territory of the island and has four times the population of the Dominican republic.

Babies will constitute one of the greatest problems in the future of Haiti. The population is increasing rapidly. Most of the girls and women of Haiti become mothers between the ages of 11 to 22 years. Babies play around every hut and there are literally scores of thousands of them in Haiti. Under the American occupation they appear happy and most of them threaten to grow into manhood with the steady elimination of disease under the influence of American sanitation.

With the achievement of pacification and wiping out of the revolutionary and Cacos bands the number of American marines here has been reduced from an entire brigade to a strength of only 1,528 officers and men, commanded by Colonel Theodore P. Kane.

The headquarters of the Eighth Marine Regiment are near the Presidential palace in Port au Prince. The Second Observation Squadron of Airmen and the Marine Motor Transport also have their headquarters at that place. The Second Regiment is established at Cape Haitien, on the northern shore of the country. Thirteen miles northeast of Port au Prince is the training centre of the marine brigade at Camp General Russell near Pont Beudet. With the exception of a small post in the interior at St. Michel the entire marine brigade is concentrated at Port au Prince and Cape Haitien.

All other former marine posts in the interior are now garrisoned by native gendarmes, trained and organized by American marine officers. Lieut. Col. Douglas C. McDougal of the United States Marine Corps, a Californian, is Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti holding the rank of Major General. Most of the officers are American marines, but some of the officers are natives and the force of gendarmes has been brought to the point where it does the policing, maintaining order, while the handful of American marines stand ready at all times to support them.

The marines take no part in the administration of the affairs of the Civil Government, except such as may be requested by the civil officials. But their presence is necessary in order that disorder and revolution may be kept in subjection and that the Civil Government itself may, behind the protection thus afforded, have the necessary opportunity for the organization, development and administration of its duties.

Haiti has an area of 10,200 square miles from a coast line 900 miles. Her size is the same as Vermont. But her population is 2,500,000, or about that of Oklahoma. Although until the present American occupation there were no roads in Haiti worthy the name, it is impossible to go anywhere in Haiti and get beyond sight of a hut or away from the sound of a human voice. Mountain, hill and valley are studded with habitations of the native, and all are occupied. The country is so mountainous that a British Admiral, who was once making report to King George III., crumpled a sheet of paper in his hand, tossed it on the table and exclaimed, "Sire, Haiti looks like that." There are mountains of 7,000 feet elevation, with spurs running down to the sea, but between them are many fertile valleys, although not cultivated extensively by the natives.

There are no schools in the rural districts and 95 per cent. of the population is unable to read or write.

The foreigners are greatly in the minority. The American High Commissioner stated that there are only about 3,000 foreigners in Haiti, irrespective of military and treaty personnel. The British, French, Americans and Germans lead. Germans have in the past been active in financing revolutionary leaders. The priests and sisters of the Catholic Church, numbering 646, are almost wholly French. There are 650 Syrians, most of whom hold French, British or American citizenship, but not many Chinese. There are only forty-two Americans engaged in business in Port au Prince, either for themselves or representing American houses.

Foreigners, exclusive of the treaty and occupation personnel and clergy, and travelers in transit, must registeer within forty-eight hours after their arrival in the respective communes where they intend to reside.

Before the landing of the American marines on July 28, 1915, Haiti had twenty-six rulers—two emperors, one king and twenty-three presidents. Fourteen of these served less than a year, and one only finished the statutory term of seven years alive. Since the insurrection of 1843 one President after another has been assassinated or exiled, while the country's affairs went from bad to worse.

Calls Haitians Unfit to Govern.

"The spirit of public service in Haiti," said Brig. Gen. Rufus H. Lane, who accompanied Secretary Denby's party and is an authority on Haitian and Dominican affairs, "has been lacking except as manifested in a small degree in isolated cases, and the purpose of exploiting a Government trust for private profit is universally accepted and approved. Democracy in the sense known to Americans has been wholly absent. These Haitian people maintain no principles and each appears to live his own life in a system of individualism that admits of no common duties and no leadership except to meet some difficulty immediately present. The spirit of sacrifice for public good does not seem to have ever been obtained. "There is no public opinion and the mass of the people are incapable of conceiving any intelligent notions of government. A Government based upon the will of the majority, as understood in our own country, is an utter impossibility. The actual Government is based upon force, which is exercised by the army or by the personal following of the head of the Government."

GET OUT OF SANTO DOMINGO.

The United States Government is relinquishing its control of the affairs of the black people of Santo Domingo. We do not seem successful in managing the affairs of "fluttered folk and wild."

We do not think that there is any considerable body of public sentiment in America that asks that Santo Domingo be annexed. As the Chicago Tribune says, "Santo Domingo, if annexed, would be a nuisance. In fact, we believe the Santo Dominicans should have as much independence as they can be trusted with, having regard for our own peace and our substantial interest in the Caribbean. But we went into the island for a good and sufficient reason, which has not disappeared and will not disappear.

"We went in because the Santo Dominicans had got themselves into a morass of debt and a tangle of international obligations which threatened the intervention of irate or designing creditors. To prevent Santo Domingo from becoming the base for possible hostilities against us, we took over Dominican affairs and have put them on a safe basis for the time being."

Santo Domingo has the bloodiest and most horrible history of any so-called self-governing nation on the Western Continent. Its story has been a history of civil strife and assassinated rulers. The natives have transformed the island from a terrestial paradise to a desert waste. Santo Domingo was of consequence to our international affairs and we should have gone in, as we did, when we waged a great war. The academic theorists can argue that the people are entitled to self-determination and they should be permitted to have their own government. The ideals and customs of the American Republic are impossible to Santo Dominicans. We can withdraw in accordance with the formula of self-government. By doing so we shall probably make certain that at some future time we shall have to go in again. At any rate we ought especially to see that we remain in a position at all times to prevent the island from becoming a threat to our own shores, or to the Panama Canal. We should retain the right to supervise and intervene in case of futile disturbances or a threat of a collapse of responsible government.

The Crackers of the Navy Department Stage Another Deportation in the Virgin Islands—St. Thomas Journ

3/10/23

By CASPER HOLSTEIN

President Virgin Islands Congressional Council

The vultures of the Virgin Islands have made their second swoop. This time it is on the Island of St. Thomas, and the issues involved are the power of deportation and the right of the press to publish news which is neither defamatory nor libelous, but simply critical of a cracker named Gaffney, who never had anything "down south," but feels that he must assume the airs of a little tin soldier strutting in a penny peep show. This is the story:

Morenga Bonaparte, in spite of his name, is a British subject, native of the Island of Grenada, in the British West Indies. He has been for many years a resident of the Island of St. Thomas, which was transferred to the United States in 1917 under a treaty of sale. While in St. Thomas, Bonaparte engaged in journalism and was one of the associate editors of a small weekly paper run by the radical element among the Negroes of that island. The editor-in-chief of the paper was a member of the legislative body called no power to initiate legislation and a majority of its members are not elected by the voters of the island, but are officially hand-picked by the authorities who have seats on the same council.

Virgin Island Governor More Mighty Than U. S. President

It has been already decided by ex-Governor Kittelle, by the present Governor Hough, by J. J. Gaffney, the cracker above referred to; by Judge McKean, Magistrate Payne and all the officials of the naval regime that those rights which are guaranteed by the Constitution in the forty-eight States of the American Union do not apply where the navy has exclusive jurisdiction—especially in the Virgin Islands and most particularly to newspapers. The life of a journalist of color in the Virgin Islands of the United States is not quite as idyllic as one could wish where people are governed by laws the fathers of the country laid it down as a prime principle of their Government that the legislative, executive and judicial functions of the Government should never be united in any one person or, to put it in plainer English, that no person, howsoever great he might be, should at the same time make the law, interpret the law, and apply the law; because they realized that in such a case that person would be the law—a law unto himself. And while the American people since that time have loved and revered many great men, they have never entrusted any one of them with any two of these powers at the same time. Yet what the wisdom of the American people has withheld from George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt and Warren G. Harding, the carelessness of Congress concedes to every naval jack-in-office who gets temporarily promoted to the governorship of the Virgin Islands.

But to resume the story of Morenga-Bonaparte. On November 27 of last year, the paper which he helped to edit carried an editorial signed with his initials (which was a decided tactical error). In this editorial he quoted from the report of the Joint Commission which whitewashed the Navy Department's insular rule two years before. The first quotation reads:

"The commission cannot speak too highly of the work done by the navy in carrying on the government of the Islands."

But the second quotation says:

"The judge of the court is police master, a member of the Colonial Tax Commission, a member of the Colonial Council, also in charge of deeds and mortgages of records. As police master he institutes cases which are tried before him. This is an un-American policy."

The writer of the editorial simply repeats the same criticism and, in enlarging on it, cites two specific illustrations of the recent date, closing with the statement that "The holes in the Police Department should be darned." We venture to think that no Southern white man in Mississippi, Tennessee or Texas would consider such an editorial in a Negro newspaper as sufficient ground for even a Ku Klux condemnation.

But behold! On the very next day the following official notification was served on Mr. Bonaparte: "November 28, 1922, Mr. Morenga-Bonaparte, subeditor of the 'Emancipator,' St. Thomas. Sir: A meeting of the Police Commission will be held in Christianfort at 10 a. m., Wednesday, November 29, 1922, for the purpose of considering certain published statements which bear your name.

"If you care to be present at this time to give such information as you may have to the Commission, in justification of your public statements, you are hereby informed that you will be afforded an opportunity at the time and place mentioned. Very truly yours, J. J. Gaffney, chairman of the Police Commission."

He appeared before this commission, where he was forced to testify under oath at its star chamber proceedings, and Gaffney insultingly insisted that he should write and print in the paper a public apology. This Bonaparte refused to do. Neither the Colonial Council nor the Organic Act under which the Navy Department has ever given to this commission the right and power to try civilians—or any one else. It was, therefore, operating ultra vires, as the lawyers say. And even if it had such power, the exercise of it would have been highly improper in a case in which itself was the defendant. However, the chairman, Gaffney, referred the case to the Governor, who, according to the navy's ideas of government, has at the same time civil, judicial and military powers. On Jan. 31 this legally divine person, this trinity in unity, issued the following order:

"Governor of the Virgin Islands of the United States. St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, January 31, 1923. From: Governor of the Virgin Islands to sheriff, municipality of St. Thomas. Subject: Deportation of Thomas F. H. Morenga-Bonaparte. By virtue of the power invested in me and the ordinances or laws of the Virgin Islands in such cases made and provided the deportation of Thomas F. H. Morenga-Bonaparte, a native of Grenada, British West Indies, is hereby authorized.

(Signed) "HENRY I. HOUGH."

Whereupon, Bonaparte was notified to hold himself in readiness for deportation on the "S. S. Guiana." The journalist, however, did not wait for the "Guiana," but left by sail boat for the British island of Tortola.

When the Cracker Cuts Loose

This is the second case of deportation in the Virgin Islands during the last five months, the first being the now notorious Barrow case. It is another evidence of the spirit of intolerant tyranny which is bound to break out wherever and whenever white Americans from the Southern States are given any authority over colored people anywhere. It is the spirit which is responsible for "the rising tide of color against white world supremacy." And we can not forget that in his now celebrated Birmingham address President Harding asked all intelligent white Americans to read and study the book by that name which Lothrop Stoddard has written. We feel sure that the officials of the Navy Department will not let any copies of that book appear in the public libraries in the Virgin Islands. But we wish that they themselves would read it—for their own good. For they would begin to see that it is just this policy of outrageous oppression which is consolidating the twelve hundred million black and brown and yellow people against the less than three hundred million (out of five hundred million) whites who have embarked on the career of economic and racial imperialism.

"How Long, O Lord, How Long?"

Intelligent men everywhere know that it is a poor policy which consolidates its victims in a confraternity of suffering and sets them to asking, "How long, O Lord, how long?" And that is why the intelligent whites in the United States are even now doing all they can to lift from the soul of twelve million Negroes the awful shadow of oppression and to give them an outlook brighter than that which the Gaffneys, Houghs, McKeans and Williams would prescribe for them. But this safer, saner way must beat back the spirit of the "cracker" which blocks the way to better relations between black and white Americans; for if it fails to do this, then God knows what the future may bring forth!

And now, what is it that the Virgin Islanders must do? Since they are not permitted to speak or write against "the wrongs that need resistance" in the Virgin Islands, it is all the more necessary that they should combine and concentrate their efforts in that part of America where they are still free to protest, to criticize, to plan for better conditions. It becomes the duty of the weaker peoples to fight for democracy since the strong hardly need to. And it certainly seems queer that the Governor of the Virgin Islands, unlike the President of the United States, should be able to play the part of W. S. Gilbert's sailor-man, who, after eating the cook, who had eaten the mate, that had eaten the captain and others, could truthfully declare:

"Oh, I am a cook and a captain bold
And the mate of the 'Nancy' brig;
And the bo'sun tight, and a midshipmite
And the crew of the captain's gig."

The immediate task before Virgin Islanders is to call the attention of America to this curious anomaly which takes from President Harding in the name of democracy a privilege which it gives to Mr. J. J. Gaffney, cracker, in the name of race prejudice. It is for them to ask why there should be one form of rule for Filipinos and a worse one for Negroes under the same flag?

Is the hoodwink held fast against the eyes of justice in the Virgin Islands? Are her feet chained to the marble pedestal of liberty and right with the heavy chains of injustice? Is there one measure of justice for the man of power and another for the mendicant? Is there one interpretation of the law for Dives and another for Lazarus? Is it possible that man is measured by his dollars, that the "Equal Rights to All—Special Privileges to None" idea has been turned to the wall and the almighty dollar framed in its stead? Must the masses in the Virgin Islands bow down in worship of the "overlords" while the palladium of their liberties is transformed into a tool of special privilege?

Jamaicans Protest Cession to United States.

Richmond Planet
Richmond, Va.

(Crusader Service.)

Kingston, Jamaica, March 12.—Lord Burnham, editor of the London Telegraph, who is visiting here as an observer, recently heard expressions of dissatisfaction with prevailing political and economic condition from representative public J. A. G. Smith, Simpson, Young and Lowe, colored men, assured Lord Burnham that they are unalterably opposed to the island being handed over to the United States and they are anxious to see fewer South African officials with colored prejudice sent here.

3/17/23

Generally, expressions of preference for England were tendered along with the plea for fuller control of the island's destiny by its native population. The distinguished visitor assured numerous delegations of his interest and promised to use his influence to ameliorate the conditions complained against.

THE ONLY ONES

Chicago Whip. 3/24th/23.

How many times have we heard some black man sitting among his fellows state with pride and pomp that he was the only black man who backed in the favor of the white people? We have heard "Rufus Jones" aver with dignity that he was the only black man who lived on "Caucasian Boulevard." We have listened to "Sam Brown" as he asserted that he was the only colored man employed by the "White Sheet Manufacturing Co." We have been among those present when little "Hannibal Green" ejaculated that he was the only "race boy" in the Nordic School of Fine Arts." We have been in the audience when "Mariah Brown" erected her Senegambian nose and saucily stated that she was the only Negro girl employed as a stenographer by the Anglo-Saxon Supremacy Co. We, who are members of the black race, have time after time heard our own people gloat over the fact that they were tolerated or recognized by the white people. We are unable to see any indication of the much vaunted "race pride" in such positions. To the contrary such attitudes and such mental states savor of inferiority.

We see no signal honor in a black man living among white people, studying in their schools or working in their business establishments. The "only ones" here and there among white people have arrogantly elevated themselves within their own minds and have done nothing to solve their mediate or immediate problems. Black people have lived in circumscribed spheres so long that they have allowed themselves unconsciously to accept the dictums of an inferiority expressed by the white race. If the black people are ever to be unshackled in limb and muscle they must first be unfettered in mind.

When black people are fortunate enough to get in positions and environments that are barred to their race as a whole the only lasting benefit that can enure to them is to so conduct themselves that respect will be engendered for their race, and openings made possible for others to enter. While it is admitted that black people must perform just a bit better in these much coveted spheres than the white people, unless they break down some of the general barriers that are placed before their people, they have done little service for themselves and certainly nothing that should cause them to be elated.

These "only ones" who raise the heads, arch their eyebrows, and tilt their chins instead of realizing their superiority, have gone to the other extreme and accentuated their inferiority by considering themselves honored. We hope that the black people will soon realize that there is no honor in working, eating, sleeping and studying with white people. "Honor and shame from no conditions rise." It behooves the black man to stamp out every vestige of the poisonous preachments of his own unfitness. The Jews regard themselves as God's chosen people, and we are waiting for the black people to remove themselves from the memories of slavery which are brought to mind when a black man brags because his white brother shows a tolerant mind.

VIRGIN ISLAND EDITOR RUN OUT BY POLICE ON ORDER OF AM. MARINE COMMANDER

Mild Criticism of Police Results in Banishment—Protest Made to Secretary of the Navy.

3/9/23

A protest to the Secretary of the Navy against the deportation of the associate editor of the Emancipator, a labor paper published in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, was sent yesterday by the American Civil Liberties Union through A. A. Berle, Jr., attorney. The deported editor, Morgena Bonaparte, a British subject from the neighboring Island of Tortala, was charged with writing an editorial criticizing the naval administration of the Virgin Islands.

Captain Hough, the American governor, did not approve of the police force being criticized. Accordingly, he issued directions to the sheriff of St. Thomas to deport Bonaparte. Rothschild Francis, editor-in-chief of the Emancipator, member of the Colonial Council and president of the local labor union, is making every effort to have the deportation order revoked.

"This action was taken as a direct attempt to prevent any kind of unfavorable comment upon government action," the Civil Liberties Union's communication to Secretary Denby states, "and as one step in preventing the newspapers of the Virgin Islands from expressing their honest opinions. Even in America free speech is worth something, and in the Virgin Islands it is worth still more.

"It is inconceivable to us here that Captain Hough should have acted with your knowledge and consent or by your order. Your own administration has been so free from the kind of thing which discredited the previous administration, especially in the conduct of its West Indian affairs, that we had all indulged the hope that such incidents would no longer appear.

"I have advised the leaders of the American Federation of Labor in the Virgin Islands, one of whom is editor-in-chief of the Emancipator, that they must make every effort to hold their people in line until this matter is officially brought before you and until I can advise of your attitude. Preventing immoderate action is, however, of the greatest difficulty, and I can only express the hope that you will immediately go over all the papers in this matter, after which I trust you will find it possible to have Captain Hough rescind the order of deportation."

"The deportation of Bonaparte," according to Roger N. Baldwin, director of the Civil Liberties Union, "is only one incident in a series of acts of repression brought to bear against the citizens of the Virgin Islands by the naval authorities."

"No West Indian Problem," Domingo

New York Amsterdam News

Immigration of West Indian Should Not Be Restricted.

4-4-23

"There is no such thing as a West Indian-American Negro problem," declared W. A. Domingo speaking at the Friends Forum last Sunday afternoon. Mr. Domingo's talk was a rejoinder to an address given by Chandler Owen of the Messenger a few weeks ago.

With regard to Mr. Owen's suggestion as to the limitation of immigration from the West Indies, the speaker pointed out that according to the census of 1920 there were only 73,803 foreign born Negroes in the United States. These, he said, included Africans, Cape Verd Islanders, Brazilian and many others. "In 1914," he said, "1,394 West Indians came to the United States; in 1920, 1,369, and in 1922, 976; of this 822 returned. This small number of foreign born Negroes is lost in the large native Negro population, and cannot constitute a problem.

"It is a dangerous thing for an oppressed people to [illegible] off their own number. The native, Jew and the newly-arrived Russian Jews have their differences, for instance, but one never hears the former talking about restricting the immigration of the latter. The American Negroes see that the restriction of any other group of Negroes would be detrimental to their own interests and some years ago when a bill was introduced in Congress to bar Negro immigrants, the Negro press took up the fight, and brought about the defeat of the bill.

"The least that is said about this so-called problem the better for all concerned."

Speaking of the assimilabity of both groups he said: "One can understand the Anglo-Saxon saying he cannot get along with the Negro but to say or infer that two groups of Negroes cannot assimilate is the height of the ridiculous."

Mr. Owen was not present. He is on an extended lecture tour.

UPRISING IS DENIED AT SANTO DOMINGO

Panama Report of 17 Marines Killed Is Branded as False by Military Authorities.

SANTO DOMINGO, Aug. 18 (Associated Press).—There is no foundation for the report that there has been an uprising in Santo Domingo and that seventeen American marines were killed, the American military authorities here stated today. Complete quiet prevails in the country.

The report arose in Panama when the cruiser Rochester, flagship of the special service squadron, sailed suddenly with Rear Admiral John H. Dayton on board. Rumors of an uprising in Santo Domingo were accompanied by reports of the killing of the American marines.

News of the circulation of these reports caused surprise here and brought out a quick denial from the military authorities that there was any basis whatever for them.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18 (Associated Press).—No word of an uprising in Santo Domingo or of casualties among American marines there has been received by the American Government.

An examination of naval records was said by navy officers to show that the Rochester probably would have left about this time for Santo Domingo in the ordinary course of her routine voyage through the southern waters.

The report from Panama, unconfirmed from any source, was that the Rochester sailed suddenly as result of an uprising in Santo Domingo in which seventeen marines had been killed. It added that the cruiser Galveston was expected to follow Rear Admiral Dayton' flagship

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Although press dispatches from Panama carried the rumor of an uprising in San Domingo, in which 17 American marines were said to have been killed, the navy department today declared the departure of the cruiser Rochester from Panama for San Domingo was not due to official news of trouble. The department has received no word of the reported outbreak in the island, it was said.

Marine corps officials here and representatives of the Dominican government also declared they had received no word of trouble in the island.

The Rochester is the flagship of the special West Indian squadron, and is in command of Rear Admiral John H. Dayton. It sailed from Colon today on orders issued some time ago, the navy department said

SANTO DOMINGO, Aug. 18.—There is no foundation for the report that there has been an uprising in Santo Domingo and that 17 American marines were killed, the American military authorities here stated today Complete quiet prevails in the country.

8-19-23

The report arose in Panama wher the cruiser Rochester, flagship of the special service squadron, sailed suddenly with Rear Admiral John H. Dayton on board. Rumors of an uprising in Santo Domingo which resulted were accompanied by reports of the killing of the American marines.

Houston, Texas

News of the circulation of these reports caused surprise here and brought out a quick denial from the military authorities that there was any basis whatever for them.

The Atlanta Georgian

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 18. Although press dispatches from Panama carried the rumor of an uprising in San Domingo, in which 17 marines were said to have been killed, the Navy Department Saturday declared the departure of the cruiser Rochester from Panama to San Domingo was not due to official news of trouble. The department has received no word of the reported outbreak in the island, it was said.

Marine Corps officials here, and representatives of the Dominican Government also declared they had received no word of trouble in the island.

HAITIAN, NOW HOWARD PROFESSOR, IS INTERPRETER FOR COUNTRYMAN; NO KNOWLEDGE OF BUTLER EXPLOIT

Washington Herald

No Slur Meant, Says Diplomat, Although Insisting That He Has No Knowledge Of Fort For Taking Of Which General Butler Was Given Congressional Medal; Holds Medal Was Salve To U. S. And Laughed At In Haiti

A Howard University Professor was one of the leading characters in the diplomatic comedy which has been playing at the Haitian Ministry for the past week. Professor Lucien Hibbert, native Haitian, one time Secretary of State for Public Instruction and Cabinet member in Haiti, and personal friend of Minister Dantes Bellegarde, was called at once by the stately brown skinned diplomat when one of the local dailies quoted him as slurring General Smedley Butler by denying that there was any such fort in Haiti as the one for taking which the Marine general was given a Congressional Medal of Honor.

5-1-31

Through Dr. Hibbert, Minister Bellegarde explained that, in talking to a Washington Herald reporter on April 12, he merely stated that he had never seen the fort that General Butler captured in Haiti. Moreover, he said he did not know any other Haitian who had ever seen it or read of it outside of American newspapers and magazines.

Washington, D. C.

"But," said Minister Bellegarde through his interpreter, "I did not contend that no such fort existed. I merely contended that I did not know of its existence."

Butler Honored for Bravery

General Smedley Butler when he was a major and assigned to duty in Haiti fighting native outlaws, was given by the United States Government its highest honor, the Congressional Medal, for capturing Fort Riviere, "the last stronghold of the Cacos." Several Americans testify to the existence of this fort at that time and to the fact that the fort was taken without any casualties to the Marine forces except bruises. However, no Haitian has been found who knows anything about the fort or the exploit which gained for the general such high recognition by his own government.

Appeals to State Department

The whole incident has so hurt General Butler that he has called upon the State Department asking an investigation of the alleged slurs on his bravery.

"In brief," General Butler said "the Haitian Minister is quoted as having said I was a fake, and that the fort was a fake and never existed. Well, this puts the shoe on the other foot.

"I wrote to the Secretary of the Navy last Monday, and I inquired whether an investigation had been made to determine whether, first,

RACKETS IN HAITI

Washington Herald 5-1-31

General Smedley Butler, the "Fighting Marine," was given the highest honor an American soldier can receive from his government for capturing Fort Riviere in Haiti, killing a couple of score of native Haitians and bringing his men through the terrible battle with a few bruises. Minister Dantes Bellegarde from the Republic of Haiti, well educated, a student of his own country and a respected diplomat, has said that, although General Butler may have done all that he has been cited for, he (the Minister) personally does not know of the existence of such a fort in his country, and moreover, has never met any Haitian who did; that although General Butler may have been most deserving of any honor bestowed upon him by the United States government, he has discovered that the American public knows more about this great exploit than educated and intelligent citizens of the country in which the deeds of bravery were exhibited.

Beneath this comedy of errors and carefully worded affirmations and denials, beneath the diplomatic and half-humorous statements of Minister Bellegarde, may be a brilliant purpose more far-reaching than it now seems. The American public is being awakened to little-known facts concerning America's occupation of the little black republic. Minister Bellegarde has started something which may end in a fairer and more theoretically American attitude and policy towards a sovereignty that in the past has been raped, not only because it was small, but also because it was black.

It is significant that in the midst of the Bellegarde-Butler controversy, M. Ernest G. Chauvet, editor of The Nouvelliste, Haiti's oldest paper, openly calls American office-holders in Haiti "racketeers." Americans, he says, hold high offices and get high salaries which are not only unmerited, but disadvantageous to Haiti. And there are many other facts known to students of Haitian affairs, but little known by fair-minded Americans, which the diplomacy of Minister Bellegarde may bring out into the wholesome air.

We have no doubt that there is a Fort Riviere in Haiti, or that General Butler may have captured it and killed several Haitians, but we are tempted to believe that the military administration of Haiti may also be called a "racket" and that the exploit of General Butler, to say the least, was much exaggerated.

Calls Haitian Medal a Joke

Referring to the presentation of medal to General Butler by his own country, Minister Bellegarde old the Associated Press reporter hat this medal was in the nature of a salve to the United States.

M. Bellegarde referred to a book he wrote in 1929 for his account of the Butler presentation. As translated for newspapermen by his secretary and himself, it said the Haitian cabinet was "surprised and scandalized" at the Haitian award.

President Dartiguenave, he added, dismissed the incident by explaining to his cabinet the citation would have the effect of removing United States pressure upon Haiti to pass a law prohibiting gold importation into that country.

After the presentation of the medal and everyone had gone but the cabinet, M. Bellegarde added, the president burst out laughing, and said:

"Well, what is the matter? The liberty of the gold importation is worth a medal. General Butler will not carry back to the State Department anything but this toy. Let us hope that will be sufficient."

Minister Holds Many Honors

Minister Bellegarde, who is 53, served twice as Minister in Paris and during the first assignment was accredited, also, to the Holy See. He was a delegate to the League of Nations in 1922, 1925, and 1930, and in 1924-25 was a member of the League's temporary commission on slavery and forced labor.

He attended the third Pan-American Commercial Conference in Washington in 1927 as a delegate of the Haitian Chamber of Commerce. From 1918, to 1920, Bellegarde was secretary of public instruction in Haiti, and later taught law and economics at the National University.

The Haitian Minister holds the decoration of commander of the French Legion of Honor. A son, Auguste, is a student at Ohio State University.

COOLIDGE—JIM CROW PRESIDENT

President Coolidge is following out the Wilson policy of bleeding Haiti white.

The latest outrage against the weak black republic is the appointment of a white American as head of the Agriculture over the Haitian department head, at a salary of $10,000, to be paid by the Haitians.

A hundred or more white Americans will now find jobs under the new head, who has ordered special quarters to be provided for his offices outside the Haitian government building.

So Coolidge not only robs Haiti, but subjects her to the humiliating jim crow at the same time.

STATE DEPARTMENT ASKED TO EXPLAIN REBUFF GIVEN ABLE NEGRO DIPLOMATIST

(By the Associated Negro Press)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29.—The question of the removal of Captain Napoleon B. Marshall from his present position at the American Legation in Port au Prince has been laid before Under Secretary of State Phillips by Charge d' Affairs James C. Dunn. The Associated Negro Press can state on most reliable authority that there will be nothing done on the matter until after the most thorough investigaion.

James C. Dunn is a native of Newark, N. J., and came into the diplomatic service under the Wilson administration. He has seen service in Havana, Cuba, and other sections of the West Indies, and has been in Port au Prince for a little over three years, first as secretary of the legation, and at present Charge de Affairs.

While it is understood that Dunn's chief complaint is that "Marshall is too able a man to be a mere clerk," and that it is desired that just an ordinary person, presumably white, should succeed Marshall; friends of Marshall in the United States wish to find out why Marshall was thus assigned in the first place after he had been lead to believe his position would be one of authority. Who is responsible for the mix up, and why? Will it be adjusted, and how?

Senator McCormick Authority

So far as the whole Haitian situation is concerned, Senator McCormick of Illinois, has been the one authority to whom the people have listened, and to whom they have turned for first-hand information. The Senator has always suggested a pretentious program for the island Republic. Is the program, so far as Colored America is concerned, to fall flat?

Technically, Marshall's position is under the State Department, but the State Department would naturally give respectful consideration to suggestions from the chairman of the Senatorial Committee having to do with the affairs of Haiti.

Delegation to Haiti

One of the subjects popularly discussed a few months ago was the sending to Haiti, through the State Department, a delegation, committee, commission, or something of that sort, to study conditions and recommend a program of co-operative action.

There was, in the first place, a hitch over what such a group should be called. It was decided that it would, or could, not be called a "Commission" as that would require congressional action. "But a rose by any other name would smell as sweet," and so the name feature was overlooked.

There has been a tentative agreement, in which it is understood that President Harding, and the State Department were agreed, together with Senator McCormick, that the committee would be composed of three: Robert R. Church of Memphis, representing business interests; Dr. R. R. Moton, of Tuskegee Institute, representing agricultural information, and Dr. U. G. Daily of Chicago, who should look into the promotion of hospitals. Dr. Moton could not accept because of a tour to Europe, and Professor Williams, of Tuskegee Institute, was substituted. Dr. Dailey's name was dropped, without explanation to the public, and R. R. Church declined, when he learned that the committee would be required to go without the usual attaches supplied on such occasions. Professor Williams went to Haiti, and made some valuable investigations for the Haitian republic's development.

But there seems to be a "Screw loose somewhere in the program," according to those who have been keeping in touch with matters. Has High Commissioner Russell decided to keep "Colored America down and out?" Do the Haitian people themselves prefer to have all white American officials? Has Senator McCormick lost his grip on the program he had worked out? These are some of the questions now being asked.

Latest Outrage is Raids Upon Homes of Peaceable Citizens In Island Republic

Port au Prince, Haiti, Dec. 24—With the full force of President Coolidge's administration behind it, the Navy Department is using strong-arm methods in crushing out the republican spirit in Haiti and making the island a part of United States territory.

Leading newspaper men here, including Joli Bois, editor of the Courier Hatien, are held in jail without bail for writing newspaper articles urging the calling of the national assembly.

In the latest outrage, a committee of the League for Public Welfare, in session in a private dwelling was raided by gendarmes under command of Colonel S. M. Harrington, a white American, who charged that the meeting was being held without police permission. The gathering was dispersed and the president, Auguste Albert, a Wesleyan Methodist minister, was thrown in jail.

15 Hours In Cell

Rev. Mr. Albert was held for 15 hours in a narrow cell without food, water, or bed. In a letter filed with the Navy Department, the pastor charges that the raid was perpetrated upon a peaceable meeting in violation of the laws of the United States and Haiti. He filed a claim for $1,000 damages. Colonel McDougal, in charge of the American-Haitien police force, refused to consider the claim, it is said, which is the reason for the pastor's appeal directly to Secretary Denby in Washington.

Various partiotic societies here are appealing to their black brethren in the United States to protest loudly against what is called the rape of Haiti, whereby her independence is being crushed and her income spent at the will of American dictator.

$10,000 Job Created

As an example of how the Coolidge administration uses all methods to humiliate the Haitiens, it has placed a white man in charge of agricultural affairs on the island at a salary of $10,000 a year. He will receive a larger salary than the Haitian minister of agriculture, and has already ordered the building of quarters outside the government administration building where other whites will be employed. Haiti will be compelled to foot all the bills.

Natives Forbidden to Cable News of Latest Marine Outrages to Foreign Lands

ISLAND PRESS IS MUZZLED

Three Leading Haitian Journalists Cast Into Prison and Trial Is Denied

Port au Prince, Haiti, Nov. 1.—(Special)—Resistance of patriotic Haitains to the rule of the United States' Marines and their acts of violence is causing a chaotic condition on the island.

While the Coolidge administration is boasting about the increased value of the products they have been able to sell from Haitian harvests, marines have been busy muzzling the local press, casting newspaper editors into prison and denying them trial and forbidding all communication by cable with foreign lands about the high-handed procedure.

January first is the constitutional date set for election of representatives and senators. President Borno, advised by American authorities, is doing his best to call off the election on the ground that he can rule better without any native assembly.

Marines broke up a peaceable meeting here which was addressed by M. Jolibois, editor of the Courier Haitien, Elie Cuerin, and Edourd Benedict, also journalists. They had lectured throughout the island urging the election of a national assembly. Marines placed them in prison in solitary confinement, and refused them trial before native judges. The presumption is that after a long and illegal delay there will be a rump-trial before American naval officers.

M. Jolibois is particularly hated by the American occupation forces because he continues to agitate in his paper for the withdrawal of U. S. Marines, and the return of the island to the natives. Auguste Albert, Wesleyan minister, was also arrested at the same time.

Sufferings of People Are Indescribable—Pledge Betrayed.

(Crusader Service)

How the Republican Party has kept its pledge is told by Joseph Mirault in a letter to the New York World, published in its issue of July 8:

To the Editor of The World:

Though you may not pay attention to it and give not, therefore, a voice in your prominent paper to the suffering people of Haiti, yet I feel it my duty to denounce to you once more Mr. Russell, the High Commissioner, from whose hands we have already suffered so much.

As I have stated in my letter of a month or so ago to you, the sufferings of the Haytian people are indescribable. Yet they are not allowed to complain. New laws have just been enacted against the press, gagging it more and more every day.

Mr. Jolibois, Fils, and Mr. Edouard Pouget, directors of the Courier-Haitian and the Post, are still in a dungeon, where they intend to keep them until they die. These are the kindnesses Mr. Russell is lavishing upon us in the name of American democracy, without the people of this country knowing anything about it.

MR. HUGHES ON HAITI.

Speaking before the American Bar Association at Minneapolis, the last part of August, Secretary Hughes of the State Department defined the Monroe doctrine as a policy vitally related to the national safety. He denied that it was a policy of aggression, but on the other hand a policy of self-defense. He quoted President Wilson in support of the proposition that the Monroe doctrine was proclaimed by the United States upon her own authority and will be maintained upon her own responsibility.

The building of the Panama Canal and the establishment of Cuban independence have created such conditions in the Caribbean as would make necessary the creation of a [illegible] if that policy had not already been announced, declared Mr. Hughes. While making it impossible to review in any detail the circumstances which led to the occupation of Santo Domingo and Haiti, the Secretary of State tactily approved the seizure of these countries and the establishment of a military government, as a measure "in the interest of public order." He continued:

"This occupation was due to the demonstration, to use the phrase of President Roosevelt, of an impotence resulting in the lessening of the ties of civilized society and thus requiring intervention. But the point that I desire to make is that instead of using this opportunity, as has falsely been charged, to establish a permanent control of Santo Domingo, the Government of the United States has been solicitous to arrange for the termination of the occupation and the withdrawal of its forces and has devoted its endeavors, earnestly and effectively, to the assistance of the Dominican people in establishing a sound basis for an independent Government.

"It is expected that elections in which the authorities of the United States will not intervene will be held about the middle of September and in due course the permanent Government will be established."

As to Haiti the same professions of disinterested interest were made, in the following phrases:

"In order to understand conditions in Haiti, it should be recalled that since the Republic of Haiti gained its independence it has been the scene of almost continuous revolution. This is true of its recent history, as well as of the earlier years. The Government of the United States is seeking to make its relation to Haiti beneficial to the Haitian people; it has no other aim but to establish peace and stability.

"It does not seek to acquire or to control the territory of Haiti, and it will welcome the day when it can leave Haiti with the reasonable assurance that the Haitians will be able to maintain an independent Government competent to keep order and discharge its international obligations.

We imagine this is about as good a defence as can be made for the American intervention in Haiti and San Domingo. How little it squares with the facts in the case as reported by the observers sent by the New York "Nation" and reproduced in The Age some two years ago, is a matter of record. Mr. Hughes is making the best of a bad case in defending the American occupation of these Caribbean republics as either warranted by conditions or executed with justice and consideration for the defenceless inhabitants.

Haiti Appeals to the World

DANTES BELLEGARDE, the Haitian diplomat whose speeches, particularly in behalf of the Hottentots, attracted such general attention in recent meetings of the Assembly of the League of Nations, signs the following appeal to the public opinion of the world:

Whereas, the Government of the United States of America intervened in the domestic affairs of the Republic of Haiti in July, 1915, although the Haitian people had committed no violation of the rules of international law and had not imperiled the lives or interests of American citizens;

Whereas, as a result of this intervention a convention was imposed upon the Republic of Haiti, in which the Government of the United States agreed to give its material aid to Haiti in order to develop the economic resources of the country, while reserving the right to name specialists to aid the technical advisers of the Haitian Government in the organization of certain public services;

Whereas, this convention has not been carried out in the benevolent spirit which was said to have inspired it, the promised aid has not been given, and the American officials appointed to serve in Haiti (whose technical competence has often been subject to question) have exceeded their role as counselors and have transformed themselves into veritable dictators—which is stated and proved in official documents transmitted to the Government at Washington, especially in a message from the President of Haiti to the President of the United States, dated January 24, 1921;

Whereas, the Republic of Haiti has been occupied by American troops since 1915, although it has never been at war with the United States and although domestic peace is assured there by a local gendarmerie commanded by American officers;

Whereas the unjustified prolongation of such a regime of military occupation is at once an intolerable violation of the principles of public international law and a humiliation for the Haitian nation, an attack upon its territorial integrity, and a limitation of the full exercise of its sovereignty;

Whereas, the Republic of Haiti is a charter member of the League of Nations and no people anxious for justice and respectful of law can be indifferent to the situation imposed;

Be it Resolved, that the International Union of Associations for the League of Nations should put the Haitian question upon the agenda of its next meeting, and that meanwhile it should ask all its members to interest public opinion in their respective countries in the fate of the Haitian people.

The Haitian Association for the League of Nations,
DANTES BELLEGARDE, President

Port au Prince, August 21, 1923

HAITIANS AND AMERICAN NEGROES

American Negroes can find in Haiti a Negro country close at hand with an attractive civilization different from their own. And, if they will take the trouble to show their sympathy with Haitians, they may discover a field for the expansion of the rapidly growing Negro business in this country. In insurance, for instance, Haiti offers an almost virgin field. Transportation is still in a rather crude state. And though the country is primarily agricultural, agriculture and its allied interests are in an almost primitive condition. Almost any improvement in agriculutral production which the practically trained American Negro could make would be welcomed. Well-trained, English-speaking Negroes from neighboring islands appear to find Haiti an attractive field.

At least two Negro church organizations of America have already undertaken educational work in Haiti. Their efforts should be increased and the work made more effective. Other societies may find here also inviting fields for helpful, dis interested work. It might be possible, too, for the Negroes of this country to enlist the interest of some of the great philanthropic bodies of America in work in Haiti. There is urgent need for large, well-organized, systematic work in practical education and especially in sanitation and health such as only the great philanthropic boards could handle effectively.—W. T. B. Williams in the Southern Workman.

HAITIANS PROTEST U. S. RULE

NEW YORK.—A public protest has been signed by a large number of prominent Haitians assembled in mass meeting in Port au Prince, Haiti, against the arrest and continued imprisonment of Jolibois and Edouard Pouget, editors of Le Courrier Haitian, according to word received here by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The newspaper is an upholder of Haitian democracy and nationality.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has been informed that the American occupation of Haiti is attempting to impugn the character of Haitian judges so they may be replaced by others who will keep the two editors in prison.

"After that," the report says, "with much noise and publicity the state department will announce to the world that it has abolished martial law in Haiti, and the world, with much applause, will congratulate the American government for its humane treatment of the Haitians."

HAITI NEEDS NEW CAPITAL TO AID IN DEVELOPEMENT

Ninety-five Per Cent of Population Unable to Either Read or Write

Port au Prince, Haiti, May 18.—The government is ready and willing to offer every possible inducement to secure investment of American capital in the vast, rich natural resources of the republic."

This is the statement which President Louis Borno of Haiti requested newspapers to give the American people. It is a message that comes direct from President Borno's heart for he has dedicated his administration to the development of what he considers the most pressing need of the island republic—agriculture.

To Sell Land

For the first time in history the president is in a position to sell vast tracts of government land to foreign capital, preferably American, at prices ranging from $4 to $300 an acre. The law permitting this disposition was promulgated by President Borno and his council of state of 21 members, the legislative and ruling body of the republic.

Haiti is rich in natural resources. Her lands are fertile, most of which have not been tilled. Petroleum, lignite and a few other minerals have been discovered, and already American companies are forming to exploit these products.

Coffee Is Product

Coffee, the chief product of the republic, grows wild. Last year more than 60,000,000 pounds was exported. President Borno declares this output can be douled and trebled in a few years, with proper cultivation. Cotton, sugar and logwood are the other chief exports, the four products comprising 92.5 per cent of the total export trade. The volume of trade in 1922 wa $23,062,481, an imposing figure considering Haiti throughout its entire existence has never known scientific agriculture.

It is only natural in view of Haiti's turbulent political history, with its graft and its intrigues, that there should be poverty, intense poverty, illiteracy, a woeful lack of national feeling. Nearly 95 per cent of the population of 2,050,000 can neither read nor write.

President Seeks Relief

After agriculture is established Borno wants to provide as adequate educational system. But this cannot be done without the revenues derived from the farms. Teachers in the few schools at present are paid from $5 to $8 a month; most of the people are without means to send their children to school. Farm wages are now 20 cents a day; on government works wages are 30 cents a day—barely sufficient to sustain life. The people live on the tropical fruits, which, growing wild, are abundant throughout the island.

Build Good Roads

Under President Borno's direction good roads are being built in the interior regions; government irrigation projects are being started. These are under the supervision of American navy engineers.

And then, with a flash of his eyes that denoted his sincerity, President Borno concluded:

"Haiti is so poorly known in the states! It is so misrepresented and so misunderstood! We want Americans to come to us and invest their money. We have great opportunities for them."

HAITI

The National Haiti Overseas Navigation Company has just been formed, owned solely by negroes in New York and Haiti. It has a capital of $250,000, and operates under a subsidy of $50,000 from the Haitian Government for the first year and $100,000 a year for ten years thereafter. It has purchased the steam yacht Margaret, 172 feet long, fitted out to carry forty first-class passengers between New York and Port-au-Prince, calling at coastal ports in Haiti and Cuba on its return trips.

Color Caste Clash Is Haitian Problem

Collaboration of Natives and Americans Is Making but Slow Progress.

By Gardner L. Harding

In Boston, Mass. Christian Science Monitor

Port-au-Prince, Haiti, Oct. 10—One of the prime difficulties of American policy in Haiti, which an observer of contemporary events must face squarely, is the race problem. It is a material obstacle to collaboration and progress for which many other troubles are merely a screen. It explains the complaints of subverted liberties and diminished self-expression, which political language altogether fails to account for. Briefly, it is the apprehension that one color caste may be supplanted by another that makes many Hatians distrust the presence of Americans among them.

I will quote a characteristic version of this feeling. A typical Haitian of the ruling class told me this:

"Before the Americans came into Haiti, I was a distinguished man in my country. No important visitor came here without feeling that he should pay me a visit, and I was glad to extend my hospitality and my good offices in helping him understand the free little republic of Haiti. Now all this is changed. I am nobody in my own country. On the street where I used to live, surrounded by neighbors of a lifetime, known, and in some degree respected, by everyone, an American marine officer lives on one side of me, an American gendarme officer lives across the street, an American adviser, an American business man live farther along the way. Their wives, their children, their automobiles, are everywhere. I cannot even enter their club. And as I pass along, instead of the courteous salutations of my neighbors, someone as like as not says, 'Who is that coon.'"

Understanding Necessary

This offense to pride and amour propre, accentuated by a hundred daily minor manifestations, must be understood before Americans realize what they are coping with in "collaborating" with Government in Haiti by the Haitians. It is often said here that Americans introduced race prejudice into Haiti. That is not exactly true. There is as much prejudice between the color caste in Haiti as in any other country where diffierences exist. But Americans have brought in a new caste, a new dominant caste. And in that degree they have sent a repercussion of apprehension down through the whole articulate life of the people.

Every Haitain nationalist, for instance, believes that the engineering and the financing of the American roads is amaturish, corrupt, and the pure expression of American egocentric policy. Every American seeking to civilize Haiti by material improvement—and they are still our predominant type—regards Haitian liberty as childish and rudimentary anarchy.

The real clash goes deeper than these pretexts. It is the presence of one race, alien in color, language and cultural customs, impinging on on another it considers inferior, that makes the deep-seated conflict of Americans' presence in Haiti almost irreconcilable.

Situation Tense

It is a severe but natural comment on America's conduct of affairs among the islanders that there are fewer Haitians of standing, actively assisting the American regime today than at any time since the Americans came in. On the other hand it is true that there is less extremism against them. And the "best" Haitians feel the full force of the probability that the expulsion of the Americans would bring back the militarism they know in their hearts would drag the Nation again into anarchy and retrogression. But on the whole, in spite of Gen. John H. Russell's tactful endeavors of the present, the Haitians are still diminishing their social as well as political contact with Americans after eight years of their presence.

Reports and explanations of American's policy are not placed before the tribunal of Haitian opinion, and the changes of projects and the revision of the laws are kept secret just sufficiently long to allow the Nationalists to make a first-class rallying cry of "Taxation without representation."

Clash of Color

These things are signs of a clash, and it is the hardest sort of clash for an invading, civilizing nation to resolve with dignity for both sides—a clash of color. Just now it is the Americans who lead a rising tide of white color in Haiti. It is more by force of circumstances than through our command of them, and it is pledged to be "temporary and disinterested;" but who can blame the Haitians for not being perfectly reasonable about prospects in front of it? In reality the advance is assured, but how the Americans conduct it will be one of the most delicate problems in the twentieth century tropical penetration of the United States.

The candid observer must admit that for many reasons, as well as through the unfortunate logic of the situation itself, Americans are deprived of the responsive collaboration of Haiti in a way that seriously injures the dignity of the United States.

On the economic side, as the result of efficient American customs collection, I am assured that Haiti has a surplus this year consisting of approximately the difference between 26,000,000 gourdes receipts and 21,000,000 expenditures. These figures make Haiti a solvent nation. The remaining 5,000,000 is, however already ear-marked for "extraordinary account," and it is the opinion of important persons here that the Republic is doing well to break even.

Today internal taxes hardly count. They are collected by Haitian collectors and will produce about $600,000; they usually run under $400,000

A vexatious tax system still exists in its entirety here, and Americans have not ,after seven years, drawn up a unified budgeting plan. The fairest criticism of this situation is, I feel, that such economic reform as Americans have attempted in Haiti, has been done piece-meal instead of making the whole problem an integral one, as should have been done if the best interests of Haiti were to be served.

Senator McCormick Advises President On Haitian Ouestion

The situation in Haiti, the republic of L'Ouverture and the country foremost in the imagination of Colored Americans, has long been under discussion in the United States. How to improve conditions there, how to help Haitians to stand on their feet and help them to preserve their prestige and standing has been a problem of American statesmen.

Sen. McCormick

That Haiti, in her relation to the United States, occupies a position so satisfactory at the present time is due more to Medill McCormick, United States Senator from Illinois, than to any other influence in American politics. Senator McCormick may truly be called the American benefactor of Haiti.

In a recent letter to President Coolidge Senator McCormick again insisted on immediate help and sympathy for Haiti. He wants a mixed American commission appointed to "inquire anew as to the facts and make recommendation."

His letter to President Coolidge follows:

Chicago, Ill.,
Nov. 13, 1923.

Dear Mr. President:

I beg to refer again to the development of American policy in Haiti which was discussed very briefly when I was in Washington.

Peace is established throughout the Republic. The peasant in his hut and the traveler are secure alike from governmental oppressors and from bandits, as they have not been in many a long day. The debt has been funded and moneys have been found for public works. A system of arterial highways is nearing completion. The cities for the first time in Haitian history are well policed, clean and sanitary. For some months a legal adviser has been making studies looking to the improvement of the administration of justice, and an agricultural adviser has been making studies presumably looking to the increase in agricultural production. In my humble judgment, the information acquired by the legal and agricultural advisers ought to be translated into action. All Haiti is still under military or martial law and nothing, or practically nothing has been done to improve Haitian agriculture, or to import into Haiti sires—swine, bulls, or draft animals—to improve the native breeds by crossing.

Your predecessor, during the campaign of 1920, severely condemned the policy of the Democratic administration in Haiti. A committee of the United States senate, without regard to party, unanimously recommended a policy for Haiti which has been carried out in part, but which remains unfulfilled in so far as it proposed the reformation of the civil courts, the abolition of martial law, and the improvement of Haitian agriculture through the employment of American instructors trained at Tuskegee. Inquiry indicates that the "American occupation" so-called, has been eminently successful in establishing and maintaining peace; in reorganizing the public finances, in taking measures for public health, in building highways, but that it has failed to give due emphasis to restoring the supremacy of the civil law and of the civil courts, and to the employment of those American agricultural instructors trained at Tuskegee who are best adapted to be stationed at points in the countryside for the instruction of the Haitian peasantry.

I have no disposition to pass any unfriendly judgment upon those Americans who have devotedly and effectively served the Haitian people. But I think the time has come when in the discharge of our duty to the Haitian people to secure their civil liberties, to develop their wealth, we ought to send to Haiti a commission to inquire anew as to the facts, and to make recommendations to the governments of Haiti and of the United States. I venture to suggest that such a commission be composed of men like Dr. George Vincent of New York, Albert George of Chicago, President A. B. Denwiddie of Tulane university, and Robert R. Moton of Tuskegee.

Sincerely yours,
MEDILL McCORMICK.

The President,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

While President Coolidge has given no word as to his plans for Haiti it is very certain that the interest of Senator McCormick will not go unheeded.

The consistent stand of Senator McCormick for Haiti, for its independence and integrity endears him to every fair-minded American, and particularly to Colored Americans, who are very naturally jealous of the liberty and good name of Haiti.

MARSHALL'S STATUS IN HAITI IS FIXED

Official Whose Duties Were Entirely Clerical Will Now Have Diplomatic Functions.

By MORRIS BROWN
(Washington Correspondent)

Washington, D. C. July 19—The official status of Captain Napoleon B. Marshall, who went to Haiti as a secretary to High Commissioner John H. Russell, but whose duties were entirely clerical, has been satisfactorily fixed. His work hereafter will be diplomatic.

The adjustment of this stiuation was brought about through the good offices of Senator Medill McCormick, who was instramental in having Captain Marshall appointed. Senator McCormick had Perry W. Howard, special assistant to the Attorney General,to take the matter up with the State Department and act as his representative. After several conferences between Undersecretary of State Willian Phillips and Mr. Howard an agreement was reached as to what Captain Marshall's status would be in the future.

As a result Captain Marshall will remain in Haiti and not return to New York as contemplated.

HAITIANS DIE IN DUNGEONS

New York City—According to information received here by Joseph Mirault, American correspondent for the "Courrier Haitien" one of the leading papers in Haiti, two of the Haitian leaders have died as a result of being incarcerated by the American Army of Occupation. The two leaders who have given their lives for the saving of their national integrity are Aurelien Pierre and Farfait Benoit. Both are members of the Nationalist party and have been very active in trying to re-establish Haitian independence.

During the past summer the American officer ordered the men arrested and placed in prison. After being in prison for several weeks they were released without trial; later, however, they were re-incarcerated and held until their death.

It is alleged that while they were in prison they were offered a certain amount of money to cease opposing the American occupation which is decidedly unpopular on the Island, but they refused. Since this refusal they, it is further claimed, have been subjected to all kinds of physical tortures. The dungeon where they were held was so small that they could not even lie down in it. The only ration they received was a small portion of bread and water.

After the death of the two men, the American officials made a desperate attempt to keep the matter secret but it leaked out about two weeks ago.

Election of a new president of the island will be held on January 10th. At this time the people are also supposed to elect deputies and senators for the House of Deputies and the Senate, respectively. Both of these bodies were dissolved by the American Army of Occupation at the point of bayonets.

At the present time, so far as it is known, Jolibois Fils, Elie Cuerin, Antoine Pierre-Paul and George Petit, all leaders among the Nationalist group, are now in prison experiencing all kinds of sufferings. In-as-much as the January elections are not far off, it is very doubtful if these men will be permitted their freedom until after that time, even if they are so fortunate as to survive in their present conditions that long.

The people of the island are planning an appeal to send to President Coolidge asking that they be given their constitutional rights.

LEATHERNECK TO BOSS HAITIANS

The first indication that the Coolidge administration intends to follow the Harding and Wilson policy with regards to the government of Haiti, came this week when the announcement was made that a cousin of Secretary of the Navy, Denby, Major Maurice E. Shearer of the Marine Corps, had been assigned to Haiti.

Major Shearer has been acting as an aid to the Secretary of the Navy since he assumed office. He is to be sent to Haiti and promoted to the rank of Colonel.

As proof of the kind of men the Republican party is sending to tighten the bands around the necks of the unfortunate Haitians, Major Shearer is labeled as typical of that breed known as the "flea-bitten marine" of the rough-and ready type to whom fighting is, has been, and always will be, a pastime.

While in Haiti it is evidently expected that the Major will get plenty of exercise fighting the helpless natives. He will have under his command the Haitian gendarmie in which the natives are forced to serve as privates only. It is through the gendarmie and U. S. Marines that the United States government has completely raped this little black republic.

Haiti Betrayed By Republican Party

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 12—The Republican Party has betrayed its pledge to the American Negro to have United States forces removed from the republic of Haiti.

This is the declaration of Joseph Mirault, who charges that conditions in the island republic have reached an acute stage. He states that the sufferings of the people are indescribable and that the press is being gagged through the enactment of new laws, recommended by M. Russell, High Commissioner.

ARREST NEGRO BISHOP

NEW YORK.—The Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has been informed by the Courier Haitien of Port au Prince that Bishop Auguste Albert, of Cape Haitien, has been arrested and jailed for holding a meeting in which he deplored existing conditions there. The report states that he has been placed in irons. According to the N. A. A. C. P., the facts have been telegraphed to President Coolidge by the New York correspondent of the Courier Haitien.

The Entire Nation Is Aroused Over Despicable Injustice Being Done by Crackerist Rule in the V. I.—Casper Holstein Gives "Negro World" Credit for Exposure

By CASPER HOLSTEIN
President Virgin Islands Congressional Council

When about nine months ago the Virgin Islands Congressional Council was organized hardly anyone in the United States except Virgin Islanders seemed to know anything about the Virgin Islands. At any rate, no one was aware of the awful condition of affairs brought about by the "crackers" of the Navy Department in those Caribbean islands which were taken over by our Uncle Sam. When the Congressional Council opened its publicity campaign it was fiercely attacked by a certain Judas journal in the islands, whose editor insisted that there was no naval rule but settled government in the islands; that what there was of naval rule (sic) was jolly well all right, but that the people in the Congressional Council were "hurting" the islands by publishing the wrongs and abuses under which the people groan. But much water has flowed under the bridge since then.

Today we find that the propaganda of the Virgin Islands Congressional Council is so wondrously effective that it has caused newspapers all over the country to swing into line and add their publicity resources to those of the council. From The Negro World, where the council fired its first gun, the line of battle extended first to that very Evening Post where Mr. Stribling, as literary drummer of the naval regime, first spread his stock of lies against the Virgin Islanders; thence it spread to the Nation, the greatest and most powerful liberal weekly magazine in the United States, and now the entire Negro press of America has got on the job and the white press is nobly seconding their efforts.

In the meanwhile one Governor got the sack, after the Congressional Council had publicly warned him on June 1 last in its publicity article in The Negro World, when it referred to a certain plot in these words:

"The plot involves also a very neat stab in the back for the present Governor of the Virgin Islands, which he will doubtless appreciate some day when his eyes are opened."

Before the next month was out he was transferred, which would suggest that somebody on the Virgin Islands Council held the inner line of communication and that there are some black men who can see farther than the epauletted idiots who swagger in the islands.

Granady in Jail

At the same time the very Judas journal which condemned the publicity campaign on this side and sang the praises of the dear, good, handsome, white men of the Navy Department was forced by the pressure of events to echo, in as small a voice as it could muster, the very identical charges which it had earlier condemned us for making. This was done in one of its July issues. And today Granady, one of its two promoters, himself a lawyer, has been sentenced by one of the very judges that they damned us for criticizing to a term of thirty days in jail and a $50 fine. Which goes to make stronger the case of the Congressional Council. Granady, it is reported, retained the services of an "Obeah" woman when arraigned in court. But "Obeah" is evidently not an effective way of dealing with white judges. The Council has a better way of dealing with them—a civilized, manly and American way. But that way evidently doesn't appeal to Granady.

Deportations Stayed

The Navy Department has recently staged two very effective deportations from the Virgin Islands—those of the Rev. Mr. Barrow and Mr. Morenga Bonaparte. The former gentleman was a settled minister who had built up a great church and was a mighty force for good in connection with the great St. Croix labor union, a connection which drew down upon his head the condemnation of officialdom. Mr. Bonaparte was a journalist connected with a fearless little paper named the Emancipator. He, too, found that his connections were dangerous. They were both fired out of the islands by the stainless and uncriticizable moguls of marine rule. The Congressional Council has turned the light of publicity on both these cases. Results: the Navy Department is being investigated, officially and independently; the newspapers of the North are buzzing about their ears, and the organized propaganda has even been taken up by liberal-minded white Americans.

Washington on the Job

All the available legal authorities who have been appealed to over here agree that the deportations were "absolutely without warrant in American law"—as one able lawyer puts it. And, be it understood that, this lawyer is a prominent member of President Harding's Cabinet! Virgin Islanders, then, may take heart of grace. The darkest hour is just before the dawn. Friends are arising on every hand and our strength continually increases.

George W. Williams, Negro Hater

This article would not be complete without especial reference to one person of vast significance in the stormy affairs of the Virgin Islands. We refer to the sordid, selfish and sinister figure of George Washington Williams a Negro-hating cracker from the very heart of Dixie. That a Southern man with such a record should be intrusted with such powers over black people is itself a proof, as the Amsterdam News and Pittsburgh American insist, that the Harding administration has no more respect for the Negro voters of our Northern States than it has for the cattle in the fields of Virginia. This man, Williams, is the storm center of the imbroglio in the Virgin Islands. Already he has declared that constitutional guarantees do not apply to the Virgin Islands because their inhabitants "are only dirty niggers anyhow."

White Terror in the West Indies

The Nation
New York

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR:

Give me the good old tropics,
And a "shot" of Haitian booze,
Down where there are no commandments,
And you live and do as you choose.

Sept. 7, 1923

Give me a scrap in the jungle,
Or a raid on a gambling-joint,
Where you pull out the glistening bayonet,
And say, "Do you see the point?"

Give me the mellow moonlight,
That shines on the Caribbean!
If I cannot be a millionaire,
Let me be a marine!

Being adventurous, I enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in 1916. After training at Port Royal, S. C., I embarked on the collier Neptune for Santo Domingo with a lot of other rookies. When I arrived at Sanchez I saw people dressed in suits of gunny-sack, and a mountain whose trees leaned back as if ready to spring at something.

I had not been in Sanchez many days before an earthquake took place. It was midnight and the shock knocked more than one marine from his bunk, the water tanks were running over, the earth was opening up, swallowing houses with their occupants, pyramids of fire were darting from Samana Bay and the Caribbean Sea. Hardly had the tumult subsided when the call to arms was sounded. A detachment of marines at San Francisco de Macoris was surrounded, outnumbered, and in danger of annihilation by General Emil King's army. We killed and wounded 169 people at La Saba, and suffered one casualty among ourselves: a private was shot through his right arm. We pushed him along on a hand-car until we came to Barbara. There, when we secured some drinking water, we found that most of it had been poisoned; so many of us went thirsty.

Then began an orgy of looting. In one house we discovered a large table with a veritable banquet laid out on it, but, when we sat down to eat, a corporal came and knocked the table over; he then proved to us that the food was poisoned. One of our officers shot an old native who was kneeling in prayer, while Captain Hughes threatened to burn the entire town on our return, if any of our supplies in one of the wrecked freight cars had been molested.

Suddenly a rebel army of about 500 hove into sight on a long train of passenger cars. There were only thirty-nine of us, but we had Benet Mercier machine-guns, and mounted them upon logs. Had Captain Hughes let us pour our death-dealing missiles into the approaching locomotive, we could have blown it up and destroyed a number of the enemy but, instead, he let the enemy run into the jungles, making it possible for them to snipe at us for the rest of our long and tedious journey. There is nothing more harrowing than fighting an invisible enemy. All that day we had but one egg sandwich apiece.

Dominican cavalry appeared on the track. We pumped lead into them, and many a beautiful horse plunged over a bridge or a precipice. We could see them lying far below us writhing in agony. The more merciful among us, although it was against orders to waste ammunition, took aim with our Springfields and put a few of them out of their misery. We captured a cavalryman who was loaded down with rum, and several of us became intoxicated. The best thing to do when in battle is to chew tobacco and drink liquor so as to steady the nerves and deaden the senses. All of us who were drunk became heroes. I was always a hero while in the West Indies because I was never sober.

Misery in the Virgin Islands

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: We write with the hope that your readers, who, we believe, form a majority of the American people, will realize that down in the Virgin Islands—a new possession of Uncle Sam—the economic conditions may safely be termed deplorable, bordering on total economic destruction, ruinous on account of the application of Federal laws, viz.: quarantine and coastwise laws; the Eighteenth Amendment, and the Federal income-tax law. The Nation. 8-15-23

Eventual wholesale starvation threatens the entire population if relief be not forthcoming in the immediate future.

Our merchants, in a large majority of cases, are unable to pay their taxes; our children are undernourished and their fathers move about in an undecided manner, desirous of working but unable to procure employment. Life is something miserable in these islands. Surely it is not the thought of this Great American Nation to keep our people in a state of semi-starvation.

We believe, and that implicitly, that they know very little of our condition and, therefore, we propose to tell them of it so that they may realize that in these Virgin Islands they have adopted children who need, in these trying days, their special attention so as to improve their deplorable economic condition.

We request that your paper make direct inquiries about our statements and, after investigation, give publication to the findings, so as to quicken the leaders of this nation's interest in these islands that "they acquired and then forgot."

We plead for immediate consideration and relief. We are not asking charity, but we certainly do believe that we ought to be given a chance to live as decent a life as we have been accustomed to.

OUR OWN VIRGIN ISLANDS

Their Prosperity Shattered by the Extension of the Volstead Law to Them, They Yet Offer Many Attractions to Tourists.

The New York Times 10-7-23

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Readers of my letter on the Virgin Islands, recently published in THE TIMES, have expressed a desire for further information on the subject of this newest colonial possession of Uncle Sam's by communications addressed to me. The social and industrial aspects of this colony appear to be of chief interest to the inquirers. If you will give me the courtesy of a further hearing I should be glad to make a few points clear.

I have lived on Santa Cruz (St. Croix) and am acquainted with practically all the white and colored inhabitants of the island as well as with many of the black people (a threefold color distinction prevails in the islands), as well as with most of the Government officials, and with many persons resident of St. Thomas.

There are three classes of society, corresponding to the threefold color line. With the exception of a handful of white workmen at some of the skilled trades (electricians, &c.) and the small number of enlisted men, who are, of course, only temporary residents of these islands, it may be stated broadly that all the permanent white residents are "gentlefolk" in the best sense of the term. A further exception should be made, strictly speaking in terms of Virgin Island usage, of those proletarian Danes who, usually as discharged private soldiers of the Danish Army, have married into the colored (ex-slave) from black) families and settled on the islands. These persons rank socially below the white families; have, so to speak, a society of their own, and are in general very worthy people. The "colored people" are educated, courteous, hospitable, without pretension or aspiration to be considered white, and they form the backbone of the Virgin Island citizenry. Of this class there is about 18 to 20 per cent. Of white people there are about 7½ per cent. The remainder are black people, of the servant and laboring class.

Courtesy and European usages prevail uniformly throughout the customs and practices of all classes. Danish and English usages combine. It is, e. g., universally customary to go through the Danish ritual of shaking hands with every other guest as well as with one's host and hostess after a dinner or breakfast party. The little black boys in the lots play cricket, not baseball. Older boys and young men prefer soccer, even in Summer.

A gorgeous Old-World hospitality prevails on all sides. In my own case, being both an "Anglican" clergyman and because of my relationship to one of the ancient Corinthians of Santa Cruz, Captain the Hon. William McMillin, my great-uncle, I was most courteously and hospitably treated. But even one not equipped with such passports to the kindliness of the people need not be lonesome in Santa Cruz. Like every really good society, that of Santa Cruz desires worthily to augment itself, and it will not be many days before the new arrival will be called upon, asked to join the country club, and otherwise made at home.

Good houses may be rented cheaply, servants are likewise inexpensive; the staple price for broilers and green turtle is the same—18 cents a pound—the hoof!

Industrially, the Virgin Islands, as has been pointed out before, are at a low ebb. The fundamental reason for the present financial and commercial depression is lack of water. There has been drought for more than three years, and the last season's sugar crop, recently harvested, was about one-seventh the size of a normal crop in a "good year."

Contributory causes are labor troubles and, chiefly, the ruin which prohibition has wrought since it went into effect July 10, 1922. This is real ruin, not merely the interference of the special act (which was passed in Washington to bring these islands in line with the continental United States) with retailers of intoxicating liquor. It struck much deeper than that. Rum—Santa Cruz rum, the finest in the world—had been for centuries a staple product. When the good ship Desire was built in Marblehead, where I am writing this, in 1636 (the year of the founding of Harvard), to bring from Santa Cruz and other West Indian ports the first black slaves in Massachusetts, those slaves were already habituated to field labor in the sugar fields of Santa Cruz, and even in that day the Santa Cruz rum was the world's best rum. Deprived of the privilege of making this staple product, an industry based on centuries of usage, the commercial backbone of the Virgin Islands was effectually broken.

With an adequate reservoir and catching system installed by the Government on the high lands, the other industries—cattle raising, sugar growing and the production of sea-island cotton—would be stabilized and the islands would prosper commercially, even though the great number of costly distilleries should remain as silent memorials to the fatuousness of the moronism which foisted prohibition on the Virgin Islands. If there is one place in the United States where there is no argument whatever for Volsteadism, certainly it is here. I have lived on Santa Cruz both before and after prohibition went into effect. I do not know a person over the age of discretion who does not take a social drink. I have never seen or heard of any one there being drunk or even "under the influence." I do not know any place on American soil where the problem of procuring liquor is easier. I do not know a person in the islands who deplores prohibition. I do not know any one there whom it has not, directly or indirectly, injured.

Religiously there are four bodies—Anglicans, Roman Catholics, Danish Lutherans and Moravians. A few minor sects are represented among the black people, but these are sporadic and unimportant from a numerical standpoint. The Roman Catholic Churches are under the direction of the Fathers of the Redemptorist Order. The Anglican Churches (now under the direction of the American Episcopal Church, with the Bishop of Porto Rico in charge) are all of the Anglo-Catholic order, which is prevalent throughout the West Indies where the Anglican Communion is numerically, and by way of general influence, dominant. The Lutherans were "established" under the Danish régime. Moravians were sent, tradition says, by the Good Count, John Wesley's friend, from Zinzendorf, the cradle of that body, early in the eighteenth century.

Social usage and custom as well as the ordinary daily routine are Continental Europe rather than otherwise. This of course is tempered by the general customs of tropical countries. The climate is magnificent. It never goes beyond the limits of 68 and 93 degrees. Nights are uniformly cool and pleasant. The drawbacks are, chiefly, mosquitos. It is necessary either to screen the houses thoroughly or to sleep under nets. Local custom favors the nets, it being an article of faith that screens keep out the air. The northeast trade-wind blows constantly until the end of September, when the wind shifts a few points to the southward, and there is a breathless interval of two or three weeks. Hurricanes are infrequent and have never occurred except between July 25 and Oct. 25. The last one was in 1916.

Cockroaches have to be considered. They are large and destructive, and costly fabrics, &c., have to be protected from their ravages. This is, of course, the case in all tropical lands. The twin demons, centipedes and scorpions, are almost mythical. They do not bother cleanly abodes. There are no snakes, but the East Indian mongooses, which were brought in several years ago to deal with snakes, are pests on the plantation-estates because they catch and kill young chickens which have to be carefully guarded against them.

Every kind of tropical fruit is common. For half a dollar or so a basket of fruit can be assembled which will equal a "steamer basket" costing $15 in New York. These include pineapples, various kinds of mangoes, several varieties of bananas, the delicate and delicious sapodilla, soursops from which a delicious drink of milky appearance and peachlike flavor is made, sugar apples, pomegranates, &c.

Even under the very sketchy system of sanitation prevalent in the Danish régime, these islands were health resorts. Nowadays, with the characteristic American improvements in this direction, they are salubrious to the last degree. Tropical diseases occur occasionally among the blacks, but rarely or never trouble white or colored people. Having a "cold," however, is very fashionable among both colored and black people, who are strangely addicted to this malady, from which white people seem immune.

It would be difficult to discover a more thoroughly satisfactory place to spend a Winter for people of culture and discrimination whose means do not permit them to indulge in the Riviera or the Florida east coast resorts, but which would be capable of managing the $50 fare of the Colombian Line or the $85 up of the Quebec Line, and who would not be deterred from making the venture by a six-day voyage from New York.

One correspondent has asked me why modern (1922) V. I. stamps bear neither the image of George Washington nor that of the King of Denmark, but show King George V. of England! This is because there are British Virgin Islands, i. e., Virgin Gorda and Tortola. The stamps in question are used on those islands, not in St. Thomas, St. Croix or St. John.

Tortola lies near St. Thomas, and Great Britain has not imposed prohibition upon her people either at home or in her colonies. The seacoast of all these islands is extensive and far from thickly populated. There are many schooners and not a few rowboats still in the island trade."

Urges Virgin Islanders to Look to Calvin Coolidge for Economic Relief—Commends Fearlessness of Former Governor of Massachusetts in Staying Extradition of Southern Negro

By CASPER HOLSTEIN
President Virgin Islands Congressional Council

Ex-President Harding is dead and buried. And the Virgin Islanders have some cause to be sorry. For he stood pledged to visit the Virgin Islands and look things over at first hand. His untimely death now makes that impossible and removes from the inhabitants of the Islands that help which in times of trouble they might have hoped for from having one at the head of the administration who knew trouble from direct examination.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM

EXODUS FROM THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Misery and Distress Follow American Misrule, Says Noted Islander

To the Editor of The Negro World:

Sir—"Where was the New York police force twenty years ago?" "In Ireland."

That was a popular jest in New York about twenty-five years ago, but it carried no direct reflection on Ireland and the Irish. On the contrary, it was a reflection on Ireland's rulers (the English), who had so fearfully mismanaged that beautiful island that all the Irish who amounted to anything were leaving it in ever increasing numbers. Ireland was the only country in Europe which at the end of the nineteenth century had a smaller population than it had at the beginning.

The Negro population of the Virgin Islands are hardly likely to become New York policemen. Nobody knows just what they will take to, nor do they know what opportunities will be open to them in the United States (the land of promise); but it is quite clear that they are leaving the islands in great numbers (all who can get permission to leave), and are coming to the United States, particularly to New York city. A month ago one of the ordinary steamships plying between America and the West Indies brought a hundred and seventy-five Negroes from the various British islands. They were leaving their homes for the same reasons that had driven Irishmen out of Ireland. There was also on this steamer a number of Negroes who came from a single one of the Virgin Islands of the United States for similar reasons. And the number of people from the one Virgin Island was exactly the same as the number which came from all the British islands in the West Indies.

In the face of such facts the American occupation of the Virgin Islands must have something wrong with it. When a subject people begin to flee their home as they would flee the plague there must be a tremendous amount of distress and misery from which they would escape. These Virgin Islanders are a home-loving people. They are devotedly attached to their native soil, yet today their love of the soil is overborne by the miseries which they are called upon to endure on that soil. This simple but terrible fact has greater value and significance than all the official reports, excuses and explanations which the government in the islands can ever assemble or put out.

Whether we consider the case of the Irish, that of the other white foreigners who flock here, or the Negro migrants from the South, or the Virgin Islanders, the fact is unblinkable that such general emigration is an absolute proof of misery and distress. And for such misery and distress in the case of the Virgin Islands the American government is indictable before the bar of enlightened public opinion. Such cynical and heartless indifference as is expressed by the enforcement of prohibition, which destroyed the main economic support of the islands,—25,000 inhabitants—and the present port regulations, which effectively drive away all the ships whose loading and unloading furnished regular work to thousands of the black working people would never have been permitted to go unchallenged if these people were white.

It almost seems as if the policy is to depopulate the Virgin Islands. For if the present conditions and the present exodus should continue for two more years it is hard to see what the Naval Administration will have to govern except goats, sheep and cattle. Still, it may be just possible that the intent is to goad these people to the point of exasperation or riots, so that they may have a handy excuse for shooting them down and thus completing the process of colonization as that process is understood under the present form of government.

Nor is this theory as far-fetched as it may seem at first glance. Just consider that when any of these poor people want to leave they are forced to wait for from three to six months, and in many instances one year. And even then (as recent arrivals stated), unless they pay from five to fifteen dollars more than the regular rate they may not leave at all. After economic conditions make it next to impossible for them to exist on the islands the powers that be make it next to impossible for them to leave. In the light of that fact the hundred and seventy-five passengers mentioned above have a more than tragic significance.

Nearly four years of rainlessness, the consequent lack of water, even for protection against fire; such economic depression that the most that can be had is two days' work a week at 40 cents per day, while meat and sugar, flour and other necessities cost as much as they do in New York, and sometimes more; the restriction of the ballot to the natives, only a few of whom can vote; and on top of all this the undemocratic form of government in an American dependency which was acquired through treaty between two friendly nations—what a sample is this of American rule in the Caribbean! Surely here is a call to every ounce of patriotism which the Virgin Islanders can muster. For never was there a greater need for earnest effort and helpful co-operation on the part of a small people.

With the continuance of the present unfair conditions the Virgin Islands will only need a watchman.

Very truly yours,

CASPER HOLSTEIN,
President Virgin Islands Congressional Council.

Graphic Description of Life in Virgin Islands

The New York Age 8-18-23

An interesting letter describing life and conditions in the Virgin Islands, the semi-tropic islands purchased by the United States from Denmark, comes to The Age from Dr. Loring B. Palmer, formerly of Atlanta, Ga., and Montclair, N. J., who went to St. John Islands, in that group some months ago after being appointed municipal physician under the Virgin Islands Department of Health.

In a personal letter, Dr. Palmer writes that he is enjoying his work, and that although life in St. John is very primitive and exceedingly monotonous, "nothing ever happening except the rising and setting of the sun, and an occasional shock of earthquake, I manage to enjoy iti. My health is superb, my daily swims and long horseback rides over the mountains keep me as hard as nails. Living is very cheap and I live like a prince with a servant at every beck and call for a ridiculously small sum."

The lettter from Dr. Palmer is as follows:

Living in the Tropics is like th opium habit; it grows on one. Get taste of it and you easily become one o the lotus-eaters and are utterly unfitte thereafter for life in the cold, inhospit albe North.

Like all Americans, I think New York is the greatest city in the world, but after all there one is merely an atom in the maelstrom of human activity, while here on the fringe of civilization, as it were, you realize that you are a part of the great moving world and rub elbows with people who are doing things that would make the mollycoddles back home fairly gasp.

For instance, you are dining on the "gallery" of the Grand Hotel, St. Thomas's leading hostelery, owned and operated by Mr. Taylor, a colored man, enjoying the delicious Creole dishes set before you while the native Marine Band is discoursing sweet music in the park below.

Your vis-a-vis may be a U. S. naval officer just in from service in the Philippines; or he may be a native merchant from Martinique or one of the other neighboring islands; or a French savant on a world trip collecting orchids for a Paris museum; or a globe-trotting Englishman recently come from Hawaii, who regales you with the story of how he had to thrash an impudent "darkey" in Barbadoes, and tells you how superior the "Hawaiian nigger" is to these insolent "St. Thomas upstarts."

Someone has said that the average Briton thinks that the Almighty made the rest of the world in order to provide colonies for England; and I confess I agree with him. While I have some very delightful English friends, I avoid the English tourist as I would a pestilence.

St. Thomas is one of the most charming of West Indian cities and has among its citizens some of the most delightful people I have ever met.

There is the prince of good fellows, Mr. J. N. Lightbourne. He is a widely travelled, well-read man, and I enjoy nothing more than to sit in his well-stocked book store and listen as he tells his personal experiences, and anecdotes of some of the great figures in the political history of the States and Europe. He was born in Bermuda and early in life went to New York, where he became one of the Editorial staff of the New York Tribune, when Horace Greely was editor-in-chief of that paper. While acting in that capacity he became acquainted with most of the prominent men in political life in America and one never tires of hearing him tell of those strenuous times in our country's history.

After working for a number of years with the Tribune, he came out to St. Thomas as a special correspondent of the New York Herald, and opened a book store which he has conducted ever since.

There is Mr. Adolph Sixto, who is a well known figure at DeVan's Hotel (now the Hotel Dumas) in New York City, where he goes once or twice a year on business. He is in the wholesale dry goods business.

Probably the largest department store in St. Thomas, one that would look well in New York, is owned by Mr. Herman Crecque, who is a graduate of an English university. He also owns Lamesure, a large estate in St. John. Mr. Abram Smith is another prominent merchant. He is a member of the Colonial Council and is one of the largest landowners of St. John.

The richest man in the Islands is Mr. A. H. Lockhart. Besides owning and operating a variety of businesses in St. Thomas, he has immense plantations in St. John. Some time ago, he purchased a church, and appointing a minister, choir and officers, proceeded to run it to suit himself. Finding it did not pay, he turned it into a lumber plant. He is a large, fine-looking man, and his tall figure is well known on St. Thomas streets.

A very enjoyable feature of life in St. Thomas is the concerts given by the Marine Band. This band is composed entirely of colored musicians and compares favorably with our 369th Regiment band in New York. The leader is Mr. Alton Adams, a fine musician and composer, who made a trip to the States last year. He has a beautiful home and possesses a valuable collection of autographed photographs from Souza, also the present director of the Marine Band in Washington, and from many other world-famous musicians.

Mr. Percy Soufront is a prominent figure in the business life of St. Thomas. He is also consul for the United States of Columbia. He has a palatial home, presided over by his charming French wife, and lives a life that might be envied by an American millionaire.

Among the human flotsam and jetsam of life's sea cast upon these Islands there are many strange characters. On the Island of St. John, away out in the bush, there is living in a tent a cultured, refined, middle-aged lady, absolutely alone except for her cat. She is a skilled botanist and has a wonderful collection of the plants of the Island. She keenly resents intrusion by strangers or attempts to pry into her affairs. She remarked to me on one of my official visits that the more she saw of people the better she likes her plants. The Red Cross sends her supplies by the colored mounted police of the island.

Up to a short time ago, there lived under similar circumstances on the Island of St. Thomas a well to do Englishman who was a well known writer and graduate of the University of Bonn. He disappeared suddenly, as mysteriously as he came.

Scattered throughout the islands are a number of men of prominent European families who have cut themselves off from their people, came out here, married native women, and by cattle-raising, fishing and farming have accumulated small fortunes and made valuable citizens of the community.

One naturally asks, "Why?" The answer comes, "Quien sabe?" Over all rests the magic spell of the Tropics that has lured men to both fortune and ruin ever since Columbus, during the dangers of an unknown world, trusted himself and his men in his fragile craft to the waves of a treacherous sea and the Mercy of Omnipotent God.

OPINION ON THE NEEDS OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to thank you for your fair and informative editorial about conditions in the Virgin Islands in the issue of Aug. 1. This colony has suffered more than once from its friends who, like your correspondent of the day before, are usually colored persons of Virgin Island origin, habituated to a method of expression derived from the local journalism, and apt to be unconvincing when presented before American readers. May I venture to add a word to your admirable editorial?

The chief trouble with the Virgin Islands is lack of water. I do not think I exaggerate when I say that there would be no more beautiful spot in this world than St. Croix if the United States Government would supply it with a central water-catching plant. The rule there, agriculturally, is "two good years and five bad years." Such a plant as I have indicated would stabilize the agricultural output, and one needs only to remember that St. Croix sugar is generally regarded in the sugar industry as the finest in quality in the world to see that such an undertaking should be practicable.

One of the other troubles which your correspondent, perhaps wisely, omits is the labor troubles. For several years an exasperating demagoguery has flourished among the black laborers on the sugar estates, a demagoguery of the most blantant type, the operation of which has impoverished planters and laborers alike to the sole advantage of a handful of labor leaders and their entourage, all persons of color, and, it is supposed, with the backing of a group of financiers in Copenhagen which has always been opposed to the sale of these islands by their Government to the United States.

I do not think that the writer of the editorial to which I have referred has quite done justice to one aspect of the islands' decline in prosperity. I refer to the operation of the Eighteenth Amendment in the V. I. The original act did not include the Virgin Islands, nor the Hawaiians. A special act was passed affecting the Virgin Islands, which went into effect July 10, 1922. Down to that time Santa Cruz rum had been a staple of Virgin Island manufacture, along with the bay rum which is made in St. Thomas from bay obtained on the island of St. John. When the price of sugar happened to be low, the sugar growers made their raw product into rum. This found a ready market in the Scandinavian countries. Most of the larger sugar estates were, and still are, equipped with distilleries for the rum. The special act enforcing prohibition virtually ruined the planters at a stroke of the pen. Even the bay rum has suffered. It may not be made and shipped save with the addition of ingredients rendering it impossible to drink. It is thus largely ruined as an export to the South and Central American countries. Today similar products, not denatured, emanating from Messrs. Houbigant et al. of France may be purchased freely in the United States while our own product, the best bay rum ever produced, may not in its natural state.

I submit further that there is a wide difference between the effect of prohibition in the V. I. and in the continental United States. Rum and bay rum have never been our mainstay at home as manufactured articles. In the Virgin Islands they have been, along with raw sugar, the staples for centuries, and the entire economic situation there has been adjusted upon the basis of their manufacture. One other complaint might well have been specifically noted: The destruction of income derived locally from the port dues and commerce in the harbor of St. Thomas. This harbor had been for centuries the "clearing house port" of the entire West Indies. Since the special act making prohibition operative these foreign ships have not been able to touch there, and this fine harbor and the relatively large commerce which went with it and to which life in St. Thomas had for long been adjusted were ruined.

President Wilson's policy of handing over the Governorship and most of the responsible offices to officers of the United States Navy, while admirable for obvious reasons to any one who, like myself, has nothing but admiration for the United States Navy, has yet this one insuperable drawback in practice: That, as the people of the islands express it, "no sooner does an official get accustomed to the ways of the islands and we to know and like him than he is moved elsewhere and a stranger comes in, and it all has to be done over again." This is a true and just criticism. The present admirable Governor, Captain H. H. Hough, U. S. N., is the fourth American Governor, and we have owned the Virgin Islands only since March 31, 1917.

It seems to me both pathetic and unnecessary that the really splendid people of the Virgin Islands, transferred as they have been from Danish to American rule, should have had the process of West Indian decadence, to which you have referred editorially, hastened rather than reversed by the change. It would take very little outlay to make these islands beyond comparison the most delightful and, relatively speaking, the most prosperous of our colonial possessions. Reasonable sums have been spent on education, sanitation and other necessary details of administration; the Government is all that could be desired from the administration of the Governor down through the personnel of the various officials. If permanent artificial means of conserving the water supply could be added, the entire set of conditions could be changed and the characteristic West Indian decadence, as it has affected these islands of ours, reversed, even though (for what sane reason it might be hard to discover) the absurdity of prohibition in such a place were allowed to continue indefinitely, and the Scandinavian countries constrained to buy their rum from Barbados.

HENRY S. WHITEHEAD,
Rector, Trinity Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

North Weymouth, Mass., Aug. 7, 1923.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having recently visited St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands, and heard at first hand from the inhabitants thereof a recital of their hardships, of which there was self-evident proof, I am firmly of the conviction that they are the losers by having been transferred without their consent to American rule by virtue of sale by Denmark, their previous overlord. I agree with the view of one of your correspondents, recently expressed, that the application of the Volstead act to these far-away, isolated islands is one of the principal causes, as foreign vessels, which formerly put in there, are omitting St. Thomas as a port of call or for refitting, and thus this to them important business is lost. One of the principal storekeepers told me his sales for the previous fortnight had amounted to but 8 cents! I purchased from one of the French colony for a dollar—and this made him happy—two beautifully plaited large hats, which the parish priest said had taken two days each to make!

UNREST AMONG PEOPLE OF UNCLE SAM'S

Jackson Successful Candidate in St. Croix—"Silent Parade" to Lift Prohibition Impressive But Governor Gives Advice—Only Naval Negro Bandmaster Writes on Conditions

NEW POSSESSIONS IN VIRGIN ISLANDS

(Concluded From Last Week.)

While acknwledging the harm done by Prohibition and the Coast Wise Laws to whatever little shipping has been left us is our struggles against hopeless odds, we must, to be truthful, also admit that they have only made the blows more painful, though less prolonged. Experience has taught us that to remain in one place in this busy world of daily expansion is to retrograde, and the community, like the individual, has to aspire and to achieve or to take a back seat in the kaleidoscopic movement of events. One glance is sufficient to suffice even the casual observer that St. Thomas has not improved one iota in the last two decades. In her best days she was simply an emporium. Her boasted resources were purely external, the loss of which has made her today an easy prey to a larger and wealthier competitor having the same facilities to offer as she has. While the island of St. Thomas was dreaming and resting on past laurels, content to remain quietly praying and hoping for future glories and for manna from on high, Porto Rico, just seventy miles from us, now made new by American initiative and industrial genius, was making itself felt in the commercial world. Education and sanitation was the slogan. These were the tools with which she developed herself, and with her comparative vastness, rising industries, practically unlimiited sources made useful by skilled hands and active brains, the result is today evident. The doom of St. Thomas as a commercial center was vividly seen from then by those who have eyes to see.

Porto Rico is today very rich and her outlook is as rosy as ours is dark and gloomy. To get anything worth while in exchange one must have something worth while to offer. What have we to offer the commercial world? This is the chief of our problems. We show no hesitancy in broadcasting to the world that prohibition has crippled St. Thomas. But are we ready to prove this statement with figures and facts? Up to now we have only made sweeping generalizations and have not, with figures, made good our contention. We may be called upon to do so at any moment.

In the public demonstration against the application of the Eighteenth Amendment to these islands, what happened to several observers as quite singular was a placard on which was written these words: "Save our children and our dear wives." St. Thomas is in a pitiable condition when a woman, presumabily a mother, would so pitifully ask for rum to come back in order to save her young children and her husband, and a community must certainly be on its last throes of despair and desperation to trade on its morals for means of sustenance.

Drunkennes lowers the standard of citizenship and breeds innumerable vices that menace and destroy any community. We cite this as a matter of form, for we are fully well aware of the fact that the demonstration against prohibition was not for the sake of wanting to indulge freely in alcoholic drinks, but because of the effect of the law on the local shipping. Secretary Denby said to us just some weeks ago that we need water instead of rum. If the Honorable Secretary had remained just a little longer he would have realized that there is one thing we are in need of more than anything else, the one need that we are constantly failing to secure, and that is real men. We do not hesitate to attribute to a great extent the present decadent state of this island to lack of men. The older one gets the more this truth comes home to him, that we need today more than ever men of courage, of brain, of sincerity and of honest of purpose. How many opportunities have slipped us because of the lack of men of brain enough and energy enough to take advantage of them, heaven only knows.

Many of our worthy citizens heretofore, hopeful and sympathetic to all things American, are today being inveigled by an insidious, subtle propaganda to a reverse feeling. It is inconsistent with common sense to tyrannize and to educate at the same time. The attitude of the American government showed itself from the beginning as interested in the educational development of the people. The schools have been given every consideration, and turn it or twist it how we may, the salvation of the island rests in the hands of those school children who today make up the grades. It is they who have to build on the ruins it seems evident we are leaving them.

Though St. Thomas appears to be in its last throes, taking things at their worst, it is not dead as yet and there is no valid reason why, because of present conditions, all efforts should not be made to put in new life. It is a crucial moment for us all, a moment which demands the concentrated efforts of every able individual who is not in dire despair. We do not pretend a solution of the condition, but we are offering our columns for any suggestions and hints from those more competent than we. We, however, do know that it is as silly as it is malicious to antagonize a sympathetic government, expecting to get results that way. To co-operate with the government doesn't necessarily mean to agree or endorse everything that the government says or does, but to give an unbiased, frank and free opinion with a constructive rather than a destructive view, and above all it is nothing short of a crime for any newspaper, society or individual, cunningly claiming to be patriots or citizens, to be filling the hearts of the people with dirt and meanness, or seeking the individual conscience and intelligence even of school children and inflicting them with their bad temper.

If we prize highly the privilege of living in our home, let us estimate it in an expression of deed and kindly service. The foregoing is not written with a view of controversy. We have used just a little of the much-boasted liberty of expression and will let our statements stand for whatever worth or truth that may be in them. The fact is, the miserable economic condition of the island is a problem, the solution of which demands all our learning, our courage and our devotion, and if in our poor way we have warmed a single thought or revealed responsibilities before unrecognized, we are thankful for the occassion."

In directing the attention of readers of this paper to the above article by this brilliant young writer who has attracted so much atttention as a writer and musician, we feel that it is not out of keeping with the times and the trend of things to compare the loftiness of thought and the triumph of truth which runs through every line of this contribution. The superior mind from whence it came stands so far above the mudslingers and dungheap patriots we are not at all surprised to learn that some of those attempting to fight this young man were thrown out bag and baggage from government employ when the Americans came and demanded merit instead of bluffing. Some of them tried to bluff in music and his superiority routed them to the insecure confines of political dissatisfaction from whence they use a simpleton too ignorant to recognize ability and stamp around where even angels fear to tread.

VIRGIN ISLANDERS VICTIMS U. S. RULE; ASK LABOR TO HELP

The Federated Press.

SERFS GET TEN CENTS PER DAY

CHICAGO.—"We are serfs who work for wages ranging from 10 cents to a dollar a day. Politically we are peons, governed by the U. S. navy." With this statement of the workers' status in the Virgin Islands under U. S. rule, Rothschild Francis, organizer federal labor union 17361 and editor The Emancipator, writes from St. Thomas, V. I., appealing to American labor for help. The appeal, which is addressed to the labor press of the United States, follows:

"Right here in these Virgin Islands are a group of human beings that are members of the working class. They, too, can tell tales of oppression, of misrepresentation, and of exploitation that will cause your blood to circulate above normal rapidity, but the purpose of writing this letter is to point out that they are at present without any visible means of support. The men go idle from month to month. Children are undernourished and the economic condition of these islands is something deplorable.

"Federal (U. S.) laws have worked havoc upon these islands. They have closed the harbor of St. Thomas from outside commerce and have chased away the intellectual and commercial element from the island of St. Croix, and have done more things too numerous to mention here. These islands are directly under the control of the navy department. Thinking natives hold in high regard the personnel of the navy who are sent down here to govern, but they are irreconcilably opposed to the form of government that is neither Danish nor American. We want you to understand that our people are industrial serfs who work for wages ranging from 10 cents to one dollar a day. They live in one-room houses; eat scanty meals; and are forced to move about in a manner unbecoming civilized people at this age.

"We Are Peons"

"Politically, we are peons without any form of government patterned on the American conception. Illiterates may vote but woman may not. The governor appoints and discharges the judges. The police judge and government attorney are one and the same person and in short, there are sadder things than these.

"We want you to say a word editorially about a group of people who, like cows, have no status, are forced to accept federal (U. S.) laws, are governed by the navy and at present have no means of ekeing out a livelihood. Tell the congressmen and senators of your state about the conditions and ask them to say something on our behalf in the coming congress that will give us a civil form of government and grant us opportunities to improve our economic condition."

Misery in the Virgin Islands

1923
NATION Aug 15,

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: We write with the hope that your readers, who, we believe, form a majority of the American people, will realize that down in the Virgin Islands—a new possession of Uncle Sam—the economic conditions may safely be termed deplorable, bordering on total economic destruction, ruinous on account of the application of Federal laws, viz.: quarantine and coastwise laws; the Eighteenth Amendment, and the Federal income-tax law.

Eventual wholesale starvation threatens the entire population if relief be not forthcoming in the immediate future.

Our merchants, in a large majority of cases, are unable to pay their taxes; our children are undernourished and their fathers move about in an undecided manner, desirous of working but unable to procure employment. Life is something miserable in these islands. Surely it is not the thought of this Great American Nation to keep our people in a state of semi-starvation.

We believe, and that implicitly, that they know very little of our condition and, therefore, we propose to tell them of it so that they may realize that in these Virgin Islands they have adopted children who need, in these trying days, their special attention so as to improve their deplorable economic condition.

We request that your paper make direct inquiries about our statements and, after investigation, give publication to the findings, so as to quicken the leaders of this nation's interest in these islands that "they acquired and then forgot."

We plead for immediate consideration and relief. We are not asking charity, but we certainly do believe that we ought to be given a chance to live as decent a life as we have been accustomed to.

Our Rule in the Virgin Islands

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

SIR: The intelligent Virgin Islanders of New York have followed the articles which have been appearing in The Nation on the naval rule now in vogue in the Virgin Islands with considerable interest. It heartens us in our fight for a democratic status to know that such an internationally respected journal as The Nation is on our side. Mr. Arthur Warner's article on Political Peonage in the Virgin Islands in your issue of June 6 was especially valuable. It sums up succinctly the chief evils from which the people of the islands suffer under American rule as administered by the Navy Department.

The Virgin Islands Congressional Council was organized more than a year ago to get the searchlight of publicity turned on the dark corners of this naval rule. We have found the naval mind a rather queer piece of furniture. In the Negro newspapers amenable to its manipulation (two in the Virgin Islands and one in New York) all our citations of fact—official orders, rulings, and records—are cavalierly condemned as "propaganda," while the naval regime, in the method made familiar by propagandists during the war, seems to think that, like Humpty Dumpty, words can be made to mean anything that we want them to mean. Thus to call an administration selected exclusively from the Navy and by the Navy for the people a "civil" administration evidently makes it civil.

Mr. Warner has done a conscientious piece of reporting. He has entered sympathetically into the problems of the people, and does not stand Olympian-like upon that high mount of supercilious condescension upon which most white Americans stand when discussing darker people of the West Indies. It is the earlier humanism which you have preserved for us almost alone in America and renamed liberalism that must serve as the solvent of our inter-racial problems. For only in that manner can they be solved with mutual good-will and respect.

WANTS AID FOR VIRGIN ISLANDERS

Chicago Defender
9-22-23

New York City.

Editor of the Chicago Defender.

Dear Sir: The writer of this letter is desirous of your aid, with which to summon the interests of the American nation in order to bring about thorough measures of relief from the terrible economic depression in the three Virgin islands, bought by the United States about six years ago.

In order to fully understand the situation by which these unfortunate people are made to suffer, your readers must disregard the fact that there are a large number of expatriates here who are peculiarly divided in their opinions about approaching the American public, because of their failure in the past to group themselves with American people, and be identified as a part and parcel of the things that concern the American Negro.

Intolerant Leaders

Though there exists a desire on the part of a certain few to work for the future welfare of their kindred and others, yet there remains, to my mind, a doubt as to whether they will even be able to accomplish much, because of the selfishness and intolerance to be found in their leaders. Prhaps the greatest mistake lies in the fact that the American Negro is not asked to be taken into their confidence, and foolishly try to secure relief only from among themselves, which would be far too inadequate when we have to consider the enormity of the conditions that demand it. A great deal of time has been wasted by agitators in the islands and in New York, who seem to be of the opinion that they could alleviate the sufferings of the needy by criticizing and abusing the present insular form of government.

U. S. Responsible

A careful study of the situation reveals the fact that the federal government of the United States is directly responsible for the economic collapse in the Virgin Islands Granting that Uncle Sam was late in discovering that in purchasing these islands he was outwitted by the Danes, this should not indicate that the native inhabitants are to be made martyrs of a great political or wartime blunder. The stupendous folly of ruining every industry in the islands to see its workers starve is nearer to criminal ignorance on the part of certain representatives, who evidently know nothing about colonization and do not seem to care.

The islands have seen at least 47 United States congressmen, inclusive of the secretary of the navy, and the greatest authorities on economics who have admitted conditions to be far worse than they realized. Three months ago they visited the islands by request and saw the natives crying for food and for water to drink. They saw then cattle die for lack of nutriment, and they visited the schools where children are made to attend daily with empty stomachs. They inquired of Governor Hough why he did not advise Washington before, and they made eloquent speeches full of fat promise to take the matter in hand immediately. Yet nothing, absolutely nothing, has been started, upon which there offers some signs of progress.

Parade of Protest

On the 18th of May last, a silent protest parade was held in the island of St. Thomas, where thousands knelt in the streets and prayed as the church bells tolled. This so alarmed the governor that he immediately sent a radiogram to Washington, with no results. There are insufficient accommodations to be had in the few steamships calling there weekly to remove the large exodus, and those who can't leave by fair means are using foul methods to do so.

In commenting on this matter, the St. Croix Tribune, a daily paper published there, states that it won't be very many months when depopulation will be complete. Despite all the arguments advanced about the failure to transfer, and the spirit of discontent and disloyalty aggravated among certain groups of Virgin Islanders, I am still of the opinion that these islands will eventually thrive under the present form of government.

Duty of Nation

But it devolves a duty, incumbent on the part of the American nation for their own pride, to harass the federal government into speedy action in this matter and this can best be done by making it a political issue. The natives of the Virgin Islands, who are in no wise responsible for their condition, are prepared to man the fields, cultivate the land and start up some other industries in addition to the sugar cane, or in place of the well-known bay rum, which the Volstead act has ruined.

Money is needed to conserve water for man and beast, and to irrigate the land during the months of drought. They do not want charity in the form of foodstuffs and clothing, but if the American nation would create the sum needed for water supply, I am sure of their ability to work and be happy.

Before the federal laws affecting the manufacture of liquor was instituted, and with their harbors free ports, the natives never worried about the inadequate supply of rainfall to till the soil. The British islands are now reaping a great harvest as all ships are calling there for coal and it is very doubtful if there are any inducements which may be made for them to return to the Virgin Islands. The few capitalists who sapped the vitality of the land are gone back to Denmark and the Danish banks, which, by agreement made in the sale treaty, cannot be removed until the year of 1935, now refuse to loan any money. So there stand the Virgin Islands of the great United States of America, parched and dry, with starvation everywhere — a beautiful example of the wisdom of United States statesmanship. It is therefore that I appeal to you, conscious of the fact that the Race is capable of doing great things.

Through you, sir, I am sending the pleas of 23,000 inhabitants, asking the assistance of the 12,000,000 Negroes of America, and to the entire American nation.

I saw millions of dollars raised on the very streets to help the starving hordes of far-off Russia and Albania. Does it not mean more to the pride of America that the Star-Spangled Banner, trailing in the dust in her own possessions, is waving a signal of distress there?

I am, sir, respectfully yours,
ASHLEY L. TOTTEN.

SPEAKERS CLAIM THAT U. S. RULE IN VIRGIN ISLANDS MAKES LIFE A LIVING HELL FOR THE NATIVES

Pittsburg American - Pittsburg Pa.

"Devil Dog" Marines in Command—Duplication of Haitian Scandal Predicted—Free Speech and Free Press Suppressed

3-2-23.

(Crusader Service)

NEW YORK, Mar. 2.—Citing many brutalities alleged to have been committed by American marines, Virgin Islanders in a mass meeting at Lafayette Hall, last Sunday afternoon declared that the Navy Department, by its high-handedness and misrule, was driving the peaceable, law-abiding people of the Virgin Islands, to the point of revolt and that unless the American people took the matter in hand they would be faced with another Haitian scandal. The meeting was held by the Congressional Council, an organization of Virgin Islanders, agitating for justice on behalf of their fellow-islanders at home.

Casper Holstein, the principal speaker and president of the Council, declared that the Navy Department had read its own interpretation into the laws of the islands, and were enforcing the same discipline that prevailed in the Navy. The beating up of men and women by the marines for no other reason than the color of their skin was, he said, a common occurrence.

"The laws," said Mr. Holstein, "are being administered by judicial tyrants acting under the Navy Department. Appeal is useless as the two courts—the Police Court and the District Court—practically function as one and an appeal from the first is but another appeal to itself."

Magistrate Payne, of St. Croix, a Negro, was mentioned by the speakers as the chief enforcer of the Navy Department's orders. "If records of cases could be had and a comparison drawn between them and the criminal statutes of the islands you would find that in the majority of cases Magistrate Payne has overstepped the bounds. This Negro has all the instincts of his overlords. As in all oppressed groups there are always those who are used as slave-drivers. Payne serves out injustice in large doses and there seems to be no cessation of his criminal acts."

Other speakers declared that free speech was forbidden. "It is impossible," said Thomas Fawcett," for the islanders to protest without causing reprisals by the judiciary. Free speech is forbidden. Editors who tell the truth are subject to the wrath of the officials. It is a deplorable condition and we are asking the American people to give us their moral support in this struggle for justice."

Progressive Fight in Jamaican Assembly

Pittsburg American 3/30/23

(Crusader Service)

KINGSTON, Jamaica, March 30.—A crisis has arisen in the political life of the people of this large and beautiful island. The Legislative Council which has limited Constitutional powers and is made up of nominated ex-officio and elected members, is discussing the recommendations of the Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, Major Wood, for a change in the Constitution. Alone of all the members, Barrister J. A. G. Smith, a colored man, expresses advanced views, demanding the substance of representative government, and not its shadow. Mr. Smith, whose viewpoint on the subject has the approval of the widely read and influential Herald, stood alone in his demand that the governor shall be deprived of any power to nominate members to the Council. Although not very advanced in political ideals all the elected and many nominated members are opposed to the present anomalous and undemocratic system.

VIRGIN ISLANDERS APPEAL TO U. S. CONGRESS TO SETTLE CIVIC STATUS

In Concise Bill of Particulars Congressional Council Puts the Whole Matter Squarely Up to the People's Representatives at Washington

Negro World - N. Y.

In an open letter to the United States Congress on behalf of the Negro inhabitants of the Virgin Islands of the United States, the V. I. Congressional Council of New York, Casper Holstein president, reviews the whole situation, past and present, of the Negro in the V. I. The letter follows: 3/31/23

"Gentlemen of the Congress—Honorable Senators and Representatives:

"We, the people of your recently-acquired colony, beg to lay before you, in accordance with the provisions of your own Constitution, our complaints and grievances, to the end that in your own interest you may take steps either to remove such of these grievances as shall have been established, or to convince your petitioners and loyal subjects that they have only an imaginary existence.

"In the first place, we invite your attention to a curious anomaly. We do not know whether any portion of the people of a republic can very well be subjects; but we do know that the form of American government which we now have in the Virgin Islands does not exist anywhere else in the United States. Its like is to be found only in Haiti or Santo Domingo, as it was to be found some years ago in those parts of the Philippine Islands which were in a state of military insurrection against the United States. But we have never been in insurrection against the United States; we were peaceably and peacefully acquired by treaty of sale negotiated between the government of Denmark and that of the United States and ratified by your honorable body. It should seem then that by the transfer we should have become American citizens. But American citizens are those who enjoy the rights and privileges defined in the United States Constitution as pertaining to American citizenship. And it should be known to you that not only do we not enjoy these rights and privileges in the Virgin Islands, but they have been explicitly denied to us; as in the following instances:

A Naval Governor

"1. The American people have had at their head many able, great and good men, like Washington, Jackson, Lincoln and Roosevelt. But they have withheld from all of them the right to combine in their own proper persons at one time, executive, legislative and judicial powers. This right, which by the Constitution is denied to the President of the United States, is the chief distinguishing feature of the Governor of the Virgin Islands, who is a captain in the department of the Navy. He exercises these combined powers in such a way that he is directly responsible not to the people of the Virgin Islands, not even to your august body—but to the Navy Department. His aides and the larger portion of the personnel of his government are subordinate officials of that department. We submit that American citizens are not in any other case ruled in this autocratic manner, or by the Navy Department in any manner; and we naturally feel civic bewilderment and political uncertainty as to our status. Are we American citizens or American subjects? The officials of the Navy Department have answered by word and deed that we are the latter. We demur to this and feel that we are entitled to an authoritative decision by the Congress of the United States until which time we remain mere subjects, suffering from the same civic disabilities as the subjects of Europe's kings and Asia's emperors, a status not at all creditable to the democratic integrity of the republic which rules our destinies.

Muzzling the Native Press

"2. The people of these islands have been told over the signatures of Mr. Washington Williams, the vice-governor de facto, and Mr. J. J. Gaffney that the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press do not apply to them, and in accordance with this rather startling view of American government they have already effected several executive deportations from the islands and have established a reign of terror among those native editors who have published their protests against executive and judicial excesses. Under this head we invite your attention specifically to the deportation of the Rev. Barrow by Governor Kittell; the deportation of Mr. F. H. Morenga-Bonaparte by Governor Hough; the harassing of Mr. D. Hamilton Jackson, editor of 'The Herald' of Christiansted in St. Croix, and Mr. Rothschild Francis, editor of 'The Emancipator'; of Charlotte Amalia in St. Thomas; and we refer your honorable body to an article in 'The Nation' of March 7, 1923, entitled 'Bayonet Rules for Our Colonial Press,' by Arthur Warner, 'The Nation's' special correspondent in the Caribbean, which article contains a dependable presentation of some illustrative facts bearing on this point.

The Right of Suffrage

"3. We are denied the right of manhood suffrage because American officials, paid from the taxes of the American people, are administering the laws of a foreign country, to wit: Denmark—a situation which cannot be paralleled on the earth today. And it is a notorious fact that whereas the 18th Amendment is rigidly enforced by the officials of the Navy Department as against the natives, the 14th, 15th and 16th (?) receive no recognition from them.

"4. As a consequence we are denied the right to even a voice in the selection of those who administer our affairs and are at present plagued with an excessive number of place-hunting holders of superfluous sinecures whose elimination would be a decided economic gain to the taxpayers of the United States.

"We could easily cite many more specific grievances, but we believe that those already cited will suffice. Because of these things, we respectfully urge:

Citizens or Subjects

"That the Congress of the United States resume its organic prerogative to legislate for the better goverance of the Virgin Islands; that you make it clear whether they are a portion of the United States or a subject-colony; that your honorable body abolish government by the Navy Department and give us instead that civil government which alone benefits a civil status.

"That you look into the economic conditions of the islands, which are appalling. Labor gets two days work a week at 35 cents a day, while grim hunger takes its toll of the children of the poor. Even on no higher ground that the gospel of Mammon, the present economic state of these islands must be denounced as an appalling and senseless wastage of wealth and of wealth-producing powers.

"That your honorable body give to the people of these islands enough of your official attention as will enable you to discover that the population is self-respecting, law-abiding, and industrious, whereby you may be led to 'grapple them to your soul' with the steel bonds of patriotic affection by giving them the chance to feel proud of being Americans. Respectfully yours,

V. I. CONG. COUNCIL,
C. Holstein, Pres.
V. I. CIVIL RIGHTS ASS'N,
H. Dickerson, Acting Pres
V. ISLANDERS (Collectively).

MARINES TO LEAVE INTERIOR OF HAITI

Associated Press Report.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—As a further step in the gradual removal of American marines from Haiti, the state department advices received today said orders had been issued for their withdrawal from interior posts. By April 15 only one marine guard will be left in the interior, that at St. Michael, where a quantity of marine corps equipment is stored.

VIRGIN ISLANDERS OF NEW YORK SEND RADIOGRAM TO SECRETARY OF THE NAVY DENBY

The Virgin Islanders of New York city and vicinity, who have prepared and forwarded a summary (published elsewhere in these columns) of their case against navalism to the Congress of the United States, are determined to carry on their fight in the court of public opinion until they secure the needed redress. For several years dissatisfaction has been smoldering in their hearts. They keenly feel the present situation. Britain is a monarchy, not a republic; yet, the black dependents of Britain in the West Indies receive better treatment at the hands of their monarchists than the Virgin Islanders receive from the autocratic underlings of the Navy Department, and Virgin Islanders want to know the reason for the difference.

One of the outstanding explanations is supported by American experience elsewhere in the Caribbean. It is that the United States of America should never intrust its relations with any Negro people to Southern white men. Southern white men notoriously hate Negroes, despise and detest them and always seize every opportunity to harass, humiliate and injure them. Since the government of the United States is aware of this, it should seem the part of plain common sense to keep Southern white men away from any new group of Negroes unaccustomed to being treated like the slaves of Dixie. Unless, indeed, the government's best intentions toward these Negroes are far from beneficial, a conclusion which must rest on the evidence of its acts.

As we said before, the Virgin Islanders on the mainland are prepared to carry on the fight for a square deal for their brethren at home. For more than a year the fight has waxed warm and as it increases in intensity the patriots throw themselves into it in larger and larger numbers. The Virgin Islands Congressional Council, which is leading the fight, finds its hall packed to overflowing every Sunday, so that there isn't even standing room inside. This organization is drawing the other and older groups of islanders into confraternal bonds and showing them by example how to sink individual selfishness in the larger claims of the people.

Recently they have prepared for joint transmission to Mr. Denby, the Secretary of the Navy, who is now on tour in the Caribbean and who is expected in the Virgin Islands early in April, the following radiogram:

Secretary of the Navy Denby,

"U. S. S. 'Henderson,' at Sea.

"Urge you investigate thoroughly case of Morenga Bonaparte deportation and other deportations while in Virgin Islands. Widespread belief here activities of Naval Governor, and of Lieutenant Gaffney in particular, unnecessary, oppressive, un-American and dishonorable to administration and navy. Can you not do something about it?

"Virgin Islands Civil Rights Association,

"Virgin Islands Congressional Council,

"Virgin Islanders Collectively."

It is hoped that the Secretary of the Navy may be accessible to the larger responsibilities of imperial rule and give such consideration as the present situation warrants to the plea of the Virgin Islanders for a chance to love the government of the United States.

JAMAICA THE PEACEFUL.

Racial Problems Present No Difficulties—Business Conditions.

America can take a lesson from the little island of Jamaica in her method of handling racial problems, according to Captain W. D. List, a shipping man of Kingston, Jamaica, who is at the Hotel Pennsylvania. He has been in business in Jamaica for the last twenty years.

"With a population that is 95 per cent. black, but with a white Government, Jamaica is the most peaceful island of the West Indies," said Captain List. "I attribute this to the fact that the British Government and its administrators are intent upon giving its subjects a square deal with discrimination. The local Government is stable and reliable, and in return the negroes like and respect their Governors, and are, indeed among the most patriotic of colonials. Whereas the laboring classes are lazy and given to gambling, the upper strata are well able to hold their own in friendly competition with the whites. Some of the most enterprising business men of Kingston are colored.

"There are very few illiterates on the island, and the business men send their sons to North American universities. The high price of sugar is only partially due to speculation. It is impossible for growers to produce sugar at as low a rate as was done before the war. Operating expenses are 50 per cent. higher, and labor costs the grower from 25 to 50 per cent. more than in prewar days. Moreover, the shortage in the crop resulting from last year's drought must also be taken into account. The American duty on incoming sugar is prohibitive to Jamaican shippers. The cent a pound duty on oranges and grapefruit, while not prohibitive, is sufficiently high to lessen considerably the quantity of these fruits imported from America.

"However, there is no duty on bananas, and it is in the growth and export of this fruit that we are chiefly interested now. We believe that there will be 14,000,000 'stems' or bunches of bananas grown in Jamaica this year. The most of these will be shipped to the States, only a few going to England. There will also be 30,000,000 cocoanuts. Jamaican growers are seriously handicapped by the American customs, which give the preference to products of Porto Rico, Cuba and the Hawaiian Islands. This setback, however, is made up for by the preference given Jamaican products in Canadian markets."

Life in the Virgin Islands

THE following is from the Emancipator (St. Thomas, Virgin Islands) of May 23:

Natives may not use fire-arms without a license, but on Sunday last a marine, in the uniform of this Great Republic, fired a shot at a boy (native). We cannot say whether it was done with intent to scare, kill, or wound. Rumor says the boy pitched a few pebbles at a cat, which to our mind was no business of this warrior. An altercation followed and while the boy ran off the sentry fired the shot which lodged into the walls of the Council's office. The hole is about one inch.

This brave feat was done not in the land of the Huns but under the Stars and Stripes in the sunny Virgin Isles which form a part of the rich, energetic, and progressive domain of Uncle Sam.
